SCENE,—The Sea, with a Ship: afterwards on an uninhabited Island.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—On a ship at Sea.

A Storm with Thunder and Lightning.

Enter a Shipmaster and a Boatswain.

 mast. Boatswain.

Boats. Here, master: What cheer?

mast. Good. Speak to the mariners: fall to't yardly, or we run ourselves aground: bestir, bestir.

[Exit.

Enter Mariner.

Boats. Heigh, my hearts; cheerly, cheerily, my hearts; yare, yare; take in the topsail; Tend to the master's whistle. Blow till thou burst thy wind, if room enough!

Enter Alonso, Sebastian, Antonio, Ferdinand, Gonzalo, and others.

Alon. Good boatswain, have care. Where's the master? Play the men.

Boats. I pray now, keep below.

Ant. Where is the master, boatswain?

Boats. Do you not hear him? You mar our labour; Keep your cabins: you do assist the storm.

Gon. Nay, good, be patient.

Boats. When the sea is. Hence! What care these roarsers for the name of king? To cabin! silence! trouble us not.

Gon. Good; yet remember whom thou hast aboard.

Boats. None that I more love than myself. You are a counsellor: if you can command these elements to silence, and work the peace of the present, we will not hand a rope more; use your authority. If you cannot, give thanks you have lived so long, and make yourself ready in your cabin for the mischance of the hour, if it so hap.—Cheerly, good hearts.—Out of our way, I say.

Gon. I have great comfort from this fellow: methinks he hath no drowning mark upon him; his complexion is perfect gollows. Stand fast, good fate, to his hanging: make the rope of his destiny our cable, for our own doth little advantage! If he be not born to be hanged, our case is miserable.

[Exit.

Boats. Down with the top-mast; yare, lower, lower; bring her to try with main course. [A cry within.] A plague upon this howling! they are no luckier than the weather, or our office.—

Re-enter Sebastian, Antonio, and Gonzalo.

Ant. Yet again? what do you here? Shall we give o'er, and drown? Have you a mind to sink?

Seb. A pox o'your throat! you bowling, blasphemous, inexpressible dog!

Boats. Work you, then.

Ant. Hang, eur, hang! you whorson, insolent noise-maker, we are less afraid to be drowned than thou art.

Gon. I'll warrant him from drowning; though the ship were no stronger than a nut-shell, and as leaky as an untaught wrench.

Boats. Lay her a-hold, a-hold; set her two courses; off to sea again, lay her o'er.

Enter Mariners yet.

Mar. All lost! to prayers, to prayers! all lost! [Exit.

Boats. What, must our mouths be cold?

Gon. The king and prince at prayers! let us assist them.

For our case is as theirs.

Sch. I am out of patience.

Ant. We are merely cheated of our lives by drunkards.—
This wide-chapp'd rascal:—'Would, thou might'st lie drowning.

The washing of ten tides!

Boats. Though every drop of water swear against it, and gape at 'twixt to glut him. [A confused noise within.]—Mercy on us! We split!—Parewell, my wife and children! Parewell, brother! We split, we split, we split!—

Ant. Let's all sink with the king.

Seb. Let's take leave of him.

Gon. Now would I give a thousand furlongs of sea for an acre of barren ground; long heath, brown furze, any thing: The wills above be done, but I would fain die a dry death.

[Exit.
SCENE II. The Island, before the Cell of Prospero.

Enter Prospero and Miranda.

Mir. If by your art, my dearest father, you have Put the wild waters in this voyage, allay them.
The sky, it seems, would pour down stinking pitch,
Which this fair isle doth to the walkin’ sheep.
Dashes the fire out. O, I have suffered
With those that I saw suffer! a brave vessel,
Who had no doubt some noble creatures in her,
Dashed all to pieces. [1, the cry did knock
Against my very heart! Poor souls, they perish’d.
Had I been any god of power, I would
Have sunk the sea within the earth, or e’er
It should the good ship so have swallowed; and
The freighting souls within her.

Pro. He collected;
No more amazement: tell your piteous heart,
There’s no harm done.

Mir. O, woe the day!

No harm.

I have done nothing but in care of thee,
(Or thee, my dear one! thee, my daughter!) who Art ignorant of what thou art, neath knowing
Of y’were I am; nor that I am other
Than Prospero, master of a full poor cell,
And thy no greater father.

More to know
Did never meddle with my thoughts.

Tis time
I should inform thee further. I rend thy hand,
And pinch my magic garment from me.—So;

[Leaps into his Hat.

Lie there, my art.—Wipe thee thine eyes; have comfort.

The direful spectacle of the wreck, which touch’d
The very virtue of compassion in thee,
I have with such provision in mine art
So safely order’d, that there is no soul—
No, not so much perturbation as hair,
Redil to any creature in the piece;
Which thou bestart’dst cry, which thou sawst sink.

Sit down;
For thou must now know much.

Mir. You have often
Begun to tell me what I am; but stopp’d
And left me to a booteless inquisition.

Concluding, Stay, not yet.

The hour’s now come;
Three minutes bids thee wipe thine ear;
Obey, and be attentive. Carest thou not
A time before we came unto this cell?
I do not think thou canst; for then thou wast not
Out three years old.

Mir. Certainly, sir, I can.

Pro. By what? by any other house, or person?
Of any thing the image tell me, that
Hath kept with thy remembrance.

Mir. This far off;
And rather like a dream than an assurance
That thy remembrance warrants: had I not
Four or five women once, that tended me? [II

Pro. Thou hast, and more, Miranda!—but how is
That this lives in thy mind?—What seem’d then else
In the dark backward and abysm of time?
If thou remember’st aught, are thou canst’ret here,
How thou canst’ret here, thou may’st.

Mir. I do.

Pro. But that I do not.

Pro. Twelve years since, Miranda, twelve years Thy father was the duke of Milan; and Since, a prince of power.

Mir. Sir, are not you my father?

Pro. Thy mother was a piece of virtue, and
She said—thou was my daughter; and thy father
Was duke of Milan; and his only heir
A prince;—no worse issued.

Mir. O, the heavens!
What foul play had we, that we came from thence?
Or blessed was we not we did?

Mir. Both, both, my girl:
Be foul play, as thou say’st, were we had’st thence;
But blessedly holp hither.

Mir. O, my heart blees
To think o’the sea that I have turn’d you to,
Which is from my remembrance! Please you farth.

Pro. My brother, and thy uncle, call’d Antonio,—
I pray thee, mark me,—that a brother should Be so rapacious! Be so prodigious!—And, of all the world I lov’d, and to him put
The manage of my state; as, at that time,
Through all the sigilliaries it was the first,
Fell in the duke of Milan;—being so reputed
In dignity, and, for the liberality
Without a parallel; those being all my study,
The government I cast upon my brother,
And to my state grew stranger, being transported.
And, that I might in secret studies
Notst thou attend me?

Mir. Sir, most needful.

Pro. Being once perfeetected how to grant suits,
How to deny them; whom to advance, and whom
To thrash for over-topping; new created
The creatures that were mine; I say, or chang’d
Or else new form’d them: having both the key
Of officers and office, set all hearts
To what tune pleased’st his ear; that now he was
The tyr which had bid my princely trunk, not
And such’d my verdure out on’t.—I thou attend’st
I pray thee, mark me.

Mir. O good sir, I do.

Pro. I thus neglecting worldly ends, all dedicate
To closeness and the bettering of my mind
With what I was begotten, by which, for Over-priz’d all popular rage, in my false brother,
Awak’d an evil nature: and my trust,
Like a good parent, did beget of him
A Machiavel, in its contrary as great
As my trust was; which had, indeed, no limit,
A confidence sans bound. He being thus lorded,
Not only with what my revenue yielded,
But what my power might else exact,—like one
Who having, unto truth, by telling of It,
Made such a sinner of his memory,
To credit his own lie,—he did believe
He was the duke; out of the substitution,
And executing the outward face of royalty,
With all prerogative.—Hence his ambition
Growing.—Dost hear?

Mir. Your tale, sir, would cure deafness.

Pro. To hear, to have no screen between this part he
And him he play’d it for; he need not play’d,
Absolute Milan: me, poor man! my library
Was dukedom large enough; of temporal royalties
He thinks me now incapable: confederates
So far, as with the Church of Naples,
To give him annual tribute, do him homage;
Subject his coronet to his crown, and bend
The dukedom, yet unbowed, (alas, poor Milan)
To most ignoble stooping.

Mir. O the heavens!

Pro. Mark his condition, and the event: then
If this might be a brother.

Mir. I should do
To think but nobly of my grandmother.
Good wounds have borne bad sons.

Pro. Now the condition.

This king of Naples, being an enemy
To me, I venerate, hearken my brother’s suit;
Which was, that he in lieu o’the premises,—
Of homage, and I know not how much tribute,
Should presently extirpate me and mine
Out of the dukedom; and the court of Milan,
With all the honours, on my brother: wherein
A tremendous army levied, one midnight
Fated to the purpose, did Antonio open
The gates of Milan; and the dead of darkness,
These ambers for the purpose hurried thence
Me, and thy crying self.

Mir. Alack, for pity!
If, not remembering how I cried out then,
Will cry it o’er again: it is a hint,
That wrings mine eyes.
Act 1.

THE TEMPEST.

1. Hear a little further,
And then I'll bring thee to the present business.
Which now's upon us; without the which, this most impatient. [Story]

Mira.

That hour destroy us?

Pro.

Well demanded, wench; my tale provokes that question. Dear, they durst not;

(So dear the love my people bore me) nor set
A mark so bloody on the business; but
We colours fairer painted their foul ends.
In tow, they hurried us aboard a bark;
Bore us some leagues to sea; where they prepare'd
A rotten carcass of a boat, not rigg'd;
Not large to hold our souls, nor mast; the very rats
Instinctively had quit it: there they holst us,
To cry to the sea that roar'd to us; to sigh
To the winds, whose pity, sighing back again,
Did us but loving harm.

Mira.

Alack! what trouble was I then to you?

Pro.

O a cherubin
Thou wast, that did preserve me! Thou didst smile,
Infused with a fortitude from heaven,
When I have deck'd the sea with drops full salt;
Under my burden groan'd; which rais'd in me
An undergoing stomach, to bear up Against what should ensue.

Mira.

How came we ashore?

Pro. By Providence divine.
Some food we had, and some fresh water, that
A little, splendid, Gonzalo,
Out of his charity (who was then appointed Master of this design) did give us; with Rich garments, linens, stuffs, and necessaries,
Which since have steaded much; so, of his gentle
Knowing I lov'd my books, he furnish'd me, [necessarily]
From my own library, with volumes that I prize above my dukedom.

Mira.

Would I might
But ever see that man!

Pro.

Now I arise:—

Sit still, and hear the last of our sea-sorrow.
Here in this island we arriv'd; and here
If, I, the school-master, made thee more profit
Than other princes can, that have more time
For vainer hours, and tutors not so careful.

Mira. Heavens thank you for't! And now, I pray you, sir,
(For still its beating in my mind,) your reason
For raising this sea-storm?

Pro.

Know thus far forth—

By accident most strange, bountiful fortune,
Now my dear lady, hath mine enemies
Brought to this shore: and by my presence
I find my zenith doth depend upon
A most auspicious star; whose influence
If now I court not, but omit, my fortunes
Will ever after droop.—Here cease more questions;
Thou art inclin'd to sleep; 'tis a good dulness,
And give it way;—I know thou canst not choose.

[Miranda asleep.

Come away, servant, come: I'm ready now;
Approach, my Ariel; come.

Enter Ariel.

Ari. All hail, great master! grave sir, hail! I come
To answer thy best pleasure; be't to fly,
To swim, to dive into the fire, to ride
On the curl'd clouds; to thy strong bidding, task
Ariel, and all his quality.

Pro.

Hast thou, spirit,
Perform'd to point the tempest that I bade thee?

Ari. To every article,
I performed the king's ship; now on the beak,
Now in the waist, the deck, in every cabin,
I flam'd amazement: sometimes, I'd divide,
And burn in many places; on the top-mast,
The yards, and bowsprit, would I mark distinctly;
Then mock and join: Jove's lightnings, the precursors

O the dreadful thunder-claps, more momentary
And sight out running were not: the fire, and cracks
Of shock and tearing, fear, the mighty Neptune
Seem'd to besieg'd, and made his bold waves tremble;
Yea, his dread trident shake.

Pro.

Who was so firm, so constant, that this coil
Would not infect his reason?

Ari.

Not a soul
But felt a fever of the mad, and play'd
Some tricks of despiration: all, but mariners,
Fung'd in the foaming brine, and quell the vessel,
Then all a-fire with me: the king's son, Ferdinand,
With hair up starting (then like reeds, not hair),
Was the first man that leap'd: cried, Hell is empty,
And all the devils are here.

Pro.

Why, that's my spirit!
But was not this nigh shore?

Ari. Close by, my master.

Pro. But are they, Ariel, safe?

Ari. Not a hair perish'd;
On their sustaining garments not a blumish,
But fresher than before: and, as thou bad'st me,
In troops I have dispers'd them 'bout the isle:
The king's son have I landed by himself;
Whom I left cooling of the air with sighs,
In an odd angle of the isle, and sitting,
His arms in this sad knot.

Mira.

Most of the king's ship,
The mariners, say, how thou hast dispos'd,
And all the rest o' the fleet?

Ari. Safely in harbour
Is the king's ship; in the deep nook, where once
Thou call'dst me up at midnight to fetch me:
From the still-vox'd Bermoothes, there she's hid:
The mariners all under hatches stowed;
Whom, with a charm join'd to their suffer'd labour,
I have left asleep: and for the rest o' the fleet,
Which I dispers'd, they all have met again;
And are upon the Mediterranean flote,
Bound sadly home for Naples:
Supposing that they saw the king's ship w'reck'd,
And his great person perish.

Pro.

Ariel, thy charge
Exactly is perform'd; but there's more work
What is the time o' the day?

Ari. Past the mid season.

Pro. At least two glasses: the time 'twixt six and Must by us both be spent most preciously. [now]
Ari. Is there more toil? Since thou dost give me news.
Let me remember thee what thou hast promis'd,
Which is not yet perform'd of me.

Ari. How now? moody
What is't thou canst demand?

My liberty.

Ari. Before the time be out? no more.

Ari. I pray thee,
Remember, I have done thee worthy service;
Told thee no lies, made no mistakings, serv'd
Without or grudge, or grumblings: thou didst
To bate me a full year.

[Promise

Dost thou forget
From what a torment I did free thee?

Ari. No.

Pro. Thou dost; and think'st
It much to tread the ooz of the salt deep;
To run upon the sharp wind of the north;
To do me business in the veins o' the earth,
When it is bak'd with frost.

Ari. I do not, sir.

Pro. Thou liest, malignant thing! Hast thou
For the foul witch Sycorax, who, with age and envy,
Was grown into a hoop? hast thou forgotten tell me.

Pro. Thou hast: where was she born? speak?

Ari. Sir, in Argier.

Pro. But, No, sir, was she so? I must,
Once in a month, recount what thou hast known,
Which thou forget'st. This dam'd witch, Sycorax,
For mischief's manifold, and sorceries terrible

B 2
All exercise on thee: thou shalt be pinch'd
As thick as honey-combs, each pinch more stinging
Than bee: that made them.

Cal. I must eat my dinner.
This Island's mine, by Syracor my mother,
Which thou tak'st from me. When thou comest first,
Then stroak'd me, and mad'st much of me; wouldst

Water with berries in't; and teach me how
To name the bigger lights, and how the less,
That burn by day and night: and then I lov'd thee,
And show'd thee all the qualities o'the isle.
The fresh springs, brine pits, barren place, and for-

Carne'd be I that did so?—All the charms [title;
Of Syracor, toads, beasts, bats, light on you?
For I am all the subjects that you have,
Which was my own king: and here you sit
In this hard rock, whilsts you do keep from me

Pro.  Thou most lying slave,
Whose stripes may move, not kindness: I have us'd thee,
Flith as thou art, with human care; and lodg'd thee
In mine own cell, till thou didst seek to violate
The home of my child.

Cal. O ho, O ho!—would it had been done!
Thou didst prevent me; I had peopled else
This isle with Calibans.

Abhorred slave:
Which are print of goodness will not take,
Being capable of all ill! I pitied thee,
Thou hadst in't that which good could not abide to be with:
Therefore wast thou
Deservedly confin'd into this rock,
Which hadst deserv'd more than a prison.

Cal. You taught me language; and my profit on't,
Is how to curse: the red plaque rul'd you,
For learning use your language!

Pro. Hag-seed, hence'
Fetch us in fuel; and be quick, thou wert best,
To answer other business. Strange'st thou, malice?
If thou neglect'st, or dost unwillingly
What I command, I'll rake thee with old cramps.
Fill all thy bones with aches; make thee roar,
That beast shall trouble at thy suit.

Cal. No, pray thee!—
I must obey: his art is of such power,
It would control my dam's god, Setebos,
And make a vasall of him.

Pro. So, slave; hence! [Exit Caliban.

Re-enter Ariel, invisible, playing and singing: Ferdinand following him.

ARIEL'S SONG.
Come unto these yellow sands,
And then take hands;
Complete when you have, and kiss'd,
(The wild waves which,)
Foot it softly here and there:
And, sweet sprites, the burden bear.

Bur. Bow'gh, bow'gh.
[Dispersedly.
The watch-dogs bark:
Bur. Bow'gh, bow'gh.
[Dispersedly.
Hark, hark! I hear
The strain of dissolving chanticleer,
Cry, Cock-a-doodle-doo.

Fer. Where should this music be? 'Tis the air, or the air
It sounds so sweet:—and sure, it waits upon
Some god of the Island. Sitting on a rock,
Weeping again the king my father's wreck,
This music crept by me upon the waters;
For hearing both their fury, and my passion,
With its sweet air: thence I have follow'd it,
Act I.

THE TEMPEST.

Or it hath drawn me rather:—But 'tis gone.
No, it begins again.

Ariel sings.

Full fathom five thy father lies;
Of his bones are coral made;
Those are pearls that were his eyes;
Nothing of him but fell and fine;
But soft and sweet the sea's echo
Into something rich and strange.

Sea-Nymphs hourly ring his knell;
Hark! now I hear them—ding-dong, bell.

But, soft! who lightly touches a i's got

Fer. The ditty does remember my drown'd father;
This is no mortal business, nor no sound
That the earth owes:—I hear it now above me.

Pro. The fringed curtains of thine eye advance,
And say, what thou seest yond?

Mira. What is't? a spirit?
Lord, how it looks about! Believe me, sir,
It carries a brave form:—But 'tis a spirit. [senses
Pro. No, wench; it eats and sleeps, and hath such
As we have; such: This gallant, which thou seest;
Was in the wreck; and he's something staid
With grief, that's beauty's canker, thou might'st
Call him a goodly person: he hath lost his fellows,
And strays about to find them.

Pro. And I might call him
A thing divine: for nothing natural
I ever saw so noble.

Pro. It goes on. [Aside.
As my soul prompts it:—Spirit, fine spirit! I'll free
With thou, and keep thee, as I did for two days.

Pro. Most sure, the goddess
On whom those airs attend!—Vouchsafe, my prayer
May know, if you remain upon this island;
And that you will some good instruction give,
How I may bear me here: My prime request,
Which I do last pronounce, is, O you wonder
If you be made, or no?

Mira. No wonder, sir;
But, certainly a maid.

Pro. My language! heavens!—
I am the best of them that speak this speech,
Were I but where 'tis spoken,
How! the best what wert thou, if the king of Naples heard thee?

Fer. A single thing, as I am now, that wonders
To hear thee speak of Naples: He does hear me;
And, that does, I weep: myself am Naples;
Who with mine eyes, ne'er since at ebbe, beheld
The king my father's wreck'd.

Mira. Alack, for mercy!
Pro. Yes, faith, and all his lords: the duke
Of And his brave son, being twain. [Milan,

Pro. The duke of Milan,
And his more braver daughter, could control thee,
If now 'twere fit to do. At the first sight [Aside.
They have changed eyes:—Delicate Ariel,
I'll set thee free for this!—A word, good sir;
I fear, you have done yourself some wrong: a word.

Mira. Why speaks my father so ungenially? This Is the third man that ever I saw; the first
That ever I sigh'd for: pity move my father
To be inclin'd my way!

Pro. O, if a virgin,
And your affection not gone forth, I'll make you
The queen of Naples.

Pro. Soft, sir: one word more—
They are both in either's powers: but this swift must uneasy make, lest too light winning [Aside.
Make the prize light. One word more; I charge
That thou attend me: thou dost here usurp [Thee,
The name that ow'st not: and hast put thyself
Upon this island, as a spy to win it
From me, the lord on't.

Pro. No, as I am a man.
Mira. There's nothing ill can-dwell in such a temple;
If the ill spirit have so fair an house,
Good things will strive to dwell with't.
THE TEMPEST.

Act 2.

Gen. When every grief is entertain'd, that's Comes to the entertainers.

And. Arr't to my place.

Gen. Devise comes to him; indeed; you have spoken true, than you purposed.

And. You have taken it warmer than I meant you.

Gen. Therefore, my lord.

And. Fie, what a spendthrift is he of his tongue!

Ains. I prithee spare.

Gen. Well, I have done. But yet—

And. He had the thing.

And. Which of them, he, or Adrian, for a good wager, first begins to crow?

The old cock.

And. This is all.

Sub. Dance the wassail?

And. A laughter.

Gen. A birth.

And. This was mine own body.

Sub. A laugh?

And. A laughter.

Gen. Though this island seem to be desert—

Sub. Ha, ha, ha.

And. No, you've pay'd.

Gen. Uninhabitable, and almost inaccessible—

And. Yea.

Gen. He could not miss it.

And. It must needs be of subtle, tender, and deole temperature.

Sub. His appearance was a delicate wrench.

Sub. Aye, and a subtle; as he most learnedly did.

And. The air breathes upon us here most sweetly.

Sub. As if it had long, and rotten once.

And. They were perfumed by a fen.

Here is every thing conducive to love.

And. True; save means to live.

Of that there's none, or little.

Gen. How lush and lusty the grass looks; how green

And. The ground, indeed, is tawny.

Sub. With an eye of green isn't.

And. He miss'd not much.

Sub. No; he doth but mistake the truth totally.

Gen. But the rarity of it is (which is indeed almost beyond credit).

Sub. As many vouch'd rarities are.

Gen. That our garments, being, as they were, drenched in the sea, hold, notwithstanding, their freshness, and glosses; being rather now dry'd, than stain'd with salt water.

And. But one of his pockets could speak, would it not say, he lies?

Sub. Ay, or very falsely pocket up his report.

Gen. Methinks, our garments are now as fresh as when we put them on first in Africa; at the marriage of the kings; fair daughter Claribel to the king of Tunis.

Sub. I was a sweet marriage, and we prosper well in our return.

And. Tunis was never grac'd before with such paragon to their queen.

Gen. Not since widow Dido's time.

And. Widow? a par o' that! How came that widow in? Widow Dido?

Sub. What if he had said, widow Eneas too?
good lord, how you take it?

And. Widow Dido, said you? you make me study of the mind of Carthage, non of Tunis.

Gen. This Tunis, sir, was Carthage.

And. Carthage?

Gen. I assure you, Carthage.

Sub. What is this the more miraculous harp.

And. He hath rais'd the wall, and houses too.

And. What impossible matter will he make any next?

Sub. I think he will carry this island home in his pocket, and give it his son for an apple.

And. And, sawing the kernels of it in the sea, bring forth more islands.

Gen. Aye.

And. Why, in good time.

Gen. Sir, we were talking, that our garments seem new as fresh, as when we were at Tunis at the marriage of your daughter, who is now queen.

And. And the rared that's ever seen there.

Sub. 'Rato, I beseech you, widow Dido.

And. (i) widow Dido; ay, widow Dido.

Gen. is not, sir, my doubt is as fresh as the first day I saw it? I mean, in love.

And. That sort was well fam'd for.

Gen. When I wore it at your daughter's marriage?

Sub. You cram these words into mine ears, again.

The strength of my sense: 'would I had never Married my daughter there! for, coming thence,
My son is lost; and, in my rate, she too.

Who is so far from Italy remov'd,

My king (shall all see here.) then mine heir
Of Naples and of Milan, what strange stuff
Hath made his meal on thee?

Sub. Sir, he may live;

I saw him heat the surges under him,

And ride upon their backs; he tread the water,
Whose eminence he flung aside, and breasted
The surge most wild that met him; his bold bend
Have the contentious waves he kept, and our Daimies, they were lost in lattery stress.

To the shore, that o'er his wave-worn beard bow'd;

As stooping to relieve him: I doubt not,

He came alive to land.

Sub. No, no, he's gone.

Gen. Sir, you may thank yourself for this great

And. That would not bless our Europe with your daughter.

But rather, sir, to an African:

Where she, at least, is handish'd from your eye,

Who hath came to wet the grief on't.

Sub. Prithee, peace.

Gen. You were knew'd to, and important other-

By all of us; and the fair soul herself

Weigh'd, between lothness and obedience, at

That end o' the beam she bow'd.

We have lost your son.

I fear, for ever, that Milan and Naples have

More widows in them of this business making,

Than we bring men to comfort them: the fault's
Your own.

And. So is the dearest of the loss.

Gen. My lord Sebastian,

The truth you speak doth lack some gentleness,

And time to speak it in: you rub the sore,

When you should bring the platter.

Sub. Very well.

And. And most chirurgeously.

Gen. It is foul weather in us all, good sir,

When you are cloudy.

Sub. Foul weather?

And. Very foul.

Gen. Had I plantations of this isle, my lord,—

And. He'd sow it with bitter-seed.

Sub. Or docks, or mallow.

Gen. And were the king of it, What would I do?

Sub. 'Scape being drunk, for want of wine.

Gen. The commonwealth I would by contraries
Execute all things: for no kind of traffic
Would I admit, no name of magistrate;

Letters should not be known; riches, poverty,
And use of service, none; contract, successions,
Hourn, bound of land, tillth, vineyard, none:

No use of metal, corn, or wine, stack;

No occupation; all men idle, all;

And women too; but innocent and pure:

No sovereignty,

And yet he would be king on't.

And. The latter end of his commonwealth forgets the beginning.

Gen. All things in common, nature should pro-

Without sweat or endeavour: treason, felony,

Sword, pike, knife, gun, or need of any engine,

I would not have; but nature should bring forth,

Of its own kind, all folio, all abundance,

To feed my innocent people.

Sub. No marrying 'mong his subjects?
THE TEMPEST.

Act 2.

Ant. None, man; all idle; whores, and knaves.

Seb. I would with such perfection govern, sir, To excel the golden age.

Ant. Save his majesty!

Seb. Long live Gonzalo!

Gon. Should I, sir, do you mark me, sir?

Ant. Pr'ythee, no more: thou dost talk nothing to me.

Gon. I do well believe your highness; and did it To minister occasion to these gentlemen, who are of such sensible and nimble lungs, that they always use to laugh at nothing.

Ant. 'Twas you we laugh'd at.

Gon. Who, in this kind of merry fooling, am nothing to you: so may you continue, and laugh at nothing still.

Ant. What a blow was there given?

Seb. An it had not fallen flat-long.

Gon. You are gentlemen of brave mettle; you would lift the moon out of her sphere, if she would continue in it five weeks without changing.

Enter Ariel invisible, playing sometim musick.

Seb. We would so, and then go a-hat-fowling.

Ant. Nay, good my lord, be not angry.

Gon. No, I warrant you; I will not adventure my discretion so weakly. Will you laugh me asleep, for I am very heavy?

Ant. Go, sleep, and hear us.

[All sleep but Ant. Seb. and Ant.]

Ant. What, all so soon asleep! I wish mine eyes Were with themselves, shut up my thoughts: I am inclin'd to do so.

Seb. Please you, sir, Do not omit the heavy offer of it: It seldom visits sorrow; when it doth, It is a comforter.

Ant. We two, my lord, Will guard your person, while you take your rest, And watch your safety.

Ant. Thank you: Wondrous heavy.

[Alsono sleeps. Exit Ariel.

Seb. What a strange drowsiness possesses them! It is th' quality o' th' climate.

Seb. Why

Dost it not then our eye-lids sink? I find not Myself dispos'd to sleep.

Ant. Nor 1; my spirits are nimble. They fell together all, as by consent; Their drowsiness, as by a thunder-stroke. What might, Worthy Sebastian?—O, what might?—No more:— And yet, methinks, I see it in thy face, What thou should'st be: th' occasion speaks thee: My strong imagination sees a crown [and Dropping upon thy head.

Seb. What, art thou waking?

Ant. Do you not hear me speak?

Seb. I do; and, surely, It is a sleepful language; and thou speak'st Out of thy sleep: What is it thou didst say?

This is a strange repose, to be asleep With eyes wide open; standing, speaking, moving, And yet so fast asleep.

Noble Sebastian, Thou let'st thy fortune sleep—die rather; wink'st While thou art waking.

Seb. Thou dost more distinctly; There's meaning in th' snore.

Ant. I am more serious than my custom: you Must be so too, if heed me; which to do, Trebles thee o'er.'

Seb. Well; I am standing water.

Ant. I'll teach you how to flow.

Seb. Do so: to ebb.

Hereditary sloth instructs me.

Ant. O, If you but knew, how you the purpose cherish, While thou mockst it! how, in stripping it, You more invest it! Ebbing men, indeed, Most often do so near the bottom run, By their own fear, or sloth.

Seb. Pr'ythee, say on:

The setting of thine eye, and check, proclaim A meaner from thee; and a blemish, indeed, Which throes thee much to yield.

Ant. Thus, sir: Although this lord of weak remembrance, this (Whose life is earth'd,) hath here almost persuaded (for he's a spirit of persuasion, only) Prefuses to persuade) the king, his son's alive: 'Tis as impossible that he's undone.'

As he that sleeps when he swims.

Seb. I have no hope

That he's undone.

Ant. O, out of that no hope, What great hope have you! no hope, that way, is Another way so high an hope, that even Ambition cannot pierce a wink beyond, Seb. But doubts discovery there. Will you grant, with me, That Ferdinand is drown'd?

Seb. He's gone.

Ant. Then, tell me, Who's the next heir of Naples?

Seb. Claribel.

Ant. She that is queen of Tunis; she that dwells Ten leagues beyond man's life; she that from Naples Can have no note, unless the sun were post, (The man! 'tis moon too slow,) till new-born chins Be rough and rasonable: she, from whom We all were sea-swallow'd, though some castagain And, by that, destin'd to perform an act, Wherein you and thy wife are to be, To rise in yours and my discharge.

Seb. What stuff is this?—How say you? I assure, my brother, your daughter's queen of Tunis; So is she heir of Naples; 'twixt which regions There is some space.

Ant. A space whose every cubit Seams to cry out, How shall that Claribel Measure us back to Naples!—Keep in Tunis.

And Sebastian wake!—Say, this we de:th That now hath seiz'd them; why, they were no worse Than now they are: There be, that can rule Naples, As well as he that sleeps; lords, that can prate As amply, and unnecessarily, As this Gonzalo; I myself could make A chough of as deep chat, O, that you bore The mind that I do! what a sleep were this For your advancement! Do you understand me?

Seb. Methinks, I do.

Ant. And how does your content

Tender your own good fortune?

Seb. I remember, You would supplant your brother Prospero.

Ant. True:

And, look, how well my garments sit upon me; Much faster than before: my brother's servants Were then my fellows; now they are my men.

Seb. But, for your conscience—

Ant. Ay, sir; where lies that? If it were a kybe, 'Twould put me to my slipper: But I feel not This deity in my bosom: twenty consciences, That stand 'twixt me and Milan, candied be they, And melt, ere they molest! Here lies your brother, No better than the earth he lies upon, [whom I, If he were that which now he's like, that's dead; With this obedient steel, three inches of it, Can lay to bed for ever: whiles you, doing thus, To the perpetual wink for eye might put This ancient morsel, this sir Prudence, who Should not upbraid our course. For all the rest, They'll take suggestion, as a cat laps milk; They'll tell the clock to any business that We say betas the hour.

Seb. Thy case, dear friend, Shall be my precedent; as thou gotst Milan, I'll come by Naples. Draw thy sword: one stroke Shall free thee from the tribute which thou pay'st; And I the king shall love thee.

ANT. Draw together. And when I rear my hand, do you the like To fall it on Gonzalo.
Enter Trinculo.

Here comes a spirit of his; and to torment me, For bringing wood in slowly; I'll fall flat; Perchance, he will not mind me, I'll beorth my work Out of my way, unless he bid them; but For every trifles are set upon me. Sometimes like apes, that moe and chatter at me. And after, bite me; then like hedge-hogs, which I scuffling in my bare-foot way, and mount Their pricks at my foot-thall; sometime am All wound with adders, who, with ciever tongues, Do bite me into madness.—Lo! now! lo!

Enter Trinculo.

[Drinks. Cal. Do not torment me; O! Ste. What's the matter? Have we devils here? Do you put tricks upon us with sages, and men of the race? Trinculo.]
stroke:—But art thou not drown'd, Stephano? I hope now, thou art not drown'd. Is the storm living, Stephano? O Stephano, two Neapolitans 'scape'd! Pr'ythee, do not turn me about; my stomach is not constant.

Cal. These be fine things, an' if they be not sprites. That's a brave god, and bears celestial liquor: I will drink with him.

Ste. How didst thou 'scape? How cam'st thou hither? swear by this bottle, how cam'st thou hither. I escaped upon a butt of sack, which the sailors heaved over-board, by this bottle! which I mark of the bark of a tree, with mine own hands, since I was cast ashore.

Cal. I'll swear, upon that bottle, to be thy True subject; for the liquor is not earthly.

Ste. Here; swear then how thou escap'dst.

Trin. Swim a-shore, man, like a duck; I can swim like a duck, I'll be sworn.

Ste. Here, kiss the book: Though thou canst swim like a duck, thou art made like a goose.

Trin. O Stephano, hast any more of this? I'll swear, of this.

Ste. The whole butt, man; my cellar is in a rock by the sea-side, where my wine is hid. How now, moreover, how does this thing affect thee?

Cal. Hast thou not drowned from heaven?

Ste. Out o' the moon, I do assure thee: I was the man in the moon, when time was.

Cal. I have seen thee in her, and do adore thee; My mistress shewed me thee, and thy dog, and thy bush.

Ste. Come, swear to that; kiss the book: I will furnish it anon with new contents: swear.

Trin. By this good light, this is a very shallow monster:—I afraid of him?—a very weak monster.—The man? the moon? a most poor credulous monster?—Well drawn, monster, in good sooth. Made of that? thee ey'd thee on that? island; And I will kiss thy foot. I pr'ythee, be my god.

Trin. By this light, a most perfidious and drunken monster; when his god's asleep, he'll rob his botte.

Cal. I'll kiss thy foot: I'll swear myself thy subject.

Ste. Come on then; down, and swear.

Trin. I shall laugh myself to death at this puppy! A most scurvy monster! I could find in my heart to beat him.—

Ste. Come, kiss.

Trin. —but that the poor monster's in drink: An abominable monster!

Cal. I'll shew thee the best springs; I'll pluck thee berries; I'll fish for thee, and get thee wood enough. A plague upon the tyrant that I serve! I'll bear him no more sticks, but follow thee, Thou wondrous man.

Trin. A most ridiculous monster; to make a wonder of a poor drunkard.

[Grow.

Ste. I pr'ythee, let me thing thee where crabs And I with my long nails will dig thee pig-nuts; Shew thee a Jay's nest, and instruct thee how To snare the nimble marmozet, I'll bring thee To clush the very fertile inch o' th' island; And I will kiss thee foot; I pr'ythee, be my god.

Trin. —but that the poor monster's in drink: An abominable monster!

Cal. I'll shew thee the best springs; I'll pluck thee berries; I'll fish for thee, and get thee wood enough. A plague upon the tyrant that I serve! I'll bear him no more sticks, but follow thee, Thou wondrous man.

Trin. A most ridiculous monster; to make a wonder of a poor drunkard.

[Grow.

Ste. I pr'ythee now, lead the way, without any more talk. Trinculo, the king and all our company else being drowned, we will inherit here.—Here; bear my bottle. Fellow Trinculo, we'll fill him by and by.

Cal. Farewell master; farewell, farewell, farewell; [Sings drunkenly.

Trin. A howling monster; a drunken monster.

Cal. No more damn'd I'll make for fish; Nor fish in firing.

[At repirers.

Nor scrape trencher-wine, nor wash dish; 'Tan 'Ban, Cal.—Callahan, Has a new master—Get a new man.

Freedom, hey day! hey day, freedom! freedom, hey day, freedom! Ste. O brave monster! lead the way.

[Exit.}

ACT III.

SCENE I. Before Prospero's Cell.

Enter Ferdinand, bearing a Log.

Fer. There be some sports are painful; and delight them sets o't: some kinds of baseness Are nobly undergone; and most poor matters Point to rich ends. This my mean task Would be as heavy to me, as odious: but The mistress, which I serve, quickens what's dead, And makes my labours pleasures: O, she is Ten times more gentle than her father's craved; And he's composed of harshness. I must remove Some thousands of these logs, and pile them up, Upon a sore injunction: My sweet mistress Weeps when she sees me work; and says, such Had ne'er like executor. I forget; [baseness: But these sweet thoughts do even refresh my: Most busy-less, when I do it. [bours;

Enter Miranda; and Prospero at a Distance.

Mir. Alas, now! pray you, Work not so hard: I would, the lightning had Burnt up those logs, that you are enjoind to pile! Pray, set it down, and rest you: when this burns, 'Til weep for having wearied you: My father would have it hard at study; pray now, rest yourself; He's safe for these three hours.

Fer. O most dear mistress, The sun will set, before I shall discharge What I must strive to do.

Mir. If you'll sit down, I'll bear your logs the while: Pray, give me that: I'll carry it to the pile.

Fer. No, precious creature: I had rather crack my sinews, break my back, Than you should such dishonour undergo, While I sit lazy by.

Mir. Why, it would become me As well as it does you: and I should do It with much more ease; for my good will is to it, And yours it is against.

Fer. Poor worm! thou art infected; This visitation shews it.

Mir. You look wearily, [me, Fer. No, noble mistress; 'tis fresh morning with When you are by at night. I do beseech you, (Chiefly, that I may set it in my prayers,) What is your name?

Mir. Miranda.—O my father, I have broke your hest to say so

Fer. Admire'ld Miranda Indeed, the top of admiration; worth What's dearest to the world! Full many a lady I have ey'd with best regard; and many a time The harmony of their tongues hath into bondage Brought my too diligent ear: for several virtues Have I lik'd several women; never any With so full soul, but some defect in her: This quarrel with a great soul. I wish, And put it to the foal; But you, O you, So perfect, and so peerless, are created Of every creature's best.

Mir. I do not know One of my sex; no woman's face remember, Save from my glass, mine own; nor have I seen More that I may call men, than you, good friend, A man, my dear father: how features are abroad, I am skillless of; but, by my modesty, (The jewel in my dowry,) I would not wish Any companion in the world but you, Nor can imaginations form such a shape. Beside myself, to like of: But I prattle Something too wildly, and my father's precepts I therein do forget.

Fer. I am in my condition,
THE TEMPEST.
Act 3

A prince, Miranda; I do think, a king; (I would, not so I) and would no more endure To sit in prison, than a man; thus much I know. The flesh'd fly blow my mouth. — Hear my soul speak: —

The very instant that I saw you, did My heart fly to your service; there resides, To make me slave to it; and for your sake, Am I this patient leg-man.

Mir. Do you love me?

[Exeunt 11 and 12, bear witness to this sound, And crown what I profess: shall I be sure? If I speak true; if hollowly, invert
What best is bodied me, to miscalcive: !

Beyond all limit of what else the world, He loves, prize, honour you. I am a fool,

To weep at what I'm glad of.

Fool. Of the most rare affections! Heaven grace grace On that which breeds between them!

Wherefore weep you?

Mir. At mine unworthiness, that dare not offer What I deserv to give; and much less take.

What I shall die, and die as I have lived: And all the more it seeks to hide itself, [ning!

The bigger bulk it shows. Hence, bashful cun直升. And prompt me, plain and holy innocence: — I am your wife; if you shall marry me:

If not, I'll die your maid to be your fellow.

You may deny me; but I'll be your servant.

Whether you will or no.

Fool. My mistress, dearest,

And I thus humble ever.

Mir. My husband then!

Fool. Ay, with a heart as willing

As bondage ever of freedom: here's my hand.

Mir. And mine with my heart in't: and now

Till half an hour hence. [farewell, Farewell.

Fool. A thousand! thousand! (Bow and Farewell and Miranda.

Pro. So glad of this as they, I cannot be,

Who are surpris'd with all; but my rejoicing

At nothing more be. I'll to my book; For yet, ere supper time, must I perform

Much business appertaining. [Exit.

SCENE II. Another Part of the Island.

Enter Stephano and Trinculo; Caliban following with a Bottle.

Stv. Tell not me: — when the butt is out, we will drink water; not a drop before: therefore bear up, and board 'em: Servant-monster, drink to me.

Trm. I drink, monster? the folly of this island!

They say, there's but five upon this isle: we are three of them: if the other two be trained like us, the state totters.

Stv. Drink, servant-monster, when I bid thee; thy eyes are almost set in thy head.

Trm. Where should they be set else? he were a brave monster indeed, if they were set in his tall.

Stv. My man-monster hath drowned his tongue in sack: for my part, the sea cannot drown me: I swam ere I could recover the shore, five-and-thirty leagues, off and on, by this light. — Thou shalt be my lieutenant, monster, or my standard.

Trm. Your lieutenant, if you list; he's no standard.

Stv. We'll not run, monsieur monster.

Trm. Nor go neither: but you'll lie like dogs; and yet say nothing neither.

Stv. Monstrous eyes, eyes in once in thy life, if thou beest a good monsieur.

Cal. How does thy honour? Let me lick thy shoes; I'll not serve him, he is not valiant.

Trm. This is a beast and a monster, I am in case to justise a constellation. Why, thou deboshed fish thou, was there ever man a coward, that hath drank so much sack as I to-day? Wilt thou tell a monstrous lie, being but half a fish, and half a monster?

Cal. Lo, how he mocks me! wilt thou let him, my lord? — that a monster should be such a natural!

Cal. Lo, lo! again! bite him to death, I pray thee.

Stv. Trinculo, keep a good tongue in your head; if you prove a manner, the next tree! — he poor fellow that's my subject, and he shall not suffer indignity.

Cal. I thank my noble lord. Wilt thou be pleas'd To hearken once again the suit I made thee?

Stv. Marry, wilt I: kneel, and repeat it; I will stand, and so shall Trinculo.

Enter Ariel, incapsulated.

Cal. As I told thee Before, I am subject to a tyrant; A sorcerer, that by his cunning hath Cheated me of this land.

Ari. Thou liest.

Cal. Thou liest, thou jesting monkey, thou: I would, my valiant master would destroy thee; I do not lie.

Stv. Trinculo, if you trouble him any more in his walk by this hand, I will supplant some of your teeth.

Trm. Why, I said nothing.

Stv. Mum mum, and no more. — [To Caliban.]

Pro. Pandy and we.

Cal. I say by sorcery he get this isle:

From me he get it. — if thy greatness will Revenge it on him — for, I know, thou dar'st; But this thing dare not.

Stv. That's most certain.

Ari. Thou shalt be lord of it, and I'll serve thee.

Stv. How now shall this be compassed? Canst thou bring me to the party?

Cal. Yes, yes. I'll yield him thy asleep. Where thou may'st knock a nail into his head.

Ari. Thou liest, thou canst not.

Cal. What a pied nunny's this! Thou scurvy patch! I do beseech thy greatness, give him blows, And take his bottle from him: when that's gone, life shall drink nought but brine; for I'll not show Where the quick freshes are. [him

Stv. Trinculo, run into no further danger: In-trupt the monster one word further, and, by this hand, I'll turn my mercy out of doors, and make a stock-fish of thee.

Cal. Where, what did I? I did nothing; I'll go further off.

Stv. Didst thou not say, he lied?

Ari. Thou liest.

Stv. Do I so? take thou that. [Strike him.

Ari. As you please. I give me the lie another time.

Trm. I did not give the lie: — out o' your eyes, and hearing too. — A pox o' your bottle! this can suck, and drinking do. — A murrain on your monster, and the devil take your fingers!

Cal. Ha, ha, ha!

Stv. Now, forward with your tale. Prythee stand further off.

Cal. Hear him enough: after a little time, I'll beat him too.

Stv. Stand further. — Come, proceed.

Cal. Why, as I told thee, 'tis a custom with him: the afternoon to sleep: there thou mightest bide him.

Having first sel'd his books; or with a log Battering his skull, or paunch him with a stake; Or cut his wazned with thy knife: Remember, First. His kept-by books; for without them He's but a sol, as I am, nor hath not One spirit to command: They all do hate him, As rootedly as I: Burn but his books;

He's but a monster, (for so he calls them,) Which, when he has a house, he'll deck withal.

And that most deeply to consider, is The beauty of his daughter; he himself Calls her a nonpareil: I never saw a woman, But only Sycorax my dam, and she;
But she as far surpasseth Sycorax,
As greatest does least.

Ste. Is it so brave a less? Cal. Ay, lord; she will become thy bed, I warrant,
And bring thee forth brave brood.

Ste. Monster, I will kill this man: his daughter
And will be king and queen; (save our graces!) and Trinculo and thyself shall be viceroy.—Dost thou like the plot, Trinculo?

Trin. Excellent.

Ste. Give me thy hand: I am sorry I beat thee;
But, while thou livest, keep a good tongue in thy head.

Cal. Within this half hour will he be asleep;
What thou destroy him then.

Ste. At thy request, monster, I will do reason, any reason: Come on, Trinculo, let us sing.

Flout 'em, and skout 'em; and skout 'em; and skout 'em;
Thought is free.

Cal. That's the tune.

[Aside.]

Ariel. Plays the tune on a Tabor and Pipe.

Ste. What is this tune?

Trin. This is the tune of our catch, played by the picture of No-body.

Ste. If thou beest a man, show thyself in thy likeness;
If thou beest a devil, tak't as thou list.

Trin. O, forgive me my sins!

Ste. He that dies, pays all debts: I defy thee—
Mercy upon us!

Cal. Art thou afraid?

Ste. No, monster, not I.

Cal. Be not afraid; the isle is full of noises,
Sounds, and sweet airs, that give delight, and hurt not.

Sometimes a thousand twangling instruments
Will harm a man's ears; and sometime voices,
That, if I then had wak'd after long sleep,
Will make me sleep again: and, then in dreaming,
The clouds, methought, would open, and I saw

Ready to drop upon me; that, when I wak'd,
I cry'd to dream again.

Ste. This will prove a brave kingdom to me, where I shall have my music for nothing.

Cal. When Prospero is destroyed.

Ste. That shall be by and by; I remember the story.

Trin. The sound is going away: let's follow it, and, after, do our work.

Ste. Lead, monster; we'll follow.—I would, I could see this taborer: he lays it on.

Trin. Will come? I'll follow, Stephano.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. Another part of the Island.

Enter Alonso, Sebastian, Antonio, Gonzalo, Adrian,
Francisco, and others.

Gon. By'r lakin, I can go no further, sir;
My old bones ache: here's a maze trod, indeed,
Through forth-right, and meanders! by your pa-
I need not rest me. [Tlence.

Alon. Old lord, I cannot blame thee,
Who am myself attach'd with weariness,
To the dulling of my spirits: sit down, and rest.
Even here I will put off my hope, and keep it
No longer for my flatterer: he is drown'd,
Whom thus we stray to find, and the sea mocks
Our frustrate search on land: Well, let him go.

Ant. I am right glad that he's so out of hope. [Aside to Sebastian.

Do not, for one repulse, forego the purpose
That you resolv'd to effect.

The next advantage
Will we take thoroughly.

Ant. Let it lie to-night:
For, now they are oppress'd with travel, they

Will not, nor cannot, use such vigilance,
As when they are fresh.

Seb. I say, to-night: no more.

Solomon and strange music! and Prospero above, invisible. Enter several strange Shapes, bringing in a banquet: they dance about it with gentle actions of salutation; and, inviting the Kings &c. to eat, they depart.

Alon. What harmony is this? my good friends,
Gon. Marvelous sweet music! [hark! Alon.
Give us kind keepers, heavens! What were these?

Seb. A living drollery: Now I will believe,
That there are unicorns: But, in Arabia
There is one tree, the phoenix' throne; one phoenix
At this hour reigning there.

Ant. I'll believe both;
And what does else want credit, come to me,
And I'll be sworn 'tis true: Travellers ne'er did lie,
Though fools at home condemn them.

Gon. If in Naples
I should report this now, would they believe me?
If I say, I saw such islanders,
(For, certes, these are people of the island,) Who, though they are of monstrous shape, yet, note,
Their manners are more gentle, kind, than of
Our human generation you shall find Many, nay, almost any.

Pro. Honest lord,
Thou hast said well: for some of you there present,
Are worse than devils. [Aside.

Alon. I cannot too much muse,
Such shapes, such gestures, and such sound, expressing
(Although they want the use of tongue,) a kind
Of exorbitant dumb discourse.

Gon. They vanish'd strangely.

Seb. No matter, since
They have left their viands behind; for we have stomach.

Will't please you taste of what is here?

Alon. Not I.

Gon. Faith, sir, you need not fear: When we were boys,
Who would believe that there were mountaineers, Dew-lapp'd like bulls, whose throats had hanging at them
Wallets of flesh? or that there were such men, Whose heads stood in their breasts? which now we find,
Each putter-out on five for one, will bring us
the good warrant of Alon. I will stand to, and feed,

Although my last: no matter, since I feel
The best is past.—Brother, my lord the duke,
Stand too, and do as we.

Thunder and Lightning. Enter Ariel like a harpy:
claps his wings upon the table, and, with a quash device, the banquet vanishes.

Ari. You are three men of sin, whom destiny
(That hath to instrument this lower world,
And what is in't,) the never-surfeted sea
Hath caused to belch up; and on this island
Where man doth not inhabit: you 'mongst men
Being most unfit to live. I have made you mad;

[Seeing Alon. Seb. &c. draw their swords.

And even with such like valour, men hang and drown
Their proper selves. You fools! I and my fellows
Are ministers of fate; the elements
Of whom your swords are temper'd, may as well
Wound the loud winds, or with blemock'd-at stabs
Kill the still-closing waters, as diminish
One dowle that's in my plume; my fellow-ministers
Are like Invulnerable: If you could hurt,
Your swords are now too many for your strengths,
And will not be uplifted: But, remember,
(For that's my business to you,) that you three
From Milan did supplant good Prospero;
THE TEMPEST.

Act 4.

Expost'd us, the sea, which hath requir'd it,
Tid, and in innocents; child for which we did dread
Thieves, delaying, not forgetting grief, have Incur'd the sea and shores, ye, all the creatures. Against your peace. Thee, thine son, Alonso,
Thy have bereft; and do pronounce by me,
Longer pang's misery, worse than any death.
Can be at ease) shall step by step attend.
You, and your ways! whose wrath and bear you from (Which here, in this most delicious isle, else falls
Lips, nor heads, is nothing, but heart's sorrow,
And a clear live ease.

It remains in thunder; then, to soft music; enter
The jocuzae again, and dance with mops and mowers, and every out the table.

Pros. [Aside.] Bravely the figure of this happy
Bast them
Perform'd, my Ariel; a grace it had, devouing:
In my instruction hast thou nothing bated,
In what thou hast to say; so, with good life,
And observation strange, my meaner ministers. Their several kinds have done; my high charms
Be work.

And these, mine enemes, are all knit up
In their distractions; they now are in my power;
And in these sirs I leave them, whilst I visit
Young Ferdinand. (whom they suppose is drown'd.)
And his and my love's arising.

[Exit Prospero from above.

Ariel. I the name of something holy, sir, why
In this strange state? [stand you
Ariel.

Pros. One, it is monstrous! monstrous!
Methought, the hillows spoke, and told me of it.
The winds did sing it to me; and the thunder,
That deep and dreadful organ pipe, pronounc'd
The name of Venus; it did bash my treossip.
Therefore my son' the nose is bedded; and
I'll seek him deeper than ever plumbat sounded,
And with him there I'madd'd.

[Exit. But one feed at a time,
I'll fight their legions o'er.

Ariel. I'll be thy second.

Pros. All three of them are desperate; their Great guilt,
Like poison given to work a great time after,
Now 'gin to bite the spirits. — I do beseech you,
That are of suffer joints, follow them swiftly.
And hinder them from this ecstacy
May now prove them to.

Ariel. Follow, I pray you.

ACT IV.

SCENE I. Before Prospero's Cell.

Enter Prospero, Ferdinand, and Miranda.

Pros. If I have too sotereply patri'ed you,
Your compensation makes amends; for I
Have given you here a thread of mine own life,
That for which I live; whom once again
I tender to thy hand; all thy vexations
Were but my trials of thy love, and thon
Hast straight the test the test: here, afore Heaven,
I ratify this my rich gift. O Ferdinand,
Do not smile at me, that I bestow her off,
For thou shalt find she will outstrip all praise,
And take it with her.

Pros. I do believe it,
Against an oracle.

Pros. Then, as my gift, and thine own acquisition Worthy of, 'hath take my daughter: But if Dost break her virgin seat before
All sanctimonious ceremonies may
With full and holy rite be minister'd,
No sweet aspersion shall the heavens let fall
To make this contract grow; but barren hate,
Scourvy disdain, and discord, shall bestrew
The union of your bed with weeds so loathly,

That you shall hate it both; therefore, take heed,
As my boys' lamps shall light you.

As I hope
For quiet days, fair issue, and long life,
With such love as 'tis now; the musty dem.
The most opportune place, the strongest suggestion
Our wonder severities; cast, shall be met
Mine honour into lust; to take away
The edge of that day's celebration,
When I shall think, or Theseus's steeds are found.
One that kept chain'd, below.

Fairly spoke:
Sit them, and talk with her, she is thine own—
What, Ariel! my industrious servant Ariel!

Ariel.

Ariel. What would my potent master? here I am.
Pros. Thou and thy messenger follows your last ser-
Id worthily perform; and I must use you (tis in such another trick; go, bring the rable,
Vor whom I give thee power, here, to this place.
Incite them to quick motion; for I must Bestow upon thee the eyes of this young couple
Some vanity of mine art; it is my promise,
And they expect it from me.

Pros.

Pros. As, with a twink.

Ariel. Before you can say, Come, and go,
A breath twice; and cry, so, so,
Each one, tripping on his toe,
Will be here with mop and mowe:

Pros. Do you love me, master? me

Pros. Pearly, my delicate Ariel! Do not approach,
Till thou dost hear me call.

Ariel. Well, I conserve.

Pros. Look, thou be true; do not give dalliance
Too much the vein; the strongest oaths are stray
To the fire 'tis blood: be more abstentions,
Or else, good night, your vow!

Pros. I warrant you, sir,

Pros. The white-cold virgin snow upon my heart
Abates the ardour of my liver.

Pros. Well—

Now come, my Ariel! bring a corollary,
Rather than want a spirit; appear, and pertly—
No tongue; all eyes; be silent. [Soft music.

A Masque. Enter Iris.

Iris. Ceres, most bounteous lady, the rich
Of wheat, rye, barley, vetchees, oats, and yea;
Thy turfy mountains, where live nipping sheep,
And flat meads, thatch'd with straw, them to keep;
Thy banks with peoned and illited brims,
Which spongy April at thy best betrays,
To make cold nymphs chaotic crowns; and thy Broom groves,
Whose shadow the dismissed bachelor loves,
Being lessam; thy pole chip; vineyard;
And thy sea-surge, sterial, and rocky-hard,
Where thou thyself dost air: The Queen o' the sky,
Whose watery arch, and messenger, am I,
Bids thee leave these; and with her sovereign grace.
Here on this grass-plot, in this very place,
To come and sport: her peacock's fly amain;
Approach, rich Ceres, her to entertain.

Enter Ceres.

Ceres. Hall, many-colour'd messenger, that ne'er
Dost disobey the wife of Jupiter;
Who, with thy saffron wings upon my flowers
Different thy sweet breaths refreshing showers.
And with each end of thy brows doth crown
My bosky acres, and my unshrub'd down,
Rich scarf to my proud earth; Why hath thy queen
Summon'd me hither, to this short-grass'd green
To make fest of true love to celebrate;
And some donation freely to estate
On the bliss' lovers.

Pros. Tell me, heavenly bow,

Pros. Tell me, my daughter, as thou dost know.

Dost now attend the queen? since they did plot
The means, that dusky Dis my daughter got,
Act 4. THE TEMPEST.

Her and her blind boy's scandal'd company I have forsworn.

Iris. Of her society Be not afraid; I met her deity.

Cutting the clouds towards l'aphos; and her son Doew-drawn with her: here thought they to have seen.

Some wanton charm upon this man and maid, Whose vows are that no bed-rite shall be paid. Tall Hymen's torch be lighted: but in vain; Mars's hot minion is retird with again; Her wasplish-headed son has broke his arrows, He wears he will shoot no more, but play with spar. And be a boy right out.

[rows. Cer.]

Great Juno comes: I know her by her gait.

Enter Juno.

Jun. How does my hounteous-sister? Go with me, To bless this town, that they may prosper be, And honor'd in their issue.

SONG.

Jun. Honour, riches, marriage-blessings, Long continuance, and increasing, Hourly, joys be still upon you! Juno sing her blessings on you.

Cer. Earth's increase, and Jove plenteous, Barns and garners never empty; Vines, with clustering bunches growing; Plants, with goodly benvan bowing; Spring come to you, at the farthest, In the very end of harvest! Scarcity and want shall shun you; Ceres' blessing so is on you.

Fer. This is a most majestic vision, And harmonious charmingly: May I be bold To think these spirits? Pro. Spirits, which by mine art I have from their confines call'd to enact My present fancies. Fer. Let me live here ever; So rare a wonder'd father, and a wife, Make this place Paradise. [Juno and Ceres whisper, and send Iris on employment.]

Pro. Sweet now, silence; Juno and Ceres whisper seriously; There's something else to do; hush, and be mute, Or else our spell is marr'd.

Iris. You nymphs, call'd Naïads, of the wand'ring brooks, With your sedg'd crowns, and ever-harmless looks, Leave your hidden channels, and on this green land Answer your summons: Juno does command: Come, temperate nymphs, and help to celebrate A contract of true love; be not too late.

Enter certain Nymphs. You sun-burn'd sikelemen, of August weary, Come hither from the furrow, and be merry; Make holy-day; your rye-straw hats put on, And these fresh nymphs encounter every one In country footing.

Enter certain Reapers, properly habited; they join with the Nymphs in a graceful dance; towards the end whereas Prospero starts suddenly, and speaks: after which, to a strange, hollow, and confused noise, they heavily vanish.

Pro. [Aside] I had forgot that foul conspiracy Of the beast Caliban, and his confederates, Against my life; the minute of their plot Is almost come. [To the spirits.] Well done;— avoid — no more.

Fer. This is most strange: your father's in some That works him strongly. [passion Mute.

Never till this day, Saw I him touch'd with anger so distemper'd.

Pro. You do look, my son, in a mov'd sort As If you were dismay'd: be cheerful, sir: Our revels now are ended: these our actors,
THE TEMPEST.

Act 5.

Scene I. Before the cell of Prospero.

Enter Prospero in his magic robe: and Ariel.

Pro. Now does my project gather to a head: My charms crack not: my spirits obey: and time Goes upright with his carriage. How's the day? Ariel. On the sixth hour: at which time, my lord, You gave your command, I should cease. Pro. I did say so. When first I rais'd the tempest. Say, my spirit, How fares the king and his? Ariel. Confined together In the same storm: when ever gave you in charge; Just as you left them, sir; all prisoners In the lime-grove which weather-fends your cell: They cannot budge, till your release. The king, his brother, and yours, abide all three distracted; And the remainder mourning over them, I run full of sorrow and dismay; but chiefly Him you term'd, sir, The good old lord, Gonzalo. His tears run down his beard, like water's drops From e'er so proud trees; your charm so strongly works them, That if you now behold them, your affections Would become tender.

Pro. And mine shall.

Ari. Hast thou, which art but air, a touch, a feeling; A sense of presence, that which shows a spirit? One of their kind, that relish all as sharply, Passion as they, be kindler more'd than thou art? Though with their high wrongs I am struck to the heart.

Pro. Yet, with my mother reason against my fury Do I take part: the rarer action Is in virtue than in vengeance: they being penitent, The soft dire of my purpose doth extend Not a drawn further: go, release them, Ariel; My charms I'll break, their senses I'll restore, And they shall be themselves.

Ari. I'll fetch them, sir. [Exit.]

Pro. I'll seek the hills, brooks, standing lakes, and grasses; And ye, that on the sands with printless foot Do chase the ebbing Neptune, and do fly him, While ye can, ye demi-puppets, mask: By moon-shine do the green acres gently make, Whereof the eye has not its lust: and you, whose pastime Is to make midnight manuscripts; that rejoice To hear the solemn curfew; I'll ye deaf, and dumb, [Weak masters though ye be, I have be-damn'd The noon-tide sun, call'd forth the mutinous winds, And 'twixt the green sea and the sord'd vault Set roaring war: to the dread rattling thunder And boundless fire, and civil mildest bend With his own bolt: the strong bas'nd promontory Have I made shake: and by the spurs pluck'd up The pine and cedar: graves, at my command, Have walk'd their sleepers: ope'd, and let them forth By my so potent art: that rough magic I here abjure: and, when I have requir'd Some heavenly music, (which even now I do,) To work mine end upon their senses, that Thisairy charm is for; I'll break my staff; bury it certain fathoms in the earth, And, deeper than did ever plummet sound, I'll drown my book.

[Exit.]

SCENE II. The garden of Prospero's cell.

Pro. Re-enter Ariel: after him, Alonso, with a fratricidal gesture, attended by Gonzalo; Sebastian and Antonio, with a sword, attended by Lucian and Francisco: they all enter the circle which Prospero hath made, and there stand charmed: which I prosper observing, spake.

A solemn air, and the best comforter To an unsettled fancy, cure thy brains, Now useless, bodil'd within thy skull! Stand there, For ye are spell-stopp'd.

Holy Gonzalo, honourable man, Mine eyes, even shackl'd to the show of thine, Fall here within the magic circle space: And as the morning steals upon the night, Melding their darkness, so their rising senses Begin to chase the ignorant fumes that mantle Their clearer reason:—(O my good Gonzalo, My true preserver, and a loyal sir To him thou follow'st; I will pay thy graces Home, both in word and deed.—Most cruelly Didst thou deform me, use me as my daughter? Thy brother was a furtherer in the act: Thou'rt pinch'd for't not now, Sebastian.—Flesh and blood, Ye brother mine, that entertain'd ambition, Expell'd my presence, and nature: who, with Sebastian, (Whose inward pinches therefore are most strong,) Would here have kill'd your king; I do forgive thee, Unnatural though thou art!—Their understanding.
Act 5.

THE TEMPEST.

15

Pro. As great to me, as late; and, portable
To make the dear loss, have I means much weaker
Than you may well comfort you; for I
Have lost my daughter.

Alon. A daughter?

Pro. O heavens! that they were living both in Naples,
The king and queen there; that they were, I wish
Myself in that cell in that oozy bed [ter]?
Where my son lies. When did you lose your daugh-

Pro. In this last tempest. I perceive, these lobs
At this encounter do so much admire,
That they deny their reason; and scarce think
Their eyes do offices of truth, their words
Are natural breath: but, howsoever you have Been justed from your senses, know for certain,
That I am Prospero, and that very duke [strangely]
Which was embattled forth of Milan; who most Upon this shore, where you were wreck'd, was
To be the lord on't. No more yet of this; [landed,
For 'tis a chronicle of day by day,
Not a relation for a breakfast, nor Refitting this first meeting. Welcome, sir;
This cell's my court: here have I few attendants,
And subjects none abroad: pray you, look in.
My dukedom since I have given me again,
I will requite you with as good a thing;
At least, bring forth a wonder, to content ye,
As much as me my dukedom.

The entrance of the cell opens, and discovers
Ferdinand and Miranda playing at chess

Mira. Sweet lord, you play me false.

Fer. No, my dearest love, I would not for the world.

Mira. Yes, for a score of kingdoms you should
And I would call it fair play.

Alon. If this prove
A vision of the island, one dear son
Shall I twice lose? [wrangle.

Seb. A most high miracle!

Fer. Though the seas threaten they are merciful:
I have curs'd them without cause.

Alon. Now all the blessings
Of a giel father compass thee about!
Arise, and say how thou canst not here.

Mira. O! wonder!

How many goodly creatures are there here!
How beauteous mankind is! O brave new world,
That has such people in't!

Pro. 'Tis new to thee,
[at play.

Alon. What is this maid, with whom thou wast
Thy eldest acquaintance cannot be three hours:
Is she the goddess that hath sever'd us,
And brought us thus together?

Fer. Sir, she's certain.

But, by immortal providence, she's mine:
I chose her, when I could not ask my father
For his advice; nor thought I had one; she
Is daughter to this famous duke of Milan,
Of whom so often I have heard renown,
But never saw before; of whom I have Receive'd a second life, and second father.
This lady makes him to me.

Alon. I am hers:

But O, how oddly will it sound, that I
Must ask my child forgiveness!

Pro. There, sir, stop;

Let us not burden our remembrances
With a heaviness that's gone.

Gon. I have inly wept,
Or should have spoken ere this. Look down, you gods,
And on this couple drop a blessed crown;
For it is you, that have chaitk'd forth the way
Which brought us hither!

Alon. I say, Amen, Gonzalo!

Gon. Was it not from Milan, that his issue
Should become kings of Naples? O, rejoice
Beyond a common joy; and set it down
With gold on lasting pillars: In one voyage
Did Claribel her husband find at Tunis;
And Ferdinand, her brother, found a wife,
Where be himself was lost; Prospero his dukedom,
In a poor isle, and all of us, ourselves.
When no man was his own.

Aker. Give me your hands;

To you, and him.

I know not, sir, how to embrace his heart,
That doth not wish you joy!

Com. He's no! Amen.

Re-enter Ariel, with the Master and Beacons, amusingly following.

1. look, sir, look, sir, here are more of us!

I prophesied, if a gallow's were on land,
They should come in. Now, Blasphemy,

That sweet's grace overboard, not an ounce on shore.
Hast thou no mouth by land? What is the news?

Beasts. The best news is, that we have safely found our king, and company: the next our ship;—

Which, but three glasses since, we gave out split;—

In sight, and yare, and bravely rig'd, as when we first put out to sea.

Aker. Sir, all this service

Have I done since I went.

[Aside.

Pro. My trickery spirit!

Almost all these, not natural events: they strengthen,

[Thee? From strange to stranger. — Say, how came you hither?

1. said this, sir, we were well awaked,

We were dead of sleep. And now, we know not old shap'd under hatches,

Where, but even now, with strange and several beasts (of rearing, shrinking, howling, glistening chains,

And more diversity of sounds, all horrid,

We were awak'd: straightway, at liberty:

Where we, in all her trim, freshly beheld our royal, good, and gallant ship: our master

Capping her topmast; here, in price, so please you.

Even in a dream, we were divided from them,

And were brought moping hither.

Aker. Wasn't well done?

Pro. Bravely, my diligence. Then [Aside.

Aker. shall be free.

Pro. This is so strange a maze as ever men trod

And there is in this business more than nature

Was ever conduct of: some oracle

Must rectify our knowledge.

Pro. Sir, my liege,

Do not inset your mind with beating on

The strangeness of this business: at pick'd leisure,

When you please, sir, I'll give you

[Which to you shall seem profane,] of every

These happen'd accidents: till when, be cheerful,

And think of each thing well. —Come hither,

spirit.

Set Caliban and his companions free.

Unto the spell. [Exit Ariel.] How fares my gracious sir?

There are yet missing of your company

Some few odd lads that you remember not.

Re-enter Ariel, driving in Caliban, Stephano, and Trinculo, to their former apper.

Sta. Every man shift for all the rest, and let no man take care for himself; for all is but fortune —

Coragio, bully-monster, Coragio!

Finn. If these be true spires which I wear in my head, here's a goodly sight.

Cid. O Socrates, these be brave spirits, indeed!

How fine my master is! I am afraid

He will chastise me.

Sib. Ha, ha:

What things are these, my lord Antonio?

Will money buy them?

Aeer. Very like; one of them is a plain fish, and, no doubt, marketable.

I'll take out that bexie of them, my lords,

Then say, if they be true. — This mis-shapen knave,

That mother was a witch; and one so strong

That could control the moon, make Bows and ebb's,

And deal in her command, without her power.

These three have robb'd me; and this demi-devil

(For he's a bastard one,) had plotted with them

Two of these fellows; you must know, and own;

this thing of darkness

I acknowledge mine.

Col. I shall be pinch'd to death.

Aker. Is not this Stephano, my drunken butler?

Sib. He is drunk now; where had he wine?

Aker. And Trinculo is reeling tripes: Where should they Find this grand liquor that hath gilded them?

How came they in this pickle?

Trin. I have been in such a pickle, since I saw you last, that, I fear me, will never out of my bones.

I shall not fear fly-blowing.

Sib. Why, how now, Stephano?

[Exeunt Col. Sta. and Trin.

Pro. Sir, I invite your highness, and your train,

To my poor cell: where you shall take your rest

For this one night; which [part of it] I'll waste

With such discourse, and, I don't doubt, shall make

It good sport: my master, and your good friends: thus: I'se to the meeting

Of these our dear-beloved sovereign's;

And thence retire me to my Milan, where

Every third thought shall be my grave.

Alack. I long

To hear the story of your life, which must Take the ear strangely.

Pro. I'll deliver all;

And mark you, how I show you extricaces, ambuscades,

And call so expedients, that shall catch

Your royal fleet far off. — My Ariel: —chick,

That is thy charge: then to the elements

Be free, and fare them well! — [Aside.] Please you draw near near.

EPLOGUE.—Spoken by Prospero.

Now or charms are all o'erthrown,

And what strength I have's my own;

Which is most faint: now 'tis true,

I must be here confound by you.

Or next to Naples: — Let me see,

Since I have my dukedom got,

And pardon'd the receiver, dwell

In this bare island, by your spell;

But release me from my band,

With the help of your good hands.

Gentle breath of yours my sails

Must fill, or else my project fails.

Which was to please: Now I want

Spirits to enforce, art to enchant;

And my ending is despair,

Unless I be relieved by prayer:

Which pleases so, that it assuages

Mercy itself, and frees all faults.

As you from crimes would pardon'd be,

Let your indulgence set me free.
ACT I.

SCENE I.—An open place in Verona.

Enter Valentine and Proteus.

Val. CEASE to persuade, my loving Proteus; Home-keeping youth have ever homely wits! Wert not so, affection chains thy tender days To the sweet glances of thy honour'd love, I rather would entreat thy company, To see the wonders of the world abroad, Than living dully sluggardiz'd at home, Wear out thy youth with shapeless idleness. But, since thou lov'st, love still, and thrive therein. Even as I would, when I to love begin. Proteus, wilt thou be gone? Sweet Valentine, adieu! Think on thy Proteus, when thou hast, haply, seen Some rare note-worthy object in thy travel: Wish me partaker in thy happiness, When thou dost meet good hap: and, in thy danger, If ever danger do environ thee, Command thy reverence to my holy prayers, For I will be thy hand's-man, Valentine. Valentine. And on a love-book pray for my success. Proteus. Upon some book I love, I'll pray for thee. Valentine. That's on some shallow story of deep love, How young Leander cross'd the Hellespont. Proteus. That's a deep story of a deeper love; For he was more than over shoes in love. Valentine. 'Tis true; for you are over boots in love, And yet you never swam the Hellespont. Proteus. Over the boots? nay, give me not the boots. Valentine. No, I'll not, for it boots thee not. Proteus. Valentine. What? Valentine. In love, where scorn is bought with groans: coy looks, With heart-sore sighs: one fading moment's mirth, With twenty watchful, weary, tedious nights: If haply won, perhaps a hapless gain; If lost, why then a grievous labour won; However, but a fally bought with wit, Or else a wit by foolish vanquished. Proteus. So, by your circumstance, you call me fool. Valentine. So, by your circumstance, I fear, you'll prove. Proteus. 'Tis love you cavil at: I am not love. Valentine. Love is your master, for he masters you: And he that is so yoked by a fool, Methinks should not be chronicled for wise. Proteus. Yet writers say, As in the sweetest bud The eating canker dwells, so eating love Inhabits in the finest wits of all. Valentine. And writers say, As the most forward bud Is eaten by the canker ere it blow, Even so by love the young and tender wit Is turn'd to folly blasting in the bud, Losing his verdure even in the prime, And all the fair effects of future hopes. But wherefore waste I time to counsel thee, That art a votary to fond desire? Valentine. Once more adieu: my father at the road Expects my coming, there to see me ship'd. Proteus. And thither will I bring thee, Valentine. Valentine. Sweet Proteus, no; now let us take our leave. At Milan, let me hear from thee by letters, Of thy success in love, and what news else Betideth here in absence of thy friend; And I likewise will visit thee with mine. Proteus. All happiness bechanse to thee in Milan! Valentine. As much to you at home! and so, farewell. Proteus. He after honour hunts, I after love: He leaves his friends to dignify them more; I leave myself, my friends, and all for love. Valentine. Thou, Julia, thou hast metamorphos'd me; Made me neglect my studies, lose my time, War with good counsel, set the world at nought, Made wit with musling weak, heart sick with thought.

Enter Speed.

Speed. Sir Proteus, save you; Saw you my master? Proteus. But now he parted hence, to embark for Milan. Speed. Twenty to one then he is shipp'd already; And I have play'd the sheep, in losing him. Proteus. Indeed a sheep doth very often stray, As if the shepherd be awhile away. Speed. You conclude that my master is a shepherd then, and I a sheep? Proteus. Yes. Speed. Why then my horns are his horns, whether I wake or sleep. Proteus. A silly answer, and fitting well a sheep. Speed. This proves me still a sheep. Proteus. True; and thy master a shepherd. Speed. Nay, that I can deny by a circumstance. Proteus. It shall go hard, but I'll prove it by another. Speed. The shepherd seeks the sheep, and not the sheep the shepherd; but I seek my master, and my master seeks not me: therefore, I am no sheep. Speed. The sheep for fodder follow the shepherd, the shepherd for food follows not the sheep; thou for wages follow'st thy master, thy master for wages follows not thee: therefore, thou art a sheep. Speed. Such another proof will make me cry baa. Proteus. But dost thou hear? gav'st thou my letter to Julia? Speed. Ay, sir; I, a lost mutton, gave your letter to her, a laced mutton; and she, a laced mutton, gave me, a lost mutton, nothing for my labour! Proteus. Here's too small a pasture for such a store of muttons. Speed. If the ground be overcharged, you were best stick her. Proteus. Nay, in that you are astray; 'twere best pound you. Speed. Nay, sir, less than a pound shall serve me for carrying your letter. Proteus. You mistake; I mean the pound, a pinfold. Speed. From a pound to a pin? fold it over and over.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

Servants, musicians.

TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

Host, where Julia lodges in Milan.

Out-laws.

Julia, a lady of Verona, beloved by Proteus. Silvia, the duke's daughter, beloved by Valentine. Lucetta, waiting-woman to Julia.

SCENE,—Sometimes in Verona; sometimes in Milan; and on the borders of Mantua.
Tis threefold too little for carrying a letter to you.
Pro. But what said she? did she nod?
[lover.

 speed 1.
Pro. I say, she did nod: and you ask me, if she did nod; and I say, I.
Pro. And that set together, is—noddy.
Pro. Then let Proverbs take your pains to set it together, take it for your pains.
Pro. No, no, you shall have it for bearing the letter.

But, well, I perceive, I must be false to bear with you.
Pro. Why, sir, how do you bear with me?
Speed. Marry, sir, the letter very orderly; having nothing but the word, noddy, for my pains.
Pro. Rashbrew me, but you have a quick wit.
Speed. And yet it cannot override your slow purrs.
Pro. Come, come, open the matter in brief.

What said she?
Speed. Upon your purse, that the money, and the matter, may be both at once delivered.
Pro. Well, well, here is for your pains: What said she?
Speed. Truly, sir, I think you'll hardly win her.
Pro. Why? Could't thou perceive so much from her?
Speed. Sir, I could perceive nothing at all from her; but you she wrote, with a letter I was carrying your letter; and being so hard to me that brought your mind, I fear, she'll prove as hard to you in telling her mind. Give her no such base stories; for she's as hard as steel to such considerations.
Pro. What, said she nothing?
Speed. No, not so much as—take this for the pains.

To testify your bounty, I thank you, you have wasted me; in requital whereof, henceforth carry your letters yourself: and so, sir, I'll commend you to my master.
Pro. Go, go, he gone, to save your ship from wreck;
Which cannot perish, having these aboard,
Rich letters, to a drier death on shore—
I must go send some better messenger:
I fear, my Julia would not design my loss,
Receiving them from such a worthless post.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same.  Garden of Julia's house.
Enter Julia and Lucetta.
Jul. But say, Lucetta, now we are alone,
Wouldst thou then counsel me to fall in love?
Luc. Ay, madam; so you stumble not unheededly.
Jul. Of all the fair resort of gentlemen,
That everyday with parce encounter me,
In thy opinion, which is worthiest love?
Luc. Please you, repeat their names, I'll shew you.
According to my shallow simple skill.

[side.
Jul. What think'st thou of the fair sir Eglinmore?
Luc. As of a knight well-spoken, neat and fine;
But, were I you, he never should be mine.
Jul. What think'st thou of the rich Mercatello?
Luc. Well, of his wealth; but of himself, no, no.
Jul. What think'st thou of the gentle Protes?
Luc. Lord, lord, to see what fully reigns in us!
Jul. How now! what means this passion at his name?
Luc. Fardon, dear madam; 'tis a passing shame,
That I, unworthy body as I am,
Should converse thus on lovely gentlemen.
Jul. Why not on Protes, as of all the rest?
Luc. There then,—of many good I think him
Yet so very rich.

[best.
Luc. I have no other but a woman's reason;
I think him so, because I think so.
[him.
Jul. And wouldst thou have me cast my love on him?
Luc. If you thought your love not desperate away.
Jul. Why, he of all the rest hath never mov'd me.
Luc. Yet he of all the rest, I think, best loves ye.
Jul. His little meaning shows his love but small.
Luc. Fare, that is cunning kept, learns most of all.
To be so anger'd with another letter.

[Exit.]

Jul. Nay, would I were so anger'd with the same!
O hateful hands, to tear such lovely words!
Injurious wasps: to feed on such sweet honey,
And kill the bees, that yield it, with your stings!
I'll kiss each several paper for amends.

And, here is write—kind Julia—unkind Julia!
As in revenge of thy ingratitude,
I throw thy name against the bruising stones,
Trampling contemptuously on thy disdain.

Look, here is write—love-wounded Proteus:—
Poor wounded name! my bosom, as a bed,
Shall lodge thee, till thy wound be thoroughly heal'd;
And, here is write—Some, would and shall appear in kiss.
But twice, or thrice, was Proteus written down:
Be calm, good wind, blow not a word away,
Till I have found each letter in the letter,
Except mine own name; that some whirlwind bear
Unto a ragged, fearful, hanging rock,
And throw it thence into the raging sea!
Lo, here is write one letter, with another:
Poor Proteus, passion, Proteus,
To the sweet Julia; that I'll tear away;
And yet I will not, sith so prettily
He couples it to his complaining names;
Thus will I fold them, and let them fall.
Now kiss, copper, content, do what you will.

Re-enter Lucetta.

Luc. Madam, dinner's ready, and your father stays.
Jul. Well, let it go: [here?]
Luc. What, shall these papers lie like tell-tales
Jul. If you respect them, best to take them up.
Luc. Nay, I was taken up for laying them down:
Yet, never; thy shall not have from me.
Jul. I see you have a month's mind to them.
Luc. Ay, madam, you may say what sights you see;
I see things too, although you judge I wink.
Jul. Come, come, wilt you please?—[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The same. A room in Antonio's House.

Enter Antonio and Panthino.

Ant. Tell me, Panthino, what sad talk was that,
Wherewith my brother held you in the cloister?
Under was his sagacious Proteus, your son.
Ant. Why, what of him?
Pan. He wonder'd, that your lordship
Would suffer him to spend his youth at home;
While other men, of slender reputation,
Fantastick their sons in foreign parts:
Some, to the wars, to try their fortune there;
Some, to discover islands far away;
Some, to the studious universities.
For any, or for all these exercises,
He said, that Proteus, your son, was meet:
And did request me, to importune you,
To let him spend his time no more at home,
Which would be great impeachment to his age,
In having known no travel in his youth.
Ant. Nor need'st thou much importune me to that,
Whereon this month I have been hammering.
I have consider'd well his loss of time;
And how he cannot be a perfect man,
Not being try'd, and tutor'd in the world:
Experience is by industry acquir'd,
And perfected by the swift course of time:
That tell me, whither I best can send him?
Pan. I think, your lordship is not ignorant,
How his companion, youthful Valentine,
Attends the emperor in his royal court.
And I know it, true.
Pan. 'Twere good, I think, your lordship sent him thither:
There shall he practise arts and tournaments,
Heav'nly discourses, converse with noblemen;
And be in eye of every exercise,
Worthy his youth and nobleness of birth.

Ant. I like thy counsel; well hast thou advis'd:
And, that thou must perceive how well I like it,
The execution of it shall make known;

Even with the speediest execution
I will dispatch him to the emperor's court.

Pan. To morrow, may it please you, Don Alphonso,
With other gentlemen of good esteem,
Are journeying to salute the emperor,
And to commend their service to his will.
Ant. Good company; with them shall Proteus go;
And in good time,—now will we break with him.

Enter Proteus.

Pro. Sweet love! sweet lines! sweet life!
Here is her hand, the agent of her heart;
Here is her oath for love, her honour's pawn:
O, that our streets would be apparel'd with flowers,
To seal our happiness with their consents!
O heavenly Julia!
Ant. How now? what letters are you reading there?
Pro. Nay, please your lordship, 'tis a word or two
Of commendation sent from Valentine,
Deliver'd by a friend that came from him.
Ant. Read me the letter; let me see what news.
Pro. There is some news, my lord; but that he writes
How happily he lives, how well-belov'd,
And daily Grace the emperor;
Wishing me with him, partner of his fortune.
Ant. And how stand you affected to his wish?
Pro. As one relying on your lordship's will,
And not depending on his friendly wish.
Ant. My will is something sorted with his wish:
Muse not that I thus suddenly proceed;
For what I will, and I will, and I will,
I am resolv'd, that thou shalt spend some time
With Valentinus in the emperor's court;
What maintenance he from his friends receives,
Like exhibition shall thou have from me.
To-morrow be in readiness to go:
Excuse it not, for I am peremptory.
Pro. My lord, I cannot be so soon provided;
Please you, deliberate a day or two.
Ant. Look, what thou want'st, shall be sent after
No more of stay; to-morrow thou must go.
Come on, Panthino; you shall be employ'd
To hasten on his expedition.

[Exeunt Ant. and Pan.]

Pro. Thus have I shunn'd the fire, for fear of burning;
And drench'd me in the sea, where I am drown'd:
I fear'd to shew my father Julia's letter,
Lest he should take exceptions to my love;
And with the vantage of mine own excuse
Hath he excepted most against my love.
O, how the spring of love
Is the uncertain glory of an April day;
Which now scows all the beauty of the sun,
And by and by a cloud takes all away!
Re-enter Panthino.

Pan. Sir Proteus, your father calls for you;
He is in haste, therefore, I pray you, go.
Pro. Why, this is I! my heart accordeth thereon;
And yet a thousand times it answers, no.
[Exeunt.]

ACT II.

Enter Valentine and Speed.

Speed. Sir, your glove.
Val. Not mine; my gloves are on.
[But one.]

Speed. Why then this may be a farrar, for this is
Val. I'll tell you as I see; ay, give it me, it's mine:—
Sweet ornament that decks a thing divine!
Ah Silvia! Silvia!
Speed. Madam Silvia! madam Silvia!
Val. How now, sirrah?
Speed. She is not within hearing, sir.
Val. Why, sir, who bade you call her?
Speed. Your worship, sir; or else I mistook.
Val. Well, you'll still be too forward.
[slow.

Speed. And yet I was last chidden for being too
Val. Go to, sir; tell me, do you know madam Silvia?

Speed. Who is that your worship loves?

Val. Why, how know you that I am in love?

Speed. Marry, by these special marks: First, you have learned, like sir Proteus, to worship arms; and, secondly, like Robin-red-breast; to walk alone, like one that had the pestilence; to sigh, like a school-boy that had lost his A. B. C.; and, lastly, like a beggar at Hallowmas. You were wont, when you laughed, to curl like a cock; when you walked, to walk like one of the lions; when you sat, you sat like one that fears robbing; to speak puling, like a beggar at Hallowmas. You were wont, when you laughed, to curl like a cock; when you walked, to walk like one of the lions; when you sat, you sat like one that fears robbing; to speak puling, like a beggar at Hallowmas.

Val. But tell me, dost thou know my lady Silvia?

Speed. She, that you gaze on so, as she sits at supper?

Val. Hast thou observed that? even she I mean.

Speed. Why, sir, I know her not.

Val. Dost thou know her by my gazing on her, and yet knowest her not?

Speed. Is she not hand favoured, sir?

Val. Not so fair, boy, as well favoured.

Speed. Sir, I know that well enough.

Val. What dost thou know?

Speed. That she is not so fair, as (of you) well favoured.

Val. I mean, that her beauty is exquisite, but her favour infinite.

Speed. That's because the one is painted, and the other out of all count.

Val. How painted? and how out of count?

Speed. Marry, sir, so painted, to make her fair, that no man counts of her beauty.

Val. How esteemest thou me? I account of her beauty.

Speed. You never saw her since she was deformed.

Val. How long hath she been deformed?

Speed. Ever, ever since you loved her.

Val. I have loved her ever since I saw her; and still I see her beautiful.

Speed. If you love her, you cannot see her.

Val. Why?

Speed. Because love is blind. O, that you had mine eyes; or your own eyes had the lights they were wont to have, when you chid at sir Proteus for going ungartered!

Val. What should I see then?

Speed. Your own present folly, and her passing deformity: for he, being in love, could not see to garner his hose; and you, being in love, cannot see to put on your hose.

Val. Belike, boy, then you are in love; for last morning you could not see to wipe my shoes.

Speed. True, sir; I was in love with my bed: I thank you, you swinged me for my love, which made me so sobbing to chide you for yours.

Val. In conclusion, I stand affected to her.

Speed. I would you were set; so, your affection would cease.

Val. Last night she enjoin'd me to write some lines to one she loves.

Speed. And have you?

Val. I have.

Speed. Are they not lamely writ?

Val. No, boy, but as well as I can do them;—

Peace, here she comes.
Enter Panthino

Pau. Launce, away, away, aboard; thy master is shipped, and thou art to post after with oars. What's the matter? why weep'st thou, man? Away, ass; you will lose the tide, if you tarry any longer.

Laun. It is no matter if the ty'd were lost; for it is the unkindest ty'd that ever man ty'd.

Pau. What's the unkindest tide?

Laun. Why, he that's ty'd here: Crab, my dog.

Pau. Tut, man, I mean thou'lt lose the flood: and, in losing the flood, lose thy voyage; and, in losing thy voyage, lose thy master, and, in losing thy master, lose thy service; and, in losing thy service, — why dost thou stop my mouth?

Laun. For fear thou should'st lose thy tongue.

Pau. Where should I lose my tongue?

Laun. In thy tale.

Pau. In thy tail?

Laun. Lose the tide, and the voyage, and the master, and the service? The tide! Why, man, if the river were dry, I am able to fill it with my tears; if the wind were down, I could drive the boat with my sighs.

Pau. Come, come away, man; I was sent to call thee.

Laun. Sir, call me what thou dar'st.

Pau. Will thou go?

Laun. Well, I will go. [Exeunt]

Enter Valentine, Silvia, Thurio, and Speed.

Sil. Servant —

Val. Mistress?

Speed. Master, sir Thurio frowns on you.

Val. Ay, boy, it's for love.

Speed. Not of you.

Val. Of my mistress then.

Speed. 'Twere good, you knocked him.

Sil. Servant, you are sad.

Val. Indeed, madam, I seem so.

Thu. Seem you that you are not?

Val. Haply I do.

Thu. So do counterfeit.

Val. So do you.

Thu. What seem I, that I am not?

Val. Wise.

Thu. What instance of the contrary?

Val. Your folly.

Thu. And how quote you my folly?

Val. I quote it in your jerkin.

Thu. My jerkin is a doublet.

Val. Well then, I'll double your folly.

Thu. How?

Sil. What, angry, sir Thurio? do you change colour?

Val. Give him leave, madam; he is a kind of cameleon.

Thu. That hath more mind to feed on your blood, than live in your air.

Val. You have said, sir.

Thu. Ay, sir, and done too, for this time.

Val. I know it well, sir; you always end ere you begin.

Thu. A fine volley of words, gentlemen, and quickly shot off.

Val. 'Tis indeed, madam; we thank the giver.

Sil. Who is that, servant?

Val. Yourself, sweet lady; for you gave the fire: sir Thurio borrows his wit from your ladyship's looks, and spends what he borrows, kindly in your company.

Thu. Sir, if you spend word for word with me, I shall make your wit bankrupt.

Val. I know it well, sir; you have an exchanger of words, and, I think, no other treasure to give your followers; for it appears by their bare livers, that they live by your bare words in losing.

Sil. No more, gentlemen, no more; here comes my father.
When you have done, we look to hear from you.

Pro. I'll both attend upon your ladyship.

Val. Now, tell me, how do you all from whence you came?

Pro. My friends are well, and have them much

Val. And how do yours?

Pro. I left them all in health.

Val. How does your lady? and how thrive your

Pro. My tales of love were wont to weary you;

I know, you joy not in a love-discourse.

Val. Ay, Proteus, but that life is alter'd now:

I have no discourse for thunderous love;

Whose high impertinent thoughts have stun'd me

With bitter fasts, with penitential groans,

With nightly tears, and daily heart-sore sighs;

For, in revenge of my contempt of love,

Love hath cast me sleep from my enchanted eyes.

And made them watchers of mine own heart's sor-

O, gentle Proteus, love's a mighty lord;

And hath so humbled me, as, I confess,

There is no way to his correction.

Nor, to his service, no such joy on earth!

Now, no discourse, except it be of love;

Now I can break my fast, dine, sup, and sleep,

Upon the very name that made me sad.

Pro. Enough; I read your fortune in your eye!

Was this the idol that you worship so?

Val. Even she; and is she not a heavenly saint?

Pro. Except my mistress.

Val. Sweet, except not any

Except then wilt except against my love.

Pro. Have I not reason to prefer mine own?

Val. And I will help thee to prefer her too;

She shall be dignified with this high honour.

To bear my lady's train; lest the base earth

Should from her vesture chance to steal a kiss,

And, as it were, a favour growing proud,

Disdain to mould the simple sweet fair flower,

And make rough winter everlasting.

Pro. Why, Valentine, what braggardism is this?

Val. Pardon me, Proteus: all I can, is nothing

To make her worth makes other worthies nothing:

She is alone.

Pro. Then let her alone.

Val. Not for the world: why, man, she is mine

And as rich in having such a jewel as she

As twenty sea, if all their sand were pearls,

The water nectar, and the rocks pure gold.

Forgive me, that I do not dream on thee,

Because thou sendest me to love upon my love.

My foolish rival, that her father likes,

Only for his possessions are so huge,

Is gone with her alone; and I must after.

For love, thou know'st, is full of jealousy.

Pro. But she loves you?

Val. Ay, we are betroth'd

Nay, more, our marriage hour,

With all the cunning manner of our flight,

Became our: how I must climb the window;

The ladder made of cords; and all the means

Plotted; and 'greed on, for my happiness.

Good Proteus, go with me to my chamber,

In thine apparel to adorn me as my counsel.

Pro. Go on before: I shall ensue ye forth

I must unto the road, to disembark

Some necessaries that I needs must use;

And then I'll presently attend you.

Val. Will you make haste?

Pro. I will.

[Exit Val.

Even as one heat another heat expels,

Or as one nail by strength drives out another,
SCENE VI.—The same. An Apartment in the Palace.

Enter Proteus.

Pro. To leave my Julia, shall I be forsworn; To love fair Silvia, shall I be forsworn; To wrong my friend, I shall be forsworn; And even the truest power, which gave me first my oath, Provokest me to this threefold perjury. Love bade me swear, and love bids me forswear; O sweet-suggesting love, if thou hast slain't, Teach me, to the best corrupted subject, how to excuse it. At first I did adore a twining star, But now I worship a celestial sun. Unheedful vows may heedfully be broken; And he who witt, that wants resolved will To learn his wit to exchange the bad for better. — Fye, fye, unreverent tongue! to call her bad, Whose sovereignty so oft thou hast prefer'd With twenty thousand soul-confirming oaths. I cannot leave to love, and yet I do; But there I leave to love, where I should love. Julia I lose, and Valentine I lose: If I keep them, I needs must love myself; If I lose them, thus find I by my loss, For Valentine, myself, for Julia, Silvia. I to myself am dearer than a friend; For love is still more precious in itself, And Silvia, witness heaven, that made her fair! She's Julia but a swarthy Ethiope. I will forget that Julia is alive, Remembering that my love to her is dead; And Valentine I'll hold an enemy. Aiming at Silvia as a sweeter friend, I cannot now prove constant to myself, Without some treachery used to Valentine: This night, he meaneth with a corded ladder To climb celestial Silvia's chamber-window; Myself in counsel, his competitor: Now presently I'll give her father notice Of their disguising, and pretended flight; Who, all enraged, will banish Valentine; For Thurio, he intends, shall wed his daughter: But, Valentine being gone, I'll quickly cross, By some sly trick, blunt Thurio's dull proceeding. Love, lend me wings to make my purpose swift, As thou hast lent me wit to plot this drift! [Exit.

SCENE VII.—Verona. A Room in Julia's House.

Enter Julia and Lucetta.

Jul. Counsell, Lucetta! gentle girl, assist me! And, even in kind love, I do conjure thee,— Who art the table wherein all my thoughts Are visibly character'd and engrav'd, To lesson me; and tell me some good mean, Hid, with my honour, I may undertake A journey to my loving Proteus. Luc. Alas! the way is wearisome and long. Jul. A true-devoted pilgrim is not weary To measure kingdoms with his feeble steps; Much less shall she, that hath love's wings, to fly; And when the flight is made to one so dear, Of such divine perfection, as sir Proteus. Luc. Better forbear, till Proteus make return. Jul. O, Lucetta, thou not, his looks are my soul's Pity the dearth that I have pined in, [food? Ily longing for that food so long a time. Didst thou but know the inely touch of love, Thou wouldst have, as soon as we thee, kindled fire with snow, As seek to quench the fire of love with words. Luc. I do not seek to quench your love's hot fire; But quality the fire's extreme need, Lest it should not, above the bounds of reason. Jul. The more thou damst it up, the more it burns; The current, that with gentle murmur glides, Thou know'st not being stop'd, impatiently doth rage; But, when his fair course is not hindered,
ACT III.

Enter Duke, Thurio, and Proteus.

Duke. Sir Thurio, give us leave, I pray, awhile; We have some secrets to confer about.

Exit Thurio.

Now, tell me, Proteus, what's your will with me?

Proteus. My gracious lord, that which I would dis

The law of friendship bids me to conceal: [Cover,

But, when I call to mind your gracious favours Done to me, undeserving as I am, May I not, too, urge one to utter me That which else no worldly good should draw from me.

Know, worthy prince, Sir Valentine, my friend, This night intends to steal away your daughter; Match not your anger, my dearest Proteus, I know, you have determined to bestow her On Thurio, whom your gentle daughter hates; And should she thus be stolen away from you, That would be much vexation to your age. Thus much of my duty's sake, I rather prevent It to cross my friend in his intended drift, Than, by concealing it, heap on your head A pack of sorrow, which would press you down, Because that you have been deceived.

Duke. Proteus, I thank thee for thine honest care; Which to requite, command me while I live. This love of theirs myself have often seen, Happly, when they have judged me fast asleep; And oftentimes have purposed to forbid Sir Valentine her company, and my court: But, fearing lest my jealous limb might err, And so, unworthily, disgrace the man, (A rashness that I ever yet have shunned,) I gave him gentle looks; whereby to find That which thyself hast now disclosed to me. And, that thou mayst perceive my fear of this, That tender youth is so much suspected, I nightly lodge her in an upper tower, The key whereof myself have ever kept; And thence she cannot be conveyed away. If, in my absence, be so disposed as me, and to our pleasant meeting, Which I have kept, I will make him understand me. How she her chamber-window will ascend, And with a corded ladder fetch her down, For which the youthful lover now is gone, And this way comes he with it presently: Where, if it please you, you may intercept him. But, good my lord, do it so cunningly, That my discovery be not climed at; For love of you, not hate unto my friend, Hath made me publisher of this pretense.

Duke. Upon mine honour, he shall never know That I had any light from thee of this.

Pro. Adieu, my lord; Sir Valentine is coming.

[Exit.

Enter Valentine.

Duke. Sir Valentine, whither away so fast? Val. Please, it is no so much; but, that I might say That stays to bear my letters to my friends, And I am going to deliver them. Duke. Be they of much import? Val. Heard of no terror of the plot; but signify My health, and happy being at your court.

Duke. Nay, then no matter; stay with me a while; I am to break with thee of some affairs, Thither in new manner, wherein thou must be secret. 'Tis not unknown to thee, that I have sought To match my friend, Sir Thurio, to my daughter.

Val. I know it well, my lord; and, sure, the match Well rich and honourable; besides, the gentleman Is full of virtue, bounty, worth, and qualities Resembling such a wife as your fair daughter.

Duke. Cannot your grace win her to fancy him? Val. No, trust me, she is peevish, sullen, fro- mative, not capable of marrying duty; [ward. Neither regarding that she is my child, Nor fearing me as if I were her father: And, may I say to thee, this pride of hers, Upon advice, has drawn my love from her; And, where I thought the remnant of her age Should have been cherish'd by her child-like duty, I now am full resolved to take a wife, And turn her out to who will take her in: Though her beauty be her wedding-dower; For me and my possessions she esteems not. Val. What would your grace have me to do in this? Duke. There is a lady, sir, in Milan, here, Whose name is Bicelle; effect; but she is not Nay, therefore, would I have thee to my tutor,
Act 3.

TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

(For long ago I have forgot to court:
Besides, the fashion of the time is chang’d!)
How, and with whom, by myself,
To be recorded in her sun-bright eye.
Val. Win her with gifts, if she respect not words;
Dumb jewels often, in their silent kind,
More than quick words, do move a woman’s mind.
Duke. But she did scorn a present that I sent her.
[ tens her her.
Val. A woman sometimes scorcs what best connend her another; never give her o’er;
For it is better to be reveng’d, than more.
If she do frown, ‘tis not in hate of you,
But rather to beget more love in you;
If she do chide, ‘tis not to have you gone;
For she the foot she sets, will take no repulse,
Take no repulse, whatever she doth say:
For, set you gone, she doth not mean, away.
Platter, and praise, command, extol her graces;
Though ne’er so black, say, they have angels’ faces
That man that hath a tongue, I say, is no man,
If with his tongue he cannot win a woman.
Duke. But she, I mean, is promis’d by her friends
Unto a youthful gentleman of worth;
And kept severe from resort of men,
That no man hath access by day to her.
Val. Why then I would resort to her by night.
Duke. Ay, but the doors be lock’d, and keys kept safe,
That no man hath recourse to her by night.
Val. What lets, but one may enter at her window?
Duke. Her chamber is aloft, far from the ground;
And built so shelving, that one cannot climb it
Without apparent hazard of his life.
Val. Why then, a ladder, quaintly made of cords,
To cast up with a pair of anchoring hooks,
Would serve to scale another Hero’s tower,
So bold Leander would adventure it.
Duke. Now, as thou art a gentleman of blood,
Advise me where I may have such a ladder.
Val. When would you use it? pray, sir, tell me that.
Duke. This very night; for love is like a child,
That longs for every thing that he can come by.
Duke. By seven o’clock I’ll get you such a ladder.
Duke. But, hast thee; I will go to her alone;
How shall I best convey the ladder thither?
Val. It will be light, my lord, that you may bear it
Under a cloak, that is of any length.
Duke. A cloak as long as thine will serve the turn.
Val. Ay, my good lord.
Duke. Then let me have thy cloak:
I’ll get me one of such another length.
Val. Why, any cloak will serve the turn, my lord.
Duke. How shall I fashion me to wear a cloak?—
I purpose, let a cloak upon me,
What letter is this same? What’s here? —To Silvia?
And here an engine fit for my proceeding!
I’ll be so bold to break the seal for once. [Reads.
My thoughts do harbour with my Silvia nightly;
And slaves they are to me, that send them flying:
O, could their master come and go as lightly,
Himself would lodge, where never yet they lying,
My herald thoughts in thy pure bosom rest them;
While I, their king, that thither them importune,
Do curse the grace that with such grace hath bless’d them,
Because myself do want my anguish’s fortune;
I curse myself, for they are sent by me,
That they should harbour where their lord should be.
What’s here?}
Silvia, this night I will enfranchise thee,
’Tis so; and here’s that fit for my purpose.—
Why, Phoebus, (for thou art Meroy’s son,)
Wilt thou aspire to guide the heavenly car,
And with thy daring folly burn the world?
Wilt thou to such a height reach as thee on?
Yes, base intruder! overweening slave!
Bestow thy fawning smiles on equal mates;
And think, my patience, more than thy desert,
Is privilege for thy departure hence:
Then take this, for thy fair favours,
Which, all too much, I have bestow’d on thee.
But if thou linger in my territories,
Longer than swiftest expedition
Will may have time to leave our royal court,
By heaven’s will, wrath shall far exceed the love
I ever bore my daughter, or thyself.
Be gone, I will not hear thy vain excuse,
But, as thou lov’st thy life, make speed from hence.
Duke. And why not death, rather than living tor-
To die, is to be banish’d from myself; [ment?
And Silvia is myself: banish’d from her,
Is self from self: a deadly banishment!
What light is light, if Silvia be not seen?
What joy is joy, if Silvia be not by?
Unless it be to think that she is by,
And feed the sense of that no more is virtue.
Except I be by Silvia in the night,
There is no musick in the nightingale;
Unless I look on Silvia in the day,
There is no day for me to look upon:
She is my essence; and I leave to be,
If I be not by her fair influence
Foster’d, illumin’d, cherish’d, kept alive.
I fly not death, to fly his deadly doom;
Tarry I here, but attract a death,
But, fly I hence, I fly away from life.
[Enter Proteus and Launce.
Duke. And what seest thou?
Laun. Thither we go to find: there’s not a hair on’st head, but a Valentine.
Duke. Valentine?
Val. No.
Duke. Who then? his spirit.
Val. Neither.
Duke. What then?
Val. Nothing.
Laun. Can nothing speak? master, shall I strike?
Val. Whom would you strike?
Laun. Nothing.
Duke. Villain, forbear.
Laun. Why, sir, I’ll strike nothing: I pray you,— Duke. My ears are stopp’d, and cannot hear good
So much of bad already hath possess’d them.
Pro. Then in dumb silence will I bury mine,
For they are harsh, untuneable, and bad.
Duke. Is Silvia dead?
Val. No.
Pro. No, Valentine.
Val. No Valentine, indeed, for sacred Silvia!—
Hath she forsworn me?
Pro. No.
Pro. No Valentine.
Val. No Valentine, if Silvia have forsworn me!—
What is your news? [vanish’d.
Laun. Sir, there’s a proclamation that you are Pro. That thou art banish’d. O, that’s the news:
From hence, from Silvia, and from me thy friend.
Duke. I have fed upon this woe already,
And now excess of it will make me surfeit.
Duke. Dost Silvia know that I am banish’d?
Pro. Ay, ay; and she hath offer’d to the doorn,
(Which, unrever’d, stands in effectual force,)
A sea of melting pearl, which some call tears:
Those at her father’s churlish feet she tender’d;
With them, upon her knees, her humble self:
Wringing her hands, whose whiteness so became
As if but now they wax’d pale for woe: [them,
But neither bended knees, pure hands held up,
Sad sighs, deep groans, nor silver-shedding tears,
Could penetrate her uncompassionate sire;
But Valentine, if he be ta’en, must die.
Besides, her intercession char’d him so,
When she for thy repeal was suppliant,
That to crucial question he commanded her,
With many bitter threats of biding there. [speakst,
Duke. No more; unless the next word that thou
Have some malignant power upon my life:
I’so, I pass, but breathe it in mine ear,
As ending anthem of my endless doleour.
Luna. Well, that fault may be mended with a breakfast: Read on.

Speed. Item. She hath a sweet mouth.

Luna. And that makes amends for her sour breath.

Speed. Item. She doth talk in her sleep.

Luna. It's no matter for that, so she sleep not in her talk.

Speed. Item. She is slow in words.

Luna. O villain, that set this down among her vices! To be slow in words, is a woman's only virtue: I pray thee, out with it; and place it for her character.

Speed. Item. She is proud.

Luna. Out with that too: It was Eve's legacy, and cannot be taken from her.

Speed. Item. She is not fond of me, with no reason.

Luna. I care not for that neither, because I love crusts.

Speed. Item. She is curt.

Luna. Well; the best is, she hath no teeth to bite.

Speed. She will often prove her figure.

Luna. If her liquor be good, she shall: if she will not, I will; for good things should be praised.

Speed. Item. She is too liberal.

Luna. Of her tongue she cannot; for that's writ down she is slow of; of her purse she shall not; for that I'll keep shut; now of another thing she may; and that I cannot help. Well, proceed.

Enter Speed.

Luna. Stop there; I'll have her: she was mine, and not mine, twice or thrice in that last article.

Speed. She hath more hair than wit.

Luna. More hair than wit:—it may be, I'll prove it: The cover of the salt hides the salt, and therefore it is more than the salt; the hair that covers the wit, is more than the wit; for the greater hides the less. What's next?

Speed.—And more faults than hair.

Luna. That's monstrous: O, that that were out! Speed.—And more wealth than faults.

Luna. Whence, that word makes the faults glorious: Well, I'll have her: And if it be a match, as nothing is impossible.

Speed. What then?

Luna. Why, then will I tell thee,—that thy master stays for thee at the north gate.

Speed. For me?

Luna. For thee; ay: who art thou? he hath said for a better man than thee.

Speed. And must I go to him?

Luna. Thou must run to him, for thou hast staid so long, that going will scarce make it; dost not tell me sooner? box of your love letters! [Exit.

Luna. Now will he be swunged for reading my letter: An unmannerly slave, that will thrust himself into secrets!—I'll after, to rejoice in the boy's correction. [Exit.

SCENE II.—The same. A Room in the Duke's Palace.

Enter Duke and Thurlow: Proteus behind.

Duke. Sir Thurlow, fear not, but that she will love Nothing but Proteus, and banish'd from her sight. [you. Thou. Since his exile she hath despis'd me most, Forsworn my company, and raill'd at me, That I am desperate of obtaining her.

Duke. This weak impress of love is as a figure Trenched in lee; which with an hour's heat Dissolves to water, and doth lose his form. A little time will melt her frozen thoughts, And worthless Valentine shall be forgot.

Hark! Proteus? Is he your countryman, According to our proclamation, gone?

Pro. Gone, my good lord.

Duke. So I believe; but Thurlow thinks not so— Proteus, the good conceit I hold of thee,
Act IV.

SCENE I.—A Forest, near Mantua.

Enter certain Out-laws.

1 Out. Fellow, stand fast; I see a passenger.

2 Out. If thou be ten, shrink not, but down with 'em.

Enter Valentine and Speed.

3 Out. Stand, sir, and throw us that you have about you;
If not, we'll make you sit, and rifle you.
Speed. Sir, we are undone! these are the villains
That all the travellers do fear so much.

Val. My friends,—
1 Out. That's not so, sir; we are your enemies.
2 Out. Peace; we'll hear him.
3 Out. Ay, by my beard, will we;
 For he's a proper man.

Val. Then know, that I have little wealth to
A man I am, crossed with adversity: [lose;
My riches are these poor habiliments,
Of which you should not disfigure me,
You take the sum and substance that I have.
2 Out. Whither travel you?
Val. To Verona.
1 Out. Whence came you?
Val. From Mantua.
3 Out. Have you long sojourn'd there?
Val. Some sixteen months; and longer might have staid,
If crooked fortune had not thwarted me.
1 Out. What, were you banish'd thence?
Val. I was.
2 Out. For what offence? [hears;
For that which many tormentors do re-kill'd a man, whose death I much repent;
But yet I slew him manfully in fight,
Without false vantage, or base treachery.
1 Out. Why, me'er repent it, if it were done so.
But were you banish'd for so small a fault?
Val. I was, and held me glad of such a doom.
1 Out. Have you the tongues?
Val. My youthful travel therein made me happy;
Or else I often had been miserable.
3 Out. By the bare scalp of Robin Hood's fat
This fellow were a king for our wild faction. [fria;
1 Out. We'll have him; sirs, a word.

Master, be one of them;
It is an honourable kind of thievish.
Val. Peace, villain!
2 Out. Tell us this: Have you any thing to take
Val. Nothing, but my fortune.
3 Out. Nay, I think you, that some of us are gentle,
Such as the fury of ungodly youth [men,
Thrust from the company of awful men;
Myself was from Verona banish'd,
For practising to steal away a lady,
An heir, and near allied unto the duke.
2 Out. And I from Mantua, for a gentleman,
Whom, in my mood, I stab'd unto the heart.
1 Out. And I, for such like petty crimes as these.
But to the purpose,—for we cite our faults,
That they may hold excus'd our lawless lives,
And, partly, seeing you are beautified
With goodly shape; and by your own report
A linguist; and a man of such perfection,
As we do in our quality much want:—
2 Out. Indeed, because you are a banish'd man,
Therefore, above the rest, we parley to you:
Are you content to be our general?
To make a virtue of necessity,
And live, as we do, in this wilderness?
3 Out. What say'st thou? wilt thou be of our Say, ay, and be the captain of us all? [consort
We'll do thee homage, and be rul'd by thee,
Love thee as our commander, and our king.
1 Out. But if thou scorn our courtesy, thou diest.
2 Out. Thou shalt not live to brag what we have offer'd.
Val. I take your offer, and will live with you; Provided that you do no outrages
On silly women, or poor passengers.
2 Gent. No, we do esteem such vile base practices.
Come we away; bring them to our crown,
And shew them all the treasure we have got;
Which, with ourselves, all test at thy dispose.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Verona.
       Court of the Palace.

Enter Proteus.
Pro. Already have I been false to Valentine,
And now I must be as unjust to Thullia.
Under the colour of commending him,
I have access my own love to prefer;
But Thullia is too fair, too true, too holy,
To be corrupted with my worthless gifts.
When I protest true loyalty to her,
She twits me with my falsehood to my friend:
When to her beauty I commend my vows,
She bids me think, how I have been forsworn
In breaking faith with Thullia whom I lov'd:
And, notwithstanding all her sudden quirks,
The least whereof was a falsehood, Thullia's hope,
Yet, strong of this, the more she spurns my love,
The more it grows, and sweareth on her still.
But here comes Thullia; now must we to her window,
And give some evening music to her ear.

Enter Thullia and Musicians.

Thu. How now, sir Proteus; are you crept before us?
Pro. Ay, madam; Thullia; for, you know, that love
Will creep in silence where it cannot go.
Thu. Ay, but, I hope, sir, that you love not here.
Pro. Sir, but I do; or else I would be here.
Thu. Whom? Silvia?
Pro. Ay, madam; for your sake.
Thu. I thank you for your own; now, gentlemen,
Let's tune, and to it lustily awhile.

Enter Host, at a distance; and Juliana in boy's clothes.

Host. Now, my young guest; methinks you're all-y wysoko; I pray you, why is it?
Juv. Marry, mine host, because I cannot be merry.
Host. Come, we'll have you merry: I'll bring you where you shall hear music, and see the gentleman that you ask'd for.
Juv. But shall I hear him speak?
Host. Ay, that you shall.
Juv. That I may hear music.
[Music plays.]

Host. Hark! hark!
Juv. Is he among these?
Host. Ay: but peace, let's hear 'em.

SONG.
Who is Silvia? what is she,
That all our ow'rons command her?
Holy, fair, and wise is she,
The heavens such grace did lend her,
That she might admired be.
Is she kind, as she is fair?
For beauty lives with kindness;
Love doth to her eyes repair,
To help him of his kindness,
And, being led, taketh them away.
Then to Silvia let us sing,
That Silvia is excelling;
She excels each mortal thing,
Upon the dull earth dwelling:
To her let us garlands bring.

Host. How now? are you sadder than you were before?
How do you, man? the music likes you not.
Juv. You mistake: the musician likes me not.
Host. Why, my pretty youth?
Juv. He plays false, sad, father.
Host. How? out of tune on the strings?
Juv. Not so; but yet so false that he grieves my very heart-strings.

Host. You have a quick ear.
Juv. Ay, I would I were deaf! it makes me have a slow heart.
Host. I perceive, you delight not in music.
Juv. I would I were blind, when it jar'd so.
Host. Hark, what fine change is in the music!
Juv. Ay: that change is the spite.
Host. You would have them always play but one thing.
Juv. I would always have one play but one thing.
But, host, doth this sir Proteus, that we talk on,
often resort unto this gentle man?
Host. What plays that Lemence, his man, told me, heloved her out of all nick.
Juv. Where is Lemence?
Host. Gone to seek his dog; which, to-morrow, by his master's command, he must carry for a present to his lady.
Juv. Peace! stand aside! the company parts.
Sir Thurio, fear not son! I will so plead,
That you shall say, my cunning drift excels.
Th. Where meet we?
Pro. At saint Gregory's well.
Th. The Farewell.
[Exeunt Thurio and Musicians.

Silvia is app. are above, at her window.

Pro. Madam, good even to your ladyship.
Sil. I thank you for your music, gentleman.
Who is that, that speaks?
Pro. One, lady, if you know his pure heart,
You would not learn to know him by his voice.
Sil. Sir Proteus, as I take it.
Pro. Sir Proteus, gentle lady, and your servant.
Sil. What is your wish?
Pro. That I may compass yours.
Sil. You have your wish; may I be even this,—
That presently you bid your home to bed.
Then, whilst, perchance, false, disloyal man!
Think'st thou, I am so shallow, so conceited,
To be restrained by thy flattery.
That base deceit's so many with thy vows?
Return, return, and make thy love amends.
For me,—by this pale queen of night I swear,
I am so far from granting thy request,
That I despise thee for thy wrongful suit;
And by and by intend to chide myself,
Even for this time I spend in talking to thee.
Pro. I grant, sweet love, that I did love a lady:
But she is dead.
Juv. There false, if I should speak it;
For, I am sure, she is not buried.
[Aside.]
Sil. Say, that she be; yet Valentine, thy friend,
Surviveth her whom, thyself art witness,
I am betrighth'd: and art thou not ashamed to Wrong him with thy importunity?
Pro. I likewise hear, that Valentine is dead.
Sil. I am supposed, am I; for in his grave
Assure thyself, my love is buried.
Sil. Sweet lady, let me take it from the earth.
Sil. Go to thy lady's grave, and call her thence;
Or, at the least, to her sepulchre thine.
Juv. He heard not that.
[Aside.]
Pro. Madam, if your heart be so obdurate,
You shall see me yet picture for my love,
The picture that is hanging in your chamber;
To that I'll speak, to that I'll sigh and weep;
For, since the substance of your perfect self
Is else devoted, I am but a shadow;
And to your shadow I will make true love.
Juv. If he bring a substance, you would, sure,
Deceive it,
And make but a shadow, as I am.
[Aside.]
Sil. I am very loth to be your idol, sir;
But, she being falsehood shall hence you well
To worship shadows, and adore false shapes,
Send to me in the morning, and I'll send it:
And so, good rest.
Pro. As wretches have o'er-night,
That wait for execution in the morn.
[Exeunt Proteus; and Silvia, from above.

Juv. Host, will you go?
Host. By my halidon, I was fast asleep.
Jul. Pray you, where lies sir Proteus?

Host. Marry, at my house: Trust me, I think, you have almost dinner.

Jul. Not so; but it hath been the longest night That e'er I watch'd, and the most heaviest.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same.

Enter Eglamour.

Egl. This is the hour that madam Silvia
Enreated me to call, and know her mind;
There's some great matter she'd employ me in.—
Madam, madam!

Silvia appears above, at her window.

Sil. Who calls?

Egl. Your servant, and your friend;
One that attends your ladyship's command. [low.

Sil. Sir Eglamour, a thousand times good-morrow,
As many, worthy lady, to yourself.
According to your ladyship's impose,
I am thus early come, to know what service
It is your pleasure to command me in.

Sil. O Eglamour, thou art a gentleman,
(Think not, I flatter, for, I swear, I do not.)
Valiant, wise, remorseful, well accomplished.
Thou art not ignorant, what dear good will
I bear unto the banish'd Valentine;
Nor how my father would enforce me marry
Vain Thulio, whom my very soul abhors.
Thyself hast loved; and I have heard thee say,
No grief did ever come so near thy heart,
As when thy lady and thy true love died,
Upon whose grave thou wert of pure chastity.
Sir Eglamour, I would to Valentine,
To Mantua, where, I hear, he maketh abode;
And, for the ways are dangerous to pass,
I do desire thy worthy company,
Upon who's faith and honour I imploze.
Urge not my father's anger, Eglamour,
But think upon my grief, a lady's grief;
And on the justice of my flying hence,
To keep me from a most unholy match,
Which heaven and fortune still reward with
I do desire thee, even from a heart
As full of sorrows as the sea of sands,
To bear me company, and go with me:
If not, to hide what I have said to thee,
That I may venture to depart alone.

Egl. Madam, I pity much your grievances;
Which since I know they virtuously are plac'd,
I give consent to go along with you.
Recking as little what betideth me
As much I wish all good befell you.
When will you go?

Sil. This evening coming.

Egl. Where shall I meet you?

Sil. At friar Patrick's cell,

Where I intend holy confession.

Egl. I will not fail your ladyship:

Good morrow, gentle lady.

Sil. Good morrow, kind sir Eglamour. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The same.

Enter Launce, with his dog.

When a man's servant shall play the cur with him, look you, it goes hard: one that I brought up of a puppy; one that I saved from drowning, when three or four of his blind brothers and sisters went to it! I have taught him— even as one would say precisely. I would teach a dog. I was sent to deliver him, as a present to mistress Silvia, from my master; and I came no sooner into the dining-chamber, but he steps to her trencher, and sets her costl'd dog, I say, sets him near her. He, I say, is a dog to me, that cannot keep himself in all companies! I would have, as one should say, one that takes upon him to be a dog indeed, to be, as it were, a dog at all things. If I had a dog, I tell you, I would teach him, to take a fault upon me that he did, I think verily he had been hanged for't; sure as I live he had suffered for't; you shall judge. He thrusts me himself in—to the company of three or four gentleman-like dogs, under the duke's table: he had not been there (bless the mark) a passing while; but all the chamber smelt him. Out with the dog, says one; and went another: Whipt him out at a third; Hang him up, says the duke. I, having been acquainted with the smell before, knew it was Crab; and goes me to the fellow that whips the dogs: 'What cur art thou?' 'Tell me, my dog? Ay, marry, do I, quoth he. You do him the more wrong, quoth I, 'twas I did the thing you rou't of. He makes no more ado, but whips me out of the chamber. How many more wits would do this for their masters? Nay, I'll be sworn, I have sat in the stocks for puddings he hath stolen, other- wise he had been executed: I have stood on the pillory for geese he hath killed, otherwise he had suffered for't: thou think'st not of this now!—Nay, I remember the trick you served me, when I took my leave of madam Silvia; did not I bid thee still mark me, and do as I do? When didst thou set me heave up my leg, and make water against a gentlewoman's forthingale? didst thou ever see me do such a trick?

Enter Proteus and Julia.

Pro. Sebastian is thy name? I like thee well,
And will employ thee in some service presently.

Jul. In what you please;—I will do what I can.

Pro. I hope, thou wilt,—How now, you whoreson perjur'd Proteus? [To Launce.

Where have you been these two days loitering?

Laun. Marry, sir, I carried mistress Silvia
The dog you bade me.

Pro. And where says she to my little jewel?

Laun. Marry, she says, your dog was a cur; and tells you, curriash thanks is good enough for such a present.

Pro. But she received my dog?

Laun. No, indeed, she did not: here have I Brought him back again.

Pro. What, didst thou offer her this from me?

Laun. Ay, sir; the other squirrel was stolen from me by the hangman's boys in the market-place; and then I offered her mine own: who is a dog as big as ten of yours, and therefore the gift the greater.

Pro. Go, get thee hence, and find my dog again,
Or ne'er return again into my sight.

Laun. I say, stay, thou to vex me here?
A slave, that, still an end, turns me to shame.

[Exit Launce.

Sebastian, have entertain'd thee,
Partly, that I have need of such a youth,
That can with some discretion do my business,
For 'tis no trusting to you foolish low;
But, chiefly, for thy face, and thy behaviour;
Which (if my anguish deceive me not)
Witness good bringing up, fortune, and truth:
Therefore know thou, for this I entertain thee.
Go presently, and take this ring with thee,
Deliver it to madam Silvia:
She loved me well, deliver'd it to me.

Jul. It seems, you loved her not, to leave her token.
She's dead, belike.

Pro. Not so! I think, she lives.

Jul. Alas! Pro. Why dost thou cry, alas!

Jul. I cannot choose but pity her?

Pro. Wherefore should'st thou pity her?

Jul. Because, methinks, that she loved you as
As do you love your lady Silvia: [well
She dreams on him, that has forgot her love;
You dote on her, that cares not for your love.
'Tis pity, that he should be so contrary:
And thinking on it makes me cry, alas!

Pro. Well, give her that ring, and therewithal
This letter;—that's her chamber, and the lady, I Claim her heart, and bring her her heaven-like picture.
Your message done, be home unto my chamber,
Where thou shalt find me sad and solitary.

[Exit Proteus.
JUL. How many women would do such a message?
Alas, poor Proteus! thou hast ascertain'd
And, if thou sufferest, mine enemies;
Alas, poor fool! why do I pity him?
That with his very heart despishest me?
Because he loves her, he despiseth me;
Because I love him, I must pity him.
This time I spare him, when he parted from me,
To kind his memory to my good will:
And now am I (unhappy messenger)
To plead for that, which I would not obtain;
To save him I would have refrain'd;
To praise his faith, which I would have displaiz'd.
I am my master's true confirmed love;
But cannot be a true servant to my master,
That is false faith, I know: yet he himself
Yet I will woo for him; but yet so coldly,
As, heaven knows it, I would not have him speed.

Enter Silvia, extempore.

Gentlewoman, good day! I pray you, be my mean
To bring me where to speak with madam Silvia.
[Exit.

Sid. What would you with her, if that I be she?
JUL. If you be she, I do entreat your patience,
And tell her I am sent on that message.
Sid. From whom?
JUL. From my master, sir Proteus, madam.
Sid. O! he sends you for a picture?
JUL. An, sir.
Sid. I enquire, bringing my picture there.

[Picture brought.

Go, give your master this; tell him from me,
That I believe I am forlorn that he forgets;
Would it better his charior, than this shadow.

JUL. Madam, please you peruse this letter.——
Pardon me, madam, I have unwisely
Delivered you a paper that I should not;
Tell my lord, he shall not look on it.
Sid. I pray thee, let me look on that again.
JUL. It may not be; good madam, pardon me.
Sid. There, hold.
I will not look upon your master's letters:
I know, they are stuff'd with protestations,
And full of new-found oaths; which he will break,
As easily as I do tear his paper.

JUL. Madam, he sends your ladyship this ring.
Sid. The more shame for him that sends it;
For, I have heard them as a thousand times; me;
His Julia gave it him at his departure;
Though his false finger hath profan'd the ring.
It shall return to his Julia so much wrong.
JUL. She thanks you.
Sid. What say'st thou?
JUL. I thank you, madam, that you tender her;
Poor gentlewoman! I my master wrongs her much.
Sid. Dut thou know her?
JUL. Almost as well as I do know myself.
To think upon her woes, I do protest,
That I have wept a hundred several times.
Sid. Belike, she thinks that I retenu hast forsook her.

JUL. I think she doth, and that's her cause of Sid. Is it not passing fair? ——
JUL. She hath been fairer, madam, than she is:
When she did think my master lov'd her well.
She, in my judgment, was as fair as you;
But since she did neglect her looking-glass,
And threw away her beauty, without way.
The air hath staid the roses in her cheeks,
And pinch'd the bright tincture of her face,
That now she becomes as black as I.
Sid. You shall have her.
JUL. About my stature; for, at Pentecost,
When all our pages of delight were play'd,
Our youth got me to play the woman's part.
And in this masque was madam Silvia's gown,
Which served me as fit, by all men's judgment,
As if the garment had been made for me:
Therefore, I know she is about my height.
And, good madam, I know it was a good;
For she did play a lamentable part;
Madam, Twas Arinbas, pavilions

For Theseus' perjury, and unjust flight;
Which I so lively acted with my tears,
That my poor mistress, more thereat,
Went bitterly; and, would I might be dead,
If I in thought felt not her very sorrow!
Sid. She is beheld to thee, gentle youth!—
JUL. Alas, poor lady! devise and left!
I would fain think upon her words.
Here, youth, there is my purse; I give thee this
For thy sweet mistress' sake, because thou lov'est her.

Farewell!"—[Exit Silvia.

JUL. And she shall thank you for't, if ever you know her.

A virtuous gentlewoman, mild, and beautiful.
I hope my master's suit will be but cold,
Since she respects my mistress' love so much.
Also, how love can trifle with itself!
Here is her picture! Let me see; I think,
If I had such a tire, this face of mine.
Were full as lovely as is this of hers:
And yet the painter staid her a little,
Unless I flatter with myself too much.
Her hair is amber, mine is perfect yellow;
If then I saw all the difference in his love,
I'll get me such a colour'd periwig.
Her eyes are grey as glass; and so are mine.
Ay, but her forehead's low, and mine's as high.
It would be well, that he respects her,
But I can make respect in myself,
If this fond love were not a blinded god?
Come, shadow, come, and take this shadow up,
For in my rival, am I am a masque of sense.
Thou shalt be worship'd, kiss'd, lov'd, and ador'd;
And, were there sense in his idolatry,
My substance should be in thy stead.
I'll use thee kindly for thy mistress' sake,
That we are so; or else, by Jove! I vow,
I should have scratch'd out your unseeing eyes,
To make my master out of love with thee. [Exit.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The same. An Abbey.
Enter Egdamour.

EG. The sun begins to glid the western sky.
And now, it is about the very hour
That Silvia, at Patrick's cell, should meet me.
She will not fail; for lovers break not hours.
Unless it should be come before the time,
So much they spur their expedition.

Enter Silvia.

EG. See where she comes! Lady, a happy evening!
Sid. Amen, amen! go on, good Egdamour!
Out at the postern by the abbey-wall;
I fear, I am attended by some spies.
EG. Fear not: the forest is not three leagues off:
If we recover that, we are sure enough. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. An Apartment in the Duke's Palace.

Enter Thurio, Proteus, and Julia.

THU. Sir Proteus, what says Silvia to my suit?
PRO. O, sir, I find her milder than she was;
And yet she takes exceptions at your person.

THU. What, that my leg is too long?

PRO. No; that it is too little. [Rounders.
THU. I'll wear a boot, to make it somewhat
PRO. But love will not be spurr'd to what it loathes.
THU. What says she to my face?

PRO. She says, it is a fair one. [Black.
THU. Nay, then the wanton wears lies:
my face is
PRO. But pearls are fair; and the old saying is,
Black men are pearls in beauteous ladies' eyes;

THU. 'Tis true, such pearls as put out ladies' eyes;

PRO. I am sure I think them both. [Aside.

THU. How likes she my discourse?
PRO. Ill, when you talk of war.

[Act V.]
Act 5.

TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA. 31

Thun. But well, when I discourse of love and peace?
Jul. But better, indeed, when you hold your peace.
[Aside.
Thun. What says she to my valour?
Pro. O, sir, she makes no doubt of that.
Jul. She needs not, when she knows it cowardice.
[Aside.
Thun. What says she to my birth?
Pro. That you are well deriv'd.
Jul. True; from a gentleman to a fool.
[Aside. Thou. Consider she has seen them both.
Pro. O, ay; and pilts them.
Thun. Wherefore?
Jul. That such an ass should owe them. [Aside. Thou. That they may lose it.
Jul. Here comes the duke.

Enter Duke.

Duke. How now, sir Proteus? how now, Thurio? Which of you saw sir Egimaur of late?
Thun. Not I.
Pro. Nor I.
Duke. Saw you my daughter?
Pro. Neither.
Duke. Why, then she's fled unto that peasant Valentine
And Egimaur is in her company.
That true; for I saw them both. As he was in penance wander'd through the forest;
Ilim he knew well, and guess'd that it was she;
But, being mask'd, he was not sure of it:
Besides, she did intend confession.
At Patrick's cell this even; and there she was not:
These likelihoods confirm her flight from hence.
Therefore, I pray you, stand not to discourse,
But mount you presently; and meet with me
Upon the rising of the mountain-foot;
That leads towards Mantua, whither they are fled.
Despatch, sweet gentlemen, and follow me. [Exit.

Thun. This why it is to be a peevish girl,
That files her fortune when it follows her;
I'll after; more to be reveng'd on Egimaur,
Than for the love of reckless Silvia. [Exit.

Pro. And I will follow, more for Silvia's love,
Than hate of Egimaur that goes with her. [Exit.

Jul. And I will follow, more to cross that love,
Than hate for Silvia, that is gone for love. [Exit.

SCENE III.—Frontiers of Mantua. The Forest.

Enter Silvia, and Out-laws.

Out. Come, come; be patient, we must bring you to our captain.
Sil. A thousand more mischances than this one
Have learn'd me how to brook this patiently.
2 Out. Come, bring her away.
1 Out. Where is the gentleman that was with her?
2 Out. Being nimble-footed, he hath out-run us,
But Moyse, and Valerius, follow him.
Go thou with her to the west end of the wood,
There is our captain: I will follow him that's fled.
The thicket is best, he cannot 'scape.
1 Out. Come, I must bring you to our captain's
Fear not; he bears an honourable mind, [cave; And will not use a woman lawlessly.
Sil. O Valentine, this I endure for thee. [Exit.

SCENE IV. — Another Part of the Forest.

Enter Valentine.

Val. How use doth breed a habit in a man!
This shadowy desert, unfrequented woods,
I better brook than flourishing peopled towns:
Here can I sit alone, unseen of any,
And to the nightingale's complaining notes,
Tune my distresses, and record my woe.
O thou that dost inhabit in my breast,
Leave not the mansion so long tenantless;
Let my growing ruin, the building fall,
And leave no more an object to my care!
Repair me with thy presence, Silvia;
Thou gentle nymph, cherish thy forlorn swain!

What hallowing, and what stirr, is this to-day?
These are my mates, that make their wills their law,
Have some unthankful passenger in chase,
'Hey love me well; yet I have much to do,
To keep them from unkindly outrages.
Withdraw thee, Valentine; who's this comes here? [Steps aside.

Enter Proteus, Silvia, and Julia.

Pro. Madam, this service I have done for you,
(Though you respect not aught your servant doth,) To hazard life, and rescue you from him.
That would have forc'd your honour and your love.
Vouchsafe me, for my meed, but one fair look;
A smaller boon than this I cannot beg;
And less than this, I am sure, you cannot give.
Val. How like a dream is this I see and hear!
Love, lend me patience to forbear a while. [Aside.
Sil. O miserable, unhappy that I am!
Pro. Unhappy were you, madam, ere I came;
But, by my coming, I have made you happy.
Sil. By thy approach thou mak'st me most unhappy.
Jul. And me, when he approacheth to thy presence. [Aside.
Sil. Had I been seized by a hungry lion,
I would have been a breakfast to the beast,
Rather than have false Proteus rescue me.
O, heaven, as thou judgest, how I love Valentine,
Whose life's as tender to me as my soul;
And full as much, (for more there cannot be,) I do detest false perjur'd Proteus; Therefore be this, solace me no more.
Pro. What dangerous action, stood it next to
Would I not undergo for one calm look? [death,
O, 'tis the curse in love, and still approv'd,
When women cannot love, where they're below'd.
Sil. Where brave one? thou dost not love where he's.
Reading over Julia's heart, thy first best love, 'lovd.
For whose dear sake thou didst then rend thy faith
Into a thousand oaths; and all those oaths Descended into perjury, to love me.
Thou hast no faith left now, unless thou hast't two,
And that's far worse than none; better have none
Than plural faith, which is too much by one:
Thou counterfeitst to thy true friend!

In love,

Pro. Who respects friend?
Sil. All men but Proteus.
Pro. Nay, if the gentle spirit of moving words
Can no way change you to a mild form,
I'll woo you like a soldier, at arms' end;
And love you 'gainst the nature of love, force you.
Sil. O heaven!
Pro. I'll force thee yield to my desire.
Val. Ruffians, let go that rude uncivil touch;
Thou friend of an ill fashion!
Sil. O Valentine!
Pro. Thou common friend, that's without faith or (for such is a friend now,) treacherous man! [love;
Thou hast beguil'd my hopes; nought but mine eye
Could have persuaded me: Now I dare not say,
I have one friend alive; thou would'st disprove me.
Who should be trusted now, when one's right hand
Is perjur'd to the bosom? Proteus,
I am sorry I must never trust thee more,
But count the world a stranger than thy sake.
The private wound is deepest: O time, most curst!
'Mongst all foes, that a friend should be the worst
Pro. My shame and guilt confound me
Forgive me, Valentine: if hearty sorrow
Be a sufficient ransom for offence,
I tender it here; I do as truly suffer,
As 'er I did commit.
Val. Then I am paid?
And once again I do receive thee honest—
Who by repentance is not satisfied,
Is nor of heaven, nor earth; for these are pleas'd;
By penitence the Eternal's wrath's appeased—
And, that I love thee may appear plain and free,
All that was mine in Silvia, I give thee.
Jul. O me, unhappy! [Fainting.

[Ends.
Pro. Look to the boy.
Fad. Why, boy! why, wag! how now? what is Look up; speak.
Jril. O good sir, my master charg'd me
To deliver a ring to madam Julia;
Which out of my neglect, was never done.
Pro. Where is that ring, boy?
Jril. Here 'tis; this is it. [Gives a ring.

Pro. How! let me see:
Why this is the ring I gave to Julia.
Jril. O, cry you mercy, sir, I have mistook;
This is the ring you sent to Silvia.

Pro. But, how canst thou by this ring? at my
I gave this unto Julia. [Depart,
Jril. And Julia herself did give it me;
And Julia herself brought it thither.
Pro. How! Julia!
Jril. Behold her that gave aim to all thy oaths,
And entertain'd them deeply in her heart? How Canst thou with perjur'ous heart the root? If Protest, let this habit make thee blush!
Be thou ashamed, that I have tak'n upon
Such an immodest talent; if shame live
In a disgrace of love;
It is the inner blot, modesty's bane.
Women to change their shapes, than men their
Pro. Than men their minds! 'tis true; O heaven!
Were men but constant, he were perfect: that one error
Like him with faults; makes him run through all
Inconstancy full of love, ere it begins! [Sings
What is to Silvia's face, but I may spy
More fresh in Julia's with a constant eye? If Came none, a hand from either:
Let me be blest to make this happy close;
Two were pity two such friends shou'd be long fare.
Pro. Best witness, heaven, I have my wish for Jril. And I have mine. [Over.

Enter Outlaws, Duke and Thurlow.

Out. A prize, a prize, a prize! I
Fad. For ever, I say: it is my lord the duke.
Your grace is welcome to a man disgrac'd,
Banished Valentine.
Duke. Sir Valentine!
Thurlow. Yonder is Silvia; and Silvia's mine.
Fad. Thurlow, give back, or else embrace thy come not within the measure of my wrath:
Do not name Silvia thine; if once again,
Milor shall not behold thee. Here she stands,
Take but possession of her with a touch:—
I dare thee but to breathe upon my love.—
Thurlow. Sir Valentine, I care not for her; I;
I hold him but a fool, that will endanger
His body for a girl that loves him not:
I claim her not, and therefore she is thine.
Duke. The more degenerate and base art thou,
To make such means for her as thou hast done,
And leave her on such slight conditions—
Now, by the honour of my ancestry,
I do applaud thy spirit, Valentine,
And think thee worthy of an empress' love.
Know then, I here forget all former griefs,
Cancel all grudge, repeal thee home again.—
Faid. A new state in the universal'd merit,
To which I thus subscribe,—Sir Valentine,
Thou art a gentleman, and well deserv'd;—
Take thou thy Silvia, for thou hast deserv'd her.
Fad. I thank your grace; the gift hath made me happy.
I now beseech you, for your daughter's sake,
To grant one boon that I shall ask of you.
Duke. I grant it, for thine own, whatever it be.
Faid. These banish'd men, that I have kept withal,
Are men endued with worthy qualities:
Forgive them what they have committed here,
And let them be recall'd from their exile:
They are reform'd, civil, full of good.
And fit for great employment, worthy lord.
Duke. Thou hast prevail'd: I pardon them, and thee;
Dispose of them, as thou knowest their deserts.
Come, let us go; we will include all jars
With triumphs, mirth, and rare solemnity.
Fad. And, as we walk along, I dare be bold
With our discourse to make your grace to smile.
What think you of this page, my lord?
Duke; I think the boy hath grace in him: he
Fad. I warrant you, my lord: more grace than boy.
Duke. What mean you by that saying?
Fad. Please you, I'll tell you as we pass along,
That you will wonder, what hath fortunate.—
Come, Proteus; 'tis your pence, but to hear
The story of your loves discovered:
That done, our day of marriage shall be yours;
One feast, one house, one mutual happiness.
[Exeunt.

ACT 1.

SCENE 1.—Windsor. Before Page's House.

Peter Justice Shallow, Slender, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Shall. Sir Hugh, persuade me not; I will make a Star-chamber matter of it; if he were twenty sir John Falstaffs, he shall not abuse Robert Shallow, especially.

Nan. In the county of Glosber, justice of peace, and corom.

Shall. Ay, cousin Slender, and Caius-alarm.

Shan. Ay, and rutil.Immutable too, and a gentleman born, master person; who writes himself armigve.
in any bill, warrant, quittance, or obligation, ar-mingers.
Shal. Ay, that we do; and have done any time she that I have. All his successors, gone before him, have done'et; and all his ancestors, that come after him, may: they may give the dozen white lutes in their co-
Shal. It is an old coat.
Eva. The dozen white louses do become an old coat well; it agrees well, passant: it is a familiar beast to man, and signifies—love.
Shal. The luce is the fresh fish; the salt fish is an old coat.
Slen. I may quarter, coz?
Shal. You may, by marrying.
Eva. It is marring, indeed, if he quarter it.
Shal. Not a whit.
Eva. Yes, py'r-lady; if he has a quarter of your coat, there is but three skirts for yourself, in my simple conjectures: but this is all one: if sir John Falstaff have committed disproprations unto you, I am of the church, and will be glad to do my benevolence, to make atonements and compromises between you.
Shal. The Council shall hear it: it is a riot.
Eva. It is not meet the Council hear a riot; there is no fear of it: in a riot: the Council, look you, shall desire to hear the fear of Got, and not to hear a riot, take your visaments in that.
Shal. I: o' my life, if I were young again, the sword should end it.
Eva. It is petter that friends is the sword, and end it: and there is also another device in my prain, which, peradventure, brings good discretions with it: There is Anne Page, which is daughter to master George Page, which is pretty virginity.
Slen. Mistress Anne Page? She has brown hair, and speaks small like a woman.
Eva. It is that fery person for all the 'orld, as just as you will desire; and seven hundred pounds of monies, and gold, and silver, is her grandsire, upon his death's-bed, (Got deliver to a joyful resur-
Eva. Did her grandsire leave her seven hundred bound?
Slen. Ay, and her father is made her a petter penny.
Shal. I know the young gentlewoman; she has good gifts.
Eva. Seven hundred pounds, and possibilities, is good gifts.
Shal. Well, let us see honest master Page: Is Falstaff there?
Eva.3 Falstaff. Sir John, do I tell you a lie? I do despise a liar, as I do despise one that is false; or, as I despise one that is true. The knight, sir John, is there; and, I beseech you, be ruled by your well-willers. I will peat the door [knocks.] for master Page.
Shal. What, hoa! I got pless your house here!
Enter Page.

Page. Who's there?
Eva. Here is God's blessing, and your friend, and justice Shallow: and here you; master Slender. John, that, peradventures, shall tell you another tale, if matters grow to your likenings.
Page. I am glad to see you, my lords well: I thank you for your venison, master Shallow.
Shal. Master Page, I am glad to see you; Much good do it your good heart! I wished your venison better. How doth good mistress Page?—and I love you always with my heart, la; with my heart.
Page. Sir, I thank you.
Shal. Sir, I thank you; by yes and no, I do. Page. I am glad to see you, master good Slender.
Shal. How does your felly greyhound, sir? I heard say, he was out-run on Cotsale.
Page. It could not be judg'd, sir.
Act I

Enter Why, sir, for my part, I say, the gentleman had drunk himself out of his five sentences.

Exit. It is in his five senses: for, what the ignorance is in him and being sap, sir, was, as they say, cashier'd; and so conclusions press'd the caretees.

Ayo, you spoke in Latin them two; but 'tis no matter: I'll not be drunk whilst I live again, but in honest, civil, godly company, for this trick: if I can, I shall; else I'll be drunk with those that have the fear of God, and not with drunken knives.

Enter So. Get edge me, that is a virtuous mind.

Exit. You hear all these matters denied, gentlemen; you hear it.

Enter Mistress Anne Page with words, Mistress Ford and Mistress Page following.

Exit. O heaven! this is mistress Anne Page.

Page. How now, mistress Ford?

Exit. Mistress Ford, by my truth, you are very well met by your leave, good mistresse.

[looking her.

Page. Wife, bid these gentlemen welcome. Come, we have a hot venison pasty to dinner; come, I hope we shall drink down all kindnesse.

Enter all but Skel, Slender, and Evans.

Mistress I had rather than forty shillings, I had my book of Songs and Sonnets here.

Enter Simple.

How now, my simple? Where have you been? I must wade the better, since you have not yet a Book of Reading about you, have you?

Exeunt. 'Tis for, why, did not you lend it to Anne? Shorten upon Allhallowsmas last, a fortnight afore Michaelmas.

Enter. You, cou, cou, come, cou; we stay for you. A word with you, cou, marry this, cou; There is, as 'twere, a tender, a kind of tender, made afar off by sir Hugh here. Do you understand me?

Mistress. Ay, sir, you shall find me reasonable; if it be so, I shall do that that is reason.

Skel. Nay, but understand me.

Mistress. So I do, sir.

Enter fair car to his motions, master Slender! I will description the matter to you, if you be capacity of it.

Mistress. Nay, I will do as my cousin Shallow says: I pray you pardon me; he's but in a train of peace in his company, simple though I stand here.

But this is not the question: the question is concerning your marriage.

Mistress. Ay, there's the point, sir.

Mistress. Many, it is, the very point of it; to mistres-ss Anne Page.

Mistress. Why, if it be so, I will marry her, upon any reasonable demands.

Skel. But can you affection the 'omane? Let us command to know that of your mouth, or of your lips; for divers philosophers hold, that the lips is parcel of the mouth: Therefore, precisely, can you carry your good will to the maid?

Skel. Cousin, Abraham Slender, can you love her?

Mistress. I hope, sir; I will do, as it shall become one that would do reason.

Skel. Nay, God's lords and his ladies, you must speak possible, if you can carry her your desires towards her.

Skel. That you must: will you, upon good dow-y, marry her?

Skel. I will do a greater thing than that, upon your request, cousin, in any reason.

Skel. Nay, conceive me, conceive me, sweet cou; will I do so, is to pleasure you, cou: Can you love the maid?

Mistress. I will marry her, sir, at your request; but if there be no great love in the beginning, yet hea-when we are married, and have more occasion to know one another: I hope, upon familiarity will grow more contempt: but if you say, marry her, I will marry her, that I am freely dissolved, and dissolved.

Exit. It is a very discretion answer; save, the fault is in the 'ort dissolutely: the 'ort is, according to our meaning, resolutely:—his meaning is good.

Shall. Ay, I think you consent very well.

Shall. Ay, or else I would I might be hanged, in.

Re-enter Anne Page.

Shall. Here comes fair mistress Anne:—Would I was young, for your sake, mistress Anne!

Anne. The dinner is on the table; my father desires your worship's company.

Shall. I will wait on him, fair mistress Anne.

Exit. Od's plesed will? I will not be absence at the grace.

[Exit Shallow and Sir H. Evans.

Anne. Will's plesed to your worship to come in, sir?

Shall. No, I thank you, forsooth, heartily; I am very well.

Anne. The dinner attends you, sir.

Shall. I am not a hungry, I thank you, forsooth. Go, sirrah, for all you are my man, go, wait upon my cousin Shallow: [Exit Simple] A justice of the peace may be beholden to your friend for a man— I keep but three men and a boy yet, till my mother be dead: But what though? Yet I live like a poor gentleman born.

Anne. I must not go in without your worship: they will not sit, till you come.

Shall. I will eat nothing; I thank you as much as though I did,

Anne. I pray you, sir, walk in.

Shall. I had rather walk here, I thank you: I bruised my shin the other day with playing at sword and dagger with a master of fence, three venyes for a dish of stewed prunes; and, by my troth, I cannot abide the smell of hot meat since: Why do your dogs bark so? be there bears in the town.

Anne. I think there are, sir; I heard them talked of.

Shall. I love the sport well: but I shall as soon quarrat at it, as any man in England: You are afraid, if you see the bear loose, are you not?

Anne. Ay, indeed, sir.

Shall. That's meat and drink to me now! I have seen Jackson loose twenty times; and have taken him by the chain: but, I warrant you, the women have so cried and shriek'd at it, that it passed:—but women, indeed, can't abide 'em; they are very ill favoured rough things.

Re-enter Page.

Page. Come, gentle master Slender, come: we are at dinner.

Shall. I'll eat nothing, I thank you, sir.

Page. By cock and pyes, you shall not choose, sir: come, come.

Shall. Nay, pray you, lead the way.

Shall. Mistress Anne, yourself shall go first.

Anne. Not I, sir; pray you, keep on.

Shall. Truly, I will not go first; truly, I: will not do the just wrong.

Anne. I pray you, sir.

Shall. I'll rather be unnannestly than troublesome: you do yourself wrong, indeed, in. [Exit:

SCENE II. The same.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans and Simple.

Evans. Go your ways, and ask of Doctor Caius' house, which is the way: and there dwells one mistress Quickly, which is in the manner of his nurse, of his nurse, or his cook, or his laundry, how many, and his wringer.

Simple. Well, sir.

Evans. Nay, it is better yet:—give her this letter: for it is a 'oman that altogether desires acquaintance with mistress Anne Page: and the letter is, to desire and require her to solicit your master's desires to mistress Anne Page: I pray you, begone;
I will make an end of my dinner; there's sippins and cheese to come. [Exit.

SCENE III.—A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Falstaff, Host, Bardolph, Nym, Pistol, and Robin.

Fal. Mine host of the Garter.—

Host. What says my bully-rook? Speak scholarly, and wisely.

Fal. Truly, mine host, I must turn away some of my followers.

Host. Discard, bully Hercules; cashier: let them wag; trot, trot.

Fal. I'll sit at ten pounds a week.

Host. Thou'rt an emperor, Caesar, Kaisar, and Pheezer. I will entertain Bardolph; he shall draw, he shall tap: said I well, bully Hector?

Fal. Do so, good mine host.

Host. I have spoke; let him follow: Let me see thee froth, and I am at a word; follow.

[Exit Host.

Fal. Bardolph, follow him: a tapster is a good trade: an old cloak makes a new jerkin: a wittered servingman, a fresh tapster: go; adieu.

Bard. It is a life that I have desired; I will thrive.

[Exit Bard.

Pist. O base Gongarian wight! will thou the spigot yield?

Nym. He was gotten in drink: Is not the humour concordet? His mind is not herculek, and there's the humour of it.

Fal. I am glad, I am so acquit of this tinterbox; his thefts were too open; his hiching was like an unskilful singer, he kept not time.

Nym. The good humour is, to steal at a minute's rest.

Pist. Convey, the wise it call: Steal! fo'h; a fico for the phrase!

Fal. Well, sir, I am almost out at heels.

Pist. Why then, let kibes ensue.

Fal. There is no remedy; I must coney-catch;
I must shift.

Pist. Young ravens must have food.

Fal. Which of you know Ford of this town?

Pist. I ken the wight; he is of substance good.

Fal. My honest lads, I will tell you what I am about.

Pist. Two yards, and more.

Nym. No quips now, Pistol; Indeed I am in the waist two yards about: but I am now about no waste; I am about thrift. Briefly, I do mean to make love to Ford's wife, I spy entertainment in her; he discourses, she carves; she gives her most of invitation: I can construe the action of her familiar style; and the hardest voice of her behavour, to be English'd rightly, Is, I am sir John Falstaff's?

Pist. He hath studied her well; and translated her well; out of honesty into English.

Nym. The anchor is deep: Will that humour pass?

Fal. Now, the report goes, she has all the rule of her husband's purse; she hath legions of angels.

Pist. As many devils entertain; and, To her, boy, say I.

Nym. The humour rises; it is good: humour me the angels.

Fal. I have writ me here a letter to her: and here another to Page's wife; who even now gave me good eyes too, examin'd my parts with most judicious eyelids: sometimes the beam of her view gilded my foot, sometimes my portly belly.

Pist. Then did the sun on dunghill shine.

Nym. That thank thee for that humour.

Fal. O, she did so course o'er my exteriors with such a greedy intention, that the appetite of her eye did seem to scorche me up like a burning glass!
Here's another letter to her: she bears the purse too; she is a region in Guiana, all gold and bounty.

I will be cheater to them both, and they shall be exequelles to me; they shall be my East and West Indies, and will follow. Go, bear thou this letter to mistress Page; and thou this to mistress
Ford: we will thrive, lads, we will thrive.

Pist. Shall I sir Pandarus of this become,

And by thy consent feel? then, Lucifer take all:

Nym. I will run no base humour: here, take the humour letter; I will keep theavour of reputation.

Fal. Hold, sirrah, [to Rob.] bear you these letters tightly:

Sail like my pinnace to these golden shores.—

Rogues, hence, avast! vanish like hail-stones, go;

Trudge, pid, away, o' the hoof; seek shelter, pack!

Falstaff, I sit at learn the humour of this art:

French thrift, you rogues; myself and skirted page.

[Exeunt Falstaff and Robin.

Pist. Let vultures gripe thy guts! for gourds, and fallen hold.

And high and low beguile the rich and poor;

Tester I'll have in pouch, when thou shalt lack,

Base Phrygian Turk!

Nym. I have operations in my head, which be knavish and revenue.

Pist. Wilt thou revenge?

Nym. By welkin, and her star!

Pist. With wit, or steel?

Nym. With both, the humours, I

I will discuss the humour of this love to Page.

Pist. And I to Ford shall eke unfold,

How Falstaff, varlet vile,

His doe will prove, his gold will hold,

And his soft couch defile.

Nym. My humour shall not cool: I will incense Page to deal with poison; I will possess him with yellowness, for the revolt of men is dangerous: that is my true humour.

Pist. Thou art the Mars of malcontents: I second thee; troop on.

SCENE IV.—A Room in Dr. Calus's House.

Enter Mrs. Quickly, Simple, and Rugby.

Quick. What: John Rugby!—I pray thee, go to the casement, and see if you can see my master Doctor Calus, coming: If he do, plight, and find any body in the house, here will be an old abusing of God's patience, and the king's English.

Rug. I'll go watch.

[Exit Rugby.

Quick. Go; and we'll have a posset for't soon at night, in faith, at the latter end of a sea-coal fire.

An honest, willing, kind fellow, as ever servant shall come in house withal; and, I warrant you, no tell-tale, nor no breed-bate: his worst fault is, that he is given to prayer; he is something peevish that way; but honest lady but has his fault—but let that pass. Peter Simple, you say your name is?

Sim. Ay, for fault of a better.

Quick. And master Slender's your master?

Sim. Ay, forsooth.

Quick. Does he not wear a great-round beard, like a grover's paring knife?

Sim. No, forsooth: he hath but a little wee face, with a little yellow beard; a Cain-coloured beard.

Quick. A softly-avrighted man, is he not?

Sim. Ay, forsooth: but he is as tall a man of his hands, as any is between this and his head; he hath fought with a warrener.

Quick. With bay, you?—O, I should remember him; Does he not hold up his head, as it were?

Quick. And strut in his gait?

Sim. Yes, indeed, does he.

Quick. Well, heaven send Anne Page no worse fortune! Tell master parson Evans, I will do what I can for your master: Anne is a good girl, and I wish—

Re-enter Rugby.

Rug. Out, alas! here comes my master.

Quick. We shall all be shent: Run in here, good young man; go into this closet. [Shuts Simple in the closet.] He will not stay long.—What,

D 2
John Rugby! John, what John, I say!—Go, John, go inquire for my master! I doubt he be not well, that he comes not home—and down, down, down, down, down. [Nigs.]

Enter Doctor Calais.

Calais. Vast is thy sing? I do not know these tens; Pray you, go and fetch me in my closet any better word—a box, a green-a-box! Do intend vat I speak? and come, sir.

Quick. Ay, forsooth, I'll fetch it you. I am glad he went not in himself; if he had found the young man, he would have been born-mad. [Aside.]

Calais. Pr., pr., pr., pr., I have sod, I felt fort chessed. So you're won a la Court a grande affiche.

Quick. Is it this, sir?

Calais. Gave: motte du mawl pocket; Despere, quickly, Ver is dat knave Rugby?

Quick. What, John Rugby! John!

Rug. Here, sir.

Calais. You've John Rugby, and you are Jack Rugby. Come, take your rapier, and come after my heel to do count.

Rug. The ready, sir, here in the porch.

Calais. By my troth, I tarry too long—O'dis me! Qu'ery fumble! I dare is some simple in my closet, that I will not for the world I shall leave behind.

Calais. Alas! I can't find the young man there, and be mad!

Calais. O diable, diable! vat is in my closet?—
Villany I leave!—[Putting Simple out.] Rugby, my rapier, sir.

Quick. Kind master, be content.

Calais. Vefere shall I be content?—Quick. The young man is an honest man.

Calais. Vast shall be honest man do to my closet? dere is no honest man dat shall come in my closet. Quick. I beseech you, be not so flagmarchet; bear the truth of it: He came an errand to me from parson Hugh.

Calais. Vast.

Smit. Ay, forsooth, to desire her to—

Quick. Peace, I pray you.

Calais. Pensee a your tongue—Speak a your tale.

Smit. To desire this honest gentleman, your maid, to speak a good word to Mrs. Anne Page for my master, in the way of marriage.

Quick. This is all, indeed, is; but I'll never put my finger in the fire, and need not.

Calais. Sir Hugh send-a you's—Rugby, bellies me some paper: Tarry you a little-a while. [Writes.]

Quick. I am glad he is so quiet; if he had been thoroughly moved, you should have heard him so loud, and so many things that notwithannadstian man, I'll your master what good I can; and the very you and the no is, the French doctor, my master,—I may call him my master, look you, for I am a witness mistress Anne Page; but notwithannadst that,—I know Anne's mind; that's neither here nor there.

Calais. You Jack-nape: give a dis letter to sir lady Lucy's bar, it is a challenge: I will cut his treat to do park; and I will teach a scurril jack-a-nape priest to meddle or make: you may be gone: it is not good you tarry here—by gar, I will cut all his two stones; by gar, he shall not be a stone the more than do. [Exit Simple.]

Quick. Alas, he speaks but for his friend.

Calais. It is no matter—a for dat:—do not you tell-a me dat I shall have Anne Page for myself by gar? I do kill Jack Priest; and I have appointed mine host of de Jorster to measure a weapon—by gar, I will myself have Anne Page.

Quick. Sir, the maid loves you, and all shall be well; we must give folks leave to praise: What, the good jerr?

Calais. Rugby, come to do court vit me:—by gar, if I have not Anne Page, I shall turn your head out of my door—Follow my heels, Rugby. [Exit Calais and Rugby.]

Quick. You shall have An foole-he'd of your own. No, I know Anne's mind for that: never a woman in Windsor knows more of Anne's mind, for I do: nor can do more than I do with her, I thank heaven.

Frend. [Within.] Who's within there? he!

Frend. Omit, there, I trow! Come near the house, I pray you.

Enter Fentoo.

Fentoo. How now, good woman; how dost thou? Quick. The better, that it please your good worship to ask.

Fentoo. What news? how does pretty mistress Anne?

Quick. In truth, sir, and she is pretty, and honest and gentle; and one that is your friend, I can tell you that by the way! I praise heaven for it.

Fentoo. Shall I do any good, think's thou? Shall I not lose my soul?

Quick. Truth, sir, all is in his hands above; but notwithstanding, master Fentoo, I'll be worn on a book, she loves you:—Have not your worship a wart above your eye?

Fentoo. Yes, marry, and have I; what of that?

Quick. Well, thereby hangs a tale—good faith, it is such another Nan;—but, I detest, an honest maid as ever broke bread: We had an hour's talk of that, I shall never laugh but in that maid's company! But, indeed, she is given too much to triflingly, and musingly—bitt for you.

Well, go in.

Fentoo. I shall see her to-day; Hold, there's money for thee; let me have thy voice in my behalf: if thou seest her before me, commend me—

Quick. Will I? Faith, that we will; and I will tell your worship more of the war, the next time we have confidence; and of other wroors.

Fentoo. Well, farewell: I am in great haste now. [Exit.

Quick. Farewell to your worship.—Truly, an honest gentleman; but Anne loves him not; for I know Anne's mind as well as another does: Out upon't what have I forgot?—[Exit.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Before Page's House.}

Enter Mistress Page, with a letter.

Mrs. Page. What have I 'scaped'd love-letters in the holy-day time of my beauty, and am I now a subject for them? Let me sen'.—[Reads.]

Ask me no reason why I love you; for though love reason for his precision, he admits him not for his age; if he be not young, no more am I: I go to church, there's sympathy: you are merry, so am I:—
Ho! ho! then there's more sympathy: you love back, and so do I: Would you desire better sympathy?
Let it suffice thee, and so pass. [Exit Page, (at the last, if the love of a soldier can suffice,) that I love thee. I will not say, pity me, 'tis not a soldier-like phrase; but I say, love me. By me,

[Enter own true knight,
By day or night,
Or any kind of light,
With all his weight,
For that to fight.]—

John Falstaff.

What a Herod of Jewry is this?—O wicked, wicked world,—one that is well nigh worn to pieces with age, to show himself a young gallant! What an unweighed behaviour hath this Flemish drunkard picked (with the devil's name) out of my conversation, that he dares in this manner assay me? Why, he hath not been thrice in my company!—What should I say to him?—I was then frugal of my mirth—. heaven forgive me!—Why I'll exhibit a bill of fare for you, and partent for the appetite of the men. How shall I be revenged on him? for revenged I will be, as sure as his guts are made of puddings.

Enter Mistres': Ford.

Mrs. Ford. Mistress Page! trust me, I was going to your house.

Mrs. Page. And, trust me, I was coming to you. You look very ill.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, I'll ne'er believe that; I have to show to the contrary.

Mrs. Page. 'Faith, but you do, in my mind.

Mrs. Ford. Well, I do, then; yet, I say, I could show you to the contrary: 1, mistress Page, give me some counsel!

Mrs. Page. What's the matter, woman?

Mrs. Ford. O woman, if it were not for one trifling respect, I could come to such honour!

Mrs. Page. Hang the trifles, woman; take the honour: What is it?—dispense with trifles; what is it?

Mrs. Ford. If I would but go to hell for an eternal object, or so, I could be knighted.

Mrs. Page. What? thou liest!—Sir Alice Ford! These knights will hack; and so thou shaltsoo; alter the article of thy gentry.

Mrs. Page. Let us read—here, read;—perceive how I might be knighted. I shall think the worse of fat men, as long as I have an eye to make differences of men's liking: And yet he would not swear; praised women's modesty: And give such orderly and well-behaved reproof to all uncomeliness, that I would have sworn his disposition would have gone to the truth of his words: but they do no more adhere and keep place together than they go to the tune of green sleeves. What tempes! I, trow, threw this whale with so many tuns of oil in his belly, ashore at Windsor? How shall I be revenged on him? I think the best way were to entertain him with hope, till the wicked fire of lust have melted him in his own grease.—Did you ever hear the like?

Mrs. Page. Letter for letter; but that the name of Page and Ford differs!—To thy great comfort in this mystery. My opinions, here's the twin-brother of thy letter: but let thine inherit first; for, I protest, mine never shall. I warrant he hath a thousand of these letters, writ with blank space for dots (as more), I'll these words; of the, for, of the, of the, the, of the, of the. He will print them out of doubt: for he cares not what he puts into the press when he would put us two. I had rather be a giantess, and lie under mount Pelion. Well, I will find you twenty lascivious turtles, ere one chasse man.

Mrs. Ford. Why this is the very same; the very hand, the very words: What doth he think of us?

Mrs. Page. Nay, I know not: it makes me ashamed to wrangle with mine own honesty. I'll entertain myself like one that I am not acquainted withal; for, sure, unless he know some strain in me, that I know not myself, he would never have boarded me in this fury.

Mrs. Ford. Boarding, call you it? I'll be sure to keep him above deck.

Mrs. Page. So will I; if he come under my hatches, I'll never see again. Let's be reveng'd on him ready to appoint him a meeting; give him a show of comfort in his suit; and lead him on with a fine belted delay, till he hath paid his horses to mine host of the Garter.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, I will consent to act any villany against him, that may not sully the chariness of our honesty. O, that my husband saw this letter! it would give eternal food to his jealousy.

Mrs. Page. Why, look, where he comes; and my good Sir John, that is far from jealousy, as I am from giving him cause; and that, I hope, is an unmeasurable distance.
Ford. I like it never the better for that.—Does he ever fly at the Garter?
Page. Ay, marry, does he. If he should intend this voyage towards my wife, I would turn her loose to him; and what he gets of her more than sharp words, let it lie on my head.

Ford. I should not doubt my wife; but I would be loth to turn them together: A man may be too confidant: I would have nothing lie on my head; I cannot be thus satisfied.

Page. It must be the ranting host of the Garter comes:—there is either liquor in his pate, or money in his purse, when he looks so errily.—How now, mine host?

Enter Host and Shallow.

Host. How now, bully-rook! thou'rt a gentleman; cavalero-justice, I say.

Shall. I follow, mine host, so follow.—Good even, and twenty, good master Page! Master Page, will you go with us? we have sport in hand.

Host. Tell him, cavalero-justice; tell him, bully-rook.

Shal. Sir, there is a fray to be fought, between Sir Hugh the Welsh priest, and Calins the French doctor.

Ford. Good mine host o'th' Garter, a word with you.

Host. What say'st thou, bully-rook? [They go aside.]

Shal. Will you to Page, go with us to behold it? My merry host hath had the measuring of their wits, he says, he hath thus contrived contrary places: for, believe me, I hear, the person is no jester. Hart, I will tell you what our sport shall be.

Host. Host then no suit against my knight, my guest-cavalier?

Ford. None, I protest: but I'll give you a bottle of burnt sack to give me recourse to him, and tell him my name in Brook; only for a jest.

Host. My hand, bully: then shall he egress and regress; said I well? and thy name shall be Brook: it is a merry knight.—Will you go on, heart.

Shal. Have with you, mine host.

Page. I have heard, the Frenchman hath good skill in his rapier.

Shal. Tut, sir, I could have told you more: In these times you stand on distance, your passes, stoccadoes, and I know not what: 'tis the heart, master Page; 'tis here, 'tis here. I have seen the time, with my long sword, I would have made you four tall fellows skip like rats.

Host. Here, here, here, here! shall we wag?

Page. Have with you: I had rather hear them scold than fight.

[Exeunt Host, Shallow, and Page.]

Ford. Though Page be a secure fool, and stands so firmly on his wife's frailty, yet I cannot put off my opinion so easily: She was in his company at Page's house; and, what they made there, I know not. Well, I will look further into't: and I have a disguise to sound Falstaff: if I find her honest, I lose not my labour; if she be otherwise, 'tis labour well bestowed. [Exit.

SCENE II.—A Room in the Garter Inn.

Falstaff and Pistol.

Fal. I will not lend thee a penny.

Pist. Why, then the world's mine oyster, While I have breath!—[Exit.

Fal. I will retort the sum in equipage.

Fal. Not a penny. I have been content, sir, you should lay my countenance to pawn: I have grated upon my good friends for three reprieves for you and your two-hundred-fellow, Nym; or else you had looked through the grate, like a gendy of baboons. I am dammed in hell, for swearing to gentlemen my friends, you were good soldiers, and tall fellows: and this mistress Bridget lost the bundle of her fan, I took't upon mine honour, thou hadst it not.

Pist. Didst thou not share? hadst thou not fifhe's a very serious man, she leads a very frondant life with him, good heart.

Pie. Ten and eleven: Woman, commend me to her; I will not fail her.

Quick. Why you say well: But I have another ministering grace upon you: Mistress Page hath her hearty commendations to you too; and let me tell you in your ear, she's asurtulous a civil modest wife, and one (I tell you) that will not miss you morning or evening prayer, as any is in Windsor, who'er be the other: and she bade me tell you, her husband is seldom from home; but, she hopes, there will come a time. I never knew a woman that I did not think, I think you have charms, la; yes, in truth.

Pie. Not I, I assure thee; setting the attraction of my good parts aside, I have no other charms.

Quick. Blessing on your heart for't.

Pie. But, I pray thee, tell me this: has Ford's wife, and Page's wife, acquainted each other how they love me?

Quick. That were a jest, indeed: they have not so little grace, I hope:—that were a trick, indeed! But mistress Page would desire you to send her your little page, of all loves; her husband has a marvellous infection to the little page: and, truly, many a younger man. Never a wife in Windsor leads a better life than she does; do what she will, say what she will, take all, pay all, go to bed when she list, rise when she list, all is as she will; and, truly, she deserves it: for if there be kinds of women in Windsor, she is one. You must send her your page; no remedy.

Pie. Why, I will.

Quick. Nay, but do so then: and, look you, he may come and go between you both; and, in any case, have a may-word, that you may know one another's mind, and the boy never need to understand any thing; for 'tis not good that children should know any wickedness: old folks, you know, have discretion, as they say, and know the world.

Pie. Fare thee well: commend me to them both: there's my purse; I am yet thy debtor. Boy, go along with this woman. This news distresses me! [Exit Quickly and Robin.

Pist. This punk is one of Cupid's carriers:—Clap on more sails; pursue, up with your fights; Give fire; she is my prize, or oceanwhelm them all! [Exit Pistol.

Pie. Say'st thou so, old Jack? go thy ways; I'll make more of thy old body than I have done. Will they yet look after thee? Wilt thou, after the expense, chase a hare; or be a hare; in the city, good body, I thank thee: Let them say, 'tis grossly so; so it be fairly done, no matter.

Enter Bardolph.

Bard. Sir John, there's one master Brook below would fain speak with you, and be acquainted with you; and hath sent your worship a morning's draught of sack.

Pie. Brook, is his name?

Bard. Ay, sir.

Pie. Call him in; [Exit Bardolph.] Such Brookes are welcome to me, that overflow such dross.

Bard. Sir, I am a gentleman that have spent much; my name is Brook.

Pie. Good master Brook, I desire more acquaintance.

Bard. Good sir John, I sue for yours: not to charge you; for I must let you understand, I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are: the which hath something emboldened me to this unseasoned intrusion: for they say, if money go before, all ways do lie open.

Pie. Money is a good soldier, sir, and will on.

Bard. To say we lose a bag of money here.

Pie. If you will help me to bear it, sir John, take all, or half, for easing me of the carriage.

Pie. Sir, I know not how I may deserve to be your porter.

Pie. I will tell you, sir, if you will give me the hearing.

Pie. Speak, good master Brook; I shall be glad to be your servant.

Bard. Sir, if you are a scholar,—I will be brief with you,—and you have been a man long known to me, though I had never so good means, as desire, to make myself acquainted with you. I shall discover a thing to you, wherein I must very much lay open mine own imperfection: but, good sir John, as you have one eye upon my follies, as you hear them unfolded, turn another into the register of your own; that I may pass with a reproof the easier, sith you yourself know, how easy it is to be such an offender.

Pie. Very well, sir; proceed.

Bard. There is a gentlewoman in this town, her husband's name was Ford.

Pie. Well, sir.

Bard. I have long loved her, and I protest to you, bestowed much on her; followed her with a certain obsequiousness, unremitting opportunities of her; feed every slight occasion, that could but riggarly give me sight of her; not only bought many presents to give her; but have given largely to many, to know what she would have given: briefly, I have pursued her, as love hath pursued her, hath been on the wing of all occasions. But whatsoever I have merited, either in my mind, or in my means, me, I am sure, I have received none; unless experience be a jewel; that I have purchased at an infinite rate; and that hath taught me to say this:

Love like a shadow flies, when substance love pursues
Pursuing that that flies, and flying what pursues.

Pie. Have you received no promise of satisfaction at her hands?

Bard. Never.

Pie. Have you importuned her to such a purpose?

Bard. Never.

Pie. Of what quality was your love then?

Bard. Like a fair house, built upon another man's foundation; I have let my office, by mistaking the place where I erected it.

Pie. To what purpose have you unfolded this to me?

Bard. When I have told you that, I have told you all. Some say, that, though she appear honest to me, yet, in other places, she enlargeth her mirth so far, that there is shrewd construction made of her. Now, sir John, here is the heart of my purpose: You are a gentleman of excellent breeding, admirable discourse, of great admittance, authentic in your place and person, generally allowed for your many war-like, court-like, and learned preparations.

Pie. O, sir!

Bard. Believe it, for you know it:—There is money; spend it, spend it; spend more; spend all I have; only give me so much of your time in exchange of it, as to lay an amiable siege to the honesty of this Ford's wife: use your art of wooling, win her to consent to you; if any man may, you may as soon as any.

Pie. Would it apply well to the rehemency of your afection, that I should win what you would enjoy? Menthinks, you prescribe to yourself very preposterously.

Bard. O, understand my drift! She dwells so securely on the excellency of her honour, that the folly of my soul dares not present itself; she is too bright to be looked against. Now, could I come to her with any detection in my hand, my desires had instance and argument to commend themselves; i could drive her then from the ward of her parity, her reputation, her marriage vow, and a thousand other her defences, which now are too strongly em battled against by her that saith, sir John?
Fed. Master Brook, I will first make bold with your money; next, give me your hand and last, as I am a gentleman, you shall, if you will, enjoy Ford's wife.
Fed. I am good, sir.
Fed. Master Brook, I say you shall.
Ford. Want no money, sir John, you shall want none.
Fed. Want no mistress Ford, master Brook, you shall want none. I shall be with her, (I may tell you,) by her own appointment; even as you came in to me, her assistant, or go-between, parted from me. I say, I shall be with her between ten and eleven; for at that time the jealous rascally knave, her husband, will be forth. Come you to me at night;
you shall know how I speed.
Ford. I am bless in your acquaintance. Do you know Ford, sir?
Fad. Hang him, poor cuckoldly knave! I know him not—yet I wrong him to call him poor; they say, the jealous wittily know hath names of money; for which his wife seems to me well defenseless; but now, sir John, we are in the cuckoldly regress, and therefore have our harvest-home.
Ford. I would you knew Ford, sir; that you might avoid him, if you saw him.
Fad. Hang him, mechanical suit better rogue;
I will scare him out of his wife; I will save him with my cudgel: it shall hang like a meter o'er the cuckold's horns; master Brook, thou shalt know it was the dog that thrusts the person, and then thou shalt lie with his wife—come to me soon at night. Ford's a knave, and I will aggravate his style; thou, master Brook, shalt know him for a knave and cuckold—come to me soon at night.
[Exit Ford. }
[Exit Ford.

SCENE III.—Windsor Park.

Enter Calus and Rugby.

Calus. Jack Rugby!
Rug. Sir.
Calus. Vat is de clock, Jack?
Rug. 'Tis past the hour, sir, that sir Hugh promised to meet.
Calus. By gar, he has save his soul, bat he is no come: he has pray his Bible vell, dat he is no come: by gar, Jack Rugby, he is dead already, if he be come.

Rug. He is wise, sir; he knew your worship would kill him, if he came.
Calus. By gar, de herring is no dead, so as I will kill him. Take your rapier, Jack; I will tell you how I will kill him.
Rug. Please, sir, I cannot fence.
Calus. Villainy, take your rapier.
Rug. Forbear; here's company.

Enter Host, Shallow, Slender, and Page.

Host. 'Hes she, belly doctor.
Shal. Save you, master doctor Calus.
Page. Now, good master doctor!
Nay, save you, sir; good-morrow, master doctor.
Calus. Vat be all you, one, two, tree, four, come for?

Host. To see thee fight, to see thee fain, to see thee traverse, to see thee here, to see thee there;
to see thee pass thy punto, thy stock, thy reverse, thy distance, thy montant. Is he dead, my Ethniopian? Is he dead, my Francisco? ha, bully! What says my Macalopus? my talon? my heart of elder?
ha! is he dead, belly Stale? is he dead?
Calus. By gar, he is de coward Jack priest of the world; he is not shew his face.

Host. Then art a Castilian king, Urinal! Hector
Grievous, call these knaves away.

Host. I pray you, bear witness that I have stay six or seven, two, tree hours for him, and he is no come.

Host. He is the wiser man, master doctor: he is a curer of souls, and you a curer of bodies; if you should fight, you go against the hair of your professions: is it not true, master Page?

Page. Master Whipsnade, you have yourself been a great fighter, though now a man of peace.

Host. Bodykins, master Page, though I now be old, and of the peace, if I see a sword out, my finger lictors to make one: though we are justices, and doctors, and churchmen, master Page, we have some salt of our youth in us: we are the sons of women, master Page.

Page. Tis true, master Shallow.
Shal. It will be found so, master Page. Master doctor Calus, I am come to fetch you home. I am sworn of the peace; you have showed yourself a wise physician, and sir Hugh hath shewn himself a wise and patient churchman: you must go with me, master doctor.

Host. Farewell, guest justice!—A word, monsieur
Mack-water.

Calus. Mack-water! vat is dat?

Page. Mack-water, in our English tongue, is varol, bully.

Calus. By gar, then I have such much mack-water as de Englishman:—Scurry Jack-dog priest! by gar, we will cut his ears.

Host. He will clapper-claw thee tightly, bully.
Calus. Clapper-de-claw! vat is dat?

Host. That is, he will make thee sinners.

Calus. By gar, me do look, he shall clapper-de-claw me; for, by gar, me will have it.

Host. And I will provoke him to't, or let him wag.

Calus. Me tank you for dat.

Page. Mack-water, bully. —But first, master guest, and master Page, and eke cavalero Slender, go you through the town from Frogmore.

[Aside to them.

Page. Sir Hugh is there, is he?
Host. He is there: see what humour he be in;
and I will bring the doctor about by the fields will it do well?

Shal. We will do it.

Ervain Page, Shallow, and Slender.

Calus. By gar, me will kille de priest; for he speak for a Jack-an-ape to Arme Page.

Host. Well, but, thou, seethe thy impatience; throw cold water on thy choler: go about the fields with me through Frogmore; I will bring thee there, mistress Anne Page is, at a farm-house a MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

Page.

I think you know him; master doctor Caius, the renowned French l'physican.

Caius. Got's will, and his passion of my heart! I had as lief you would tell me of a mess of porridge.

Page. Why?

Caius. He has no more knowledge in Hibocrates and Galen, and he is a knave besides; a cowardly knave, as you would desires to be acquainted withal.

Page. I warrant you, he's the man should fight with me.

Slen. 0, sweet Anne Page!

Shal. It is a dear, so, by his weapons—Keep them asunder;—here comes doctor Caius.

Enter Host, Caius, and Rugby.

Page. Nay, good master parson, keep in your weapon.

Shal. So do you, good master doctor.

Host. Disarm them, and let them question; let them keep their limbs whole, and hack our English.

Caius. I pray you, let-a me speak a word vit your ear: Verere will you not meet a me?

Page. Pray you, use your patience: In good time.

Caius. By gar, you are de coward, de Jack dog, John ape.

Page. Pray you, let us not be laughing-stogs to other men's humours; I desire you in friendship, and I will one way or other make you amends:—I will knog your urinals about your knave's cogn-cob, for missing your meetings and appointments.

Caius. 'Diable!—Jack Rugby, mine Host de Jarterre, have I not stay for him, to kill him? have I not, at de place I did appoint?

Shal. As I am a christians soul, now look you, this is the place appointed; I'll be judgment by mine host of the Garter.

Host. Peace, I say, Guallia and Gaul, French and Welch; soul-curer and body-curer.

Caius. Ay, dat is very good! excellent!

Host. Peace, I say; hear mine host of the Garter. Am I politick? am I subtle? is am I a Machiavel? Shall I lose my doctor? no; he gives me the potions, and the motions. Shall I lose my parson? my priest? my sir Hugh? no: he gives me the proverbs and the no-proverbs. Give me thy hand, terrestrial; so:—Give me thy hand, celestial; so:—

Boys of art, I have deceived you both; I have directed you to wrong places; your hearts are mighty, your spirits are whole, and left burnt sack the issue.—Come, lay their swords to pawn—Follow me, lady of peace; follow, follow, follow.

Shal. Trust me, a mad host.—Follow, gentlemen, follow.

Slen. 0, sweet Anne Page!

Shal. To shallow rivers, to whose feet
Melodious birds sing madrigals;
There will we make our puds of roses,
And a thousand fragrant posies.

To shallow.

'Mercy on me! I have a great dispositions to cry.

Melodious birds sing madrigals:
When as I sat in Panlyon,
And a thousand vagram posies.

Sim. Yoender he is coming, this way, sir Hugh.

Page. He's welcome:

To shallow rivers, to whose feet.

Heaven prosper the right!—What weapons is he?

Page. No weapons, sir: This comes my master

Shall. How now, master parson? Good-morrow, good sir Hugh. Keep a gamerust from the dice, and a good student from his book, and it is wonderful.

Slen. Ah, sweet Anne Page!

Page. Save you, good sir Hugh!

Eva. Pless you from his mercy sake, all of you!

Shal. What! the sword and the word! do you study them both, master parson?

Page. And youthful still, in your doublet and hose, this raw rheumatick day?

Eva. There is reasons and causes for it.

Page. We are come to you, to do a good office, master parson.

Eva. Fery well: What is it?

Page. Your grace, this most revend gentleman, who belike, having received wrong by some person, is at most odds with his own gravity and patience, that ever you saw.

Shal. I have lived fourscore years, and upward: I never heard a man of his place, gravity, and learning, so wide of his own respect.

Eva. What is he?
Enter Ford.

Ford. Well met, mistress Page: Whither go you? Mrs. Page. Truly, sir, to see your wife; is she at home? Ford. Ay; and as idle as she may hang together, for want of company: I think, if your husbands were here, they would marry. Mrs. Page. Be sure of that, sir, and of other husbands. Ford. Where had you this pretty weather-cock? Mrs. Page. I cannot tell what the devils his name is my husband had of him: What do you call your knight's a me, sirrah? Rob. Sir John Falstaff!

Ford. Sir John Falstaff! Mrs. Page. If, he; I can never hit on's name. There is such a league between his good man and he... is your wife at home, indeed? Ford. Indeed, she is. Mrs. Page. By your leave, sir: I am sick, till I see her. [Ereunt Mrs. Page and Robin.

Ford. This Page any brains? hath he any eyes? hath he any thinking? sure, they sleep: be hath no use of them. Why, this boy will carry a letter twenty miles, as easy as a cannon, will shoot point blank, and score the pieces out his wife's inclination, he gives her full motion and advantage and now she's going to my wife, and Falstaff's boy with her. A man may hear this shower sing in the world. Ford and Page walk. Ford. Falstaff's boy with her—Good points—they are laid, and every wife does her villainy to their own. I will take him, then torture my wife, plant the borrowed veil of modesty from the seeming mistress Page, divulge I age myself for a secure and wise Acton, and to these violent proceedings all my neighbours shall cry aim. (Court strikes,) The clock gives me the cue, and my assurance bids me search: there I shall find Falstaff; I shall be too, and praised for this, than mocked: for it is as positive and the earth is firm, that Falstaff is there I will go.

Enter Page, Shallow, Slender, Host, Sir Hugh Evans, Canary, and Ruby.

Shal. PAGE. Acc. Well met, master Ford. Ford. Trust me, a good knot: I have good cheer at home; and, I pray you, all go with me. Shal. I must excuse myself, master Ford. Nost. And so must I, sir; we have appointed to dine with mistress Anne, and I would not break with them. Shal. We have lingered about a match between Anne Page and my cousin slender, and this day we shall have our answer. Nost. I hope you have your good will, father Page. Page. You have master Slender; I stand wholly for you:—but my wife, master doctor, is for you altogether.

Canary. Ay, by gar: and de maid is love a mee, my wrrah—quickly tell me so much.

Host. What say you to young master Fenton? he capers, he dances, he has eyes of youth, he writes verses, he speaks boldly, he smells April and May: he will carry; 'tis in his buttons; he will carry.

Page. Not by my consent, I promise you. The gentleman is of no having: he kept company with the wild Prince and Poles; he is of too high a region, he knows too much. So to shall not knit a knot in his fortunes with the finger of my substance if he take her, let him take her simply: the wealth I have waits on my consent, and my consent goes not by way of possession.

Ford. I beseech you, heartily, some of you go home with me to dinner: besides your cheer, you shall have sport; I will show you a monster.—Master doctor, you shall go:—so shall you, master Page, and my cousin slender.

Shal. Well, fare you well— we shall have the freew wheeling at master Page's. [Ereunt Shallow and Slender.

Cain. Go home, John Rugby: I come anon. [Exit Rugby.

Host. Farewell, my hearts: I will to my honest knight Falstaff, and drink canary with him. [Exit Host.

Ford. [Aside.] I think, I shall drink in pipe-wine first with him; I'll make him dance. Will you go, gentle? All. Hearken, you, to see this monster. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Room in Ford's House.

Enter Mrs. Ford and Mrs. Page.

Enter Servants, with a basket.

Mrs. Page. Come, come, come.

Mrs. Ford. Here, set it down.

Mrs. Page. Give your men the charge; we must be brief.

Mrs. Ford. Marry, so I told you before, John, and Robert, be ready here hard by in the brew-house; and when I suddenly call you, come forth, and (without any pause, or staggering,) take this basket on your shoulders; that done, trudge with it in all haste, and carry it among the whistlers in the muddy ditch, close by the Thames side. Mrs. Page. You will do it? Mrs. Ford. I have told them over and over; they lack direction: He gone, and come when you are called. [Ereunt servants.

Mrs. Page. Here comes little Robin.

Enter Robin.

Mrs. Ford. How now, my eyes-musket; what news with you? Rob. My master, sir John, is come in at your back-door, mistress Ford; and requests your company.

Mrs. Page. You little Jack-a-lent, have you been true to us? Rob. Ay, I'll be sworn: My master knows not of your being here: and hath threatened to put me into everlasting liberty, if I tell you of it; for, he swears, he'll turn me away.

Mrs. Page. Thou'rt a good boy; this secrecy of thine shall be a tailor to thee, and shall make thee a new doublet and hose. Rob. Mrs. Ford. Do so—Go tell thy master, I am alone. Mistress Page, remember you your cue.

[Exit Robin.

Mrs. Page. I warrant thee; if I do not act it, hisse me. [Exit Mrs. Page.

Mrs. Ford. Go to then; we'll use this unwholesome humidity, this gross watery pimpoms;—we'll teach him to know turtles from jays.

Enter Falstaff.

Fal. Have I caught thee, my heavenly jewel? Why, now let me die, for I have lived long enough; this is the period of my ambition; O this blessed hour!

Mrs. Ford. O sweet sir John! Fal. Mistress Ford, I cannot cog, I cannot prate, mistress Ford. Now shall I sin in my wish: I would not be made and were dead; I'll speak it before the best lord, I would make thee my lady. Mrs. Ford. Your lady, sir John! alas, I should be a pitiful lady.

Mrs. Ford. The court of France show me such another: I see how thine eye would emulate the diamond: Thou hast the right arched bent of the brow, that becomes the ship-tire, the tire-vallant, or any tire of Venetian admittance. Mrs. Ford. A plain kerschief, sir John: my brows become nothing else; nor that well neither.

Fal. Thou art a traitor to say so: thou wouldst make an absolute courteuse; and the firm fixture of Act 3. MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

Fal. I love thee, and none but thee; help me away: let me creep in here; I'll never—

[He goes into the basket; they cover him with foul linen.]

Mrs. Page. Help to carry Falstaff:—you dissembling knight!

Re-enter Servants. Go take up these clothes here, quickly; where's the cowl-staff? look, now you drudge, bring them to the laundress in Datchet mead; quickly, come.

Enter Ford, Page, Caius, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Ford. Pray you, come near: if I suspect without cause, why then make sport at me, then let me be your jest; I desire it.—How now? whither bear you this?

Serv. To the laundress, forsooth.

Mrs. Ford. Why, what have you to do whither they bear it? You were best meddle with buck-washing. Ford. Buck? I would I could wash myself of the buck! luck, buck, buck! Ay, buck; I warrant you, buck; and of the season too; it shall appear.

[Execut Servants with the basket.]

Gentlemen, I have dreamed to night; I'll tell you my dream. Here, here, here be my keys: ascend my chambers, search, seek, find out; I warrant we'll unkenel the fox. Let me stop this way first:—

So, now uncape.

Page. Good master Ford be contented: you wrong yourself too much.

Ford. Truth. [Exit Page.—Upright, gentlemen; you shall see sport anon: follow me, gentlemen. [Exit. Exeunt. This is a very fantastical humours and jealou- sies.

Caius. By gar, 'tis no de fashion of France: it is not jealous in France.

Page. Nay, follow him, gentlemen; see the issue of his search. [Execut Evans, Page, and Caius.

Mrs. Page. Is there not a double excellency in this? Mrs. Ford. I know not which pleases me better, that my husband is deceived, or sir John.

Mrs. Page. What a taking was he in, when your husband asked who was in the basket!

Mrs. Ford. I am half afraid he will have need of wast'ring; so throwing him into the water will do him a benefit.

Mrs. Page. Hang him, dishonest rascal! I would all of the same strain were in the same distress.

Mrs. Ford. I think my husband hath some special suspicion of Falstaff's being here; for I never saw him so gross in his jealousies till now.

Mrs. Page. I will lay a plot to try that: and we will yet have our tricks with him. His disolute disease will scarce oblige this medicine.

Mrs. Ford. Shall we send that foolish carrion, mistress Quickly, to him, and excuse his throwing into the water, and give him another hope, to betray him to another punishment?

Mrs. Page. We'll do it; let him be sent for to-morrow eight o'clock, to have amends.

Re-enter Ford, Page, Caius, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Ford. I cannot find him: may be the knave bragged of that he could not compass.

Mrs. Page. Heard you that?

Mrs. Ford. Ay, by peace:—you use me well, master Ford, do you?

Ford. Ay, I do so.

Mrs. Ford. Heaven make you better than your thoughts!

Ford. Amen.

Mrs. Page. You do yourself mighty wrong, master Ford.

Ford. Ay, ay: I must bear it.

Even. If there be any body in the house, and in the chambers, and in the coffers, and in the presses, heaven forgive my sins at the day of judgment! Caius. By gar, nor I too; dere is no bodies. Page. Fie, fie! am I not ashamed? What spirit, what devil suggests this imagination? I would not have your distemper in this kind, for the wealth of Windsor Castle.
Ford. 'Tis my fault, master Page; I suffer for it.
Shal. You suffer for a good conscience: your wife is an honest a 'woman, as I will desires among five thousand, and five hundred too.
Mistress Page. Hygar, I see 'ts an honest woman.
Ford. Well—it promised you a dinner:—Come, come, walk in the park I pray you, pardon me; I will hereafter make known to you, why I have done this.—Come, wife;—come, mistress Page; I pray you, pardon me; pray heartily, pardon me.
Page. Let's go in, gentlemen; but, trust me, we'll mock him. I do invite you—to-morrow morning to my house to breakfast; after, we'll a binding together; I have a fine hawk for the bush: shall it be so?
Ford. Any thing.
Shal. If there is one, I shall make two in the company.
Page. If there be one or two, I shall make a debt.
Shal. In your teeth for shame.
Ford. I pray you go, master Page.
Page. I pray you now, rememberance to-morrow on the longy knife, mine host.
Shal. That's a good—by gar, on all my heart.
Page. A leavy knife; to have his gibes and his merrickies. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—A Room in Page's House.

Enter Fenton and Mistress Anne Page.

Fent. I see, I cannot get thy father's love; Therefore no more turn me to him, sweet Nan.
Anne. Alas! how then?
Fent. Why, these must be thyself.
Anne. Of that object, I am too great of birth; And that, my state being gald' with my expense, I seek to heal it only by his wealth. Besides these, other bars he lays before me,— My riots past, my wild societies: And tells me, 'tis a thing impossible; should love thee, but as a property.
Anne. May be, he tells you true. [Come!
Fent. No, heaven so speed me in my time to Alboit, I will confess, thy father's wealth Was the first motive that I would thee, Anne: Yet, wooing thee, I found thee of more value Than stamps in gold, or sums in sealed bags; And 'ts the very riches of thyself That now I aim at.
Anne. Gentle master Fenton, Yet seek my father's love; still seek it, sir; If opportunity and humbliest suit Cannot attain it, why then,—I work you hither. [They converse apart.

Enter Shallow, Slender, and Mrs. Quickly.

Shal. Break their talk, mistress Quickly; my kinman shall speak for himself.
Shal. I'll make a shaft or a bolt out:—ad, 'tis but venturing.
Shal. Be not dismay'd.
Shal. No, she shall not dismay me: I care not for that—but that I am afraid.
Quick. Hark ye; master Shallow would speak a word with you.
Anne. I come to him.—This is my father's £6, what a world of vile ill-favoured faults. [Aside. Looks handsome in three hundred pounds a year!

Exit.

Quick. And how does good master Fenton? Pray you, missus.
Shel. She's coming; to her, coz. O boy, thou hast a father!
Shel. I had a father, mistress Anne;—my uncle can tell you good jests of him:—Pray you, uncle, tell you Anne the jest, how my father stole two green out of a pen, good uncle.
Shel. Mistress Anne, my cousin loves you.
Shel. Ay, that I do; as well as I love any woman in Gloucestershire.

Shal. He will maintain you like a gentleman.
Shal. Ay, that I will, come cut and long-tail, under the degree of a squire.
Shal. He will make you a hundred and fifty pound jointure.
Shal. Good master Shallow, let him woo for himself.
Shal. Marry, I thank you for it; I thank you for that good comfort. She calls you, coz: I'll leave you.
Anne. Now, master Slender.
Shel. Now, good mistress Anne.
Anne. What is your will?
Shel. What is your will?
Anne. I say, your will! That's a pretty jest, indeed! I ne'er made my will yet, I thank heaven; I am not such a sickly creature, I give heaven praise.
Shel. I mean, master Slender, what would you with me?
Shel. Truly, for mine own part, I would little or nothing with you: Your father, and my uncle, have made motions: if it be my luck, so: if not, happy master his done! They can tell you how things go, better than I can I You may ask your father; here he comes.

Anne. Why, how now! what does master Fenton here? You wrong me, sir, thus will to hammy my house; I told you, sir, my daughter is disposed of.
Shel. Now, master Page, be not impatient.
Mrs. Page. Good master Fenton, come not to my child.
Page. She is no match for you.
Shel. Sir, will you hear me?
Shel. No, good master Fenton.
Page. Come, master Shallow; come, son Slender; I— Knowing my mind, you wrong me, master Fenton.
[Exeunt Page, Shallow, and Slender.

Quick. Speak to mistress Page.

Quick. Good mistress Page, for that I love your daughter In such a righteous fashion as I do, Perform, against all checks, rebukes, and manners, I must advance the colours of my love, And not retire: Let me have your good will.
Anne. Good mother, do not marry me yond' fool.
Mrs. Page. I mean it not; I seek you a better husband.
Quick. That's my master, master doctor.
Anne. Alas. I had rather be set quick 't the earth, And be set to death with turips.
Mrs. Page. Come, trouble not yourself: Good master Fenton, I will not be your friend, nor enemy; My daughter will I question how she loves you, And as I find her, so am I affected;
Shal. Till then, farewell, sir:—She must needs go in;
Shel. Her father will be angry.
[Exeunt Mrs. Page and Anne.

Fent. Farewell, gentle mistress: farewell, Nan, fire and water for such a kind heart. But yet, I would my master had mistress Anne; or I would master Shallow had her; or, in sooth, I would master Fenton had her: I will do what I can for them. Well, I have promised, and I'll be as good as my word; but speciously for master Fenton. Well, I must of another errand to sir John Falstaff from my two mistresses; What a beast am I to slack it?
[Exit.

Exit.
SCENE V.—A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Falstaff and Bardolph.

Fal. Bardolph, I say—

Bard. Here, sir.

Fal. (go fetch me a quart of sack; put a toast in. [Exit Bardolph.] Have I lived to be carried in a basket, like a barrow of butcher's offal; and to be thrown into the Thames? Well, if I be served such another trick, I'll have my brains ta'en out, and butter'd and give them to a dog for a new gift. The rogues slighted me into the river with as little remorse as they would have drowned a bitch's blind puppies, fifteen ½ the litter: and you may know by my size, that I have a kind of alacrity for my mistress, that the men were as deep as hell, I should own. I had been drowned, but that the shore was shelvy and shallow; a death that I abhor; for the water swells a man; and what a thing should I have been, when I had been swelled I should have been a mountain of mummy.

Re-enter Bardolph, with the wine.

Bard. Here's mistress Quickly, sir, to speak with you.

Fal. Come, let me pour in some sack to the Thames water; for my belly's as cold as if I had swallowed snow-balls for pills to cool the reins. Call her in.

Bard. Come in, woman.

Enter Mrs. Quickly.

Quick. By your leave; I cry you mercy: Give your worship good-morrow.

Fal. Take away these chalices: Go, brew me a pottle of sack finely.

Bard. With eggs, sir?

Fal. Simple of itself; I'll none pullet-sperm in my brewage. [Exit Bardolph.]—How now?

Quick. Mistress, sir, I come to your worship from mistress Ford.

Fal. Mistress Ford I have had ford enough. I was thrown into the ford: I have my belly full of ford.

Quick. Alas the day! good heart, that was not her fault: she does so take on with her men; they mistook their erection.

Fal. So did I mine, to build upon a foolish woman's promise.

Quick. Well, she laments, sir, for it, that it would yearn your heart to see it. Her husband goes this morning a birding; she desires you once more to come to her between eight and nine; I must carry her word quickly: she'll make you amends, I warrant you.

Fal. Well, I will visit her: Tell her so; and bid her think what a man is: let her consider his frailty, and then judge of my merit.

Quick. I will tell her.

Fal. Do so. Between nine and ten, say'st thou?

Quick. Eight and nine, sir.

Fal. Well, be gone: I will not miss her.

Quick. Peace be with you, sir. [Exit.

Fal. I marvel, I hear not of master Brook; he sent me word to stay within: I like his money well. O here he comes.

Enter Ford.

Ford. Bless you, sir.

Fal. Nay, master Brook? you come to know what hath passed between me and Ford's wife.

Ford. That, indeed, sir John, is my business.

Fal. Master Brook, I will not lie to you; I was at her house the hour she appointed me.

Ford. And how sped you, sir?

Fal. Very ill-favouredly, master Brook.

Ford. How so, sir? Did she change her determination?

Fal. She, master Brook; but the peaking cozened her husband, master Brook, dwelling in a continual tempest of jealousy, comes me in the instant of our encounter, after we had embraced, kissed, protested, and, as it were, spoke the prologue of our comedy; and at his heels a rabble of his companions, thither provoked and instigated by his dissipation, and forsooth, to search his house for his wife's love.

Ford. What, while you were there?

Fal. While I was there.

Ford. And did he search for you, and could not find you?

Fal. You shall hear. As good luck would have it, comes in one mistress Page; gives intelligence of Ford's approach; and, by her invention and Ford's wife's distraction, they conveyed me into a buck-basket.

Ford. A buck-basket!

Fal. By the Lord, a buck-basket: ramm'd me in with foul shirts and smocks, sacks, foul stockings, and greasy napkins; that, master Brook, there was the rankest compound of villainous smell, that ever offended nostril.

Ford. And how long lay you there?

Fal. Nay, you shall hear, master Brook, what I have suffered to bring this woman to evil for your good. Being thus crammed in the basket, a couple of Ford's knives, his hinds, were called forth by him, and their mistress mistress, there being none of them to clothe, the clothes to Datchet-lane: they took me on their shoulders; met the jealous knave their master in the door; who asked them once or twice what they had in their basket: I quaked for fear, lest the inanimate knave should have searched it; or, on dauling he should be a cuckold, held his hand. Well: on went he for a search, and away went I for foul clothes. But mark the sequel, master Brook: I suffered the pangs of three several deaths: first, an Intolerable fright, to be detected with a jealous rotten bell-wether: next, to be compassed, like a good bibbo, in the circumference of a peck, hilt to point, heel to head: and then, to be stopped in, like a strong distillation, with stinking waters that frettet their own green: think of that,—a man of my kidney,—think of that: that am as subject to heat, as butter: a man of continual dissolution and thaw; it was a miracle, to 'scape suffocation. And in the height of this bath, when I was more than half stewed in grease, like a Dutch dish, to be thrown into the Thames, and cooled glowing hot, in that surge, like a horse-shoe; think of that,—hissing hot,—think of that, master Brook.

Ford. In good sadness, sir, I am sorry that for my sake you have suffered all this. My suit then is more desperate; you importune her, master Brook.

Fal. Master Brook, I will be thrown into Etna, as I have been into Thames, ere I will leave her thus. Her husband is this morning gone a birding: I have received from her another embassy of meeting: 'twixt eight and nine is the hour, Master Brook.

Ford. 'Tis past eight already, sir.

Fal. Is it? I will then address me to your appointment. Come to me at your convenient leisure, and you shall know how I speed; and the conclusion shall be crowned with your enjoying her: Adieu. You shall have her, master Brook; master Brook, you shall cuckold Ford.

Ford. Hum! ha! is this a vision? is this a dream? do I sleep? Master Ford, awake; awake, master Ford; there's a hole made in your best coat, master Ford. This 'tis to be married! this 'tis to have linen, and to have baskets!—Well, I will proclaim myself what I am: I will now take the lecher; he is at my house: he cannot 'scape me; 'tis impossible he should; he cannot creep into a halfpenny purse, nor into a pepper-box: but, lest the devil that guides him should aid him, I will search impossible places. Though what I am I cannot avoid, yet be to what I would not, shall not make me tame: if I have horns to make one mad, let the proverb go with me, I'll be horn mad.

[Exit.}
ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Strand.

Enter Mrs. Page, Mrs. Quickly, and William.

Mrs. Page. Is he at master Ford's already, think'st thou?

William. Sure he is by this; or will be presently: but truly he is very courageous man, about his throwing into the water. Mistress Ford desires you to come suddenly.

Mrs. Page. I am with her by and by; I'll but bring my young man here to school; Look, where his master comes; 'tis a playing-day, I see.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans.

How now, sir Hugh? no school to-day?

Sir Hugh. No; master Slender is let the boys leave to play.

Mrs. Page. Blessing of his heart.

Sir Hugh. Mrs. Page, sir, we are to meet to-day at four at the stables in your house about the measures which we have to take for the lord Mayor's progresses next week.

Mrs. Page. Sir Hugh, I have some questions in your presence.

Sir Hugh. Do, Mrs. Page; I am at your service.

Mrs. Page. Come on, strag'! hold up your head; answer your master, he not afraid.

William. William, how many men is in house?

Sir Hugh. Two.

Mrs. Page. So,—I thought there had been one number more, because they say, 's o's house.

Sir Hugh. Once your settlings. What is fair, William?

William. Fisher.

Quick. Unlocks! there are fairer things than posies. oars.

Mrs. Page. You are a very simplicity 'oman; I pray you, peace. What is lapsis, William?

William. A stone.

Mrs. Page. And what is a stone, William?

William. A pebble.

Mrs. Page. No, it is lapsis; I pray you remember in your prain.

William. Lapis.

Mrs. Page. That is good, William. What is he, William, that does lend articles?

William. Articles are borrowed of the pronoun; and he thus declined, Singulariter, nominativo, hic, hae, hae.

Mrs. Page. Nominativo, big, bag, bag—pray you, mark: gravidas, bajas: Well, what is your accusative case now?

William. Accusativo, bice.

Mrs. Page. I pray you, have your remembrance, child; Accusativo, bag, bag, bag. Quick. Hang hog is Latin for bacon, I warrant you.

Mrs. Page. Leave your prabbles, 'oman. What is the vocative case, William?

William. O—nominativo, O.

Mrs. Page. Remember, William, vocative is, caro.

Quick. And that's a good root.

Mrs. Page. 'Oman, forbear.

Mrs. Page. Peace.

Mrs. Page. What is your genitive case plural, William?

William. Genitive case?

Mrs. Page. Ay.

William. Genitivo, —horum, barren, horum.

Quick. Vengeance of Jenny's case! lie on her!—never name her, child, if she be a whore.

Mrs. Page. For shame, 'oman.

Quick. You do ill to teach the child such words: he teaches him to kick and to hack, which they'll do fast enough of themselves, and to call horum—see upon you!

Mrs. Page. 'Oman, art thou lunatic? hast thou no understandings for thy cases, and the numbers of the genders? Thou art as foolish christian creature as I would desire.

Mrs. Page. I'ryther, hold thy peace.

Mrs. Page. Show me now, William, some declensions of thy pronouns.

Mrs. Page. Will, Forsooth, I have forgot.

Mrs. Page. It is in, in, and, if you forget your kis, your kee, and your es, you must be preaches. Good night, and play go.

Mrs. Page. He is a better scholar than I thought he was.

Mrs. Page. He is a good sprag memory. Farewell, mistress Page.

Mrs. Page. Adieu, good sir Hugh. [Exit Sir Hugh.] Get you home, boy.—Come, we stay too long.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—A Room in Ford's House.

Enter Falstaff and Mrs. Ford.

Falstaff. Mistress Ford, your sorrow hath eaten up my suffrance; I see, you are obsequious in your love, and I profess requital to a hair's breadth; not only, mistress Ford, in the simple office of love, but in all the accompaniments, complement, and ceremony of it. But are you sure of your husband now?

Mrs. Ford. He is a birding, sweet sir John.

Mrs. Page. [Within.] What hoo, gossip Ford! what hoo?

Mrs. Ford. Step into the chamber, sir John.

[Exit Falstaff.

Enter Mrs. Page.

Mrs. Page. Mrs. Page. How now, sweetheart? who's at home beside yourself?

Mrs. Ford. Why, some but mine own people.

Mrs. Page. Indeed?

Mrs. Ford. No, certainly:—Speak louder.

Mrs. Page. [Aside.] Mrs. Page. Truly, I am so glad you have nobody here.

Mrs. Ford. Why?

Mrs. Ford. Why, woman, your husband is in his old lumes again; he so takes on yonder with my husband; so rattle against all married mankind; so curses all Eve's daughters, of what complexion soever; and so buffet himself on the forehead, crying Peer-en, peer-en! that any madness, I ever yet beheld, seemed but tamesness, civility, and patience, to this his disturber he is in now; I am glad the fat knight is not here.

Mrs. Ford. Why, does he talk of him?

Mrs. Page. Of none but him; and swear, he was carried out, the last time he searched for him, in a basket: protests to his husband, he is now here; and hath drawn him and the rest of their company from the courtiers, to make another experiment of his suspicion; but I am glad the knight is not here; now he shall see his own fowry.

Mrs. Ford. How near is he, mistress Page?

Mrs. Page. Hard by; at street end; he will be here anon.

Mrs. Ford. I am undone!—the knight is here.

Mrs. Page. Why then you are utterly ashamed, and he's but a dead man. What a woman are you?—Away with him, away with him; better shame than murder.

Mrs. Ford. Which way should he go? how should I bestow him? Shall I put him into the basket again?

[Re-enter Falstaff.

Falstaff. No, I'll come no more I' the basket: May I not go out ere he come?

Mrs. Page. Also, three of master Ford's brothers watch the door with pistols, that none shall issue out; otherwise you might slip away ere he came. But what make you here?

Falstaff. What shall I do? I'll creep up into the chimney.

Mrs. Ford. There they always used to discharge their birding pieces. Creep into the klin-hole.

Mrs. Ford. Where is it?

Mrs. Ford. He will seek there, on my word. Neither press, coffer, chest, trunk, well, vault, but he hath an abstract for the remembrance of such places, and goes to them by his note: There is no hiding you in the house.

Mrs. Page. If you go out in your own semblance, you die, sir. Unless you go out disguised, — Mrs. Ford. How might we disguise him?

Mrs. Page. Alas the day, I fear me! There is no woman's gown big enough for him; otherwise, he might put on a hat, a muffler, and a kerchief, and so escape.

Fal. Good hearts, devise something: any extremity, rather than a mischief.

Mrs. Ford. My maid's aunt, the fat woman of Brentford, has a gown above.

Mrs. Page. On my word, it will serve him; she's as tall as he is; and there's thrush'd hat, and her muffler too: Run up, sir John!

Mrs. Ford. Go, go, sweet sir John: mistress Page end, I will look some linen for your head.

Mrs. Page. Quick, quick: we'll come dress you straight: put on the gown the while.

[Exit Falstaff.

Mrs. Ford. I would, my husband would meet him in this shape: he cannot abide the old woman of Brentford: he swears, she's a witch; for she is my house, and hath threatened to beat her.

Mrs. Page. Heaven guide him to thy husband's cudgel; and the devil guide his cudgel afterwards! Mrs. Ford. But is my husband coming?

Mrs. Page. Ay, in good sadness. In he; and he talks of the basket too, howsoever he hath had intelligence.

Mrs. Ford. We'll trust that: for I'll appoint my men to carry the basket again, to meet him at the door with it, as they did last time.

Mrs. Page. Nay, but he'll be here presently: let's go dress him like the witch of Brentford.

Mrs. Ford. I'll first direct my men what they shall do with the basket. Go up, I'll bring linen for him straight.

[Exit.

Mrs. Page. Hang him, dishonest varlet! we cannot misuse him enough.

We'll leave a proof, by that which we will do. Wives may be merry, and yet honest too: We do not act, that often jest and laugh; 'Tis old but true, Still swine eat all the death! [Exit.

Re-enter Mrs. Ford, with two Servants.

Mrs. Ford. Go, sirs, take the basket again on your shoulders; your master is hard at door; if he bid you set it down, obey him: quickly, despatch.

[Exit.

1 Serv. Come, come, take it up.

2 Serv. Pray heaven, it be not full of the knight again.

1 Serv. I hope not; I had as lief bear so much lead.

Enter Ford, Page, Shallow, Calus, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Ford. Ay, but if it prove true, master Page, have you any way then to unmoil me again? — Set down the basket, villain: — Somebody call my wife: — You, youth in a basket, come out here! — 0, you panderly rascals! there's a knot, a gling, a pack, a conspiracy against me: Now shall the devil be ashamed. What! wife, I say! come, come forth; behold what honest clothes you send forth to bleaching. Page. Why, this passes! Master Ford, you are not to go loose any longer; you must be pincioned. Eva. Why, this is lunacies! this is mad as a mad dog!

Shal. Indeed, master Ford, this is not well; indeed.

[Exit Mrs. Ford.

Ford. So say I too, sir: — Come hither, mistresse Ford; mistress Page, as I am a man, there was one conveyed out of my house yesterday in this basket. Why may not he be there again? In my house I am sure he is: my intelligence is true; my jealousy is reasonable. I'll shuck me out all the linen.

Mrs. Ford. If you find a man there, he shall die a felon's death.

Page. Here's no man.

Shal. By my fidelity, this is not well, master Ford; this wrongs you.

Eva. Master Ford, you must pray, and not follow the imaginations of your own heart: this is jealousies.

Ford. Well, he's not here I seek: for,

Page. No, nor no where else, but in your brain.

Ford. Help to search my house this one time: if I find not what I seek, show no colour for my extremity, let me for ever be your table-sport; let them say of me, who is as good as Ford, that searched a hollow walnut for his wife's lenmen. Satisfy me once more; once more search with me.

Mrs. Ford. What hoa, mistress Page? come you, and the old woman down; my husband will come into the chamber.

Ford. Old woman! What old woman's that?

Mrs. Ford. Why, it is my maid's aunt of Brentford.

Ford. A witch, a queen, an old cozening queen? Have I not forbid her my house? She comes of errands, does she? We are simple men; we do not know what's brought to pass under the profession of fortune-telling. She works by charms, by spells, by the figure, and such daubery as this is; beyond our element: we know nothing. — Come down, you witch; you hang you; come down I say.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, good, sweet husband — good gentlemen, let him not strike the old woman.

Enter Falstaff in women's clothes, led by Mrs. Page.

Mrs. Page. Come, mother Prat, come, give me your hand.

Mrs. Page. Are you not ashamed? I think, you have killed the poor woman.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, he will do it: — 'Tis a goodly credit for you.

Ford. Hang her, witch!

Eva. By yea and no, I think, the 'oman is a witch indeed: I like not when a 'oman has a great peard: I spy a great peard under her muffler.

Ford. Will you follow, gentlemen? I beseech you, follow; see but the issue of my jealousy: if I cry out thus upon no trall, never trust me when I open again.

Page. Let's obey his humour a little further: Come, gentlemen.

[Exit Page, Ford, Shallow, and Evans.

Mrs. Page. Trust me, he beat him most pitifully.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, by the mass, that he did not: he beat him most unprofitfully, methought.

Mrs. Page. I'll have the cudgel hallowed, and hung o'er the altar; it hath done meritorious service.

Mrs. Ford. What think you? May we, with the warrant of womanhood, and the witness of a good conscience, pursue him with any further revenge?

Mrs. Page. The spirit of wantonness is, sure, scared out of him; if the devil have him not in few-simple, with ease and recovery, he will never, I think, in the way of waste, attempt us again.

Mrs. Ford. Shall we tell our husbands how we have served him thus?

Mrs. Page. Yes, by all means; if it be but to escape the figures out of your husband's brain. If they can find in their hearts, the poor unenviable fate of sharing the same body, and be any further afflicted, we two will still be the masters.

Mrs. Ford. I'll warrant, they'll have him publicly shamed; and, methinks, there would be no period to the jest, should he not be publicly shamed.

Mrs. Page. Come, to the forge with it then, shape it: I would not have things cool. [Exit.]

SCENE III.—A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Host and Bardolph.

Host. Sir, the tierman's desire to have three of your horses: the duke himself will be to-morrow at court, and they are going to meet him.

Host. What duke should that be, comes so secretly? I hear not of him in the court. Let me speak with the gentlemen; they speak English: [to Bardolph.] Sir, I'll call them to you.

Host. They shall have my horses; but I'll make them pay, I'll cause them; they have had my horse a week; I have turned away my other guests; they must come off; I'll see them come. [Exit.]

SCENE IV.—A Room in Ford's House.

Enter Page, Ford, Mrs. Page, Mrs. Ford, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Ford. This one of the past discretions of a 'oman as ever I did look upon.

Page. And did he send you both these letters at an instant?

Mrs. Page. Within a quarter of an hour.

Ford. Fardene me, wife, henceforth do what you will; I rather will suspect the sun with cold, Than thee with wantonness: now dost thou honour In him that was late an heretic. [stand, As firm as faith.]

Ford. Do not as extreme in submission, As extreme in opposition; But let our plot go forward, let our wives Yet once again, to make us publick sport, Appoint a meeting with this old fat fellow, Where we may take him, and disgrace him for it.

Ford. That is no better way than that they spoke of.

Page. If we send him word they'll meet him in the park at midnight, he, she, he'll never come.

Ford. You see, he has been thrown into the rivers; and has been grievously beaten, as an old 'oman; methinks there should be terror in him, that he should not come; methinks, his flesh is punished, he shall have no desires.

Page. So think I too.

Mrs. Ford. Device but how you'll use him when he comes,

And let us two devise to bring him thither.

Mrs. Page. This is an old tale gone, that Herne the hunter,

Sometime a keeper here in Windsor forest, Doth all the winter time, at still midnight, Walk round about an oak, with great ragg'd horns; And there he blest the tree, and takes the cattle; And makes milk-kine yield blood, and shakes a

In a most hideous and dreadful manner: 'chain You have heard of such a spirit; and well you know, These operats from idle-headed eid.

Received, and did deliver to our age,

This tale of Herne the hunter for a truth.

Page. Why, yet there want not many, that do fear In darkness of night to walk by this Herne's oak: But what of this?

Mrs. Ford. Marty, this is our device;

That Fairstaff at that oak shall meet with us, Disguised like Herne, with huge horns on his head.

Page. Well, let it not be doubted but he'll come, And in this wise: When you have brought him thither,

What shall be done with him? what is your plot?

Mrs. Page. That likewise we have thought upon, and thus:

Nan Pendar, pray daughter, and my little son, And three or four of more of their growth, we'll dress like urchins, ushers, and fairies, green and white, With rounds of waxen tapers on their heads, And paint their fingers, and their hands; upon a sudden, As Fairstaff, she, and I, and twenty, let them from forth a saw-pit rush at once

With some diffused song: upon their sight, To two in great amazedness will fly:

Then let them all ring about him, and

And fancy like, to pinch the unclean knight;

And ask him, why, that hour of fairy revel, In their so sacred patha he dares to tread, In shape profound.

Mrs. Ford. And till he tell the truth, Let the supposed fairies pinch him sound, And burn him with their tapers.

Page. That the truth being known, We'll all present ourselves; disborn the spirit, And mock him home to Windsor.

Ford. The children must be practised well to this, or they'll ne'er do't.

Host. I'll speak to the children their behaviours, and I will be like a jack an-opens also, to burn the knight with my taber.

Ford. That will be excellent. I'll go buy them

Page. Mrs. Page. My Nan shall be the queen of all the Page. That still will I go buy,—and in that time Shall master Blunder steal my Nan away. [And

And mark her at Eton.—Go, send to Fairstaff straight.

Ford. Nay, I'll to him again, in name of Brook: He'll tell me all his purposes; sure, he'll come.

Mrs. Page. Fear not you that: Go, get us pro-

Page. Let us about it; it is admirable pleasures, and very honest knaverys.

Page. Mrs. Ford. Go, mistress Ford; Send quickly to sir John, to know his mind.

Mrs. Ford. I'll to the doctor; he hath my good will, And none but he, to marry with Nan Page. Though he marry with so well land'd, a mean idiot; And be my husband best of all affects: The doctor is well money'd, and his friends Potent at court; he, none but he, shall have her, Though twenty thousand worthier come to crave her.

[Exit.]

SCENE V.—A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Host and Simple.

Host. What wouldst thou have, boor? what, thick skin; speak, breathe, discuss; biff, short, quick, snap.

Simple. Sir, sir, I come to speak with Sir John Fairstaff from master Blunder.

Host. There's his chamber, his house, his castle, his standing-bed, and truckle-bed: 'tis painted about with the story of the prodigal, fresh and new; Go, knock and call; he'll speak like an Anthropophagius unto thee: Knock, I say.

Simple. There's an old women, a fat woman, gone up into his chamber; I'll be no bold as stay, sir, I come down; I come to speak with her, indeed.

Host. Ha! a fat woman! the knight may be robbed: I'll call,—Bully knight! Bully sir John! speak from thy high military station, thou thou there? It is this host, thine Episcopale, calls.

[Exit.] How now, mine host?
Act 4.

MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

Host. Here's a Bohemian-Tartar carries the coming down of thy fat woman; Let her descend, bully, let her descend; my chambers are honourable: Fye! privacy? fye!

Enter Falstaff.

Fal. There was, mine host, an old fat woman, even now with me; but she's gone.

Sim. Pray you, sir, was't not the wise woman of Brentford?

Fal. Ay, marry, was it, muscle-shell; What would she vail her wet withal?

Sim. My master, sir, my master Slenor, sent to her, seeing her go through the streets, to know, sir, whether one Nym, sir, that beguiled him of a chain, had the chain, or no.

Fal. I spoke with the old woman about it.

Sim. And what says she, I pray, sir?

Fal. Marry, she says, that the very same man, that beguiled master Slenor of his chain, cozened him of it.

Sim. I would, I could have spoken with the woman herself; I had other things to have spoken with her too, from him.

Fal. What are they? let us know.

Host. Ay, now, come; quick.

Sim. I may not conceal them, sir.

Fal. Conceal them, or thou diest.

Sim. Why, sir, they were nothing but about mistress Anne Leche; to know if it were my master's fortune to have her, or no.

Fal. 'Tis, 'tis his fortune.

Sim. What, sir?

Fal. To have her,—or no. Go; say, the woman told me so.

Sim. May I be so bold to say so, sir?

Fal. Ay, sir Tike; who more bold?

Sim. I thank your worship; I shall make my master glad with these tiding. [Exit Simple.

Host. Thou art clerkly, thou art clerkly, sir John: Was there a wise woman with thee?

Fal. Ay, there that was, mine host; one that hath taught me more wit than ever I learned before in my life: and I paid nothing for it neither, but was paid for my learning.

Enter Bardolph.

Bard. Out, alas, sir! cozenage! meer cozenage! Host. Where be your horses? speak well of them, varletto.

Bard. Run away with the cozeners; for so soon as I came beyond Eton, they threw me off, from behind one of them, in the slough of mire; and set spurs, and away, like three German devils, three Doctor Faustuses.

Host. They are gone but to meet the duke, villain! do not say, they be fled; Germans are honest men.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans.

Ev. Where is mine host?

Host. What is the matter, sir?

Ev. Have a care of your entertainments: there is a friend of mine, come, to town, tells me, there is three cousins, Germans, that has cozened all the honourable lads, of Maldenhead, of Colebrook, of horses and money. I tell you for good-will, look you: you are wise, and full of gibes andouting-stocks; and 'tis not convenient you should be cozened: Fare you well. [Exit.

Enter Dr. Caius.

Caius. Vere is mine Host de Jarterre?

Host. Here, master doctor, in perplexity, and doubtful, come.

Caius. I cannot tell vat is dat: But It Is tell-a-me, dat you make great preparation for a duke de Ivanmary: by my trot, dere is no duke, dat de courtesans know to come: I tell you for good-will.

[Exit.

Host. Hye and cry, villain, go:—assist me, knight; I am undone: fly, run, hue and cry, villain! I am undone! [Exeunt Host and Bardolph.

Fal. I would, all the world might be cozened; for I have been cozened, and beaten too. If it should come to the ear of the court, how I have been transformed, and how my transformation hath been washed and cudgeled, they would melt me out of my fat, drop my dressing, throw other men's boots with me; I warrant, they would whip me with their fine wits, till I were as crest-fallen as a dried pear. I never prospered since I forsook myself at primrose. Well, if my wind were but long enough to say my prayers, I would repent.

Enter Mistress Quickly.

Now! whence come you?

Quick. From the two parties, forsooth.

Fal. The devil take one party, and his dam the other, and so they shall be both bestowed! I have suffered more for their sakes, more, than the villainous inconstancy of man's disposition is able to bear.

Quick. And have not they suffered? Yes, I warrant; speciously one of them; mistress Ford, good heart, is as blue, that you cannot see a white spot about her.

Fal. What tellst thou me of black and blue? I was beaten myself into all the colours of the rainbow; and I was like to be appalled for the witch of Brentford, and if that my admirable dexterity of wit, my counterfeiting the action of an old woman, deliver'd me, the knave constable had set me up the stocks, the common stocks, for a witch.

Quick. Sir, let me speak with you in your chamber: you shall hear how things go; and, I warrant, to your content. Here is a letter will say something. Good hearts, what ado here is to bring you together? One of you does not serve heaten well, that you are so crossed.

Fal. Come up into my chamber. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Another Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Fenton and Host.

Host. Master Fenton, talk not to me; my mind is heavy; I must to the field of business.

Fent. Yet hear me speak: Assist me in my purpose. And, as I am a gentleman, I'll give thee a pose, a hundred pound in gold, more than your loss.

Host. I will hear you, master Fenton; and I will give over all.

Fent. From time to time I have acquainted you with the dear love I bear to fair, Anne Page; Whd, mutually, hath answered my affection (So far forth as herself might be her choicer, Even to my wish! I have a letter from her of such contents as you will wonder at; The whither whereof so larded with my matter, That neither, singly, can be manifested. Without the show of both:—wherein fat Falstaff Hath a great scene: the image of the jest [Showing the letter. I'll show you here at large. Hark, good mine host! To-night at horse's back, just 'twixt twelve and three, Miss my sweet Nan present the fairest queen: [one, The purpose why, is here; in which disguise, While other jests are something rank on foot, Her father hath commanded. Away with Sir Slender, and with him to Eton Immediately to marry; she hath consented: Now, sir, Her mother, even strong against that match, And firm for doctor Caius, hath appointed That he shall likewise shuffle her away, While other sports are tasting of their minds, And at the deansery, where a priest attends, Straight make a journey: to that house they'll come. She, seemingly obedient, likewise hath Made promise to the doctor;—Now thus it rests. E
MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Falstaff and Mrs. Quickly.

Fal. Prythee, no more prating—go:—I'll hold this is the third time; I hope, good luck lies in odd numbers. Away, go; they say, there is divinity in odd numbers, either in nativity, chance, or death. Away.

Quick. I'll provide you a chain, and I'll do what I can to get you a pair of horns.

Fal. Away, I say; time wears—hold up your head, and mince. [Exit Mrs. Quickly.

Enter Ford.

Ford. How now, master Brook? Master Brook, the matter will be known to-night, or never. Be you in the Park about midnight, at Heres's oak, and you shall see wonders.

Fal. Went you not to her yesterday, sir, as you told me you had appointed?

Fal. I went to her, master Brook, as you see, like a poor old man: but I came from her, master Brook, like a poor old woman. That same knave, Ford her husband, hath the finest mad devil of jealousy in him, master Brook, that ever governed frenzy. I will tell you. He beat me grievously, in the chimney. For in his despair, master Brook, I fear not Goliath with a weaver's beam; because I know also, life is a shuttle. I am in haste; go along with me; I'll tell you all, master Brook. Since I pluck'd garden peas, play'd truant, and whipp'd top, I knew not what it was to be beaten, till lately. Follow me: I'll tell you strange things of this knave Ford: on whom to-night I will be revenged, and I will deliver his wife into your hands.

Follow: Strange things in hand, master Brook! follow.

[Exit.]

SCENE II.—Windsor Park.

Enter Page, Shallow, and Slender.

Page. Come, come; we'll couch 'em the castle-door, and light of our fairies. Remember, son Slender, my daughter.

Slender. Ay, forsooth; I have spoke with her, and we have a say-word, how to know one another. I come to her in white, and cry, woman: she cries budget; and by that we know one another.

Shall. That's good too; but what needs either your mum, or her budget? The white will decipher her well enough.—It hath struck ten o'clock.

Page. That is light; light spirits will become it well. Heaven, prosper our sport! No man means evil but the devil, and we shall know him by his horns. Let's away; follow me.

SCENE III.—The Street in Windsor.

Enter Mrs. Page, Mrs. Ford, and Dr. Calus.

Mrs. Page. Master Doctor, my daughter is in green, when she see your face, she'll cut off her hair by the hand, away with her to the deanery, and dispatch it quickly: go before into the park: we two must go together.

Ford. Can any now rat I have to do; Adieu.

Mrs. Page. Fare you well, sir. [Exit Calus. My husband will not rejoin so much at the abuse of Falstaff, as he will chafe at the doctor's marrying my daughter; but 'tis no matter; better a little chiding than a great deal of heart-break.]

Mrs. Ford. Where is Nan now, and her troop of fairies? and the Welch devil, Hugh?

Mrs. Page. They are all couched in a pit-hard by Herne's oak, with obscured lights which, at the very instant of Falstaff's and our meeting, they will at once display to the night.

Mrs. Ford. That cannot choose but amaze him.

Mrs. Page. If he be not amazed, he will be mock'd; if he be amazed, he will every way be mocked.

Mrs. Ford. We'll betray him finely.

Mrs. Page. Against such l ewdsters, and their levity.

Those that betray them do no treachery.

Mrs. Ford. The hour draws on; To the oak! [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Windsor Park.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans, and Fairies.

Evans. Trib, trib, fairies; come; and remember your parts: be bold, I pray you; follow me into the pit; and when I give the watch-ords, do as I bid you: Come, come; trib, trib.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Park.

Enter Falstaff disguised, with a buck's head on.

Fal. The Windsor bell hath struck twelve; the minstrel draws on: Now, the hot-blooded gods assist me. Remember, Jove, thou wast a bull for thy Europa; love set on thy horns.—O powerful love! that, in some respects, makes a beast a man; and in some others, a man a beast. You were also, Jupiter, a swan, for the love of Leda:—O, omnipotent love! how near the god, drew in the temptation of a goose?—A fault done first in the form of a beast:—O Jove, a beastly fault! and then another fault in the semblance of a fowl: think on it, Jove; a foul fault. When gods have hot backs, what shall men do? For me, I am here a Windsor stag, and the fittest, I think, to the forest: Send me a cool rut-time, Jove, or who can blame me to pass my tallow? Who comes here? my doe?

Mrs. Ford and Mrs. Page.

Mrs. Ford. Sir John? art thou there, my deer? my male deer?

Fal. My doe with the black sent?—Let the sky rain potatoes; let it thunder to the tune of Green Sleeves; hall kissing-comfits, and snow erings; let there come a tempest of provocation, I will shoot them both. [Embracing her.

Mrs. Ford. Mistress Page, Come is come, with me, sweetheart.

Fal. Divide me like a brist-buck, each a haunch; I will keep my ides to myself, my shoulders for the feller of this walk, and my horns I bequeath your husbands. Am I a woodman? ha! speak I like Herne the hunter?—Why, now is Cupid a child of conscience; he makes restitution. As I am a true man, I will not. [Noise within.

Mrs. Page. Alas! what noise?

Mrs. Ford. Heaven forgive our sins!

Fal. What should this be?

Mrs. Page. Away, away. [They run off.

Fal. I think, the devil will not have me dammed, lest the oil that is in me should set hell on fire he would never else cross me thus.
Enter Sir Hugh Evans, like a satyr; Mrs. Quickly, and Pistol; Anne Page, as the Fairy Queen, attended by her brother and others, dressed like fairies, with waxen tapers on their heads.

Quick. Fairies, black, grey, green, and white, You moon-shine revelers, and shades of night, You orphan-heirs of fixed destiny, Attend your office, and your quality.

Cricket. And, with the maids as blue as bilberry.

Our radiant queen hates sluts and sluttery.

Pist. They are fairies; he, that speaks to them, shall die: I'll wink and couch: no man their works must eye.

Evans. Where's Péde?—Go you, and where you find a maid, That, ere she sleep, has thrice her prayers said, Raise up the organs of her fantasy; Sleep she as soundly as the lady's curfew; But those as sleep, and think not on their sins, Pinch them, arms, legs, backs, shoulders, sides, and QUICK. About, about; [shins.]

Search Windsor castle, elves, within and out: Strike good luck, pinches, on every sacred room; That it may stand till the perpetual doom, In state as wholesome, as in state 'tis fit; Worthy the owner, and the owner it.

The several chairs of order look you scour With juice of balm, and every precious flower: Each fair installment, coat, and several crest, With loyal blazon, evermore be blessed!

And slight, meadow fairies, look, you sing, Like to the Garter's compass, in a ring: The expression that it bears, green let it be, More fertile-green than all the field to see; And, Hong sui gul mid y pense, write, In emerald tufts, flowers purple, blue, and white: Like sapphire, pearl, and rich embroidery, Buckled below fair knighthood's bending knee; Fairies use flowers for their charactery.

A way; disperse: But, till 'tis one o'clock, Our dance of custom, round about the oak

Of Herne the hunter, let us not forget.

Evans. Pray you, lock hand in hand; yourselves in order set: And twain below-warms shall our lanterns be, To guide our measure round about the tree. But, stay: I smell a man of middle earth.

Fal. Heavens defend me from that Welsh fairy! Jest he and his country, to make a piece of cheese!

Pist. Vile worm, thou wast o'erlook'd even in thy birth.

Quick. With trial-fire touch me his finger-end: If he be chaste, the flame will back descend, And turn him to no pain; but if he start, It is the flesh of a corrupted heart.

Pist. A trial, come.

Evans. Come, will this wood take fire? [They burn him with their tapers.]

Fal. Oh, oh, oh! QUICK. Corrupt, corrupt, and tainted in desire! About him, fairies; sing a scornful rhyme; And, as you light him, I'll pinch him to your time.

Evans. It is right; indeed he is full of lecheries and iniquity.

SONG.

Fye on wanton fancy! Fye on lust and luxury! Lust is but a bloody fire, Kindled with unchaste desire, And in heaven's arms aspire, As thoughts do blow them, higher and higher. Pinch him, fairies, mutually! Pinch him for his villainy: Pinch him, and burn him, and turn him about, Till candles, and star-light, and moon-shine be out.

During this song, the fairies pinch Falstaff. Doctor Caius comes one way, and steals away a fairy in green; Siender another way, and takes off a fairy in white. Ford comes on, and is taken by Falstaff. Anne Page. A noise of hunting is made within. All the fairies run away. Falstaff pulls off his buck's head, and rises.

Enter Page, Ford, Mrs. Page, and Mrs. Ford. They lay hold on him.

Page. Nay, do not fly: I think, we have watch'd too well the woods, to scamp our meaning. Will none but Herne the hunter serve your turn? Mrs. Page. I pray you, come; hold up the jest no higher.

Now, good sir John, how like you Windsor wives? See you these, husband? do not these fair fokes Become the forest better than the town? Ford. Now, sir, who's a cuckold now?—Master Brook, Falstaff's a knave, a cuckoldly knave; here are his horns, master Brook: And, master Brook, he hath enjoyed nothing of Ford's but his buckbasket, his cudgel, and twenty pounds of money; which must be paid to master Brook; his horses are arrested for it, master Brook.

Mrs. Ford. Sir John, we have had ill luck: we could never meet. I will never take you for my love again, but I will always count you my deer.

Fal. I do begin to perceive that I am made an ass.

Ford. Ay, and an ox too; both the proofs are extant.

Fal. And these are not fairies? I was three or four times in the thought, they were not fairies: and yet the gulliness of my mind, the sudden surprise of my powers, drove the grossness of the forsyth into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fairies. See now, how wit may be made a Jack-a-lent, when 'tis upon ill employment.

Evans. Sir John Falstaff, serve Got, and leave your desires, and fairies will not pinse you.

Ford. Well said, fairy Hugh.

Evans. And leave you your jealousies too, I pray you.

Ford. I will never mistrust my wife again, till thou art able to woo her in good English.

Fal. Have I laid my brain in the sun, and dried it, that it wants matter to prevent so gross o'er-reaching as this? Am I ridden with a Welsh goat too? Shall I have a coxcomb of frize? 'Tis time we were choked with a piece of toasted cheese.

Evans. Sir John is not good to give putter; your pottle is all putter.

Fal. Seese and putter! have I lived to stand at the taunt of one that makes fritters of English? This is enough, to be the decay of lust and late-walking through the realm.

Mrs. Page. Why, sir John, do you think, though we would have thrust virtue out of our hearts by the head and shoulders, and have given ourselves without scruple to hell, that ever the devil could have made you our delight?

Ford. What, a hodge-pudding? a bag of flax?

Mrs. Page. A puffed man?

Page. Old, cold, withered, and of intolerable entrails.

Ford. And one that is as slanderous as Satan?

Page. And as poor as Job?

Ford. And as wicked as his wife?

Evans. And given to fornications, and to taverns, and sack, and wine, and methergins, and to drinkings, and swearings, and starings, pribbles and prabbles?

Fal. Well, I am your theme: you have the start of me; I am dejected; I am not able to answer the Welch flannel! Ignorance itself is a plummet o'er me: use me as you Ford. But, sir, we'll bring you to Windsor, to one master Brook, that you have cozened of money, to whom you should have been a pander: over and above that you have suffered, I think, to repay that money will be a biting affliction.

E 2
Mrs. Ford. Nay, husband, let that go to make amends;
For you, my fair lord, I'll give you my hand.
Page. Woe be to honest, knight, thou shalt eat no banquet to-night at my house: where I will desire thee to break my wife, that now lounges at those fires, master Slender hath married her daughter.

Mrs. Page. Doctor doubts that: if Anne Page be my daughter, she is, by this, doctor Caius' wife. [Aside]

Kater Slender.

to him, I make the best in Gloucestershire know not; would I were hanged, la, else
Page. Of what, sir?

I came yonder at Eton to marry mistress Anne Page, and she's a great ruberry boy. If it had not been for the witch, I would have spared him, or he should have avenged me. If I did not think it had been Anne Page, I would have never ate, and I'm a post-master's boy.
Page. Why, this is your own fault. I did not tell you, how you should know your daughter by her garments.

I went to her in white, and cry'd upon, and she cry'd harder, as Anne and I had appointed and yet it was not Anne, but a post-master's boy.

John. Master blender, cannot you see but marry boys?

Page. Fie, fie, I am vexed at heart. What shall I do?

Mrs. Page. This George, he be not angry, I know of your purpose; turned my daughter into green, and indeed, she is now with the doctor at the医生ery, and there married.

Kater Caius.

Caius. Were I mistress Page? By gar, I am controls; I ha' married wen gowns, a boy on part, by gar, a boy; it is not Anne Page by gar, I am controls.

Mrs. Page. Why, did you take her in green?
Caius. Ay, be gar, and 'tis a boy be gar, I'll raise all Windsor. [Aside Caius. This is strange! Who hath got the right
Page. My heart misgives me! Here comes master Fenton.

Kater Fenton and Anne Page.

How now, master Fenton?

Amor. Father! good father! good my mother pardon!

Page. Mistresse, how chance you went not with master Fenton?

Mrs. Page. Why went you not with master doctor, madam?

Ford. You do abuse her; bear the truth of it. You would have married her most shamefully, Where there was no proportion held in love. The true is, she and I, long since contracted, Are now so close, that nothing can dissolve us. The offence is holy, that she hath committed. And this do I, in the name of craft, Of disobedience, or undutious title, Since thrown she doth evitate and shun A thousand living-rooms cursed hours.

Ford. And not an ass'd, here is no remedy — In love, the heavens themselves do guide the state; Money buys lands, and wives are sold by fate.

Ford. I am glad, though you have taken a special stand to strike at me, that your arrow hath glanced.

What cannot be eschew'd, must be embraced.

Ford. When night dogs run, all sorts of deers are chased.

Ford. I will dance and eat plums at your wedding.

Mrs. Page. Well, I will muse no further. — Master Fenton, heaven give you many, many merry days!—

Ford. Sir John, to master Brook ye shall hold your word; For he, to-morrow, shall be with mistress Ford.

[Exeunt.

TWELFTH NIGHT: OR, WHAT YOU WILL.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

Oriana, Duke of Illyria.

Sebastian, a young gentleman, brother to Viola.

Antonio, a sea captain, friend to Sebastian.

A new captain, friend to Viola.

Valentine,

Clown,

a gentleman attending on the Duke.

Sir Toby, Bass, sir of Olivia.

Sir Andrew Ague-cheek.

Malvolio, steward to Olivia.

SCENE,—A city in Illyria; and the sea-coast near it.

ACT I.

Enter Duke, Curtis, Lords; Musicians attending.

Duke. If music be the food of love, play on,
Give me excess of it; that surfeiting
The appetite may sicken, and so die—
That strain again:—it had a dying fall:
O, it came o'er my ear like the sweet south,
That breathes upon the gillyflower of evening,
Stealing and giving odour.—Enough; no more;

Tablin. servants to Olivia.

Clown,

Olivia, a rich Countess.

Viola, in Love with the Duke.

Maria, Olivia's woman.

Lords, Priests, Sailors, Officers, Musicians, and other Attendants.

Is not so sweet now, as it was before.

O spirit of love, how quick and fresh art thou! That, notwithstanding thy capacity
Receivest as the sea, nought enters there, Of what validity and pitch soever,
But falls into abatement and low price,
Even in a minute so full of shapes is fancy, That it alone is high fantastical.

Car. Will you go hunt, my lord?

Ford. What, Curtis?

Ford. The hart.

Duke. Why, so I do, the noblest that I have:
O, when mine eyes did see Olivia first,
Methought she pur'd the air of pestilence;
That instant was a drought of wonder, yet a part;
And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,
E'er since pursue me.—How now? what news from her?

Enter Valentine.

Val. So please my lord, I might not be admitted,
But from her handmaid do return this answer:
The element itself, till seven years' heat,
Shall not behold her face at ample view:
But, like a cloisteress, she will walked
And water once a day her chamber round
With eye-offending brine: all this, to season
A brother's dead love, which she would keep fresh,
And lasting, in her sad remembrance.

Duke. O, she, that hath a heart of that fine frame,
To pay this debt of love but to a brother,
How will she love, when the rich, golden shaft,
Hath kill'd the flock of all affections else
That live in her! when liver, brain, and heart,
These sovereign thrones, are all supplied, and fill'd,
(Her sweet perfections,) with one self king—
A way before me to sweet beds of lovers;
Love-thoughts like rich, when canopied with bowers.

SCENE II.—The Sea-coast.
Enter Viola, Captain, and Sailors.

Vio. What country, friends, is this?
Cap. Illyria, lady.
Vio. And what should I do in Illyria?
My brother he is in Elysium.
Perchance, he is not drowned.—What think you, sailors?
Cap. It is perchance, that you yourself were saved.
Vio. O my poor brother! and so, perchance, may he be.
[Chance.
Cap. True, madam: and, to comfort you with Assure yourself, after our ship did split,
When you, and that poor number saved with you,
Hung on our driving boat, I saw your brother,
Most providest in peril, bind himself
(Courage and hope both teaching him the practice)
To a strong mast, that lived upon the sea;
Where, like Arion on the dolphin's back,
I saw him hold acquaintance with the waves,
So long as I could see.

Vio. For saying so, there's gold,
Might sworn escape unfoldeth to my hope,
Where to thy speech serves for authority,
The like of him. Know'st thou this country?
Cap. Ay, madam, well; for I was bred and born,
Not three hours' travel from this very place.
Vio. Who governs here?
Cap. A noble duke, in nature,
As in his name.
Vio. What is his name?
Cap. Orsino.
Vio. Orsino! I have heard my father name him:
He was a bachelor then.

Vio. And so is now,
Or was so very late: for but a month
 Ago I went from hence; and then 'twas fresh
In murmur, (as, you know, what great ones do,
The less will prattle of,) that he did seek
The love of fair Olivia.

Vio. What's she?
Cap. A virtuous maid, the daughter of a count
That died some twelvemonth since; then leaving
In the protection of his son, her brother, [her
 Who was so foolish, for whose dear love,
 They say, she hath abjur'd the company
 And sight of men.
Vio. O, that I served that lady;
And might not be delivered to the world,
If I had made mine own occasion mellow,
What my estate is.

Vio. That were hard to compass; Because she will admit no kind of suit,
No, not the duke's.

Vio. There is a fair behaviour in thee, captain;
And though that nature with a beauteous wall
Both of a golden frame, and an essay
I will believe, thou hast a mind that suits
With this thy fair and outward character.
I pray thee, and I' ll pay thee bounteously,
Concealing it from all; and be my heart,
For such disguise as, happy, shall become
The form of my intent. I'll serve this duke;
Thou shalt present me as an eunuch to him,
It may be worth thy pains; for I can sing,
And spend him in many sorts of musick,
That will allow me very worth his service.
What else may hap, to time I will commit;
Only shape thou thine silence to my wit.

Cap. Fie you your eunuch, and your mute I'll be;
When my tongue blabs, then let mine eyes not see!
Vio. I thank thee: Lead me on.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Room in Olivia's House.
Enter Sir Toby Belch, and Maria.

Sir To. What a plague means my niece, to take The death of her brother thus? I am sure, care's an enemy to life.

Mar. Where's the truth, sir Toby, you must come in earlier o' nights; your cousin, my lady, takes great exceptions to your ill hours.

Sir To. Why, let her except before excepted.

Mar. Ay, but you must confine yourself within the modest limits of order.

Sir To. Confine? I'll confine myself no finer than I am: these clothes are good enough to drink in, and so be these boots too; and an they be not, let them hang themselves in their own straps.

Mar. That quaffing and drinking will undo you;
I heard my lady talk of it yesterday; and of a foolish knight, that you brought in one night here, to be her woore.

Sir To. Who? Sir Andrew Ague-cheek?

Mar. Ay, he.

Sir To. He's as tall a man as any's in Illyria.

Mar. What's that to the purpose?

Sir To. Why, he has three thousand ducats a year.

Mar. Ay, but he'll have but a year in all these ducats; he's a very fool, and a prodigal.

Sir To. Fye, that you'll say so! he plays o' the violet-gambo, and speaks three or four languages word for word without book, and hath all the good gifts of nature.

Mar. He hath, indeed,—almost natural: for, besides that he's a fool, he's a great quarreler; and,
but that he is quite还好, he's a gift of a coward to ally the gust he hath in quarrelling, 'tis thought among the prudent, he would quickly have the gift of a grave.

Sir To. By this hand, they are scoundrels, and abstrackters; that I am so of him. Who are they?

Mar. They that add moreover, he's drunk nightly in your company.

Sir To. With drinking healths to my niece; I'll drink to her, as long as there is a passage in my thor, and drink in Illyria: He's a coward, and a coystrill, that will not drink to my niece, till his brains turn o' the toe like a parish-top. What, wench? Castilliano-vulgo! for here comes Sir Andrew Ague-face.

Enter Sir Andrew Ague-cheek.

Sir A. Sir Toby Belch! how now, sir Toby Belch
Sir To. Sweet sir Andrew?

Sir And. Bless you, fair shrew.

Mar. And you too, sir.

Sir To. Accost, sir Andrew, accost.

Sir And. I am so of him. Who are they?

Sir To. My niece's chamber-maid.

Sir And. Good mistress Accost, I desire better acquaintance.

Mar. Her name is Mary, sir.

Sir And. Good mistress Mary Accost,— Sir To. You mistake, knight: accost, is, from her, board her, woo her, assail her.

Sir And. By my troth, I would not undert keher in this company. Is that the meaning of accost?
Act I.

SCENE IV.—A Room in the Duke's Palace.

Enter Valentine, and Violan in man's attire.

Val. If the duke continue these favours towards you, Cesario, you are like to be much advanced; be hath known you but three days, and already you are no stranger.

Ces. You either fear his humour, or my negligence, that you call in question the continuance of his love. I am incessant, sir, in his favours?

Val. No, believe me.

Enter Duke, Curio, and Attendants.

Duk. I thank you. Here comes the count.

Duke. Who saw Cesario, ho?

Cur. On your attendance, my lord; here.

Duke. Stand you whilst aloof.—(Cesario, Thou know'st no less but all; I have unclasp'd To thee the book even of my secret soul: Therefore, good youth, address thy gaze unto her; Be not deny'd access, stand at her doors, And tell them, there thy fixed foot shall grow, Till you have audience.

Vio. Sure, my noble lord, If she be so abandon'd to her sorrow As it is spoke, she never will admit me.

Duk. Be clamorous, and in as many wise. Rather than the unprofited return. [Then]

Vio. Say, I do speak with her, my lord: What Duke. O, then unfold the passion of my love, Surprise her with discourse of my dear faith: It shall be some time will we act my woes; She will attend it better in thy youth, Than in a nuncio of more grave aspect.

Vio. I think not so, my lord.

Duk. Dear lad, believe it; For they shall set belts thy happy years; That say, thou art a man: Diana's lip Is not more smooth, and rubricious; thy small pipe Is as the maiden's organ, thrill, and sound, And all is semblative a woman's part. I know, thy constellation is right apt For this affair: Some four, or five, attend him; All, if you will; for I myself am best, When least in company. —Prosper well in this, And thou shalt live as freely as thy lord, To call his fortunes thine.

Vio. I'll do my best.

To woo your lady: yet, [Aside,] A peaceful, careful strife! Who'd win, won, myself would be his wife. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—A Room in Olivia's House.

Enter Maria and Clown.

Mar. Nay, either tell me where thou hast been, or I will not open my lips, so wide as a bristle may enter, in way of thy excuse: my lady will hang thee for thy absence.

Clo. Let her hang me: he, that is well hanged in this world, needs to fear no colours.

Mar. Make that good.

Clo. He shall see none to fear.

Mar. A good lenient answer: I can tell thee where that saying was born, of, I fear no colours.

Clo. Where, good mistress Mary? Mar. In the wars; and that may you be bold to say in your folly.

Clo. Well, God give them wisdom, that have it; and those that are fools, let them use their talents. Are you resolute then for being so long absent: or, to be turned away; is not that as good as a hanging to you?

Clo. Many a good hanging prevents a bad marriage, and, for turning away, let summer bear it out.

Mar. You are resolute then?

Clo. Not so neither; but I am resolved on two points.

Mar. That, if one break, the other will hold; or, if both break, your gaskins fall.

Sir To. Do, sir; it is legs and thighs. Let me see thee caper: ha! higher: ha, ha! excellent! [Exit.}
Clo. Aplt, in good faith; very apl! Well, go thy way; if sir Toby would leave drinking, thou wert as witty a piece of Eve's flesh as any in Illyria.

Mar. Peace be with you then. For what says Quinapalus? Better a witty fool, than a foolish wit.—God bless thee, lady! Oli. Take the fool away.

Clo. Do you not hear, fellows? Take away the lady.

Oli. Go to, you're a dry fool; I'll no more of you: besides, you grow dishonest.

Clo. Two faults, madonna; that drink and good counsel will amend: for give the dry fool drink, then is the fool not dry; bid the dishonest man mend himself; if he mend, he is no longer dishonest; if he cannot, let the botcher mend him: Any remedy is better than no remedy, is but patched; virtue that transgresses, is but patched with sin; and sin, that mends, is but patched with virtue: If that this sample syllogism will serve, so; if it will not, where is the man that can do it? As there is no such cuckold, but calamity, so beauty's a flower:—the lady bade take away the fool; therefore, I say again, take her away.

Sir. I rile them take you away.

Clo. Misprision in the highest degree!—Lady, Cucullus non fictum monstrum: that's as much as to say, I wear not motley in my brain. Good madonna, give me leave to prove you a fool. Oli. Can you do it?

Clo. Dexterously, good madonna.

Oli. Make your proof.

Clo. I must catechize you for it, madonna; Good my mouse of virtue, answer me. Oli. Well, sir, for want of other idleness, I'll hide your proof.

Clo. I think, his soul is in hell, madonna.

Oli. I know his soul is in heaven, fool.

Clo. The more fool you, madonna, to mourn for your brother's soul being in heaven.—Take away the fool, gentlemen.

Oli. What think you of this fool, Malvolio? doth he not mend? Mal. Yes; and shall do, till the pangs of death shake him: Infirmitie, that decays the wise, doth ever make the better wit.

Clo. God send you, sir, a speedy infirmity, for the better increasing your folly! sir Toby will be worn, that I am no fox; but he will not pass his word for two-pence that you are no fool.

Oli. How say you to that, Malvolio? Mal. I marvel your ladyship takes delight in such a barren rascal; I saw him put down the other day with an ordinary fool, that has no more, brain than a stone. Look you now, he's out of his guard already; unless you laugh and minister occasion to him, he is gagged. I protest, I take these wise men, that crow so at these set kind of fools, no better than the fool's names.

Oli. You, are sick of self-love, Malvolio, and taste with a distempered appetite. To be generous, guiltless, and of free disposition, is to take those things for bird-bolts, that you decree cannon-bullets; There is no slander in an allow fool, though he do nothing but rail; nor no railing in a known discreet man, though he do nothing but reprove.

Clo. Now Mercury endue thee with leasing, for thou speakest worst of all!

Re-enter Malvolio.

Mar. Madam, there is at the gate a young gentleman, much desires to speak with you. Oli. From the count Orsino, sir? Mar. I know not madam; 'tis a fair young man, and well attended.

Oli. Who of my people hold him in delay? Mar. Sir Toby, madam. Oli. Fetch him off, I pray you; he speaks nothing but madman: Fye on him! [Exit Maria.] Go you, Malvolio: if it be a suit from the count, I am sick, or not at home; what you will, to dismiss it. [Exit Malvolio.] Now you see, sir, how your fooling grows old, and people dislike it.

Clo. Thou hast spoke for us, madam; as if thy eldest son should be a fool: whose skull Jove cран with brains, for how he comes, one of thy kin, has a most weak pia mater.

Enter Sir Toby Belch.

Oli. By mine honour, half drunk.—What is he at the gate, cousin? Sir To. A gentleman.

Oli. A gentleman? What gentleman? Sir To. 'Tis a gentleman here.—A plague o' these pickle-herrings!—How now, set? Oli. Good Sir Toby.

Oli. Cousin, cousin, how have you come so early by this lethargy?

Sir To. Lechery! I defy lechery: There's one at the gate.

Oli. Ay, marry, what is he? Sir To. Let him be the devil, an he will, I care not: give me faith, say I. Well, it's all one. [Exit. Oli. What's a drunken man like, fool?

Clo. Like a drown'd man, a fool, and a madman: one draught above heat makes him a fool; the second mads him; and a third drowns him. Oli. Go thou and seek the coroner, and let him sit o' my cozi; for he's in the third degree of drink, he's drown'd; go, look after him.

Clo. He is but mad yet, madonna; and the fool shall look to the madman. [Exit Clown.

Re-enter Malvolio.

Mal. Madam, yond' young fellow swears he will speak with you. I told him you were sick; he takes on him to understand so much, and therefore comes to speak with you; I told him you were asleep; he seems to have a fore-knowledge of that too, and therefore comes to speak with you. What is to be said to him, lady? he's forti'd against any denial.

Oli. Tell him, he shall not speak with me. Mal. He has been told so; and he says, he'll stand at your door like a sheriff's post, and be the supporter of a bench, but he'll speak with you.

Oli. What kind of man is he? Mal. Why, of mankind. Oli. What manner of man? Mal. Of very ill manner; he'll speak with you, will you, or no.

Oli. What personage, and years, is he? Mal. Not yet old enough for a man, nor young enough for a boy; as a squash is before 'tis a peascod, or a codling when 'tis almost an apple: 'tis with him e'en standing water, between boy and man. He is very well-favoured, and he speaks very shrewishly; one would think, his mother's milk were scarce out of him.

Oli. Let him approach: Call in my gentle-woman.

Mal. Gentlewoman, my lady calls. [Exit. Re-enter Maria.

Oli. Give me my veil: come, throw it o'er my face; We'll once more hear Orsino's embassy.

Enter Viola.

Vio. The honourable lady of the house, which is she?

Oli. Speak to me, I shall answer for her: Your will?

Vio. Most radiant, exquisite, and unmatchable beauty,—I pray you, tell me, if this be the lady of TWELFTH-NIGHT: OR, WHAT YOU WILL.

Act 2.

from the house, for I never saw her: I would be loath to cast away my speech; for, besides that it is excellently well penned, I have taken great pains to com it. Good beauties, let me sustaine no scorn; I am not compleisse, even to the least sinister usage.

Oft. When thou samest love, thou? 0, such love Could be but recompen'd, though you were crowned The nonpareil of beauty.

Oft. How does he love me?

Oft. With adorations, with fertile tears, With groans that thunder love, with sighs of fire.

Oft. Your lord does know my mind, I cannot love him:

Yet I suspect him virtuous, know him noble, Of great estate, of fresh and stainless youth; In voices well divined, free, learn'd, and valiant, And, in dimension, and the shape of nature, A gracious person; but yet I cannot love him: He might have took his answer long ago.

Oft. If I did love you in my master's flame, With such a suffering, such a deadly life, In your denial I would find no sense, Would not understand it.

Oft. Why, what would you?

Oft. Make me a willow cabin at your gate, And call upon my soul within the house; Write letters and cancel them with secret love, And sing them loud even in the dead of night; Holla your name to the reverberate hills, And make the babbling gospy of the air Crone, praise, and range, Ophelia! If you should not rest between the elements of air and earth, But you should pity me.

Oft. You might do much: What is your parentage?

Above my fortunes, yet my state is well: I am a gentleman.

Oft. (to you to your lord; I cannot love him: let him send me no more; Unless, perchance, you came to me again, To shake me by the hand. Fare you well! I thank you for your pains: spend this for me.

Oft. I am no need post, lady; keep your purse. My master, not myself, lacks recompen'se; Love makes his heart of flint, that you shall love; And let your fervour, like my master's, be placed in contempt! Farewell, fair cruelty. [Exit.

Oft. What is your parentage?

Almost fortunes; yet my state is well, I am a gentleman. —I'll be sworn thou art; Thy tongue, thy face, thy limbs, actions, and spirit, Do give thee five-fold blazon:—Not too fast:—soft! Unless the master were the man. —How now? Even so quickly may one catch the plague? Methinks, I feel this youth's perfections, With an invisible and subtle stealth, Takes him in, and seizes him. Well, let it be— What, no, Malvolio! —

Re-enter Malvolio.

Mal. Here, madam, at your service.

Oft. Run after that same peevish messenger, The countyn man: he left this ring behind him, Would 1, or not; tell him, 'T'll none of it. Dissemble not to flatter with his lord, Nor bring him up with hopes; I am not for him If that the youth will come this way to-morrow, I'll give him reasons for't. Hie thee, Malvolio.

Mal. Madam, I will.

Oft. I do know not what: and fear to find Mine eye too great a flatterer for my mind. Fate, show thy force: ourselves we do not owe; What is decreed, must be; and be this so! [Exit.

ACT II.

SCENE 1.—The Sea-coast.

Enter Antonio and Sebastian.

And. Will you stay no longer? nor will you not, that I go with you?

Seb. By your patience, no: my star shine darkly over me; the malignancy of my fate might, perhapa, destimper yours; therefore I shall crave of you your leave, that I may bear my evils alone: It were a bad recompense for your love, to lay any of them on you.

And. Let me yet know of you, whither you are bound.

Seb. No, sooth, Sir; my determinate voyage is more extravagancy. But I perceive in you so excellent a touch of modesty, that you will not extort from me what I am willing to keep in; therefore it charges me in manners the rather to express myself. You must know of me then, Antonio, my name is Sebastian, which I called Rodorigo; my father was that Sebastian of Messaline, whom I know, you have heard of: he left behind him, myself, and a sister, both born in an hour. If the heavens had been pleased, would we had so ended! but, you, Sir, altered that; for, some hour before you took me from the breach of the sea, was my sister drowned.

And. Alas, the day!

Seb. A lady, sir, though it was said she much resembled me, was yet of many accounted beautiful: but, though I could not, with such estimable wonder, overbear believe that, yet thus far I will boldly publish, she bore a mind that envy could not but call fair; she is drowned already, Sir, with salt water, though I seem to drown her remembrance again with more.

And. Pardon me, sir; your bad entertainment. Seb. O, good Antonio, forgive your servant's trouble. And. If you will not murder me for my love, let me be your servant.

Seb. If you will not undo what you have done, that is, kill him whom you have recovered, desire it not. Fare ye well at once: my bosom is full of kindness; and I am yet so near the manners of my mother, that upon the least occasion more, mine eyes will tell tales of mine. I am bound to the countess Orsino's court: farewell.

And. The gentleness of all the gods go with thee! I have many enemies in Orsino's court, Sir; you will very shortly see there: But, come what may, I do adore thee so.

That danger shall seem sport, and I will go. [Exit.

SCENE II.—A Street.

Enter Viola; Malvolio following.

Mal. Were not you even now with the countess Olivia?

Viola. Even now, sir; on a moderate pace I have since arrived but hither.

Mal. She returns this ring to you, sir; you might have saved me my pains, to have taken it away yourself. She adds moreover, that you should put your lord into a desperate assurance she will none of him: And one thing more; that you be never so hardy to come again in his affairs, unless it be to report your lord's taking of this. Receive it so.

Viola. She took the ring of me: I'll none of it.

Mal. Come, sir, you peevishly threw it to her; and her will is, it should be so returned: if it be worth stowing for, there it lies in your eye; if not, be it his that fews it. [Exit.

Viola. I left no ring with her; What means this lady? Fortune forbid, my outside have not charmed her! She made good view of me; indeed, so much, that, sure, she methought, here was another tongue, For she did speak in starts distractedly. She loves me, sure; the cunning of her passion Invites me in this churlish messenger.

None of my lord's! why, he sent her none.

Poor lady, she were better love a dream.

Disguise, I see, thou art a wickedness, Wherein the pregnant enemy does much. How easy is it, for the princes bad to hers.

In women's waxen hearts to set their forms! Alas, our frailty is the cause, not we; such as we are made of, such we be. How will thisfalsefide? My master loves her dearly; and I, poor monster, fond as much on him; And she, mistaken, seems to do so on me.

What will become of this? As I am man, My state is desperate for my master's love; As I am woman, now alas the day!

What thrills, that poor Olivia breathe? O time, thou must untangle this, not I; It is too hard a knot for me to untie. [Exit.

SCENE III.—A Room in Olivia's House.

Enter Sir Toby Belch and Sir Andrew Ague-cheek.

Sir Toby. Approach, sir Andrew: not to be a bed after midnight, is to be up betimes; and discolored surgeons, thou know'st.

Sir Andrew. Nay, by my troth, I know not: but I know, to be a bed after midnight, is to be up like a hare.

Sir Toby. A false conclusion; I hate it as an unfilled can; To be up after midnight, and to go to bed then is early; so that, to go to bed after midnight, is to go to bed betimes. Do not our lives consist of the four elements?

Sir Andrew. Faith, so they say; but, I think, it rather consists of eating and drinking

Sir Toby. This art a scholar; let us therefore eat and drink.—Marinell, say! I'll have a stoup of wine! [Exit.

Enter Clown.

Sir Andrew. Here comes the fool, I'faith.

Clown. How now, my hearts? Did you never see the picture of we three?

Sir Toby. Welcome ass. Now let's have a catch.

Sir Andrew. By my troth, the fool has an excellent breast. I had rather than forty shillings I had such a leg; and so sweet a breath to sing, as the fool has. In sooth, thou wast in very gracious sloining last night, when thou spokest of Pigromitius, of the Varjians passing the equinoctial of Quebeus; 'twas very good, I'faith. I sent thee sixpence for thy leman: Hadst it?

Clown. I did impetecas thy gratification; for Malvolio's nose is no whiskip: My lady has a white hand, and the Myrmidons are no bottle-ale houses.

Sir Andrew. Excellent! Why, this is the best fooling, when all is done. Now, a song.

Sir Toby. Come on; there is sixpence for you: let's have a song.

Sir Andrew. There's a testril of me too: if one knight give an—

Clown. Would you have a love-song, or a song of good life?

Sir Toby. A love-song, a love song.

Sir Andrew. Ay, ay; I care not for good life.

SONG.

Clown. O mistress mine, where are you roaming?

O, stay and hear; your true love's coming.

That can sing both high and low:

Trip no further pretty sneaking;

Journey end in lovers' meeting.

Every wise man's son doth know.

Sir Andrew. Excellent good, I' faith.

Sir Toby. Good, good.

Clown. What is love? 'tis not hereafter:

Present mirth with present laughter.

That's to come, is still unsure:

In delay there lies no beauty:

Then come kiss me, sweet-and-twenty,

Youth's a stuff will not endure.

Sir Andrew. A mellifluous voice, as I am true knight.

Sir Toby. A contagious breath.

Sir Andrew. Very sweet and contagious, I' faith.

Sir Toby. To hear by the nose, it is dulcit in contagion. But shall we make the welkin dance in deed? Shall we rouse the night-owl in a catch, that will draw three souls out of one weaver? shall we do that?

Sir Andrew. An you love me, let's do't: I am dog at a catch.

Clown. Ey' lady, sir, and some dogs will catch well.

Sir Andrew. Most certain: let our catch be, Thou knowest.
Chor. Hold thy peace, thou knave, knight! I shall be constrain'd not to call thee knave, knight.
Sir And. "Tis not the first time I have constrain'd one to call me knave. Begin, fool; it begins, hold thy peace.

Chor. I shall never begin, if I hold my peace.
Sir And. Tis not, I faith! Come, begin.

They sing a catch.

Enter Maria.

Mar. What a catter-wauling do you keep here! If my lady have not called up her steward, Malvolio, and bid him turn you out of doors, never trust me.
Sir To. My lady's a Catalan, we are politicians; Malvolio's a Yoga-Harmy, and Their worry or will be seen. Am I not consanguineous? am I not of her blood? Tilly valley, lady! I here dwell a man in Banglow, lady, lady!

Chor. Heshow rape, the knight's in admirable fouling.

Sir And. Ay, he does well enough, if he be disposed, and so do I too; he does it with a better grace, but I do it more natural.
Sir To. O, the twelfth day of December.

[Screening.]

Mar. For the love o'Jtie, peace.

Rodr. Malvolio.

Mal. My masters, are you mad? or what are you? Have you no wit, manners, nor honesty, but to gaggle like tinkers at this time of night? Do you make an, a house of your lady's house, that you squeak out your catters' catchs without any mitigation or reason? Is there no respect of place, persons, nor time, in you?
Sir To. We did keep time, sir, in our catchs.

Sneeck up.

Mal. Sir Toby, I must be round with you. My lady bade me tell you, that though she Harbour's you as her kinsman, she's nothing allied to your disorder. If you can separate yourself and your misdeemours, you are welcome to the house; if not, an it would please you to take leave of her, she is very willing to bid you farewell.
Sir To. Farewell, dear heart, since I must needs be gone.

Mar. Nay, good sir Toby.

Chor. His eyes do show his days are almost done.
Mal. Is't even so?
Sir To. But I will never die.

Chor. Sir Toby, they give you lie.
Mal. This is such credit to you.
Sir To. Shall I bid him go?

Chor. What? Come, then.
Sir To. Shall I bid him go, and spare not?

Mal. O no, no, no, you dare not.
Sir To. Out o'time? sir, ye lie. Art any more than a steward? Doit thou think, because thou art as virtuous, there shall be no more cakes and ale?

Chor. Yes, by Saint Anne; and ginger shall be hot this month too.

Sir To. Thou'st the night. Go, sir, rub your chain with chains.—A stope of wine, Maria! Mal. Mistress Mary, if you praid my lady's favour at any thing more than contempt, you would not give means for this uncivil rule; she shall know of it, by this hand.

[Exit.]

Mal. Go shew your ears.

Sir And. "Twere as good a deed as to drink when a man's hungry, to challenge him to the field; and then to break promise with him, and make a fool of him.

Sir To. Do not: I will write thee a challenge: or I will deliver thy indignation to him by word of mouth.

Sir And. Sweet sir Toby, be patient for to-night; since the youth of the count was to-day with my lady, she is much out of quiet. For monsieur Malvolio, let me alone with him: if I do not quell him into a tayword, and make him a common recrea-

Act 2.
in the sweetrange of it, remember me:
for, such as I am, all true lovers are;
unstaid and skittish in all motions else,
save, in the constant image of the pure
That is below'd—How dost thou like this tune?
Fio. It gives a very echo to the seat
Where Love is thrown.
Duke. Thou dost speak masterly.
My life, though young, though thou art, thine eye
Hath stay'd upon some favour that it loves;
Hath it not, boy?
Fio. A little, by your favour.
Duke. What kind of woman is't?
Fio. Of your complexion.
Duke. She is not worth thee then. What years,
Fio. About your years, my lord.
"Thy faith?""Duke. Too old, by heaven; Let still the woman
An elder than herself; so wears she to him, take
So aways she level in his husband's heart.
For, boy, however we do praise ourselves,
Our fancies are more giddy and unform
More longing, wavering, sooner lost and won,
Than women's are.
Fio. I think it well, my lord.
Duke. Then let thy eyes the younger rather than thyself,
Or thy affection cannot hold the bent;
For women are as roses; whose flower,
Being once display'd, doth fall that very hour.
Fio. And so they are, my lord, that they are so;
To die, even when they to perfection grow!
Re-enter Carlo and Cloten.
Duke. O fellow, come, the song we had last
Mark it, Cesario; it is old and plain:
[night—
The splinters and the knitters in the sun,
And the free maidens, who weave their thread
With use to chant it; it is sily sooth, [bones,
And dailies with the innocence of love,
Like the old age.
Clo. Are you ready, sir?

SONG.

Clo. Come away, come away, death,
And in such company let me be laid;
Fly away, fly away, breath,
I am stain by a fair cruel maid.
My strand of white, stuck all with yew,
O, pursue it;
My part of death no one so true
Irid share it.
Not a flower, not a flower sweet,
On my black coffin let there be srown;
Not a friend, not a friend greet
My poor corpse, where my bones shall be thrown.
A thousand and sevencight eyes to see,
Lay me, O, where
Sad true lover never find my grave,
To weep there.

Duke. There's for thy pains.
Clo. No pains, sir, I take pleasure in singing, sir.
Duke. I'll pay thy pleasure then.
Clo. Truly, sir, and pleasure will be paid, one time or another.
Duke. Give me now leave to leave thee.
Clo. Now, the melancholy god protect thee; and the tailor make thy doublet of changeable taffeta, for thy mind is a very opeal!—I would have men of such constancy put to sea, that their business might be every thing, and their intent every where; for that's it that always makes a good voyage of nothing—Farewell. [Exit Cloten.
Duke. Let all the rest give place.—[Exit Carlo and Cloten.

[Exeunt Sir Toby Belch, Sir Andrew Ague-cheek, and Fabian.

SIR TOBY. Come thy ways, signal Fabian.
Faub. Nay, I'll come; if I lose a scruple of this sport, let me be lided to death with melancholy.
SIR TOBY. Would'st thou not be glad to have the niggardly racially sheep-biter come by some notable shame?
Faub. I would exult, man: you know, he brought me out of favour with my lady, about a bear-baiting here
SIR TOBY. To anger him, we'll have the bear again, and we will foul him black and blue.—Shall we not, sir Andrew?
SIR ANDREW. As we do not, it is pity of our lives.

[Enter Maria.

SIR TOBY. Here comes the little villain—How now, my nettle of India?
MARIA. Get ye all three into the box-tree; Malvolio's coming down this walk; he has been yonder i the sun, practising behaviour to his own shadow, this half hour: observe him, for the love of mockery; for, I know, this letter will make a contemplative idiot of him Close, in the name of jesting! [The men hide themselves] Lie thou there; [throws down a letter] for here comes the tart that must be caught with tickling. [Exit Maria.

[Enter Malvolio.

Mal. This but fortune; all is fortune. Maria once told me, she did affect me; and I have heard herself come thus near, that, should she fancy, it should be over my house and upon my head. Besides, she uses me with a more exalted respect, than any one else that follows her. What should I think on't?
Sir To. [Here's an over-weening rogue!]

Fak. O, peace! Contemplation makes a rare turkey-cock of him; how he jets out his advanced parts!-

Sir And. 'tis night, I could so beat the rogue:—

Sir To. Peace, I say.

Mal. To be count Malvolio;—

Sir To. Ah, rogue!—

Sir And. Plait his hair, pistols him.

Sir To. Peace, peace!

Mal. There is example for't: the lady of the straehy rooted and the woman of the wardrobe.

Sir To. Fle on him, Jeezel!—

Fak. O, peace! now he's deeply in; look, how imagination blows him.

Mal. Having been three months married to her, sitting in my study—

Sir To. For a stone-bow, to hit him in the eye?

Mal. Calling my officers about me, in my branch-ed velvet gown, having come from a day-bed, where I left Olivia sleeping.

Sir To. Fire and brimstone!

Fak. O, peace, peace.

Mal. And then to have the humour of state: and after a decent travel or regard of persons, kindred places, as I would they should do theirs, to ask for my kinman Toby?

Sir To. Bolts and shackles?—

Fak. O, peace, peace, peace! now, now.

Mal. Seven of my people, with an obstinate start, make out for him! I brown the while; and, per-chance, wind up my watch, or play with some rich jewel. Antony approaches; court's there to me:—

Sir To. Shall this fellow live?—

Fak. Though our silence be drawn from us with care, yet peace.

Mal. I extend my hand to him thus, quenching my familiar smile with an anxious regard of control. Sir To. and does not Toby take you a blow o' the lips then?

Mal. Saying, Cousin Toby, my fortunes having cast me on your care, give me this prerogative of speech. —

Sir To. What, what?

Mal. You must wound your drunkenness. Sir To. Out, scab!—

Fak. Nay, patience, or we break the allusions of our plot.

Mal. Besides, you waste the treasure of your time with a foolish knight:—

Sir And. That's me, I warrant you.

Mal. Dear, dear, dear!—

Sir And. I knew 'twas 1; for many do call me fool.

Mal. What employment have we here?—[Taking up the letter.]

Sir To. O, peace! and the spirit of humour inti-mate reading aloud to him:

Mal. By my life, this is my lady's hand: these be her very Cs, her Us, and her Ts; and thus makes the her great Ps. It is, in contempt of question, her hand.

Sir And. Her Cs, her Us, and her Ts: Why that?—

Mal. [reads.] To the unknown beloved, this, and my true, to the unknown beloved,—By very leave, wax—Soft!—and the impression her Lucreece, with which she uses to seal: 'tis my lady: To whom should this be?

Fak. Why, my mother, liver and all. Mal. [reads.] Love knows, I love:—But who?

Lips do not move, but move.

No man must know. What follows?—the numbers altered! No man must know. If this should be thee, Malvolio?

Sir To. Marry, hang thee, brock!—

Mal. I may eyewaxed, where I adore:—

But silence, like a Lucreece knife,
With bloodstains stroke my heart doth gore;—

M, O, A, I, stab away my life.

Fak. A fantastic riddle!
Act 3.

TWELFTH-NIGHT: OR, WHAT YOU WILL.

Sir To. Wilt thou set thy foot o' my neck?
Sir And. Or 'o mine either?
Sir To. Shall I play my freedom at tray-trip, and becaste by both? Sir And. I'faith, or I either.
Sir To. Why, thou hast put him in such a dream, that, when the image of it leaves him, he must run mad.
Mr. Nay, but say true; does it work upon him?
Sir To. Like aqua-vitae with a midwife.
Mar. If you will then see the fruits of the sport, mark his first approach before my lady: he will come to her in yellow stockings, and 'tis the colour she abors; and cross-gartered, a fashion she detest; and he will smile upon her, which will now be so unsuitable to her disposition, being addicted to a melancholy as she is, that it cannot but turn him into a notable contempt: if you will see it, follow me.

Sir To. To the gates of Tartar, thou most excellent devil of wit!
Sir And. I'll make one too. [Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Olivia's Garden.

Enter Viola, and Clown with a tabor.

Vio. Save thee, friend, and thy musick: Dost thou live by thy tabor?
Clo. No, sir, I live by the church.
Vio. Art thou a churchman?
Clo. No such matter, sir; I do live by the church; for I do live at my house, and my house doth stand by the church.
Vio. So thou may'st say, the king lies by a beggar, if a beggar dwell near him; or the church stands by thy tabor, if thy tabor stand by the church.
Clo. You have said, sir.—To see this age!—A sentence is but a cheveril glove to a good wit; How quickly the wrong side may be turned outward!
Vio. Nay, that's certain; they, that daily nicely with words, may quickly make them wanton.
Clo. I would therefore, my sister had had no name, sir.
Vio. Why, man?
Clo. Why, sir, her name's a word; and to daily with that word, might make my sister wanton: but, indeed, words are very rascals, since bonds disgraced them.
Vio. Thy reason, man?
Clo. Troth, sir, I can yield you none without words; and words are grown so false, I am loath to prove reason with them.
Vio. Warrant, thou art a merry fellow, and carest for nothing.
Clo. Not so, sir, I do care for something; but in my conscience, sir, I do not care for you; if that be to care for nothing, sir, I would it make you invisible.

Vio. Art not thou the lady Olivia's fool?
Clo. No, indeed, sir; the lady Olivia has no fool; she will keep no fool, sir, till she be married; and fools are as like husbands, as pitchards are to herrings, the husband's the bigger; I am, indeed, not her fool, but her corrupter of words.
Vio. I saw thee late at the count Orsino's.
Clo. Foolery, sir, does walk about the orb, like the sun; it shines every where. I would be sorry, sir, but the fool should be as oft with your master, as with my mistress; I think, I saw your wisdom there.
Vio. Nay, an thou pass upon me, I'll no more with thee. Hold, there's expenses for thee.

Clo. Now Jove, in his next commodity of hair, sent him by low stockings, 'tis a colour.
Vio. By my troth, I'll tell thee; I am almost sick for one; though I would not have it grow on my chin. Is thy lady within?
Clo. Would not a pair of these have bred, sir?

Vio. Yes, being kept together, and put to use.
Clo. I would play lord Pandarus of Phrygia, sir, to bring a Cressida to this Troilus.
Vio. I understand, sir; 'tis well begg'd.
Clo. The matter, I hope, is not great, sir, begging but a beggar: Cressida was a beggar. My lady is within, sir. I will construe to them whence you come; who you are, and what you would, are out of my wisdom: I might say, element; but the word is over-worn.

[Exit.]
Vio. This fellow's wise enough to play the fool;
And, to do that well, craves a kind of wit:
'Sir, you must observe their mood on whom he jests,
The quality of persons, and the time;
And, like the haggard, check at every feather
That comes before his eye. This is a practice,
As full of labour as a man's art:
For folly, that he wisely shows, is fit;
But wise men, folly-fallen, quite taint their wit.

Enter Sir Toby Belch and Sir Andrew Ague-cheek.
Sir To. Save you, gentleman.
Sir And. And you, sir.
Vio. Et vous aussi! votre serviteur.
Sir And. I am, sir, you are: and I am yours.
Sir To. Will you encounter the house? my niece is desirous you should enter, if your trade be to her.
Vio. I am bound to your niece, sir: I mean, she is the list of my voyage.
Sir To. Taste your legs, sir, put them to motion.
Vio. My legs do better understand me, sir, than I understand what you mean by bidding me taste my legs.
Sir To. I mean to go, sir, to enter.
Vio. I will answer you with gait and entrance:
But we are prevented.

Enter Olivia and Maria.

Most excellent accomplished lady, the heavens rain odours on you!
Sir And. That youth's a rare courtier! Rain odours! well.
Vio. My matter hath no voice, lady; but to your own most pregnant and vouchsafed ear.
Sir And. Odours, pregnant, and vouchsafed:—
I'll get 'em all three ready.

Ol. Let the garden door be shut, and leave me to my hearing.

[Exeunt Sir Toby, Sir Andrew, and Maria.

Give me your hand, sir.
Vio. My duty, madam, and most humble service.

Ol. What is your name?

Vio. Cesario is your servant's name, fair princess.

Ol. My servant, sir! I was never merry world, since lowly fleeting was called compliment: You are servant to the count Orsino, youth.
Vio. And he is yours, and his must needs be yours.

Ol. Your servant's servant is your servant, madam.

Ol. For him, I think not on him: for his thoughts,
Would they were blanks, rather than fill'd with me!

Vio. Madam, I come to what your gentle thoughts
On his behalf:

Ol. O, by your leave, I pray you; I bade you never speak again of him:
But, would you undertake another suit,
I had rather hear you to sollicit that, Than musick from the spheres.

Vio. Dear lady,——

Ol. Give me leave, I beseech you; I did send
After the last assignment you did here,
A ring in chase of you; so did I abuse
Myself, my servant, and, I fear me, you:
Under your hard construction must I sit,
To force the best you, in a shamefaced cunning,
Which you knew none of yours: What might you think?

Ol. Have you not set mine honour at the stake,
And haited it with all the unmuzled thoughts

...
That tyrannical heart can think? To one of your receiving
Enough is shown; a cypress, not a beechen.
My heart, my peasant! No, let me hear you speak.

He. I will try.

If. That's a degree to love.
He. No, not a grain; for 'tis a vulgar proof,
That you have been with those who know you best.
Oth. What, then, methinks, 'tis time to smile again.
0 world, how apt the poor are to be proud!
If one should be a peer, how much the better.
'Tis a fair before the rain, then the show off. [Sings or sings a bit]
If, afraid, good youth, I will not have you;
And yet, when wit and youth is come to harvest,
Your wife is like to reap a proper man;
Those live your way, due weavers.

He. Then we say good grace,
And good disposition 'twere your ladyship
If you nothing, madam, to my lord by me?

OD. Nay, I pray thee, tell me, what then think'st of me.
If. That you do think, you are not what you are.
OD. If I think so, I think the same of you.
If. Then think you right? I am not what I am.
OD. For that same reason, I will have you here.
If. Would it be better, madam, than I am,
I wish it might, for now I am your food.
OD. O, what a deal of sorrow looks beautiful
And in which I am angry and in love.
A madness, a gall of the soul, is more soon
Than love that was so soon hid: love's night is Come, a thought of the spring. [moon.
My madness, sorrow, truth, and every thing,
I love thee not; that maketh all thy pride,
Now, not, not, reason, can my passion hide.
Do not exact thy reasons from this close,
For, that I saw, thou therefore hast no cause;
But, rather, reason thou with reason fiercer;
Love might not come, but given unsought, is better.
If. By my conscience I swear, and by my youth,
I have one heart, one bosom, and one truth,
And that no woman has, nor never none.
Sure means be, or, save I alone,
And so advise, good madam; never more
Will I my master's tears to you deplore.

If. Yet one again: for thou, perhaps, may'st
That heart, which now abhors, to like his love.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room in Olivia's House.

Enter Sir Toby Belch, Sir Andrew Ague-cheek, and Fabian.

Sir And. Hero, faith, I'll not stay a jot longer.
Sir To. Why reason, dear reason, give thy reasons?
Sir And. Sir By reason you must yield your reasons, sir. Andrew.
Sir And. Marry, I saw your niece do more favour to the counte's serving man, than ever she bestowed upon me; I can't (I' faith.
Sir To. Did she see thee while, old boy? tell me that.
Sir And. As plain as I see you now.

If. You have been a great argument of love in her favour.

Sir And. Night! will you make an ass o' me? [Fam. I will prove it legimine, sir, upon the oaths of judgment and reason.
Sir To. Too? They have been grand jury-men, since before Noah was a sailor.

If. She did show favour to the youth in your sight, only to exasperate you, to awake your conscience, to put five in your heart, and brain Insine in your liver! You should then have accounted her; and with some excellent jests, fine new from the mint, you should have banged the youth into dumbness. This was looked for at your hand, and this was rankled: the double gift of this opportunity, you let time wash off, and you are now carried into the north of my lady's opinion; where you will hang like an icicle on a Dutchman's beard, unless you do redeem it by some laudable attempt, either of valour, or policy.

Sir And. And be't any way, it must be with valour; for the policy I hate; I had as lief be a Brownist, as a politician.

Sir To. Why then, build me thy fortunes upon the basis of valour. I challenge the count's suit, and will have none but him; but him in eleven pieces; my niece shall take note of it: and assure thyself, there is no love broker in the world can more prevail in man's commendation with woman, than report of valour.

Sir And. There is no way but this, sir Andrew.

[Exit Sir Andrew.

Sir To. Will either of you bear me a challenge to him?

If. Sir To. I will write it in a martial hand; be curt and brief; it is no matter how witty, so it be eloquent and full of invention; taunt him with the licence of ink: if thou should him some thrice, it shall not be amiss; and as many lies as will lie in thy sheet of paper, although the sheet were big enough for the bed of Wace in England, set 'em down; go about it. Let there be gall enough in thy ink: though you write with a goose-pen, no matter; About it.

Sir And. Where shall I find you?

Sir To. We'll call thee at the cabalistic: Go. [Exit Sir Andrew.

Sir And. This is a dear maskin's to you, sir Toby.

[Exit Sir Andrew.

Sir To. Now, then, I cannot bear to him, lad; some two thousand strong, or so.

Sir And. We shall have a rare letter from him: but you'll not deliter it.

Sir To. I'll not leave me then; and by all means
On the youth to an answer. I think oxen
And wainrops cannot hate them together. For Andrew, if he were open, and you find so much blood in his letter, as will clog the foot of a flea, I'll eat the rest of the anatomy.

Sir And. And his opposite, the youth, bears in his visage no great presage of cruelty.

Enter Maria.

Sir To. Look where the youngest won of nine conge.

Maria. If you desire the spleen, and will laugh yourselves into stitches, follow me, you gull Malvolio is turned beadsman, a very tenagoen: for there is no Christian, that means to be saved by believing rightly, and not believe such impossible passages of grromess. He's in yellow stockings.

Sir To. And cross-gartered?
Maria. Poor. Most virulently; like a pedant that keeps a secret in. I have shot him, like his murderer: He does obey every point of the letter that I dropped to betray him. He does smile his face into more lines than are in the new map, with the augmentation of the Indies: you have not seen such a thing as 'tis; I can hardly forbear hurting things at him. I know my lady will strike him: if she do, he'll smile, and take't for a great favour.

Sir To. Come, bring us, bring us where he is.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Street.

Enter Antonio and Sebastian.

*Sir. I would not by my will have troubled you;
But since you are your pleasure of your pains,
I will no further chide you.

Ant. I could not stay behind you; my desire
More sharp than filed steel, did spur me forth;
And so I do not love to see you, (though so much,
As might have drawn me, one to a longer review)
But jealousy what might befall your travel,
Being skilless in these parts: which to a stranger,
Untamed, and unfriendled, often prove
Rough and insupportable; my willing love,
The rather by these arguments of fear,
Set forth in your pursuit.

Seb. My kind Antonio,
Act 3. TWELFTH-NIGHT: OR, WHAT YOU WILL.

I can no other answer make, but, thanks, And thanks, and ever thanks: Often good turns Are shuffled off with some current pay: But, were my worth, as is my conscience, firm, You should find better dealing. What's to do? Shall we go see the reliques of this town? Ant. To-morrow, sir; best, first, go see your own.

Seb. I am not weary, and 'tis long to night; I pray you let us satisfy our eyes With the memorials, and the things of fame, That do renown this city.

Ant. "Would you pardon me? I do not without danger walk these streets: Once, in a sea-fight, against the count his galleys, I did some service: of such note, indeed, That were I't en'hen, it would scarce be answer'd. Seb. Belike, you slew great number of his people. Ant. The offence is not of such a bloody nature; Albeit the quality of the time, and quarrel, Might well have given us bloody argument. It might have since been answer'd in repaying What we took from them; which, for traffic's sake, Most of our city did: only myself stood out: For which, if I be lapsed in this place, I shall pay dear.

Seb. Do not then walk too open.

Ant. It doth not fit me. Hold, sir, here's my In this; 1 will tell you. [Enter Eleazer. Eleazer is best to lodge: I will bespeak our det, lodging, Whiles you beguile the time, and feed your know. With viewing of the town; there shall have you. Seb. Why? your purse? Ant. Happy, your eye shall light upon some toy You have desire to purchase; and your store, I think, is not for idle markets, sir. Seb. I'll be your purse-bearer, and leave you for an

Ant. To the Elephant. [Exeunt.

Seb. I do remember. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Olivia's Garden.

Enter Olivia and Maria.

Oli. I have sent after him. He says he'll come; How shall I meet him? what bestow on him? For youth is bought more oft, than begg'd, or bor, I speak too loud. [row'd.

Where is Malvolio?—he is sad, and civil, And suits well for a servant with my fortunes; Where is Malvolio?—

Mar. He's coming, madam: But in strange manner. He is sure possess'd.

He does nothing but smile; your ladyship Were best have guard about you, if he come; For, sure, the man is tainted in his wit.

Oli. Go call him hither.—I'm as mad as he, If sad and merry madness equal be.

Enter Malvolio.

How now, Malvolio?—

Mal. Sad, lady? I could be sad; This does make me obstruction in the blood, this cross-gartering: But what of that, if it please the eye of one, it is with me as the very true somet is: Please one, and please all.

Oli. Why, how dost thou man? what is the matter with thee? Mal. Not black in my mind, though yellow in my legs: It did come to his hands, and commands shall be execut'd. I think, we do know the sweet Rosalind hand.

Oli. Wilt thou go to bed, Malvolio? Mal. To bed? ay, sweet-heart; and I come to thee.

Oli. God comfort thee! Why dost thou smile so, and kiss thy hand so oft?
Enter Olivia and Viola.

Fab. Here be comes with your niece: give them way, till he take leave, and presently after him.

Sir To. I will meditate the while upon some horrid message for a challenge.

Enter Sir Toby, Fabian, and Maria.

Oli. I have said too much unto a heart of stone. And laid mine honour too unchary out: There's something in me, that reproves my fault; But such a strong, strong, point fault it is, That it but mocks reproof.

Fab. With the same baviour that your passion even to a mortal arbitrement; but nothing of the circumstance more.

Vio. I beseech you, what manner of man is he?

Fab. Nothing of that wonderful promise, to read him by his form, as you are like to find him in the proof of his valour. He is, indeed, sir, the most skilful, bloody, and fatal opposer that you could possibly have found in any part of Illyria: Will you walk towards him? I will make your peace with him, if I can.

Vio. I shall be much bound to you for't: I am one, that would rather go with sir priest, than sir knight: I care not who knows so much of my mettle. [Exeunt.

Re-enter Sir Toby, with Sir Andrew.

Sir To. Why, man, he's a very devil; I have not seen such a viraqo. I had a pass with him, rapier, scabbard, and all, and he gives me the stuck-in, with such a mortal motion, that it is inevitable; and on the answer, he pays you as surely as your feet hit the ground they step on: They say, he has been fencer to the nobly.

Sir And. Fox on't, I'll not meddle with him.

Sir To. Ay, but he will not now be pacified: Fabian can scarcely hold him yonder.

Sir And. Plague on't; an I thought he had been valiant, and so cunning in his fence, I'd have seen him dammed ere I'd have challenged him. Let him let the matter slip, and I'll give him my horse, gray Capulet.

Sir To. I'll make the motion: Stand here, make a good show on't; this shall end without the perturbation of souls: Marry, Ill ride your horse as well as I ride you. [Aside.

Re-enter Fabian and Viola.

I have his horse [to Fab.] to take up the quarrel; I have persuaded him the youth's a devil.

Fab. He is as horribly conceited of him; and pants, and looks pale, as if a bear were at his heels.

Sir To. There's no remedy, sir; he will fight with you for his oath sake: marry, he hath better beheld him of his quarrel, and he finds that now scarce to be worth talking off: therefore draw, for the supportance of your vow; he protests, he will not hurt you.

Vio. Pray God defend me! A little thing would make me tell them how much I lack a man of. [Aside.

Fab. Give ground, if you see him furious.

Sir To. Come, sir Andrew, there's no remedy; the gentleman will, for his honour's sake, have one bout with you: he cannot by any duello avoid it: but he has promised me, as he is a gentleman and a soldier, he will not hurt you. Come on: to't.

Sir And. Pray God, he keep his oaths. [Drama.

Enter Antonio.

Vio. I do assure you 'tis against my will. [Drama. Ant. Put up your sword: If this young gentleman have done offence, I take the fault on me; If you offend him, I for him defy you. [Drawing. Sir To. You, sir? what are you? Ant. One, sir, that for his love dares yet do more Than you have heard him brag to you he will.

Sir To. Nay, if you be an undertaker, I am for you.

Enter two Officers.

Fab. O good Sir Toby, hold; here come the officers.

Sir To. I'll be with you anon. [To Antonio. Vio. Pray, put up your sword, if you please. [To Sir Andrew.

Sir And. Marry, will I, sir; and, for that I promised you, I'll be as good as my word: He will bear you easily, and reins well.

1 Off. This is the man: do thy office.

2 Off. Antonio, I arrest thee at the suit Of count Ursino. You do mistake me, sir; 1 Off. No, sir, no jot; I know your favour well, Though now you have no sea-cap on your head.— Take him, sir, and know him well. Ant. I must obey.—This comes with seeking you; But there's no remedy; I shall answer it. What will you do? Now my necessity Makes me to ask you for my purse: It grieves me Much more, for what I cannot do for you, Than what befalls myself. You stand amazed; But be of comfort.

2 Off. Come, sir, away.

Ant. I must entreat of you some of that money Vio. What money, sir? For the fair kindness you have shew'd me here, And, part, being prompted by your present trouble, Out of my lean and low ability I'll lend you something: my having is not much; I'll make division of my present with you: Hold, there is half my coffer.

Ant. Will you deny me now?

Is't possible, that my deserts to you Can lack persuasion? Do not tempt my misery, Let that it make me so unsound a man, As to upbraid you with those kindesses That I have done for you. I know of none; Nor know I you by voice, or any feature: I hate ingratitude more in a man Than byying valiant, babbling drunkenness, Or any taint of vice, whose strong corruption Inhabits our friail blood.

Ant. O heavens themselves! 0 Off. Come, sir, I pray you, for your sake. Ant. Let me speak a little. This youth that you see here, I snatch'd one half out of the jaws of death; Relev'd him with such sanctity of love,— And to his image, which methought did promise Most venerable worth, did I devotion. 1 Off. What's that to us? The time goes by: away. Ant. But, O, how vile an idol proves this god! Thou hast, Sebastian, done good feature shame,— In nature there's no blemish, but the mind; None can be call'd deform'd, but the unkind: Virtue is beauty; but the beauteous-evil Are empty trunks, o'er-flourish'd by the devil. 1 Off. The man grows mad: away with him. Come, come, sir.

Ant. Lead me on.

[Exeunt Officers with Antonio. Vio. Methinks, his words do from such passion fly, That he believes himself; so do not I. Prove true, imagination, O, prove true, That I, dear brother, be now ta'en for you! Sir To. Come hither, knight; come hither, Fabian; we'll whisper o'er a couple or two of most sage saws.

Vio. He nam'd Sebastian; I my brother know Yet living in my glass; even such, and so, In favour was my brother; and he went Still in this fashion, colour, ornament, For him I imitate: O, if it prove, Tempests are kind, and salt waves fresh in love! [Exit.

Sir To. A very dishonest paltry boy, and more a coward than a hare: his dishonesty appears in leaving his friend here in neediness, and denying him; and for his cowardship, ask Fabian.

Fab. A coward, a most devout coward, religious in it.

Sir And. 'Slid, I'll after him again, and best him. Sir To. Do, call him soundly, but never draw thy sword.

Sir And. An I do not.— [Exit. Fab. Come, let's see the event.

Sir To. I dare lay any money, 'twill be nothing yet. [Exeunt.
ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Street before Olivia's House.

Enter Sebastian and Clown.

Seb. Madam, I will.

Cl. Oh, say so, and so be it.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room in Olivia's House.

Enter Maria and Clown.

Mar. Nay, I pr'ythee, put on this gown, and this beard; make him believe thou art Sir Topas the curate; do it quickly: I'll call Sir Toby the whilst.

Cla. Well, I'll do it at once, and I will dissemble myself in't, and I would I were the first that ever dissembled in such a gown. I am not fit enough to become the function well, nor lean enough to be thought a good student but to be said, an honest man, and a good housekeeper, goes as fairly, as to say, a careful man, and a great scholar. The competitors enter.

Enter Sir Toby Belch and Maria.

Sir To. Jove bless thee, master parson.

Cla. Bosom dies, sir Toby: for so the old hermit of Prague, that never saw pen and ink, very wittily said to a nonce of King Gerould, That, that is, to fall in, and be a master parson: For what is that, but that I am, and is, but is?

Sir To. Sir, to him, sir Topas.

Cla. What, how, I say,—Peace in this prison!—Sir To. The knave counterfeits well; a good man.

[To a inner chamber.] Who calls there?—

[Cla. Sir Topas, the curate, who comes to visit Malvolio the lunatick.

Sir To. Sir Topas, good sir Topas, go to my lady.

Cla. Out, hyperbolical sir! how vexest thou this man? talkest thou nothing but of ladies?

Sir To. Well said, sir Topas.

Cla. Why, it hath box-windows, transparent as barricades, and the clear stories towards the south-south are as lustrious as ebony; and yet complainest thou of obstruction?

Cla. I am not mad, sir Topas; I say to you, this house is dark.

Cla. Madman, thou errest: I say, there is no darkness, but ignorance; in which thou art more punished, than the Egyptians in their fog.

Cla. This house is dark as ignorance, though ignorance were as dark as hell; and I say, there was never man thus abused: I am no more mad than you are; make the trial of it in any constant question.

Cla. What is the opinion of Pythagoras, concerning wild fowl?—

Cla. That the soul of our grandam might happily inhabit a bird.

Cla. What think'st thou of his opinion?

I think nobly of the soul, and no way approve his opinion.

Cla. Fare thee well: Remain thou still in darkness; thou shalt hold the opinion of Pythagoras, ere I will allow of thy wits; and fear to kill a woodcock, lest thou despoilst the soul of thy grandam. Fare thee well.

Cla. Sir Topas, sir Topas.

Sir To. My most excellent sir Topas!—

Cla. Nay, I am for all waters.

Cla. Thou might'st have done this without thy beard, and gown; he sees thee not.

Cla. No, he told him in thine own voice, and bring me word how thou findest him: I would, we were well rid of this knavery. If he may be conveniently delivered, I would he were; for I am now so far in offence with my niece, that I cannot pursue with any safety this sport to the upshot. Come by and by to my chamber.
Act 4.  TWELFTH-NIGHT: OR, WHAT YOU WILL.

French. Sir Toby and Maria.

1 Cl. Hey Robin, jolly Robin, Tell me how thy lady does. [Singing.

Mal. Fool.—

1 Cl. My lady is unkind, perdy.

Mal. Fool.

1 Cl. Alas, why is she so?

Mal. Fool, I say;—

1 Cl. She loves another—Who calls, ha?

Mal. Fool, an ever thou wilt deserve well at my hand, help me to a candle, and pen, ink, and paper; as I am a gentleman, I will live to be thankful to thee for't.

1 Cl. Master Malvolio!

Mal. Ay, good fool.

1 Cl. Alas, sir, how fell you besides your five wits?

Mal. Fool, there was never man so notoriously abused: I am as well in my wits, fool, as thou art.

1 Cl. But as well? then you are mad, indeed, if you be no better in your wits than a fool.

Mal. They have here propertyd me; keep me in darkness, send ministers to me, as if you can to face me out of my wits.

1 Cl. Advise you what you say; the minister is here.—Malvolio, Malvolio, thy wits the heavens restore! endeavour thyself to sleep, and leave thy vain bibble babble.

Mal. Sir Topas.—

1 Cl. Maintain no words with him, good fellow.—Who, I, sir? not I, sir. God b'w'you, good sir Topas.—Marry, amen—I will, sir; I will.

Mal. Fool, fool, fool, I say—

1 Cl. Alas, sir, be patient. What say you, sir? I am shent for speaking to you.

Mal. Good fool, help me to some light, and some paper; I tell thee, I am as well as in my wits as any man in Illyria.

1 Cl. Well-a-day,—that you were, sir?

Mal. By this hand, I am: Good fool, some ink, paper, and light, and convey what I will set down to my lady; it shall advantage thee more than ever the bearing of letter did.

1 Cl. I will help you to't. But tell me true, are you not mad indeed? or do you but counterfeit?

Mal. Believe me, I am not; I tell thee true.

1 Cl. Nay, I'll never believe a madman, till I see his brains. I will fetch you light, and paper, and ink.

Mal. Fool, I'll requisite it in the highest degree: I pr'ythee, be gone.

1 Cl. I am gone, sir; And anon, sir, I'll be with you again.

In a trice, Like to the old vises, Your need to sustain;

Who with dagger of lath, In his rage and his wrath, Cries, ah, ha! to the devil: Like a mad lad, Pure thy nails, and, Adieu, Goodman Drivel. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Olivia's Garden.

Enter Sebastian.

Seb. This is the air; that is the glorious sun; This pearl she gave me, I do feel't, and see't: And though 'tis wonder that enwraps me thus, Yet 'tis not madness. Where's Antonio then? I could not find him at the Elephant: Yet there he was; and there I found this credit, That he did range the town to seek me out. His counsel now might do me golden service: For though my soul disputes well with my sense, That this may be some error, but no madness, Yet doth this accident and flood of fortune So far exceed all ordinary, all discourse, That I am ready to distrust mine eyes, And wrangle with my reason, that persuades me To any other trust, but that I am mad, Or else the lady's mad; yet, if twere so, She could not sway her house, command her followers, Take, and give back, affairs, and their despachat, With such a smooth, discreet, and stable bearing, As, I believe, she does: there's something in't, That is deceitable. But here comes the lady.

Enter Olivia and a Priest.

Oli. Blame not this haste of mine: If you mean well,

Now go with me, and with this holy man, Into the chantry by: there, before him,

And underneath that consecrated roof,

Plight me the full assurance of your faith;

That my most jealous and too doubtful soul

May live at peace: He shall conceal it,

Whiles you are willing it shall come to note

What time we will our celebration keep

According to my birth.—What do you say?

Seb. I'll follow this good man, and go with you;

And, having sworn truth, ever will be true.

Oli. Then lead the way, good father;—And Make you more so shines,

That they may fairly note this act of mine! [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Street before Olivia's House.

Enter Clown and Fabian.

Fab. Now, as thou lovest me, let me see his letter.

1 Cl. Good master Fabian, grant me another request.

Fab. Any thing.

1 Cl. Do not desire to see this letter.

Fab. That is, to give a dog, and, in recompense, desire my dog again.

Enter Duke, Viola, and Attendants.

Duke. Belong you to the lady Olivia, friends.

1 Cl. Ay, sir; we are some of her trappings.

Duke. I know thee well; How dost thou, my good fellow, seagoing?

1 Cl. Truly, sir, the better for my foes, and the worse for my friends.

Duke. Just the contrary; the better for thy friends.

1 Cl. No, sir, the worse.

Duke. How can that be?

1 Cl. Marry, sir, they praise me, and make an ass of me; now my foes tell me plainly I am an ass: so that by my foes, sir, I profit in the knowledge of myself; and by my friends I am abused: so that, conclusions to be as kisses, if your four negatives make your two affirmatives, why, then the worse for my friends, and the better for my foes.

Duke. Why, this is excellent.

1 Cl. By my troth, sir, no; though it please you to be one of my friends.

Duke. Thou shalt not be the worse for me; there's gold in both.

1 Cl. But that it would be double-dealing, sir, I would you could make it another.

Duke. O, you give me ill counsel.

1 Cl. Put your grace in your pocket, sir, for this once, and let your flesh and blood obey it.

Duke. Well, I will be so much a sinner to be a double dealer; there's another.

1 Cl. Possible, secundo tertio, is a good play; and the old saying is, the third pays for all: the triplic, sir, is a good tripping measure; or the bells of St. Bennet, sir, may put you in mind; One, two, three.

Duke. You can fool no more money out of me at this throw: if you will let your lady know, I am here to speak with her, and bring her along with you, it may awake my beauty further.

Oth. Marry, sir, fain would your bounty, till I came again. I go, sir, but I would not have you to think your bounty is the sin of covetousness; but, as you say, sir, let your bounty take a nap, I will awake it anon. [Exit Clown.

Enter Antonio and Officers.

Ant. Here comes the man, sir, that did rescue me.

Duke. That face of his I do remember well; yet, when I saw it last, it was besmirched As black as Vulcan, in the smoke of war: A while he was engag'd in battle for: The clear, unclouded, and upright soul With such scathing grapple did he make With the most noble bottoms of our fleet, That very envy, and the tongue of less, Cry'd fame and honour on him.—What's the mat- I Off, Orio, this is that Antonio, [ter?]

Fis. Sir did we kindness, sir; drew on my side; But find he is not strange amongst us; I know not what Woes, but distraction.

Duke. Notable pirate! these salt-water thief! What foolish boldness brought thee to their mercies, When thou, in terms of bloody, and so dear, Hast made thine enemies?

Off. Orio, noble sir, Be pleased that I shew off these names you give Antonio never yet was thief, or pirate, [me; Though, I confess, one bone and ground, enough, Orio's enemy. A witchcraft drew me hither: That most ungrateful boy there, by your side, From the rude sea's entagl'd and foamy mouth Did run this crew, past his name: His life I gave him, and did thereto add My love, without retention, or restraint, All his in dedication: for his sake, Did I expose myself, pure for his love, Into the danger of this adverse town; Drew to defend him, when he was beset; Where being apprehended, his false cunning, [Not meaning to partake with me in danger, Taught him to face me out of his acquaintance, And grew a twenty-years-removed thing, While one would witn; denied me mine own purse, Which I had recommended to his use Not half an hour before.

Fis. How can this be?

Duke. When came he to this town?

Ant. To-day, my lord; and for three months be- (No interval, not a minute's vacancy.) [fore, Both day and night did we keep company.

Enter Olivia and Attendants.

Duke. Here comes the countess; now heaven walks on earth.

But for thee, fellow, thy words are madness: Three months this youth hath tended upon me; But more of that anon.—Take him aside.

Oth. What would my lord, but that he may not Wherewith Orio was made so serviceable? [have, Cesario, you do not keep promise with me.

Fis. Madame?

Duke. Gracious Olivia,—

Oth. What do you say, Cesario?—Good my lord.

Fis. My lord would speak, my duty hushes me. Oth. If it be sought to the old tune, my lord, It is as fat and fulsome to mine ear, As singing after music. Still so cruel?

Duke.

Oth. Still so constant, lord.

Duke. What! to perseverance? you uncivil lady, To throw such unspecious alliteration. My soul the faithful's offers breath'd out, That ever devotion tender'd! What shall I do?

Duke. Why should I not, had I the heart to do it, Like to the Egyptian thief, at point of death, Kill that I love; a savage jealousy, That sometime savours nobly?—But hear me this: Since you to non-regardance cast my faith, And that I partly know the instrument That was your true place in your favour, Live you, the marble-besmeared tyrant, still! But this your minion, whom, I know, you love, And whom, by heaven I swear, I tender dearly Will I will tear out of that cruel eye, Where that be set crowning in his heart's spite.— Come boy, with me; my thoughts are rife in mis- chief; I'll sacrifice the lamb that I do love, To spite a raven's heart within a dove. [Going.

Fis. And I, most jocund, up, and willingly, To do you rest, a thousand deaths would die. [Following.

Oth. Where goes Cesario?

Fis. After him I love, More than I love these eyes, more than my life, More, by all means, than e'er I shall love wife: If I do slight, you witnesses above, Punish my life, for taking of my love! Oth. Ah me, detested! how am I beguiled! Fis. Who does beguile you? who does you wrong?

Oth. Have they forgot thyself? Is it so long?— Call forth the holy father. [Exit an Attendant.

Oth. Whither, my lord? Cesario, husband, stay. Duke. Husband? Fis. Ay, husband, can be that deny?

Duke. Her husband, sirrah.

Fis. No, my lord, not I.

Oth. Alas, it is the baseness of thy fear, That makes thee strange the propriety; Fear not, Cesario, take thy fortunes up; Be that thou know'st, and art, and then art As great as that thou fear'st.—O, welcome, father! Re-enter Attendant and Priest.

Father, I charge thee, by thy reverence, Here to unfold (though lately we intended To keep in darkness, what occasion now Reveals before 'tis ripe,) what thou dost know, Tho' makes pass between this youth and me.

Priest. A contract of eternal bond of love, Conformed by mutual joiner of your hands, Attested by the holy close of lips, Sacrificed by interchange of rings of yours; And all the ceremony of this compact Seal'd in my function, by my testimony: Since when, my watch hath told me, toward my house, a revel has been two hours [grave, Duke. O, thou dissembling cab! what will thou When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy case? [be, Or will not else thy craft so quickly grow. That thine own trip shall be thine overthrow? Farewell, and take her; but direct thy feet, Where thou and I henceforth may never meet. Fis. My lord, I do protest.—

Oth. O, do not swear; Hold little faith, though thou hast too much fear.

Enter Sir Andrew Ague-cheek, with his head broke.

Sir And. For the love of God, a surgeon; send one presently to Sir Toby.

Oth. What's the matter?

Sir And. He has broke his head across, and has given Sir Toby a bloody concox com. for the love of God, you help: I had rather than forty pound, I went home.

Oth. Who has done this, Sir Andrew?

Sir And. The count's gentleman, one Cesario: we took him for a coward, but he's the very devil in printing.

Duke. My gentleman, Cesario?

Sir And. Old's liftings, here he is —You break my head for nothing; and that that I did, I was set on to do by sir Toby.

But why to me? I never hurt you; You drew your sword upon me, without cause; But I bespeak you fair, and hurt you not.

Sir And. If a bloody cocoomb be a hurt, you have hurt me; I think, you set nothing by a bloody cocoomb.

Enter Sir Toby Belch, drunk, led by the Clown. Here comes Sir Toby halting, you shall hear more; But he be in it, he would have tickled you other-gates than he did.

Duke. How now, gentleman? how is't with you? Sir To. That's all one; he has hurt me, and there's the end on't. — Sot, did'st see Dick surgeon, not.

Clo. O he's drunk, sir Toby, an hour agone; his eyes were set at eight l' the morning.

Sir To. Then he's a rogue. After a passy-measure, or a pavin, I hate a drunken rogue.

Oli. Away with him: Who hath made this ha-vock with them ?

Sir And. I'll help you, sir Toby, because we'll be for the rest.

Sir To. Will you help? an an ass-head, and a cocoomb, and a knave; a thin-faced knave, a gull?

Oli. Get him to bed, and let his hurt be look'd to.

[Exeunt Clown, Sir Toby, and Sir Andrew.

Enter Sebastian.

Seb. I am sorry, madam, I have hurt your kins; But, had it been the brother of my blood, — [man; I must have done no less, with wit, and safety. You throw a strange regard upon me, and By that I do perceive it hath offended you; Pardon me, sweet one, even for the vows We made each other but so late ago.

Duke. A face, one voice, one habit, and two persons; A natural perspective, that is, and is not.

Seb. Antonio, O my dear Antonio! How have the hours rack'd and tortur'd me, Since I have lost thee.

Ant. Sebastian are you ?

Seb. Fear'st thou that, Antonio? Ant. How have you made division of yourself? — An apple, cleft in two, is not more twin Than these two creatures. Which is Sebastian? Oli. Most wonderful! Seb. Do I stand there? I never had a brother; Nor have I any more than be the one, Of here and every where. I had a sister, Whom the blind waves and surges have devour'd: — Of charity, what kin are you to me? — [To Viola. What countryman is mine? what parentage? Vio. Of Messaline: Sebastian was my father; Such a Sebastian was my brother too, So went he suited to his watery tomb: If spirits can assume both form and suit You come to fright us, Seb. A spirit I am, indeed; But am in that dimension grossly clad, Which from the womb I did participate. Were you a woman, as the rest goes even, I should my tears let fall upon your cheek, And say — Thrice welcome, drowned Viola! Vio. My father had a mole upon his brow. Seb. And so had mine. Vio. And died that day when Viola from her birth Had number'd thirteen years.

Seb. O, that record is lively in my soul! He finished, indeed, his mortal act, That day that made my sister thirteen years. Vio. If nothing lets to make us happy both, But this my masculine usurp'd attire, Do not embrace me, till each circumstance Of place, time, fortune do continue, and jump, That I am Viola: which to confirm, I'll bring you to a captain in this town, Where lie my maiden weeds; by whose gentle help I was preserve'd, to serve this noble count; All the occurrence of my fortune since Hath been between this lady and this lord.

Seb. So comes it, lady, you have been mistook: — [To Viola.

But nature to her bias drew in that. You would have been contracted to a maid; Nor are you therein, by my life, deceiv'd, You are both, as to both, a man and a man.

Duke. Be not sma'nd; right noble is his blood. — If this be so, as yet the glass seems true, I shall have share in this most happy wreck: Boy, thou hast said to me a thousand times. — [To Viola.

Thou never should'st love woman like to me. Vio. And all those sayings will I over-swear; And all those swearings keep as true in soul, As doth that oracle continent, the fire That severs day from night. Duke. Give me thy hand; And let me see thee in thy woman's weeds. Vio. The captain, that did bring me first on shore, Hath my maid's garments: he upon some action, Is now in durance; at Malvolio's suit, A gentleman, and follower of my lady's. Oli. He shall enrich him. — Fetch Malvolio And yet, alas, now I remember me, [hither: They say, poor gentleman, he's much distract. Re-enter Clown, with a letter. A most extracting frenzy of mine own From my remembrance clearly banish'd his.— How does he, sirrah?

Clo. Truly, madam, he holds Belzebub at the stave's end, as well as a man in his case may do: he has here writ a letter to you, I should have given it you to-day morning; but as a madman's epistles are no gospels, so it skills not much, when they are delivered. Oli. Open it, and read it. Clo. Look then to be well edified, when the fool delivers the madman: — By the Lord, madam,— Oli. How now! art thou mad? Clo. No, madam, I do but read madness: an your ladyship will have it as it ought to be, you must allow war.

Oli. Prythee, read i'thy right wits. Clo. So I do, madonna; but to read his right wits, is to read thus: therefore perpend, my princess; and give ear.

Oli. Read it you, sirrah. — [To Fabian. Fab. [reads.] By the Lord, madam, you rule me, and the world shall know it: though you have put me into darkness, and given your drunken cousin rule over me, yet have I the benefit of my senses as well as your ladyship. I have your own letter that was produced me to the semblance I put on; with the which I doubt not but to do myself much right, or you much shame. Think of me as you please, I leave my duty a little unthought of, and speak out of my injury. The madly-used Malvolio. Oli. Did he write this?

Clo. Ay, madam. Duke. This savours not much of distraction. Oli. See him delivered, Fabian; bring him hither. — [Exeunt Fabian. My lord, so please you, these things further thought To think you as well a sister as a wife, [on, One day shall crown the alliance on't, so please you, Here at my house, and at my proper cost. Duke. Madam, I am most apt to embrace your offer. — Your master quits you; [To Viola.] and, for your service done him So much against the mettle of your sex, So far beneath your soft and tender breeding, And since you call'd me master for so long, Here is my hand; you shall from this time be Yer, master's mistress. Oli. A sister? — you are she. Re-enter Fabian, with Malvolio. Duke. Is this the madman?
Oh. Ay, my lord, this same
How now, Malvolio?

Mal. Madam, you have done me wrong,
Notorious wrong.

Oh. Have I, Malvolio? no.

Mal. Lady, you have. Pray you, peruse that letter.
You must not now deny it is your hand,
Write from it, if you can, in hand, or phrase:
Or say, 'tis not your soul, nor your invention;
You can say none of this. Well, grant it then.
And tell me, in the modesty of honour,
Why you have given me such clear lights of favour;
Made me come smiling, and cross-garter'd to you.
These proceedings, in which several of the world
Pur in Sir Toby, and the lighter people:
And, acting this in an obdient hope,
Why have you suffer'd me to be imprison'd,
Kept in a dark house, visited by the priest,
And made the most notorious gags, and gull,
That o'er invention pleas'd on? tell me why,

Oh. Alas, Malvolio, this is not my writing,
Though I confess, much like the character.
First told me, then was mad; then can't in mind,
And in such sorrows which here were press'd upon them in the letter. Pr'ythee, be content.
This practice hath most treacherously past upon them. But, when we know the grounds and authors of it,
Then shall be both the plaintiff and the judge
The thins own cause.

Mal. Good madam, hear me speak;
And let no quarrel, nor no brawl to come,
Taint the condition of this present hour,
Which I have wander'd at. In hope it shall not,
Most freely I confess, myself, and Toby,
Not this device against Malvolio here,
Upon some stubborn and unaccountable part.
We had conceived against him: Maria writ
The letter, as Sir Toby's great importance;
In recompense whereof, he hath married her.
Now with a sportive maitre it was fellow'd;
May rather pluck on laughter than revenge;
If that the injuries be justly weigh'd,
That have on both sides past.

Oh. Alas, poor fool! bow have they baffled thee?
Clo. Why, some are born great, some acheive greatness,
And some have greatness thrown upon them.
I was one, sir, in this interlude: one sir Topas, sir;
But that's all one. — By the hard, fool, I am not mad. — But do you remember? Madam, why laugh you at such a barren rascal? or you smile not, he's gag'd. And thus the whirling of time brings in his revenges.

Mal. I'll be revenged on the whole pack of you. [Exit.

Oh. He hath been most notoriously abus'd.

Duke. Pursue him, and entreat him to a peace:
He hath not told us all the world yet;
When that is known and golden time conveys,
A solemn combination shall be made,
Of our dear souls. — Mean time, sweet sister,
We will not part from hence. — Cesario, come! For so you shall be, while you are a man;
But, when in other habits you are seen,
Orsino's mistress, and his fancy's queen. [Exit.

SONG.

Clo. When that I was and a little tiny boy,
With hey, ha, the wind and the rain,
A foolish thing was but a toy,
For the rain it raineth every day.

But when I came to man's estate,
With hey, ha, the wind and the rain,
Gainst love and thief men shut their gate,
For the rain it raineth every day.

But when I came, alas! to wife,
With hey, ha, the wind and the rain,
By swaggering could I never thrive,
For the rain it raineth every day.

But when I came unto my bed,
With hey, ha, the wind and the rain,
With two-pots still had drunken head,
For the rain it raineth every day.

A great while ago the world began,
With hey, ha, the wind and the rain,
But that's all one, our play is done,
And we'll strive to please you every day. [Exit.

ACT I.

Enter Duke, Escalus, Lords, and Attendants.

Duke. Escalus,—

Escal. My lord.

Duke. Of government the properties to unfold,
Which hand in hand to speak and discourse;
Since I am put to know, that your own science
Exceeds, in that, the lists of all advice
My strength can give you: Then no more remains
But that to your sufficiency, as your worth is able, And let them work. The nature of our people,
Our city's institutions, and the terms
For common justice, you are as pregnant in.
As art and practice hath enriched any
That we remember: There is our commission,
From which we would not have you warp.—Tell hither,
I say, bid come before us Angelo.—

Ah! an Attendant.

What figure of us think you he will bear?
For you must know, we have with special soul.
Elected him our absence to supply;
Lent him our terror, drest him with our love;

[Exit.

Oh. When that I was and a little tiny boy,
With hey, ha, the wind and the rain,
A foolish thing was but a toy,
For the rain it raineth every day.

But when I came to man's estate,
With hey, ha, the wind and the rain,
Gainst love and thief men shut their gate,
For the rain it raineth every day.

But when I came, alas! to wife,
With hey, ha, the wind and the rain,
By swaggering could I never thrive,
For the rain it raineth every day.

But when I came unto my bed,
With hey, ha, the wind and the rain,
With two-pots still had drunken head,
For the rain it raineth every day.

A great while ago the world began,
With hey, ha, the wind and the rain,
But that's all one, our play is done,
And we'll strive to please you every day. [Exit.
And given his deputation all the organs
Of our own power: What think you of it?

Escl. If any in Vienna be of worth
To add to such ample grace and honour,
It is Lord Angelo.

Enter Angelo.

Duke. Look, where he comes. Ang. Always obedient to your grace’s will,
I come to know your pleasure.

Duke. Angelo,
There is a kind of character in thy life,
The sight whereof doth fill the observer.
Fully unfold Thyself and thy belongings
Are not thine own so proper, as to waste
Thyself upon thy virtues, them on thee.

Heaven doth with us, as we with torches do;
Not light them for themselves: for if our virtues
Did not go forth of us, ’twere all alike
As if we had them not. Spirits are not finely touch’d,
But to fine issues: nor nature never lends
The smallest scrapul of her excellence,
But, like a thirly goddess, she determines
Herself the glory of a creditor,
Both thanks and use. But I do bend my speech
To one that can my praise in him advertise;
Hold therefore, Angelo;
In our remove, be thou at full self;
Mortality and mercy in Vienna
Live in thy tongue and heart: Old Esclusus,
Though first in question, is thy secondary;
Take thy commission.

Ang. Now, good my lord,
Let there be some more test made of my metal,
Before so noble and so great a figure
Be stamp’d upon it.

Duke. No more evasion:
We have with a leaven’d and prepared choice
Proceeded to you; therefore take your honours.
Our haste from hence is of so quick condition,
That it prefers itself, and leaves unquestion’d
Matters of needful value. We shall write to you,
As that our owning shall be; and that it shalloys,
How it goes with us; and do look to know
What doth befall you here. So, fare you well;
To the hopeful execution do I leave you
Of your commissions.

Ang. Yet, give leave, my lord,
That we may bring you something on the way.

Duke. My haste may not admit it;
Nor need you, on mine honour, have to do
With any scruple: your scope is as mine own:
So to enforce, or qualify the laws
As to your soul seems good. Give you your hand;
I’ll privily away: I love the people,
But I do not like to stage to their eyes:
Though it do well, I do not relish well
Their loud applause, and even vehement:
Nor do I think the man of safe discretion,
That does affect it. Once more, fare you well.

Ang. The heavens give safety to your purposes!

Escl. I lead forth, and bring you back in happiness.

Duke. I thank you! Fare you well. [Exit Esclusus.

Ang. I shall desire you, sir, to give me leave
To have free speech with you; and it concerns me
To look into the bottom of my place:
A power I have: but of what strength and nature
I am not yet instructed.

Ang. ’Tis so with me:—Let us withdraw toge-
And we may soon our satisfaction have [ther,
Touching that point.

Escl. I’ll wait upon your honour. [Exit Esclusus.

SCENE II.—A Street.

Enter Lucio and two Gentlemen.

Lucio. If the duke, with the other dukes, come not to composition with the king of Hungary, why, then all the dukes fall upon the king.

1 Gent. Heaven grant us its peace, but not the king of Hungary’s.

2 Gent. Amen.

Lucio. Thou wilt conclude like the sanctimonious pirate, that went to sea with the ten commandments, but scraped one out of the table.

2 Gent. Thou shalt not steal?

Lucio. Ay, that he raved.

1 Gent. By that vile commandment to command the captain and all the rest from their functions; they put forth to steal: There’s not a soldier of us all, that, in the thanksgiving before meat, doth relish the petition well that prays for peace.

2 Gent. I never heard any soldier dislike it.

Lucio. I believe thee; for, I think, thou never wast where grace was said.

2 Gent. No? a dozen times at least.

1 Gent. What? in metre?

Lucio. In any proportion, or in any language.

1 Gent. I think, or in any religion.

Lucio. Ay! why not? Grace is grace, despite of all controversy: as for example; Thou thyself art a wicked villain, despite of all grace.

1 Gent. Well, there went but a pair of sheers between us.

Lucio. I grant; as there between the lists and the velvet: Thou art the list.

1 Gent. And thou the velvet: thou ant good velet; thou art a three-pil’d piece, I warrant thee:
I had as lief be of an English kersey, as be pil’d, as thou art pil’d, for a French velvet. Do I speak feelingly now?

Lucio. I think thou dost; and, indeed, with most painful feeling of thy speech; I will, out of thine own confession, learn to begin thy health; but whilst I live, forget to drink after thee.

1 Gent. I think, I have done myself wrong; have I not?

2 Gent. Yes, that thou hast; whether thou art tainted, or free.

Lucio. Behold, behold, where madam Mitigation comes: I have purchased: many diseases under her roof, as come to—

2 Gent. To what, I pray?

1 Gent. Judge.

3 Gent. To three thousand dollars a year.

1 Gent. Ay, and, I think, thou wilt have Lucio. A French crown more.

1 Gent. Thou art always figuring diseases in me:
but thou art full of error; I am sound.

Lucio. No, I would not say, healthy; but so sound, as things that are hollow: thy bones are hollow: impiety has made a feast of thee.

Enter Bawd.

Bawd. Gent. How now? Which of your hips has the most profound sciatika?

Bawd. Well, well; there’s one ronder arrested, and carried to prison, was worth five thousand of you all.

1 Gent. Who’s that, I pray thee?

Bawd. Marry, sir, that’s Claudio, signor Claudio.

1 Gent. Claudio to prison! ’tis not so.

Bawd. Nay, but I know, ’tis so: I saw him arrested: saw him carried away; and, which is more, within these three days his head’s to be chopped off.

Lucio. But, after this foolishing, I would not have it so: Art thou sure of this?

Bawd. I am too sure of it: and it is for getting madam Julietta with child.

Lucio. I hope, in time, it may be he promised to me two hours since; and he was ever precise in promise-keeping.

2 Gent. Besides, you know, it draws something near to the speech we have to such a purpose.

1 Gent. But most of all, agreeing with the proclamation.

Lucio. Away; let’s go learn the truth of it.

Bawd. Thus, what with the war, what with the sweat, what with the gallows, and what with po-very, I am custom-shrunk. How now? what's the news with you?

Enter Clown.

Cla. Vender man is carried to prison.

Des. What has he done?

Cla. A woman.

Des. But what's his offence?

Cla. Stealing for trouts in a peculiar river.

Des. Tell me, sir, is there a mould with eel by him?

Cla. No; but that’s a windpipe by him.

You have not heard of the proclamation, have you?

Clown. What proclamation, man?

Des. All houses in the suburbs of Vienna must be pulled down.

Cla. And what shall become of those in the city?

Des. They shall stand for seed; they had gone down too, but that a wise burgFER put in for them.

Des. But shall all our houses of worship in the suburbs be pulled down?

Cla. To the ground, mistress.

Des. Why, here's a change, indeed, in the commonwealth! What shall become of me?

Des. Come; fear not you; good counsellors lack no solicits though you change your place, you need not change your trade; I will be your tapster still.

Clown. There will be pity taken on you; you that have worn your coat almost out in the service, you will be considered.

Des. Come: comes singer Claudio, led by the present to prison; and there's madam Juliet. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same.

Enter Prevent, Claudio, Juliet, and Officers; Lucio and two Gentlemen.

Claud. Follow, why dost thou show me this to the world?

Pre. I see it not in evil disposition, but from lord Angelo by special charge.

Claud. Thuis can the demi-god, Authority, Make us pay down for our offence by weight.

The words of heaven;—on whom it will, it will;—

On whom it will not, so; yet still 'tis just.

Lucio. Why, how now, Claudio? whence comes this restraint?

Claud. From too much liberty, my Lucio, Liberty As surfeit is the father of much fast,

So every scope by the immoderate use,

Turns to restraint: Our nature doth resist,

And when we overstep the bounds of reason,

A th' evil, and when we drink, we die.

Lucio. If I could speak so wisely under an arrest, I would send for certain of my creditors; and yet to say the truth, I had as lief have the forfeit as freedom, as the morality of imprisonment. What's thy offence, Claudio?

Claud. What, but to speak of what offend again.

Lucio. What is it? murder?

Claud. No.

Lucio. Lewdness?

Claud. Call it so.

Pre. Proof or bond, you must go.

Claud. Nay, word, good friend,—Lucio, a word with you. [Take him aside.

Lucio. A hundred, if they'll do you any good—

Is lechery to look so after?

Lucio. That stands it with me. Upon a true,

I got possession of Julietta's bed; [contract;

You know the lady; she is fast my wife,

Save that we do the denunciation lack of outward word, and this we came not to,

Only for propagation of a dover.

Remaining in the covert of her friends;

From whom we thought it meet to hide our love,

Thus, if it be done for you. But if chances,

The stealth of our mutual entertainment,

With character too gross, is writ on Juliet.

Lucio. With child, perhaps?

Claud. Unhappily, even so.

And the new deputy now for the duke—

Whether it be the fault and glimpse of newness

Or whether that the body public be

A horse wherein the governor doth ride,

We neither in the seat, that's ever well.

He can command, let it straight feel the spur;

Whether the tyranny be in his place,

Or in his conscience that fills it up,

I stagger in:—But this new governor

A man of musty, reek'd with years, and

Which have, like unsoil'd armor, hung by the

So long, that nineteen scabbards have gone round,

And none of them been worn: and, for a name,

No longer than the drawer and neglected act

Freshly on me—his surry, for a name.

Lucio. I warrant, it is; and thy head stands so

Ticke on thy shoulders, that a nut-maid, if she be

In love, may sigh it off. Send after the duke, and appeal to him.

Claud. I have done so, but he's not to be found.

Pre. Why, Lucio, Lucio, do me this kind service;

This day my sister should the cloister enter,

And there receive her approbation.

Acquaint her with the danger of my state;

Implore her in my voice, that she make friends

To the strict deputy; bid herself mercy him:

I have a heart but hope in that: for proper youth

There is a prose and speechless dialect,

Such as moves men; besides, she hath prosperous art

When she will play with reason and discourse,

And with her words convert the wick.

Lucio. I pray, she may; as well for the encouragement of the like, which else would stand under grievous imposition: so for the enjoying of thy life, he would be sorry should be thus foolishly lost a gift of tick-tack. I'll to her.

Claud. I thank you, good friend Lucio.

Lucio. Within two hours—

Claud. Come, officer, away. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A monastery.

Enter Duke and Friar Thomas.

Duke. No; holy father; throw away that thought:

Believe not that the dribling dart of love

Can pierce a complete bosom: why I desire thee

To give me secret harbour, hath a purpose

To make me wretched than the time and ends

Of burning youth.

May your grace speak of it?

Fri. Duke. My holy sir, none better knows than you

How I have ever lov'd the life removed,

And with a noble promise to bring back,

Where youth, and cost, and witless bravery keep

I have deliver'd to lord Angelo;

A man of stricture, and firm abstinance;

My absolute power, and place here in Vienna,

And he supposes me travel'd to Poland;

For so I have strum'd it in the common ear,

And so it receiv'd:—Now, pious sir,

You will demand of me, why I do this?

Fri. Gladly, my lord. [Exit.

Duke. We have strict statutes, and most hating

(The needful buds and curbs for head-strong steeds,)

Which for no fourteen years have suffer'd let sleep;

Even like an over-grown lion in a cage,

That goes not out to prey. Now, as fond fathers

Having bound up the threatening twigs of birth,

Only to stick it in their children's sight,

For want of no food; in time the rod

Becomes more mock'd, than feared: so our dearest

Dead to infliction, to themselves are dead;

And liberty plucks justice by the nose.

The hearder is the nurse, and quite abstir

Does all decorum.

Fri. It rested in your grace.

Duke. To unloose this tied-up justice, when you please;

And do no more dreadful would have seem'd

Than in lord Angelo.

Duke. I do fear, too dreadful

Stow 'twas my fault to give the people scope,
ACT I.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

Twould be my tyranny to strike and call them For what I bid them do: for we bid this be done, When evil deeds have their permisive pass, And not the punishment. Therefore, indeed, my I have on Angelo impotency of the office, [father] Who may, in the ambusc of my name, strike home, And yet my nature never in the sight, To do it slander: And to behold his sway, I will, as 'twere a brother of your order, Visit both prince and people: therefore, I pray thee, Supply me with the habit, and instruct me How I may formally in person bear me Like a man: for this action, At our more leisure shall I render you; Only, this one:—Lord Angelo is precise; Stands at a guard with envy; scarce confesses That his blood flows, or that his appetite Is more to bread than stone: Henceforward shall we see, If power change purpose, what our seemers be.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—A Nursery.

Enter Isabella and Francisca.

Isab. And have you nuns no farther privileges?

Frans. Are not these enough?

Isab. Yes, truly: I speak not as desiring more; But rather wishing a more strict restraint Upon the sisterhood, the votarists of saint Clare.

Lucio. Ho! Peace be in this place!

Isab. Who's that which calls?

Frans. It is a man's voice: (gentle Isabella, Turn you the key, and know his business of him: You may, I may not; you are yet unworn: When you have wov'd, you must not speak with, But in the presence of the prioresse: [men Then, if you speak, you must not show your face; Or, if you show your face, you must not speak. He calls again; I pray you answer me. [Erit Francisca.

Isab. Peace and prosperity! Who's that which calls?

Enter Lucio.

Lucio. A child, virgin, if you be; as those cheek- roses Proclaim you are no less: Can you so steal me, As being me to the sight of Isabella, A novice of this place, and the fair sister To her unhappy brother Claudio?

Isab. Why her unhappy brother? let me ask; The rather, for I now must make you know I am that Isabella, and his sister.

Lucio. Gentle and fair, your brother kindly greets Not to be weary with you, he's in prison. [you.

Isab. Woe me! for what?

Lucio. For that, which if myself might be his judge, He should receive his punishment in thanks: He hath got his friend with child.

Isab. Sir, make me not your story.

Lucio. It is true.

I would not—though 'tis my familiar sin With maids to seem the lapwing, and to jest, Tongue far from heart,—play with all virgins so: I hold you as a thing enky'd, andainted! By your renunciation, an immortal spirit; And to be talk'd with in sincerity, As with a saint.

Isab. You do blaspheme the good, in mocking me.

Lucio. Do not believe it. Frowen and truth, is thus:

Your brother with this lover have embrac'd: As those that feed grow full; as blossoming time, That from the seeseness the bare fellow brings To teeming foison; even so her plenteous womb Expresseth his full thith and husbandry.

Isab. Have you any such child by him?—My cousin

Lucio. Is she your cousin? [Juliet?

Isab. Adoptedly; as school-maid change their By vain though apt affection.

She is.

Isab. O, let him marry her!

Lucio. This is the point. The duke is very strangely gone from hence; Here many gentlemen, myself being one, In hand, and hope of action: but we do learn By those that know the very nerves of state, His giving out were of an infinite distance From his true-meant design. Upon his place, And with full line of his authority, He swears lord Angelo: a man, whose blood Is very snow-broth; one who never feels The wanton stings and motions of the sense; But doth rebate and blunt his natural edge With profits of the cafe and fast. He (to give fear to use and liberty, Which have, for long, run by the hideous law, As mice by lions) hath pick'd out an act, Under whose heavy sense your brother's life Falls into forfeit: be arrest him on it; And follows close the rigour of the statute, To make him an example; all hope is gone, Unless you have the grace by your fair prayer To soften Angelo: And that's my pith Of business 'twixt you and your poor brother.

Isab. Doth he so seek his life?

Lucio. Has censur'd him already; and, as I hear, the provost hath A warrant for his execution.

Isab. Alas! what power admits of in

To do him good?

Lucio. Assay the power you have.

Isab. My power! Alas! I doubt,—

Lucio. Our doubts are traitors,

And make us lose the good we oft might win, By fearing to attempt: Go to lord Angelo, And let him learn to know, when maidens sue, Men give like gods; but when they weep and kneel, All their petitions are as freely theirs

As they themselves would owe them.

Isab. I'll see what I can do.

Lucio. But, speedily.

Isab. I will about it straight;

No longer stay but to give the mother Notice of my affair: I'll presently tell you:

Commend me to your brother: soon at night I'll send him certain word of my success.

Lucio. I take my leave of you.

Isab. Good sir, adieu. [Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE 1.—A Hall in Angelo's House.

Enter Angelo, Escalus, a Justice, Provost, Officers, and other Attendants.

Ang. We must not make a scare-crow of the law, Setting it up to fear the birds of prey, And let it keep one shape, till custom make it Their perch, and not their terror.

Escal. Ay, but yet Let us be keen, and rather cut a little, Than fall, and bruise to death: Alas! this gentle- Whom I would save, had a most noble father. Let but your honour know, (Whom I believe to be most strait in virtue,) That, in the working of your own intentions, One time to have with a friend, in the wisdom of their office To teeming foison; even so her plenteous womb Expresseth his full thith and husbandry.

Isab. Have you any such child by him?—My cousin

Lucio. Is she your cousin? [Juliet?

Isab. Adoptedly; as school-maid change their By vain though apt affection.

Commend me to your brother: soon at night I'll send him certain word of my success.

Lucio. I take my leave of you.

Isab. Good sir, adieu. [Exeunt.]

The jewel that we find, we steep and take it,
Because we see it; but what we do not see,
We treat upon, and never think of it.
You may not so extensively offer your assistance,
For I have had such faults; but rather tell me,
When I, that deserve him, do so offend,
Let me own judgment patterns out my death,
And I will make your grace in partial. Sir, he must die.

As. Do it as your wisdom will.

Q. Where is the provost?

As. Here, if it like your honour.

Q. See that Claudio

Be executed by nine to-morrow morning
Using him his confessor, let him be prepared,
For that's the utmost of his pilgrimage.

As. Well, heaven forgive him! and forgive us
Some rise by sin, and some by virtue fail: [all]
Some run from brakes of vice, and answer none;
And some condemned for a fault alone.

Enter Elbow, Froth, Clown, Officers, &c.

Q. Come, bring them away: if these be good people
In a common-wool, that do nothing but use
The promises in common houses, I know no law;
bring them away.

As. How now, sir! What's your name? and what's the matter?

Q. If it be your honour, I am the poor
 Duke's constable, and my name is Elbow: I do
Lean upon justice, sir, and do bring in here before
Your good honour two notorious benefactors.

As. Benefactors! Well, but benefactors are they,
that are not malefactors?

Q. If it please your honour, I know not well what they are but precise villains they are, that I am sure of; and void of all profession in the world, that good Christians ought to have.

Esc. This comes off well; here's a wise officer.

Q. Do so: What quality are they of? Elbow in your name? Why dost thou not speak, Elbow?

As. He cannot, sir; he's out at elbow.

Q. What are you, sir?

Esc. He, sir, a tapster, sir; parcell-bayed; one That serves a bad woman; whose house, sir, was,
as they say, pinn'd down in the suburbs; and now
She professes a hot-house, which, I think, is a very ill house too.

Esc. How know you that?

Elb. My wife, sir, whom I detest before heaven
And after, for better reason.

Esc. How! thy wife?

Elb. Ay, sir; whom I thank heaven, is an honest woman.

Q. Then dost thou detest her therefore?

Elb. I say, sir, I will detest myself also, as well as she, that this house, if it be not a bawd's house, it is pity of her life, for it is a naughty house.

Esc. How dost thou know that, constable?

Elb. Marry, sir, by my wife; who, if she had been a woman candidly given, might have been accused in fornication, adultery, and all uncleanliness then.

Esc. By the woman's means?

Elb. Ay, sir, by mistress Over-done's means: but as she spit in his face, so she defied him.

Q. Sir, if it please your honour, this is not so.

Elb. Before these various here, thou honourable man, prove it.

Esc. Do you hear how he misplaces?

(To Angelo.)

Q. Sir, she came in great with child, and longing (saving your honour's reverence) for stew'd prunes; sir, we had but two in the house, which at that very distant time stood, as it were, in a fruit-dish, a dish of some three-pence; your honour have seen such dish here; they are not China dishes, but very good dishes.

Esc. Go to, go to; no matter for the dish, sir.

Q. No, indeed, sir, not of a pin: you are therefore not answerable to the point: As I say, this mistress Elbow, being, as I say, with child, and being great belly'd, and longing, as I said, for prunes; and having but two in the dish, as I said, not of a pin, this very woman, this very rest, least, as I said, and, as I say, paying for them very honestly; for, as you know, master Froth, I could not give you three-pence again.

Esc. No, indeed.

Q. Sir, I beg of you then, if you be remember'd, the stones of the aforesaid prunes.

Froth. Ay, so I did, indeed.

Q. Very, very well! I telling you then, if you be remember'd, that such a one, and such a one, were just sure of the thing you wow't, unless they kept very good diet, as I told you.

Esc. All this is true.

Q. Well then.

Esc. Come, you are a tedious fool; to the purpose,—What was done to Elbow's wife, that he hath cause to complain of? Come me to what was done to her.

Q. Sir, your honour cannot come to that yet.

Esc. No, sir, nor I mean it not.

Q. Sir, but you shall come to, by your honour's leave: And, I beseech you, look into master Froth's case; a man of fortune, bound a year;
his father died at Halloowma, master Froth?

Froth. All-hooden eve.

Q. Very well: I hope here be truths; He, sir, sitting, as I say, in a lower chair, sir; 'twas in the Bunch of Grapes, where, indeed, you have a delight to sit: Have you not?

Froth. I have so; because it is an open room, and a clear day.

Q. Why, very well then: I hope here be truths.

Froth. This will last out a night in Russia,
When nights are longest there: I'll take my leave,
And leave you to the hearing of the cause.

Q. Hoping, you'll find good cause to whip them all.

Esc. I think no less: Good morrow to your lordship.

[Exit Angelo.

Q. Now, sir, come on; What was done to Elbow's wife, once more?

Q. Once, sir? there was nothing done to her once.

Esc. I beseech you, sir, ask him: what this man did to my wife.

Q. I beseech your honour, ask me.

Esc. Well, sir: what did this gentleman to her?

Q. I beseech you, sir, look in this gentleman's face, sir; master Froth, look upon his honour: 'tis for a good purpose: Dost your honour mark his face?

Esc. Ay, sir, very well.

Q. I beseech you, mark it: well.

Esc. Well, I do so.

Q. Dost your honour see any harm in his face?

Esc. Why, no.

Q. I'll be supposed upon a book, his face is the worst thing about him; (good then;) if his face be the worst thing about him, how could master Froth do the constable's wife any harm? I would know that of your honour.

Esc. He's in the right: Constable, what say you to it?

Elb. First, an it like you, the house is a respected house; next, this is a respected fellow; and his mistress is a respected woman.

Q. By this hand, sir, his wife is a more respected person than any of us all.

Elb. Variety, thou liest: thou liest, wicked variety:
this time is yet to come, that she was ever respected,
with man, woman, or child.

Q. Sir, she was respected with him before married with her.

Elb. The wiser he here? Justice, or Iniquity?—Is this true?

Elb. O thou califf! O thou variety! O thou wicked Hannibal! I respected with her, before I was married to her? If ever I was respected with me the poor duke's officer.—Prove this, thou wicked Hannah, or I'll have mine action of battery on thee.

Escal. If he took you a box o' th' ear, you might have expected it.

Elb. Marry, I thank your good worship for it; What 'st your worship's pleasure I should do with this wicked calfiff?

Escal. Truly, officer, because he hath some offenses in him, that I would discover if thou couldst, let him continue in his courses, till thou know'st what they are.

Elb. Marry, I thank your worship for it:- They do you wrong to put you so oft upon: Are there not men in your ward sufficient to serve it? Escal. Faith, sir, few of any wit in such matters: as they are chosen, they are glad to choose me for them; I do it for a little some piece of money, and go through with all.

Escal. Look you, bring me in the names of some six or seven, the most sufficient of your parish.

Elb. To your worship's house, sir?

Escal. To my house: Fare you well. [Exit Elbow.] What's o'clock, think you?

Just. Eleven, sir.

Escal. I pray you home to dinner with me.

Just. I humbly thank you.

Escal. It grieves me for the death of Claudio; But there's no remedy.

Just. Lord Angelo is severe.

Escal. It is but needful; Mercy is not itself, that oft looks so;

Pardon is still the nurse of second woe;

Put yet,—Poor Claudio!—There's no remedy.

Come, sir.

SCENE II.—Another Room in the same.

Enter Provost and a Servant.

Serv. He's hearing of a cause; he will come straight.

I'll tell him of you.

Prov. Pray you do. [Exit Servant.] I'll know His pleasure; may be, he will relent: Alas,

He hath but as offended in a dream!

All sects, all ages, smack of this vice; and he

To die for it—

Enter Angelo.

Ang. Now what's the matter, provost?

Prov. Is it your will Claudio shall die to-morrow?

Ang. Did I not tell thee, yea? hadst thou not

Why dost thou ask again?

[Order]

Prov. Lest I might be too rash;

Under your good correction, I have seen,

When, after execution, judgment hath

Repented o'er his doom.

Ang. Go to; let that be mine:

Do you your office, or give up your place,

And you shall well be spair'd.

Prov. I crave your honour's pardon.

What shall be done, sir, with the groaning Juliet?

She's very near her hour.

Ang. Dispose of her

To some moru fitter place; and that with speed.

Re-enter Servant.

Serv. Here is the sister of the man condemn'd,

Desires access to you.

Ang. Hath he a sister?

Prov. Ay, my good lord; a very virtuous maid,

And to be shortly of a sisterhood,

If not already.

Ang. Well, let her be admitted.

[Exit Servant.]

See you, the furnicatrice be remov'd,

For she has needful, but not lavish, means;

Such shall be order for it.

Enter Lucio and Isabella.

Prov. Save your honour!

Ang. Stay a little while.—[To Isab.] You are welcome: What's your will?

Isab. I am a woeful suitor to your honour,

Please but your honour hear me.

Ang. Well; what's your suit?

Isab. There is a vice, that most I do abhor,

And most desire should meet the blow of justice;
For which I would not plead, but that I must;
For which I must not plead, but that I am
At war, Twixt will, and will not.

Ang. Well; the matter? Ich. I have a brother is condemn'd to die:
I drew it, let be his fault, and not my brother.

Proc. Heaven give thee moving graces:
Ang. Condemn the fault, and not the act of it.
Why, every fault's a condemn'd, 'ere it be done:
Men were the very cipher of a function,
To find the faults, whose fine stands in record,
And let go by the act.

Ang. O just, but severe law!
I had a brother then—Heaven keep your honour

Luc. [To Ichab.] Giv'n not o'er so to him
Again, treat him:
Knew down before him, hang upon his gown;
You are too cold—If you should need a pin,
You could not with more tame a tongue desire it
To him, I say,

Ichb. Must be needs die?

Ang. Maidens, no remedy.

Ichb. Yes; I do think that you might pardon him,
And neither heaven, nor man, grieve at the mercy,
Ang. I will not do.

Ichb. But can you, if you would?

Ang. Look, what I will not, that I cannot do.

Ichb. But might what you don't, and do the world no wrong.

If so your venoms were touch'd with that remorse
As mine is to him?

Ang. He's sentence'd: 'tis too late.

Luc. You are too cold.

Ang. Too late? why, no, I, that do speak a word,
May call it back again: Well, I believe this,
No ceremony that to great ones longs,
Not the king's crown, nor the deputy sword,
The marshal's truncheon, nor the judge's robe,
Become them when they have lost the grace,
As being too decayed:
If he had been as you,
And you as he, you would have slept like him;
But he, like you, would not have been so stern.

Ang. Pray you, begone.

Ichb. I would to heaven I had your patience,
And you were Isabel? should it then be thus?
No! I would tell what 'were to be a judge,
And what a prisoner.

Lucb. Ay, for him: there's the vein. [Aside.
Ang. Your brother is a forfeit of the law,
And you but waste your words.

Ichb. Aha! aha!

Ang. Why, all the souls that were, were forfeit once;
And that might the bargain best have touch'd,
Found out the remould, how would you be,
If he, which is the top of judgment, should
But judge you as you are? O, think on that;
And mercy then will breathe within your lips,
Like man now made.

Ang. Do you content, fair maid?
It is the law, not I, condemn your brother:
Were he my kinsman, brother, or my son,
It should be thus with him;—he must die to-morrow.

Ichb. To-morrow? O, that's sudden! Spare him,
He's not prepar'd for death! Even for our kitchens
We kill the fowl of seasons; shall we serve heaven
With less respect than we do minister [you]
To our gross selves? (Good, good my lord, bethink
Who is it that hath died for this offence?

There's many have committed it.

Lucb. Ay, well said.

Ang. The law hath not been dead, though it has slept:
Those many had not dare'd to do that evil,
If they should meet that did the edict infringe,
Had answer'd for his deed: now, 'tis awake;
Takes note of what is done; and, like a prophet,
Looks in a glass, that shows what future evils, (Either now, or by remnants new current,
And so in progress to be hatch'd and born,)
Not she; nor doth she tempt: but it is I,
That lying by the violet, in the sun,
Do as the carrión does, not as the flower,
Corrupt with virtuous season. Can it be,
That modesty may more betray our sense
Than woman's lightness? Having waste ground
Shall we desire to raise the sanctuary? [eno, enon]
With our evils there? O, O, O, O,
What dost thou? or what art thou, Angelo?
Dost thou desire her folly, for those things
That make her good? O, let her brother live:
Neither to their folly their robbery have authority,
When judges steal themselves. What? do I love
That I desire to hear her speak again, [hero]
And feast upon her eyes? What is't I dream on?
O cunning enemy, that, to catch a saint,
When saints dost bait thy hook! Most dangerous
Is that temptation, that doth goad us on
To sin in loving virtue: never could the strumpet,
With all her double vigour, art, and nature,
Once stir my temper; but this virtuous maid
Subdues me quite;—Ever till now,
When men were fond, I smiled and wondered how.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Room in a Prison.

Enter Angelo, habited like a Friar, and Provost.

Duke. Hail to you, provost! so, I think you are. [Prov.]
Prov. I am the provost: What's your will, good friar?
Duke. Bound by my charity, and my bless'd order,
I come to visit the afflicted spirits
Here in the prison: do me the common right
To let me see them; and to make me know
The nature of their crimes, that I may minister
To them accordingly.

Prov. I would do more than that if more were needful.

Enter Juliet.

Look, here comes one; a gentlewoman of mine,
Who falling in the flames of her own youth,
Hath blister'd her report: She is with child;
And he that got it, sentenc'd: a young man
More fit to do another such offence,
Than die for this.

Duke. When must he die?

Prov. As I do think, to-morrow—
I have provided for you; stay a while, [To Juliet.
And you shall be conducted.

Juliet. Fair one, of the sin you carry,

Duke. I do; and bear the shame most patiently.

Duke. I'll teach you how you shall arraign your conscience,
And try your penitence, if it be sound,
Or hollowly put on.

Juliet. I'll gladly learn.

Duke. Love you the man that wrong'd you?
Juliet. Yes, as I love the woman that wrong'd him.

Duke. So then, it seems, your most offenceful act was mutually committed?
Juliet. Mutually.

Duke. Then was your sin of heavier kind than Juliet. I do confess, and repent it, father. [his Duke. 'Tis meet so, daughter: but lest you do repent,
As that the sin brought you to this shame,—
Which sorrow is always toward ourselves, not heaven;
Showing, we'd not spare heaven, as we love it,
But as we stand in fear,—

And I, I do repent, as it is an evil;
And take the shame with joy.

There rest.

Duke. Your partner, as I hear, must die to-morrow,
And I bring with instruction to him,—
Grace go with you! Bene dicede! [Exit.
Juliet. Must die to-morrow! O, injurious love,
That resipes me a life, whose very comfort
Is still a dying horror!

Prov. 'Tis pity of him. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A Room in Angelo's House.

Enter Angelo.

Ang. When I would pray and think, I think and pray
To several subjects: heaven hath my empty words:
Whilst my invention, hearing not my tongue,
Anchors on Isabel: Heaven in my mouth,
As if I did but only chew his name;
And in my heart, the strong and swelling evil
Of my conception: The state whereon I studied,
Is like a good thing, being often read,
Grown fear'd and tedious; yes, my gravity,
Wherein let no man hear me I take pride,
Could I, with boot, change for an idle plum'e,
Which the air beats for vain. O place! O form!
How often dost thou with thy case, thy habit,
Wrench away from fools, and tie the wiser souls
To thy false seeming? Blood, thou still art blood:
Let's write good angel on the devil's horn,
'Tis not the devil's crest.

Enter Servant.

How now, who's there?
Serv. One Isabel, a sister,
Desires access to you.

Ang. Teach her the way. [Exit Serv.
O heavens! Why does my blood thus must to my heart:
Making both it unable for itself,
And disposing all the other parts
Of necessary fitness?
So play the foolish throngs with one that sows;
Come all to help him, and will stain the air
By which he should revive:—and even so
The general, subject to a well-wish'd king,
Omit their own part, and in obsequious fondness
Croud to his presence, where their untaught love
Must needs appear offence.

Enter Isabella.

How now, fair maid?
Isab. I am come to know your pleasure.
Ang. That you might know it, would much better please me,
Than to demand what 'tis. Your brother cannot live.

Isab. Even so?—Heaven keep your honour!

Ang. Yet may he live a while; and it may be,
As long as you, or I: yet he must die.

Isab. Under your sentence?
Ang. Yes.

Isab. When I beseech you? that in his reprieve,
Longer, or shorter, he may be so fitted,
That his soul sicken not.

Ang. Ha! Fye, these filthy vices! It were as good
To pardon him, that hath from nature stolen
A man already made, as to remit
Their savoy sweetness, that do coin heaven's image,
In stamps that are forbid: 'tis all as easy
Falsely to take away a life true made,
As to put mettle in restrained means,
To make a false one.

Isab. 'Tis set down so in heaven, but not in earth.
Ang. Say you so? then I shall poise you quickly,
Which had you rather, That the most just law
Now took your brother's life; or, to redeem him,
Give up your body to such sweet uncleanness,
As that he hath stain'd?

Isab. I had rather give my body than my soul.

Ang. I talk not of your soul; Our compell'd sins
Stand more for number than accomplish.

Isab. How say you?

Ang. Nay, I'll not warrant that; for I can speak Against the thing I say. Answer to this—
I, now the voice of the recited law,
Pronounce a sentence on your brother's life:
Might there not be a charity in sin, To save this brother’s life?

I ask. Please you to do’s, I’ll take it as a peril to my soul, It is no sin at all, but charity. Anon. That I do beg this, at peril of your soul, Were equal prize of sin and charity.

I ask. That I do beg his life, if it be sin, Heaven, let me bear it! you granting of my suit, If you see sin, I’ll make it my mourn prayer To have it added to the faults of mine, And nothing of your answer.

Nay, but hear me: Your sense parures not mine; either you are ignorant, Or seem so, craftily; and that’s not good. I ask. Let me be ignorant, and in nothing good, But graciously to know I am no better.

Thus wisdom wishes to appear most bright, When it doth tax itself; as these black marks Precise an ensnared beauty ten times louder Than beauty could displayed.—But mark me; to be received plain, I’ll speak more gross. Your brother is to die.

I ask. So.

And his offence is so, as it appears Accountant to the law upon that pain.

Admit me other way to save his life, (As I subscribe not that, nor any other, But in the loss of question,) that you, his sister, Being his heir as any of your issue, Whose credit with the judge, or own great place, Could fetch your brother from the manacles Of the all-binding law; and that there were No earthly means to save him, but that either You must lay down the treasures of your body To this supposed, or else let him suffer. What would you do?

I ask. As much for my poor brother, as myself. The sum of it is, to save him, and of terms of death, The impression of keen whips I’d wear as rubies, And strip myself to death, as to a bed. That listening I have been sick for, ere I’d yield My body up to shame.

Then must your brother die.

And were the chimerer way! Better it were, a brother died at once, Than that a sister, by redeeming him, Should scale for him.

Were you not then as cruel as the sentence That you have slander’d so?

I ask. I gommyny in ransom, and free pardon, And I two houses; lawful mercy is Nothing akin to foul redemption.

You seem’d of late to make the law a tyrant; And rather prove’d the sliding of your brother A mortisment than a vice.

I ask. O, pardon me, my lord; it oft falls out, To have what we’d have, we speak not what we mean: I something do excuse the thing I hate, For his advantage that I dearly love.

We are all frail.

If not a feedary, but only he, Owe, and succeed by weakness.

Nay, women are frail too.

Ay, as the glasses where they view themselves; Which are so easy broke as they make forms. When he alone would break this would create man In proving by them. Nay, call us ten times frail; For we are soft as our complections are, And credulous to false prints.

I think it well; And from this testimony of your own sex, (Since, I suppose, we are made to be no stronger Than faults may shake our frames,) let me be bold:— I do arrest your words; he that you are, That is, a woman; if you be more, you’re none; if you be one, (as you are well express’d

By all external warrants; show it now, lay putting on the destined livery.

I ask. I have no tongue but one: gentle my lord, Let me intreat you speak the former language.

Anon. Plainly conceive, I love you.

My brother did love Julie, and you tell me, That he shall die for it.

He shall not, Isabel, if you give me love.

I ask. Know, your virtue hath a licence in’t, With, with an extricest’d thrust, I’ll tell the world Aedon, what man thou art.

Who will believe thee, Isabel? My unsoil’d name, the austereness of my life, My vouch against you, and my place I the state, Will so your accusation outweigh, That you shall stifle in your own report, And smell of calumny. I have begun; And now I give my sensual race the rein: For the consent to my sharp peril, Lay all by nicety, and prolixities blushed, That banish what they sue for; redeem thy brother By yielding up thy body to my will; Yet thy wantonness shall his death draw out To lingering suffrance: answer me to-morrow, or, by the affection that now guides me more, I’ll prove a tyrant to him. As for you, Say what you can, my false overween your true.

To whom shall I complain? Did I tell this, Who would believe me? () perish! mouths. By his sister should her body stoop To such abhor’d pollution. Then Isabel, live chast, and, brother, die: More than our brother is our chastity. I’ll not be caught yet of Angelo’s interest, And fit his mind to death, for his soul’s rest.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Room in the Prison.

Enter Duke, Claudio, and Provost.

Duke. So, then you hope of pardon from forclt

Claud. The miserable have no other medicine, But only hope. I live, and am present to die.

Duke. Be absolute for death; either death, or life Shall thereby be the sweeter. Reason thus with if I do lose thee, I do lose a thing.

I ask. My brother did love her; he would keep a breath thou art (Served to all the skry influences.) That dost this habitation, where thou keep’st; Hourly afflicts: merely thou art death’s friend; For him thou labour’st by the approach to death. And yet, thou run’st toward him still: Thou art a noble; For all the accommodations that thou bear’st, Are nurst’d by baseness: Thou art by no mean For thou dost fear the soft and tender fort
Of a poor worm! Thy best of rest is sleep,
And that thou owest provok'st; yet grossly fear'st
Thy death, which is no more. Thou art not thyself;
For thou exist'st on many a thousand grains
That issue out of dust: Happy thou art not:
For what thou hast is, still thou striev'st to get;
And what thou hast, forget'st: Thou art not certain;
For thy complexion shifts to strange effects,
After the moon: If thou art rich, thou art poor;
For, like an ass, whose back with ingota bows,
Thou beart's thy heavy riches but a journey,
And death unloads thee: Friend hast thou none;
For thine own bowels, which do call thee sire,
Thou more pollutes with thy processions
Do curse the gout, serpigo, and the rheum,
For ending thee no sooner: Thou hast nor youth,
Nor age;
But, as it were, an after-dinner's sleep,
Dreaming on both: for all thy blessed youth
Becomes as aged, and doth beg the aims
Of paizied eld; and when thou art old, and rich,
Thoughst neither heat, affection, limb, nor beauty,
To make thy riches pleasant. What's yet in this,
That bears the name of life? Yet in this life
Lie hid more thousand deaths: yet death we fear,
That makes these odds all even.

Cloud. I humbly thank you.

Enter Isabella.

Isab. What, ho! Peace here; grace and good company!

Prov. Who's there? come in: the wish deserves a welcome.

Duke. Dear sir, ere long I'll visit you again.

Cloud. Most holy sir, I thank you.

Isab. My business is a word or two with Claudio.

Prov. And very welcome. Look, signor, here's Duke. Proval, a word with you. [your sister.

Prov. As many as you please.

Duke. Bring them to speak, where I may be conceal'd,
Yet hear them. [Exeunt Duke and Provost.

Cloud. Now, sister, what's the comfort?

Isab. Why, as all comforts are; most good in Lord Angelo, having affairs to heaven, [deed intends you for his swift ambassador,
Where you shall be an everlasting leger:
Therefore your best appointment make with speed:
To-morrow you set on.

Isab. Is there no remedy?

Cloud. None, but such remedy, as to save a head,
To cleave a heart in twain.

Isab. But is there any?

Cloud. Yes, brother, you may live;
There is a devilish mercy in the judge,
If you'll importune it, that will free your life,
But feter you till death.

Cloud. Perpetual durance?

Isab. Ay, just, perpetual durance; a restraint,
Though all the world's vastidity you had,
To a determin'd scope.

Cloud. But in what nature?

Isab. In such a one as (you consenting to't)
Would back your honour from that trunk you bear,
And leave you naked.

Cloud. Let me know the point.

Isab. O, I do fear thee, Claudio; and I quake,
Ist thou a feverous life should'st entertain,
And sit seven winters more respect
Than a perpetual honour. Dar'st thou die?
The sense of death is most in apprehension;
And the poor beetle, that we tread upon,
In corporal sufferance finds a pang as great
As when a giant dies.

Cloud. Why give you me this shame?
Think you I can a resolution fetch
From flowery tenderness? If I but die,
I will encounter darkness as a bride;
And hug it in mine arms.

Isab. There spake my brother; there my father's grave
Did utter forth a voice! Yes, thou must die:
Thou art too noble to conserve a life
In base appliances. This outward-sainted deputy,— Whose settling wise and deliberate word
Nips youth i'the head, and follies doth enmew,
As falcon doth the fowl,—is yet a devil;
His still within being cast, he would appear
As peace as deep as hell.

Cloud. The princely Angelo?

Isab. O, 'tis the cunning liver of hell,
The damned'st body to invest and cover
His princely guards! Dost thou think, Claudio,
If I would yield him my virginity,
Thou might'st be freed?

Cloud. O, heavens! it cannot be.

Isab. Yes, he would give it thee, from this rank offence,
So to offend him still: This night's the time
That I should do what I abhor to name,
Or else thou diest to-morrow.

Cloud. Thou shalt not do't.

Isab. O, were it but my life,
I'd throw it down for your deliverance
As frankly as a pin.

Cloud. Thanks, dear Isabel.

Isab. Be ready, Claudio, for your death to-morrow.

Cloud. Yes,—Has he affections in him, [row.
That thus can make him bite the law by the nose;
When he would force it? Sure it is no sin;
Or of the deadly seven it is the least.

Isab. Which is the least?

Cloud. If it were damnable, he, being so wise,
Why, would he for the momentary trick
Be perdurably fix'd?—O, Isabel! !

Isab. What says my brother?

Cloud. Death is a fearful thing.

Isab. And shamed life a hateful.

Cloud. Ay, but to die, and go we know not where;
To lie in cold obstruction, and to rot;
This sensible warm motion to become
A kneaded clod; and the delighted spirit
To bathe in fiery floods, or to reside
In thrilling regions of thick-ribbed ice;
To be imprison'd in the viewless winds,
And blown with restless violence round about
The pendent world; or to be worse than worst
Of those, that lawless and uncertain things
Imagine howling!—'tis too horrible
The nearest and most loathed worldly life,
That age, aching, penury, and imprisonment
Can lay on nature, is a paradise
To what we fear of death.

Isab. Alas! alas!

Cloud. Sweet sister, let me live:
What sin you do to save a brother's life,
Nature dispenses with the deed so far,
That it becomes a virtue.

Isab. O, you beast!
O, faithless coward! O, dishonest wretch!
Wilt thou be made a man out of my vice?
Is't not a kind of incest, to take life
From thine own sister's shame? What should I think?

Cloud. Heaven shield, my mother play'd my father fair!
For such a warped slip of wilderness
Ne'er issu'd from his blood. Take my defiance:
Die! perish! might but my bending down
Repleve thee from thy fate, it should proceed:
I'll pray a thousand prayers for thy death,
No word to save thee.

Cloud. Nay, hear me, Isabel.

Isab. O, fye, fye, fye!

Cloud. Thy sin's not accidental, but a trade:
Mercy to thee would prove itself a bawd:
'Tis best that thou diest quickly.

[Going.

Cloud. O hear me, Isabella.

Re-enter Duke.

Duke: Vouchsafe a word, young sister, but one word.
Isab. What is your will?

Duke. Might you dispense with your leisure, I would by and by have some speech with you; the satisfaction I would require, is likewise your own benefit.

Isab. I have no superfuous leisure; my stay must be stolen out of other affairs; but I will attend you a white.

Duke. [To Claudio, aside.] Son, I have overheard your sister and your sister's brother; Angelo had never the purpose to corrupt her; only he hath made an essay of her virtue, to practise his judgment with the disposition of natures; she, having the truth of honour in her, hath made him that grant, which he is very glad to receive; I am confessor to Angelo, and I know this to be true; therefore prepare yourself to death: Do not satisfy your resolution with hopes that are fallible; to-morrow you must die; go to your knees, and make ready.

Claud. Let me ask my sister pardon. I am so out of love with life, that I will one to be rid of it.

Duke. Hold you there; Farewell.

[Exeunt Claudio.

Ru-nder Provost.

Prov. a word with you.

Prov. What's your will, father?

Duke. That now you are come, you will be gone! Leave me a while with the maid; my mind promises with my habit, no less shall touch her by my company.

Prov. in good time.

[Exeunt Provost.

Duke. The hand that hath made you fair, hath made you good; the goodness, that is cheap in beauty, makes beauty brief in goodness; but grace, being the soul of your complexion, should keep the body of it ever fair. The assault, that Angelo hath made to you, fortune hath convey'd to my understanding; and, but that frailty hath examples for his, shall I should wonder at Angelo. How would you do to content this substitute, and to save your brother.

Isab. I am now going to resolve him; I had rather my brother die by the law, than my son be unlawfully born. But O, how much is the good duke deceived in Angelo? If ever be return, and I can speak to him, I will open my lips in vain, or discover his government.

Duke. That shall not be much amiss: Yet, as the matter now stands, he will avoid your accusation; he made trial of you only.—Therefore, fasten your ear on my advancings; to the love I have in deepness and my readiness presents itself. I do make myself believe, that you may most uprightnessly do a poor wronged lady a merited benefit; redeem your brother from the angry law; do no stain to your own gracious person; and much please the absent duke, if, by peradventure, he shall ever return to have hearing of this business.

Isab. Let me hear you speak further; I have spirit to do any thing that appears not foul in the truth of my spirit.

Duke. Virtue is bold, and goodness never fearful. Have you not heard speak of Mariana the sister of Frederick, the great soldier, who miscarried at sea?

Isab. I have heard of the lady, and good words went with her name.

Duke. Her should this Angelo have married; was assailed to her by oath, and the nuptial appurtenances hanged him with the spirit of the contract, and limit of the solemnity, her brother Frederick was wrecked at sea, having in that perish'd vessel the dowry of his sister. But mark, how heavily this befell to the present place! This the free and noble and renowned brother, in his love toward her ever most kind and natural; with him the portion and sinew of her fortune, her marriage-dowry; with both, he was left to the tender mercy of his own Angelo.

Isab. Can this be so? Did Angelo so leave her?

Duke. Left her in her tears, and dry'd not one of them with his comfort; swallowed his vows whole, pretending, in her, discoveries of dishonour; in few, bestowed her on her own lamentation, which she yet wears for his sake; and he, a marble to her tears, is washed with them, but releats not. Isab. Let not this be true; let us make this poor maid from the world! What corruption in this life, that it will let this man live!—But bow out of this can she avail?

Duke. It is a rupture that you may easily heal; and were it not so, you are not only your brother, but keeps you from dishonour in doing it.

Isab. Show me how, good father.

Duke. This fore-named maid hath yet in her the cure of the first affection; his unjust unkindness, that in all reason should have quenched her love, hath, like an impediment in the current, made it more violent and unruly. Go to Angelo; answer his requiring with a plausible obedience; agree with his demands to the point; only refer yourself to this advantage,—first, that your stay with him may not be long; that the time may have all shadow and silence in it; and the place answer to convenience: this being granted in course, now follows all. We shall advise this wronged maid to steed up your appointment, go in your place; if the encounter acknowledge itself, give him the vent of his might; he may compel him to her recomposition; and here, this is your brother, and your untainted, the poor Mariana advantaged, and the corrupt deputy scaled. The maid will I frame, and make fit for his attempt. If you think well to carry this, as you may, the deslims of the benefit defends the deceit from reproach. What think you of it?

Isab. The image of it gives me content already; and, I trust, it will grow to a most prosperous perfection.

Duke. It lies much in your holding up: Hast you speedily to Angelo; for this night he entertaineth his bed, give him promise of satisfaction. I will presently to St. Luke's; there, at the mosted grange resides this dejected Mariana: At that place call upon me; and despatch with Angelo, that it may be quickly.

Isab. I thank you for this comfort; Fare you well, good father.

[Exit severally.

SCENE II.—The Street before the Prison.

Enter Duke, as a Friar; to him Elbow, Clown, and Officers.

Elb. Nay, if there be no remedy for it, but that you will lose your money, the men and women like beasts, we shall have all the world drink browne and white bastard.

Duke. 0, heavens! what stuff is here?

Elb. Thou art merry, 0, Artful dog, of two mewris, the merriest was put down, and the worser allow'd by order of law a fur'd gown to keep him warm; and fur'd with fox and lamb-skins too, to signify, that craft, being richer than innocency, stands for the facing.

Isab. Come your way, sir;—Bless you, good father friar.

Duke. And you, good brother father: What effects will this man make you, sir?

Elb. Marry, sir, he hath offended the law; and, sir, we take him to be a thief too; sir; for we have found upon him, sir, a strange pick-lock, with which he is sent to the death, to death.

Duke. Fye, sirrah; a bawd, a wicked bawd! The evil that thou canst be done, That is thy means to live. Do thou but think What 'tis to cram a maw, or clothe a back, With the tears of Fools? For this, say to them! From their abominable and beastly touches I drink, I eat, array myself, and live. Canst thou believe thy living is a life, So thy tears are bought? Go, mend, go, mend.

Clo. Indeed, it does stink in some sort, sir; but yet, sir, I would prove Duke. Nay, if the devil have given thee proofs for sin, Thou wilt prove his. Take him to prison, officer; Correction and instruction must both work, Else his rude beast will profit.

Elb. He must before the deputy, sir; he has given him warning: the deputy cannot abide a whoremaster; if he be a whoremonger, and comes to him, he were as good go a mile on his errand.

Duke. That we were all, as some would seem to be, Free from our faults, as faults from seeming, free!

Enter Lucio.

Elb. His neck will come to your waist, a cord, sir. Clo. I say comfort; I cry, bail: Here's a gentleman, and a friend of mine.

Lucio. How now, noble Pompey? What, at the heels of Caesar? Art thou led in triumph? What, is there none of Pygmalion's images, newly made woman, to be had now, for putting the hand in the pocket and extracting it clutch'd? What reply? Ha? What say'st thou to this tune, matter, and method? Is't not drown'd i' the last rain? Ha? What say'st thou, trot? Is the world as it was, man? Which is the way? Is it sad, and few words? Or is the trick of it.

Duke. Still thus, and thus! still worse!

Lucio. How doth my dear morsel, thy mistress? Procures she still? I'll?

Clo. Troth, sir, she hath eaten up all her beef, and she is here in the tub.

Lucio. Why, 'tis good; it is the right of it: it must be so: Ever your fresh whore, and your pow'der'd bawd: An unshunn'd consequence; it must be so: Art going to prison, Pompey?

Clo. Yes, faith, sir.

Lucio. Why 'tis not amiss, Pompey: Farewell; Go; say, I sent thee thither. For debt, Pompey? Or not?

Elb. For being a bawd, for being a bawd.

Lucio. Well, then imprison him: If imprison- ment be the due of a bawd, why, 'tis his right: Bawd is he, doubtless, and of antiquity too: bawd-born. Farewell, good Pompey: Command me to the prison, Pompey: You will turn good husband now, Pompey; you will keep the house.

Clo. I hope, sir, your good worship will be my bail.

Lucio. No, indeed, will I not, Pompey; it is not the wear. I will pray, Pompey, to increase your bondage: if you take it not patiently, why, your mettle is the more: Adieu, trusty Pompey.—Bless you, friar.

Duke. And you.

Lucio. Does Bridget paint still, Pompey? Ha?

Elb. Come your ways, sir; come.

Clo. You will not bail me then, sir?

Lucio. Then, Pompey? nor now.—What news abroad, friar? What news?

Elb. Come your ways, sir; come.

Lucio. Go, to kennel, Pompey, go: [Exeunt Elbow, Pompey, and Officers.]

What news, friar, of the duke?

Duke. I know none: Can you tell me of any? Lucio. Some say he is with the emperor of Russia; other some, he is in Rome: But where is he, think you?

Duke. I know not where: But wheresoever, I wish him well.

Lucio. It was a mad fantastical trick of him, to steal from the state, and usurp the beggary he was never born to. Lord Angelo dukes it well in his absence; he puts transgression to't.

Duke. But he does well in it.

Lucio. A little more lenity to lecheroy would do no harm in him: something too crabbled that way, friar.

Duke. It is too general a vice, and severity must cure it.

Lucio. Yes, in good sooth, the vice is of a great kindred; it is well ally'd: but it is impossible to extrip it quite, friar, till eating and drinking be put down. They say, this Angelo was not made by man and woman, after the downright way of creation: Is it true, think you?

Duke. How is the duke made then?

Lucio. Some report, a sea-maid spawn'd him:— Some, that he was begot between two stock-fishes:—But it is certain, that when he makes water, his nature is confused against that. I know he to be true: and he is a motion ungenerative, that's infallible.

Duke. You are pleasant, sir; and speak apace.

Lucio. Why, what a ruthless thing is this in him, for the rebellion of a cod-piece, to take away the life of a man? Would the duke, that is absent, have done this? Ere he would have hang'd a man for the getting a hundred bastards, he would have paid for the nursing a thousand: He had some feeling of the sport; he knew the service, and that instructed him to mercy.

Duke. I never heard the absent duke much detected for women; he was not inclined that way.

Lucio. O, sir, you are deceived.

Duke. 'Tis not possible.

Lucio. Who? not the duke? yes, your beggar of fifty:—and his use was, to put a ducat in her clack-dish: the duke had crotchets in him: He would be drunken of that, that let me inform you.

Lucio. Sir, I was an inward of his: A shy fellow was the duke: and, I believe, I know the cause of his withdrawal.

Duke. What, I pray thee, might be the cause?

Lucio. No,—pardon;—'tis a secret must be lock'd within the teeth and the lips: but this I can let you understand,—The greater file of the subject held the duke to be a villain.

Duke. Wise? why, no question but he was.

Lucio. A very superficial, ignorant, unweighing fellow.

Duke. Either this is envy in you, folly, or mistaking; the very stream of his life, and the business he hath helmed, must, upon a warranted need, give him a better proclamation. Let him be but testified in his own bringings forth, and he shall appear to the envious, a scholar, a statesman, and a soldier: Therefore, you speak unskillfully; or, if your knowledge be more, it is much darken'd in your malice.

Lucio. Sir, I know him, and I love him.

Duke. Love talks with better knowledge, and knowledges with dearer love.

Lucio. Come, sir, I know what I know.

Duke. I trust you know not what you speak. But, if ever the duke return, (as our prayers are he may,) let me desire you to make your answer before him: If it he honest you have spoke, you have courage to maintain it: I am bound to call upon you; and, I pray you, your name?

Lucio. Sir, my name is Lucio; well known to the duke.

Duke. He shall know you better, sir, if I may live to report you.

Lucio. I fear you not.

Duke. O, you hope the duke will return no more: or you imagine too sartorial an opposite. But, indeed, I can do you little harm: you'll forswear this again.

Lucio. I'll be hang'd first: thou art deceiv'd in me, friar. But no more of this: Canst thou tell, if Claudio die to-morrow, or no?

Duke. Why should he die, sir?

Lucio. Why? for filling a bottle with a tun-dish. I would, the duke, we talk of, were return'd again: this ungenerit agent will unpeople this province with continency; sparrows must not build in his house-saves, because they are lecherous. The duke yet would have dark deeds darkly answer'd; he would have other to light: would he were return'd! Marry, this Claudio is condemn'd for untrussing. Farewell, good friar; I pray thee, pray for me. The duke, I say to thee again, would eat
M. I. art

Enter Escalus, Provost, Bawd, and Officers.

Escal. Go, away with her to prison.

Bawd. Good my lord, be good to me; your honour is accommodated a miserable wench: good my lord.

Escal. Double and treble admonition, and still forfeit in the same kind? This would make mercy swear, and play the tyrant.

Prov. A bawd of eleven years' continuance, may it please your honour.

Bawd. My lord, this is one Lucia's information against me; mistress Kate Keep-down was with child by him in the duke's time, he promised her marriage; his child is a year and a quarter old, come I have kept it myself; and see how he goes about to abuse me.

Escal. That fellow is a fellow of much licence — let him be called before us. — Away with her to prison: tie to; no bawd in the world shall be suffered [Escal and Officers.] Provost, my brother Angelo will not be alter'd, Claudio must die to-morrow! let him be furnish'd with diverses, and have all charitable preparation; if my brother were not by my pity, it should not be so with him.

Prov. So please you, this fair hath been with him, and advised him for the entertainment of death.

Escal. Good even, good father.

Duke. Bliss and goodness on you!

Escal. Of whom are you?

Duke. Not of this country, though my chance is to use it for my time; I am a brother [now of gracious order, late come from the see, in special business from his holiness.

Escal. What news abroad 't the world?

Duke. None, but that there is so great a fever on goodness, that the dissolution of it must cure it: novelty is only in request; and it is as dangerous to be aged in any kind of course, as it is virtuous to be constant in it. There is scarce truth enough alive, to make societies secure; but security enough, to make fellowshipss accursed; much upon this riddle runs the wisdom of the world. This news is old enough, yet it is every day news; I pray you, sir, of what disposition was the duke?

Escal. One, that, above all other strifes, contended especially to know himself.

Duke. What pleasure was be given to?

Escal. Rather rejoicing to see another merry, than merry at any thing which profess'd to make him rejoice: a gentleman of all temperance. But leave we him to his events, with a prayer they may prove prosperous; and let me desire to know how you find Claudio prepared. I am made to understand, that you have lent him visitation.

Duke. He professes to have received no sinister messages from his judges, but most willingly submits himself to the determination of justice: yet had he framed to himself, by the instruction of his frailty, many deceiving promises of life; which I, by my good leisure, have discredited to him, and now is he resolved to die.

Escal. You have paid the heavens your function, and the prisoner the very debt of your calling. I have labour'd for the poor gentleman, to the extreme of my patience; but all my brother justice have I found so severe, that he hath forced me to tell him, he is indeed — justice.

Duke. If his own life answer the strictness of his principles, how will he become himself? wherein, if he chance to fall, he hath sentenced himself.

Exit. I am going to visit the prisoners; I dare you well.

Duke. Peace be with you!

Escal. Escalus and Provost. He, who the sword of heaven will bear, Should be as holy as severe; Pattern in himself an example; and strong, Grace to stand, and virtue go; More nor less to others paying, Than by self-offences weighing, Shame to him, whose cruel striking K'ts for faults of his own liking! Twice treble shame on Angelo, To weed my vice, and let his grow' — O what may man within him hide, Though angel on the outward side! How may likeness, made in crimes, Making practice on the times, Draw with idle spiders' strings Most pomeous and substantial things! Craft against vice I must apply: With Angelo to night shall lie His old betrothed, but despised; So disguise shall, by the disguised, Pay with falsehood false exacting, And perform an old contracting. — [Exit]

ACT IV.

SCENE I. — A Room in Mariana's House.

Mariana discovered sitting; a Boy singing.

SONG.

Take, oh take those lips away,
That so sweetly were forsworn;
And those eyes, the break of day,
Lights that do mislead the worm:
But my kisses bring again,
Seals of love, but cold in vein,
Cold in vein.

Mari. Break off thy song, and haste thee quick away; Here comes a man of comfort, whose advice
Hast often still'd my bewailing discontent. — [Exit Boy.

Enter Duke.

Duke. I cry you mercy, sir; and well would wish You had not found me here so musical — Let me excuse me, and believe me so; — My mirth it much displeas'd, but please'd my woe.

Duke. It goes: though music oft hath such a charm,
To make bad good, and good provoke to harm. I pray you, tell me, have any body inquired for me here to-day? much upon this time have I promised here to meet.

Mari. You have not been inquired after: I have sat here all day.

Enter Isabella.

Isab. I do constantly believe you: — The time is come, even now. I shall crave your forbearance a little; may be, I will call upon you anon, for some advantage to yourself.

Mari. I am always bound to you. — [Exit.

Duke. Very well met, and welcome.

What is the news from this good deputy? — Isab. He hath a garden circumstanced with brick, Whose western side is with a vineyard back'd; And to that vineyard is a planted gate, That makes his opening with this bigger key: This other door command a little door, Which from the vineyard to the garden leads; There have I made my promise to call on him, Upon the heavy middle of the night.

Duke. But shall you on your knowledge find this way? —

Isab. I have taken a cue and wary note upon;
Act 4. MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

With whispering and most guilty diligence,
In action all of precept, he did show me
The way twice o'er.

Duke. Are there no other tokens
Between you 'greed, concerning her observance?
Isab. No, none, but only a repair 'tis dark;
And that I have possess'd him, my most stay
Can be but brief: for I have made him know,
I have a servant comes with me along,
That stands upon me; whose persuasion is,
I come about my brother.

Duke. 'Tis well borne up.
I have not yet made known to Mariana
A word of this:—What, ho! within! come forth!

Re-enter Mariana.

I pray you be acquainted with this maid;
She comes to do you good.
Isab. I do desire the like.

Duke. Do you persuade yourself, that I respect you?

Marti. Good friar, I know you do; and have Duke. Take then this your companion by the hand,
Who hath a story ready for your ears:
I shall attend your leisure; but make haste;
The vipers' night approaches.

Marti. Will you please you walk aside?

[Exeunt Mariana and Isabella.

Duke. O place and greatness, millions of false.

Are stuck upon thee! volumes of report (eyes
R外出! these false and most contrarious guests.
Upon thy doings! thousand 'scopes of wit
Make thee the father of their idle dream,
And rack thee in their fancies!—Welcome! How agreed?

Re-enter Mariana and Isabella.

Isab. She'll take the enterprise upon her, father,
If you advise it.

Duke. It is not my consent,
But my intreaty too.

Isab. When you depart from him, but, soft and low,
Remember now my brother.

Marti. Fear me not.

Duke. Nor, gentle daughter, fear you not at all:
He is your husband on a pre-contract;
To bring you thus together, 'tis no sin;
Sith that the justice of your title to him
Doth flourish the deceit. Come, let us go:
Our corn's to reap, for yet our thite's to sow.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room in the Prison.

Enter Provost and Clown.

Prov. Come hither, sirrah: Can you cut off a man's head?

Cl. If the man be a bachelor, sir; I can: but if he be a married man, he is his wife's head; and I cannot cut off a woman's head.

Prov. Come, sir, leave me your snatches, and yield me a direct answer. To-morrow morning are to die Claudio and Barnardine: Here is in our prison a common executioner, who in his office lacks a helper: if you will take it on you to assist him, it shall redeem you from your guines; if not, you shall have your full time of imprisonment, and your deliverance with an unplied whipping; for you have been a notorious bawd.

Cl. Sir, I have been an unlawful bawd, time out of mind; but yet I will be content to be a lawful bawd, if I might be good to receive some instruction from my fellow partner.

Prov. What ho, Abhorson! Where's Abhorson, there?

Enter Abhorson.

Abhor. Do you call, sir?

Prov. Sirrah, here's a fellow will help you to-morrow in your execution: If you think it meet, compound with him by the year, and let him abide here with you; if not, use him for the present, and dismiss him: He cannot plead his estimation with you; he hath been a bawd.

Abhor. A bawd, sir? Fye upon him, he will discredit our mystery.

Prov. Go to, sir; you weigh equally; a feather will turn the scale.

Exeunt.

Cl. Pray, sir, by your good favour, (for, surely, sir, a good favour you have, but that you have a hanging look,) do you call, sir, your occupation a mystery?

Abhor. Ay, sir; a mystery.

Cl. Painting, sir, I have heard say, is a mystery; and you have entered, sir, being members of my occupation, using painting, do prove my occupation a mystery: but what mystery there should be in hanging, if I should be hang'd, I cannot imagine.

Abhor. Sir, it is a mystery.

Cl. Proof.

Abhor. Every true man's apparel fits your thief: If it be too little for your thief, your true man thinks it big enough; if it be too big for your thief, your thief thinks it little enough; so every true man's apparel fits your thief.

Re-enter Provost.

Prov. Are you agreed?

Cl. Sir, I will serve him; for I do find, your hangman is a more penitent trade than your bawd; he doth oftener ask forgiveness.

Prov. You, sirrah, provide your block and your axe, to-morrow four o'clock.

Abhor. Come on, bawd; I will instruct thee in my trade; follow.

Cl. I do desire to learn, sir; and, I hope, if you have occasion to use me for your own turn, you shall find me yare: for, truly sir, for your kindness, I owe you a good turn.

Prov. Call hither Barnardine and Claudio:—[Exeunt Clown and Abhorson.

One has my pitty; not a jot the other,
Being a murderer, though he were my brother.

Enter Claudio.

Look, here's the warrant, Claudio, for thy death: 'Tis now dead midnight, and by eight to-morrow Thou must be made immortal. Where's Barnardine?

[labour

Claud. As fast lock'd up in sleep, as guiltless When it lies starkly in the traveller's bones: He will not wake.

Prov. Who can do good on him?

Well, go, prepare yourself. But hark, what noise?

Knocking within.

Heaven give your spirits comfort!—[Exit Claudio.

By and by—

I hope it is some pardon, or reprieve,
For the most gentle Claudio.—Welcome, father.

Enter Duke.

Duke. The best and wholesomest spirits of the night [late?

Envelop you, good provost! Who called here of Prov. None, since the curb rung.

Duke.

Prov. No.

Duke. They will then, er't be long.

Prov. What comfort is for Claudio?

Duke. There's some in hope.

Prov. It is a bitter deputy.

Duke. Not so, not so; his life is parallel'd

With the stroke and line of his great justice;
He doth with holy abstinence subdue
That in himself, which he spurs on his power
To qualify in others: were he meat'd
With that which he corrects, then were he ty-rannous: But this being so, he's just.—Now are they come.—

[Knocking within.—Provost goes out.

This is a gentle provost: Seldom, when

G 2
The steed of youth is the friend of men.
How now? What noise? That spirit's possess'd
With haste, and seems to chide, and shakes and strokes.
That wounds the unerring poet with these
Provost returns, speaking to one at the door.
Prov. There he must stay, until the officer
Approves me. What must I l[d?] up?
Duke. Have you no countermand for Claudius yet,
But he must die to-morrow?
Prov. None, sir, none.
Duke. As near the dawning, Provost, as it is,
You'll hear more ere morning. Happy,
You something know; yet, I believe, there comes
No countermand; no such example have we;
Beside, upon the very siege of justice,
Lord Angelo hath to the public ear
Proved the contrary.

Enter a Messenger.
Duke. This is his lordship's man.
Prov. And here comes Claudius's pardon.
Mess.

For which the pardoner himself is in
Hence hath observed his quick enmity,
When it is borne in high authority
When vice makes money, money so extended,
That for the fault's love, is the offender friended.
Now, sir, what news?
Prov. I told you; Lord Angelo, believe, thinking Me remiss in mine office, awakens me with this unprompted speech, strangely: for his hath not used it before.
Duke. Pray you, let's hear.
Prov. [Reads.] Whosoever you may have in the contrary, let Claudius be executed by fire of the clock, and, in the afternoon, Barnardine; for my better satisfaction, let me have Claudius's head sent me by five.
Let this be duly performed: with a thought, that more depends on it than we must not deliver.
Thus fall not to do your office, as you will answer it at your peril.
What say you to this, sir?
Duke. What is that Barnardine, who is to be executed in the afternoon?
Prov. He is a learned man; but here named up and bred; one that is a prisoner nine years old.
Duke. How came it, that the absent Duke had not either deliver'd him to his liberty, or executed him?
Prov. His friends and means were too weak, to move him to execution; and showed him a seeming warrant for it: he hath not moved him at all.
Duke. Be he borne himself penitent in prison?
Prov. Most manifest, and not denied by himself.
Duke. Hath he borne himself penitent in prison?

A man that apprehends death no more dreadful, than dying steep: careless, reckless, and fearless of what's past, present, or to come; insensible of mortality, and desperately mortal.
Duke. He wants advice.
Prov. And he is at a loss, or else he hath evermore had the liberty of the prison: give him leave to escape hence, he would not; drunk many times a day, if not many days entirely drunk. We have very often advised him to leave the Duke to execute him, and showed him a seeming warrant for it: he hath not moved him at all.

Duke. Mine of him anon. There is written in your brow, Provost, honesty and constancy; if I read it not truly, my ancient skill beguilles me: but in the boldness of my cunning, I will lay myself in hazard. Claudius, where here you have a warrant to execute, is no greater forfeit to the law than Angelo who hath sentenced him: To make you understand this in a manifested effect, I crave but four days' respite; for the which you are to do me both present and a dangerous courtesy.

Prov. I'll see, sir, in what?

Duke. In the delaying death.

Prov. Alack! how may I do? having the hour limited; and an express command, under penalty,
Duke. But the delay which I am to make my case as Claudius', to cross this in the smallest.

Duke. By the word of mine order, I warrant you, if you may, and may be your guide. Let this Barnardine be this morning executed, and his head borne to Angelo.

Prov. Angelo hath seen them both, and will discover the favour.
Duke. O, death's a great disguiser; and you may add to it. Shave the head, and tie the beard; and say, it was the desire of the penitent to be so bared before his death: You know, the course is common. If any thing fail to you upon this, more than thanks and good fortune, by the saint whom I profess, I will plead against it with my life.
Prov. Pardon me, good father: it is against my oath.

Duke. Were you sworn to the duke, or to the deputy?
Prov. To him, and to his substitutes.
Duke. You will think you have made no offence, if the Duke doth execute the justice of your holding?
Prov. But what likelihood is in that?
Duke. Not a resemblance, but a certainty. Yet since I view fearful, that neither my coat, inte-

Act 4.
Act 4.  MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

Clo. Master Barnardine! you must rise and be hang'd, master Barnardine!

Abhor. What, ho, Barnardine! -

Barnar. [Within.] Who's there? Who's o' your threats! Who makes that noise there? What are you? Clo. Your friends, sir; the hangman: You must be so good, sir, to rise and be put to death.

Barnar. [Within.] Away, you rogue, away; I am sleepy.

Abhor. Tell him, he must awake, and that quickly too.

Clo. Fray, master Barnardine, awake till you are executed, and sleep afterwards.

Abhor. Go in to him, and fetch him out.

Clo. He is coming, sir, he is coming; I hear his straw rustle.

Enter Barnardine.

Abhor. Is the axe upon the block, sirrah?

Clo. Very ready, sir.

Barnar. How now, Abhorson? what's the news with you?

Abhor. Truly, sir, I would desire you to clap into your prayers; for, look you, the warrant's come.

Barnar. You rogue, I have been drinking all night, I am not fit to advise. Clo. O, the better, sir; for he that drinks all night, and is hang'd betimes in the morning, may sleep the sounder all the next day.

Enter Duke.

Abhor. Look you, sir, here comes your ghostly father! Do we jest now, think you?

Duke. Sir, induced by my charity, and hearing how basely you are to depart, I am come to advise you, comfort you, and pray with you.

Barnar. Friar, not I; I have been drinking hard all night, and I will have more time to prepare my soul, or they shall beat out my brains with billets; I will not consent to die this day, that's certain.

Duke. O, sir, you must; and therefore, I beseech you, Look forward on the journey you shall go. [you, Barnar. I swear, I will not die to-day for any man's persuasion.

Duke. But hear you, sir,

Barnar. Not a word; if you have any thing to say to me, come to my ward; for thence will not I to-day.

Enter Provost.

Prov. Now, sir, how do the prisoner?

Duke. A captive, unprepared, unmeet for death; And, to transport him in the mind he is, Were damnable.

Prov. After him, fellows; bring him to the block.

[Exeunt Abhorson and Clown.

Prov. Here in the prison, father, Then this morning of a cruel fever

One Ragozine, a most notorious pirate, A man of Claudia's years; his beard, and head, Just of his colour: What if we do omit This repose, till he were well inclined; And satisfy the deputy with the visage Of Ragozine, more like to Claudia?

Duke. O, 'tis an accident that heaven provides! Despatch it presently; the hour draws on Predicted by Angelo: See, this be done, And sent according to command; whiles I Persuade this rude wretch willingly to die.

Prov. This shall be done, good father, presently. But Barnardine must die this afternoon: And how shall we continue Claudia? To save me from the danger that might come, If he were known alive?

Duke. Let this be done;—Put them in secret cells.

Both Barnardine and Claudia: Ere twice

The sun hath made his journal going to The under generation, you shall find Your safety manifested.

Prov. I am your free dependant.

Duke. Quick, despatch, And send the head to Angelo. [Exit Provost.

Duke. Now will I write letters to Angelo,—

The provost, he shall bear them,—whose con- Shall witness to him, I am near at home; [tents And that, by great injunctions, I am bound To enter publickly: him I'll desire To meet at the consecrated font, To issue out in安东尼奥: A league below the city; and from thence, By cold gradation and weal-balanced form, We shall proceed with Angelo.

Re-enter Provost.

Prov. Here is the head; I'll carry it myself.

Duke. Convenient is it: Make a swift return; For I would commune with you of such things, That want no ear but yours. I'll make all speed.

Isab. [Within.] Peace, ho, be here!

Duke. The tongue of Isabel!—She's come to know, if yet her brother's pardon be come hither: But I will keep her ignorant of her good fortune, To make her heavenly comforts of despair When it is least expected.

Enter Isabella.

Isab. Ho, by your leave.

Duke. Good morning to you, fair and gracious daughter.

Isab. The better, given me by so holy a man. Hath yet the deputy sent my brother's pardon?

Duke. He hath released him, Isabel; from the His head is off, and sent to Angelo. [world; Isab. Nay, but it is not so.

Duke. It is no other:

Show your wisdom, daughter, in your close pa- tience.

Isab. O, I will to him, and pluck out his eyes.

Duke. You shall not be admitted to his sight.

Isab. Unhappy Claudia! Wretched Isabel! Injurious world! Most damned Angelo! Duke. This nor hurts him nor profits you a jot: Forbear it therefore; give your cause to heaven. Mark what I say; which you shall find By every syllable, a faithful verity: The duke comes home to-morrow;—nay, dry your One of our convent, and his confessor, [eyes; Gives me this instance: Already he hath carried Notice to Escalus and Angelo;

Who do prepare to meet him at the gates, There to give up their power. If you can, pace your wisdom In that good path that I would wish it go; And you shall have your bosom on this wretch, Grace of the duke, revenges to your heart, And general honour.

Isab. This letter then to Friar Peter give;

Tis that he sent me of the duke's return: Say, by this token, I desire his company At Mariiana's house to-night. Her cause, and yours, I'll perfect him withal; and he shall bring you Before the duke; and to the head of Angelo Accuse him home, and home. For my poor self, I am combined by a sacred vow, And shall be absent. Wed you with this letter: Command these fretting waters from your eyes With a light heart; trust not my holy order, If I pervert your course.—Who's here.

Enter Lucio.

Lucio. Good even!

Friar, where is the provost?

Duke. Not within, sir.

Lucio. O, pretty Isabella, I am pale at mine heart, to see thine eyes so red: thou must be pa- tient: I am faint to dine and sup with water and bran; I dare not for my health fill my belly; one fruitful meal would set me to't: But they say the duke will be here to-morrow. By my troth, Isabel, I love thy brother: if the old fantastical duke of dark corners had been at home, he had lived.

[Exit Isabella.]

Duke. Sir, the duke is marvellous little beholden to your reports: but the best is, he lives not in them.

Lucio. Friar, thou knowest not the duke so well as I do: he's a better woodman than thou hast him for.

Duke. Well, you'll answer this one day. Fare ye well.

Lucio. Nay, tarry; I'll go along with thee; I can tell thee pretty tales of the duke.

Duke. You have told me too many of him already, sir, if they be true; if not true, none were enough.

Lucio. I was once before him for getting a wench with child.

Duke. Did you such a thing?

Lucio. Yes, sir, d'ye think I was fain to swear it; they would else have married me to the rotten medlar.

Duke. Sir, your company is fainer than honest. Best be said.

Lucio. By my troth, I'll go with thee to the lane's end; if bawdy talk offend you, we'll have very little of it; Nay, friar, I am a kind of burr, I shall stick. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—A Room in Angelo's House.

Enter Angelo and Escalus.

Escal. Every letter he hath writ hath disvouched other.

Ang. In most unseem and distracted manner: His actions show much like to madness: pray heaven, his wisdom be not tainted! And why he meet them at the gait, and te-deliver our authorities there.

Escal. I guess not.

Ang. And why should we proclaim it in an hour before his entering, that, if any grave redress of injustice, they should exhibit their petitions in the street?

Escal. He shows his reason for that: to have a despatch of complaints: and to deliver us from devices hereafter, which shall then have no power to stand against us.

Ang. Well, I beseech you, let it be proclaimed: Betimes I'the morn, I'll call at your house: give notice to such men of sort and suit, As are to meet him.

Escal. I shall, sir; fare you well. [Exit.]

Ang. Good night.—[narr.]

This deed unshames me quite, makes me unprogeny: And dull to all proceedings. A daughter'd maid! And by an eminient body, that enforced the law against it!—But that her tender shame Will not proclaim against her maiden loss, How might she tongue me? Yet reason dares have none:

For my authority bears a credible blight, That I particularly scandal once can touch, But it confounds the breather. He should have been.

Save that his riotous youth, with dangerous sense, Might, in the times to come, have taken revenge, By so receiving a dishonour'd life, With ransom of such shame. 'Would yet he had lived!

Alack, when once our grace we have forgot, Nothing goes right; we would, and we would not. [Exit.]

SCENE V.—Fields without the Town.

Enter Duke in his own habit, and Friar Peter.

Duke. These letters at fit time deliver me. [Giving letters.]

Though sometimes you do debunk from this to that, As cause doth minister. Go, call at Flavius' house, and tell him where I stay; give the like notice To Valentinus, Rowland, and to Gratus.

And bid them bring the trumpets to the gate: But send me Flavius first.

F. Peter. It shall be speeded well.

[Exit Friar.

Enter Varrius.

Duke. I thank thee, Varrius; thou hast made good haste: Come, we will walk: There's other of our friends Will greet us here anon, my gentle Varrius. [Exit Varrius.

SCENE VI.—Street near the City Gate.

Enter Isabella and Mariana.

Isab. To speak so indirectly, I am loath; I would say the truth: but to accuse him, That is your part: yet I'm advised to do it; He says, to tell full purpose.

Mard. Be said it by him. Isab. Besides, he tells me, that if peradventure He speak against me on the adverse side, I should not think it strange; for 'tis a physic, That it's better to sweet end.

Mard. I would, friar Peter—

Isab. O, peace; the friar is come.

Enter Friar Peter.

F. Peter. Come, I have found you out a stand most fit.

Where you may have such vantage on the duke, He shall not find you; Twice have the trumpets sounded it.

The generous and gravest citizens Have bent the gates, and very near upon

The duke is enquiring, therefore hence, away. [Exit.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—A publick Place near the City Gate.

Mariana (voted,) Isabella, and Peter, of a distance. Enter at opposite doors: Duke, Varrius, Lords; Angelo, Escalus, Lucio, Provost, Officers, and Citizens.

Duke. My very worthy cousin, fairly met:—

Our old and faithful friend, we are glad to see you. Ang. and Escal. Happy return be to your royal grace.

Duke. Many and hearty thankings to you both. We have made inquiry of you; and we hear Such goodness of your justice, that our soul Cannot but yield you forth to public thank, Forerunning more requital.

Ang. You make my bonds still greater.

Duke. O, your desert speaks loud; and I should wrong it.

To lock it in the wards of covert bosom, When it deserves with characters of brass A forted residence, 'gainst the tooth of time, And raze of oblivion. Give me your hand, Sir Peter, and let me see, to make them know That outward courtesies would fain proclaim Favour that keep within.—Come, Escalus; You must walk by us on our other hand; And good supporters are you.

Peter and Isabella come forward. F. Peter. Now is your time; speak loud, and be heard before him.

Isab. Justice, I royal duke! Vail your regard Upon a wrong'd, I'd fain have said, a maid! O worthy prince, dishonour not your eye By throwing it on any other object, Till you have heard me in my true complaint, And given me, justice, justice, justice, justice

Duke. Relate your wrongs: In what? By whom? Be brief: Here is lord Angelo shall give you justice! Reveal yourself to him. O, worthy duke, you bid me seek redemption of the devil: Hear me yourself; for that which I must speak Must either punish me, not being belied, or wring redress from you: hear me, O, hear me, Ang. My lord, her wits, I fear me, are not firm: She hath been a suitor to me for her brother, Cut off by course of justice! Isab. It. By course of justice? Ang. And she will speak most bitterly, and strange.

Isab. Most strange, but yet most truly, will I speak: That Angelo’s forecast; is it not strange? That Angelo’s a murderer; isn’t it strange? That Angelo is an adulterous thief, An hypocrite, a virgin-violator; Is it not strange, and strange? Duke. Nay, ten times strange. Isab. It is not truer he is Angelo, Than this is all as true as it is strange: Nay, it is ten times true; for truth is truth To the end of reckoning. Duke. Away with her:—Poor soul, She speaks this in the infirmity of sense.

Isab. O prince, I judge, she tells the truth, as thou believest: There is another comfort from this world, That thou neglect me not, with that opinion, That I am touch’d with madness; make not it impossible That which but seems unlike: ’tis not impossible But one, the wicked’st ruffian on the ground, May seem as shy, as grave, as just, as absolute, As Angelo; even so may Angelo, In all his dressings, characters, titles, forms, Be an arch-villain; believe it, royal prince, If he be less, he’s nothing; but he’s more, Had I more name for sadness. Duke. By mine honesty, If she be mad, as I believe no other, Her madness hath the oddest frame of sense, Such a dependency of thing on thing, As I, I heard in madness. Isab. O, gracious duke, Harp not on that: nor do not banish reason For inequality; but let your reason serve To make the truth appear, where it seems hid; And hide the false, seems true.

Duke. Many that are not mad, Have, sure, more lack of reason.—What would Isab. I am the sister of one Claudio, [you say] Considering it was upon the act of fornication To lose his head; condemn’d by Angelo: I, in probation of a sisterhood, Was sent to by my brother. One Lucio As then the messenger:—

Lucio. That’s I, an’t like your grace: I came to her from Claudio, and desir’d her To try her gracious fortune with Lord Angelo, For her poor brother’s pardon. That’s he, indeed. Duke. You were not bid to speak. Lucio. No, my good lord; Nor wish’d to hold my peace. Duke. I wish you now then: Pray you, take note of it: and when you have A business for yourself, pray heaven, you then be perfect. Isab. I warrant your honour. Duke. The warrant’s for yourself; take heed to it. Isab. This gentleman told somewhat of my tale. Lucio. Right. Duke. It may be right; but you are in the wrong To speak before your time.—Proceed.

Isab. To this pernicious caitiff deputy. Duke. That’s somewhat madly spoken.
These poor informal women are no more
But instruments of some more mitlimiter member,
That flings them up, and mult the man's worth and credit, Compact with her that's gone! think't thou, thy oath;

[men.
Though they would sweat down each particular fulishment against his worth, and credit,
That's so well in approbation?—You, lord Escalus, but with my cousin; lend him your kind pains
To find out this abuse, whence 'tis deriv'd—

[Their mother firm that set them on;
Let him be sent for.
F. Pater. Would he be here, my lord; for be indeed,

Hath set the women on to this complaint:
Your provost knows the place where he abides,
And be may fetch him.

And you, my noble and well-warranted cousin,
Whom it concerns to hear this matter forth,
Do with your injuries as seems you best,
In any chastisement: I for a while
Will leave you; but stir not you, till you have well
Decis'd whether these slanderous words
Were spoken by this friar, or by her private friend.

Escalus. My lord, we'll do it thoroughly.—[Exit Duke.
Signior Lucio, did not you say, you knew
That friar Lodowick to be a dishonest person?

Lucio. This is a monstrous woman—honest in nothing, but in his clothes; and one that hath spoke most villainous speeches of the duke.

Escalus. We shall entreat you to abide here till he come, and enforce them against him: we shall find this friar a notable fellow,

Lucio. As any in Vienna, on my word.

Escalus. Call that same Isabel here once again;
[to an Attendant.] I would speak with her: I pray you, take a man, give me leave to question; you shall see how I'll handle her.

Lucio. Not better than he, by her own report.

Escalus. Nay you.

Lucio. Very, sir, I think, if you handled her privately, she would sooner confess: perchance, publicly, she'll be ashamed.

Re-enter Officers with Isabel; the Duke in the Friar's habit, and Provost.

Escalus. I will go darkly to work with her.

Lucio. That's the way; for women are light at midnight.

[Enter Come on mistress: [To Isabel.] Here's a gentlewoman denies all that you have said.

Lucio. My lord, here comes the rascal I spoke of;
here with the provost.

Duke. In very good time: speak not you to him, till we call upon you.

Lucio. Morn.

Escalus. Come, sir; Did you set these women on to slander lord Angelo? they have confess'd you did.

Duke. 'Tis false.

Escalus. How! know you where you are?

Duke. Respect to your great place! and let the provost

Be sometime honour'd for his burning throne;—
Where is the duke? 'tis he should hear me speak.

Escalus. The duke's in us; and we will hear you speaking.

[Enter.
I look, you speak justly.

Duke. Boldly, at least: But, O, poor soul,
Come you to seek the lamb here of the fox

Escalus. What is your redress? Is the duke gone?

Duke. Then is your cause gone too. The duke's unjust,
Thus to retort your manifest appeal,
And put your trial in the villain's mouth,
While your own case comes to accuse.

Lucio. This is the rascal: this he I spoke of.

Escalus. Why, thou unrevenged and unhallowed friar?

Ist' not enough, thou hast suborn'd these women, To accuse this worthy man; but, in foul mouth, And in the witness of his proper ear, To call him villain? And then to glance from him to the duke himself; To tax him with injustice? Take him hence; To the rack with him.—We'll touze you joint by joint, But we will know this purpose:—What! unjust? Duke. Be not so hot; = the duke Death, I will so stretch this linger of mine, than he. Dare rack his own: his subject am I not, Nor here provincial: My business in this state Made me a looker-on here in Vienna, With hearing be my eye, and bubble, Till it o'er-run the stew: laws for all faults; But faults so countenanced, that the strong statutes Stand like the forfeits in a barber's shop, As much in mock as mark. Escal. Slander to the state! Away with him to prison. Ang. What can you vouch against him, signior? Is this the man that you did tell us of? [Lucio. Lucio. 'Tis he, my lord. Come hither good-man bale-pate: Do you know me? Duke. I remember you, sir, by the sound of your voice: I met you at the prison, in the absence of the duke. Lucio. O did you so? And do you remember what you said of the duke? Duke. Most notedly, sir. Lucio. Do you deny so, sir? And was the duke a flesh-monger, a fool, and a coward, as you then reported him to be? Duke. You must, sir, change persons with me, ere you make that my report: you, indeed, spoke so of him: and much more, much worse. Lucio. O thou damnable fellow! Did not I pluck thee by the nose, for thy speeches? Duke. I protest, I love the duke, as I love myself. [To Lucio. Lucio! How the villain would close now, after his treasonable abuses. Escal. Such a fellow is not to be talk'd withal: Away with him to prison: Where is the provost?—Away with him to prison; lay bolts enough upon him; let him speak no more:—A way with those giglots too, and with the other confederate companions. [The Provost leaves hands on the Duke. Duke. Stay, sir; stay awhile. Ang. What! will he resist? I will help him, Lucio. Lucio. Come, sir; come, sir; come, sir; foh, sir. Why, you hald-pated, lying rascal! you must be hooded, must you? Show your knave's visage, with a pox for you! show your sheep-biting face, and be hang'd an hour! Will it not off? [Pulls off the Friar's hood, and discovers the Duke. Duke. Thou art the first knave, that e'er made a Duke. First provost, let me bail these gentle three:— Sneak not away, sir; [to Lucio.] for the friar and you Must have a word anon:—lay hold on him. Lucio. This may prove worse than hanging. Duke. What you have spoke, I pardon; sit you down.— To Escalus. We'll borrow place of him,—Sir, by your leave: [To Angelo. Hast thou or word, or wit, or impudence, That yet can do thee office? If thou hast, Rely upon it till my tale be heard, And hold no longer out. O my dread lord, I should be guiltier than my guiltiness, To think I can be undiscoverible, When I perceive, your grace, like power divine, Hath load his own miseries: Then, good prince, No longer session hold upon my shame, But let my trial be mine own confession; Immediate sentence then, and sequent death, Is the grace I beg.

Duke. Come hither, Mariana:—Say, what dost thou e'er contracted to this woman? Ang. I was, my lord.
Act 5

Look, if it please you, on this man condemn'd,
As if my brother I'd. I partly think,
A due sincerity govern'd his deeds,
Till he did look on me; since it is so,
Let him not die: My brother had but justice,
In that he did the thing for which he died:
For Angelo,
His act did not o'ertake his bad intents;
And must be buried as an intent
That perish'd by the way: thoughts are no sub-
Intents but merely thoughts.

Most bounteous sir, [Kneeling.

Proe. This is another prisoner, that I said,
That should have died when Claudio lost his head.
As like almost to Claudio, as himself.

[Duke. If he be like your brother, [to Isabella.] for his sake
Is be pardon'd; And, for your lovely sake,
Give me your hand, and say you will be mine,
He is my brother too: But stfer time for that.
By this, lord Angelo perceives he's safe;
Methinks, I see a quick mind in his eye:
Well, Angelo, your evil quit you well;
Look that you love your wife: her worth, worth
I find an apt remission in myself.

And yet here's one in place I cannot pardon;
You, sirrah, [to Lucio.] that knew me for a fool,
A coward,
One all of luxury, an ass, a rascal;
Wherein have I so deserved of you,
That you extol me thus?

Lucio. 'Faith, my lord, I spoke it but according to the trick: If you will hang me for it, you may, but I had rather it would please you, I might be whip'd.

Proe. Whipp'd first, sir, and hang'd after,— Proclaim it, provost, round about the city;
If any woman's wrong'd by this lewd fellow,
(As I have heard him swear himself, there's one Whom he begot with child,) let her appear,
And he shall marry her: the nuptial finish'd,
Let him be whip'd and hang'd.

Lucio. I beseech your highness, do not marry me to a whore! Your highness said even now, I made you a duke; good my lord, do not recompense me, in making me a cuckold.

Proe. I won mine honour, thou shalt marry her.
Thy slanders I forgive; and therewithal
Remit thy other forfeits.—Take him to prison:
And see our pleasure herein executed.

Lucio. Marrying a pock, my lord, is press'd to death, whipping, and hanging.

Proe. Smandering a prince deserves it.
She, Claudio, that you wrong'd, look you restore.—
Joy to you, Mariana!—love her, Angelo;
I have confesse'd her, and I know her virtue.

Thanks, good friend Escalus, for thy much good-
There's more behind, that is more gratulat[e. [exit:

Proe. Whipp'd, provost, for thy care, and secrecy;
We shall employ thee in a worthier place:—
Forgive him, Angelo, that brought you home
The head of Ragozine for Claudio's;

The offence pardons itself.—Dear Isabel,
I have a motion much import's your good;
Whereeto if you'll a willing ear incline,
What's mine is yours, and what is yours is mine:—
So, bring us to our palace; where we'll show
What's yet behind, that's meet you all should know.

[Exeunt.}
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

Don Pedro.
Benedick, a young lord of Padua, favourite likewise of Don Pedro.
Leonato, governor of Messina.
Antonio, his brother.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Before Leonato's House.

Enter Leonato, Hero, Beatrice, and others, with a Messenger.

Leon. I learn in this letter, that Don Pedro of Arragon comes this night to Messina.

Mess. Don Pedro hath bestowed much honour on a young Florentine, called Claudio.

Leon. Much deserved on his part, and equally remembered by Don Pedro: He hath borne himself beyond the promise of his age; doing, in the figure of a lamb, the feats of a lion: he hath, indeed, better bettered expectation, than you must expect of me to tell you how.

Leon. He hath an uncle here in Messina will be very much glad of it. Mess. I have already delivered him letters, and there appears much joy in him; even so much, that joy could not show itself modest enough, without a badge of bitterness.

Leon. Did he break out into tears?

Mess. In great measure.

Leon. A kind overflow of kindness: There are no faces truer than those that are so washed. How much better is it to weep at joy, than to joy at weeping?

Beat. I pray you, is signior Montanto returned from the wars, or no?

Mess. I know none of that name, lady; there was none such in the army of any sort.

Leon. What is he that you ask for, niece?

Hero. My cousin means signior Benedick of Padua.

Mess. O, he is returned, and as pleasant as ever he was.

Beat. He set up his bills here in Messina, and challenged Cupid at the flight: and my uncle's fool, reading the challenge, subscribed for Cupid, and challenged him at the bird-bolt.—I pray you, how many hath he killed and eaten in these wars? But how many hath he killed? for, indeed, I promised to eat all of his killing.

Leon. Faith, niece, you tax signior Benedick too much; but he'll be meet with you, I doubt it not.

Mess. He hath done good service, lady, in these wars.

Beat. You had musty virtue, and he hath help to eat it: he is a very valiant trencher-man, he hath an excellent stomach.

 Mess. And a good soldier too, lady.

Beat. And a good soldier to a lady;—But what is he to a lord?

Mess. A lord to a lord, a man to a man; stuffed with all honourable virtues.

Beat. It is so, indeed: he is no less than a stuffed man: but for the stuffing,—Well, we are all mortal.

Leon. You must not, sir, mistake my niece: there is a kind of merry war betwixt signior Benedick and her: they never meet, but there is a skirmish of wit between them.

Beat. Alas, he gets nothing by that. In our last conflict, four of his five wits was hailing off, and now is the old man governed with one: so that if he have wit enough to keep himself warm, let him bear it for a difference between himself and his horse; for it is all the wealth that he hath left, to be known a reasonable creature. Who is his companion now? He hath every month a new sworn brother.

Mess. Is it possible?

Beat. Very easy possible: he wears his faith but as the fashion of his hat; it ever changes with the next block.

Mess. I see, lady, the gentleman is not in your books.

Beat. No: an he were, I would burn my study. But, I pray you, who is his companion? Is there no young squarer now, that will make a voyage with him to the devil?

Mess. He is in the company of the right noble Claudio.

Beat. O Lord! he will hang upon him like a disease: he is sooner caught than the pestilence, and the taker runs presently mad. God help the noble Claudio! If he have caught the Benedict, it will cost him a thousand pound ere he be cured.

Mess. I will hold friends with you, lady.

Beat. Do, good friend.

Leon. You will never run mad, uncle.

Beat. No, not till a hot January.

Mess. Don Pedro is approached.

Enter Don Pedro, attended by Balthazar and others, Don John, Claudio, and Benedick.

D. Pedro. Good signior Leonato, you are come to meet your trouble: the fashion of the world is to avoid cost, and you encounter it.

Leon. Never came trouble to my house in the likeness of your grace; for trouble being gone, comfort should remain; but when you depart from me, sorrow abides, and happiness takes his leave.

D. Pedro. You embrace your charge too willingly.—I think, this is your daughter.

Leon. Her mother hath many times told me so.
Brew. Were you in doubt, sir, that you asked her? Law. Signior Benedick, no; for them were you a child.

D. Pedro. You have it fall, Benedick! we may guess by this you are, being a man. Truly, this was the gentleman—ha! happy lady! for you are like an honourable father.

Brew. If signior Leonato be her father, she would not have his head on her shoulders, for all Messina, as like him as she is.

Brew. Signior Benedick, you will be talking, signior Benedick; no body marks you.
Brew. What, my dear lady Despatch! are you yet living.

Brew. Is it possible, disdain should die, while she hath such meat to feed it, as signior Benedick? Courtesy itself must convert to disdain, if you come in her presence.

Brew. Then is courtesy a turncoat—but it is certain, I am loved of all ladies, only you excepted and I would I could find in my heart that I had not a hard heart; for, truly, I love none.

Brew. A dear happiness to women; they would else have been troubled with a pernicious sufferer. I thank God, and my cold brain, I am of your humour for that; I had rather hear my dog bark at a crow, than a man swear he loves me.

Brew. For your ladyship's sake in that mind, I some gentlewoman or other shall weep a profession scratched face.

Brew. Scratching could not make it worse, an 'twere such a face as yours were.

Brew. Well, you are a rare parrot-teacher.

Brew. A bird of my tongue, is better than a beast of yours.

Brew. I would, my horse had the speed of your tongue, and so good a continuance: But keep your way of God's name! I have done.

Brew. You always end with a jester's trick; I know you of old.

Brew. Signior Leonato. This is the sum of all: Leonato—signior Claudio, and signior Benedick—my dear friend Leonato hath invited you all. I tell him, we shall stay here at the least a month; and he heartily prays some occasion may detain us longer: I dare swear he is no hypocrify, but prays from his heart.

Leon. If you swear, my lord, you shall not be forsworn—let me bid you welcome, my lord; being committed to the prince your brother, I owe you all duty.

D. John. I thank you: I am not of many words, but I thank you.

Leon. What is your grace lead on?

D. Pedro. Your hand, Leonato; we will go together.

Claud. Is she not a modest young lady?
Brew. Do you question me as an honest man should do, for my simple true judgment; or would you have me speak after my customs, as being a professed tyrant to their sex?

Claud. No, I pray thee, speak in sober judgment. Brew. Why, faith, methinks she is too low for a high praise, too brown for a fair praise, and too little for a great praise: only this commendation I can afford her: that were she other than she is, she were unhandsome; and being no other but as she is, I do not like her. Brew. The first I thinkest I am in sport: I pray thee, tell me truly how thou likest her.

Brew. Would you buy her, that you inquire after Claud. Can the world buy such a jewel? [her? Brew. You must put it into. But speak you this with a sad brow? or do you play the flushing Jack; to tell us Cupid is a good hare-finder, and Vulcan a rare carpenter? Come, in what key shall I make you, to go in a song?
Claud. In mine eye, she is the sweetest lady that ever I looked on.

D. Pedro. I can see without spectacles, and I see no other grace. There's her company, who were not possessed with a fury, exceeds her as much in beauty, as the first of May doth the last of December. But I hope, you have no intent to turn husbands; have you?
Claud. I do not scare trust myself, though I had sworn the contrary, if Ierio would be my wife.

D. Pedro. Is it to come to this, I' faith? Hath not the world one man, but he will wear his cap with suspicion? Shall I never see a bachelor of three-score again? Go to, I' faith an thou wilt needs thrust thy neck into a yoke, wear the print of it, and sigh away Sundays. Look, Don Pedro is returned to seek you.

Reciter Don Pedro.

D. Pedro. What secret hath held you here, that you followed not to Leonato's?
Brew. I would, your grace would constrain me to tell.

D. Pedro. I charge thee on thy allegiance.

Brew. Ye see, Count Claudio: I can be secret as a dumb man, I would have you think so; but on my allegiance,—mark you this, on my allegiance:

—He is in love. With who?—now that is your business. Why, thou short: his answer is:

—With Hero, Leonato's short daughter.

Claud. If this were so, so were it uttered.
Brew. Like the old tale, my lord; "it is not so, nor was not so; but, indeed, God forbid it should be.

Claud. If my passion change not shortly, God forbid it should be otherwise.

D. Pedro. Amen, if you love her; for the lady is very well worth it.

Claud. You speak this to fetch me in, my lord.

D. Pedro. And, by my two faiths and truths, my lord, I spoke mine.

Claud. That I love her, I feel.

D. Pedro. That she is worthy, I know.

Brew. That I neither feel how she should be loved, nor know how she should be worthy, is the opinion that fire cannot melt out of me; I will die in it at the stake.

D. Pedro. Then wast ever an obstinate heretic in a compitute of beauty.

Claud. And never could maintain his part, but in the force of his will.

Brew. That a woman conceived me, I thank her; that a woman brought me up, I list not to hear thaine thanks: but that I will have a Rebecca winded in my forehead, or hang my bugle in an invisible herald, all women shall pardon me: Because I will not do them the wrong to mistrust any, I will do myself the right to trust none; and the fine is, (for which I may go the finer,) I will live a bachelor.

D. Pedro. I shall see thee, ere I die; I do wash with love.

Brew. With anger, with sickness, or with hunger, my lord; not with love; prove, that ever I lose more blood with love, than I will get again with drinking, put out mine eyes with a hallowed-maker's pen, and hang me up at the door of a brothel-house, for the sign of blind Cupid.

D. Pedro. Well, if ever thou dost fall from this faith, thou wilt prove a notable argument.

Brew. If I do hang me in a bottle like a cat, and shoot at me; and he that hits me, let him be clapped on the shoulder, and called Adam.

D. Pedro. Well, as time shall try:

D. John. This is the sum of all:
Brew. The savage bull may; but if ever this sensible Benedick hear it, pluck off the bull's horns, and set them in my forehead; and let me be vilely mangled in such great letters as they write, Here is good horse to hire, let them signify under my sign,—Here you may see Benedick the married man.
Claud. If this should ever happen, thou wouldst be horn-mad.

Leon. Nay, if Cupid have not spent all his quiver in Venice, thou wilt quake for this shortly.

Bene. I look for an earthquake too then.

D. Pedro. Well, you will temporize with the handsomely. I am going to a banquet, Benedick; repair to Leonato's; command me to him, and tell him, I will not fail him at supper; for, indeed, he hath made great preparation.

Bene. I have almost matter enough in me for such an embassage; and, I will commit you

Claud. To the tuition of God: From my house.

D. Pedro. The sixth of July: Your loving friend,

Bene. Nay, mock not, mock not: The body of that discourse is some time guarded with fragments, and the guards are but slightly based on neither: ere you flout old ends any further, examine your conscience; and so I leave you.

Claud. My liege, your highness now may do me good.

D. Pedro. My love is thine to teach; teach it but how,

And thou shalt see how apt it is to learn

Any hard lesson that may do thee good.

Claud. Hath Leonato any son, my lord?

D. Pedro. No child but Hero, she's his only.

Dost thou affect her, Claudio?

[Exeunt Claud.

O my lord,

When you went onward on this ended action,

I had been loosed with a soldier's eye,

That lik'd, but had a rougher task in hand

Than to drive liking to the name of love:

But now I am return'd, and that war-thoughts

Have left their places vacant, in their rooms

Come the strong and soft and delicate desires,

All prompting me how fair young Hero is,

Saying, I lik'd her ere I went to wars.

D. Pedro. Thou wilt be like a lover presently,

And tire the hearer with a book of words:

If thou dost love fair Hero, cherish it;

And I will break with her, and with her father,

And thou shalt have: Was't not to this end,

That thou began'st to twist so fine a story.

D. Claud. How sweetly do you minister to love,

That know love's grief by his complexion!

But lest my liking might too sudden seem,

I would have sav'd it with a longer treatise.

D. Pedro. What hath the bridge much broader

Than the flood?

The fairest grant is the necessity:

Look, what will serve, is fit: 'tis once, thou lov'st;

And to fit thee with theremedies, I know,

We shall have revelling to-night;

I will assume thy part in some disguise,

And tell fair Hero I am Claudio;

And in her bosom I'll unclasp my heart,

And take her hearing prisoner with the force

And strong encounter of my amorous tale:

Then, after, to her father will I break;

And, the conclusion is, she shall be thine:

In practice let us put it presently.

[Exeunt.

SCENE I. — Another Room in Leonato's House.

Enter Don John and Conrade.

Con. What the goujere, my lord! why are you thus out of measure sad?

D. John. There is no measure in the occasion that breeds it, therefore the sadness is without limit.

Con. You should hear reason.

D. John. And when I have heard it, what blessing bringeth it?

Con. If not a present remedy, yet a patient sufferance.

D. John. I wonder, that thou being (as thou say'st thou art) born under Saturn, goest about to apply a moral medicine to a mortifying mischief.

I cannot hide what I am: I must be sad when I have cause, while at no man's least; even when I have stomach, and wait for no man's leisure; sleep when I am drowsy, and tend to no man's business; laugh when I am merry, and claw no man in his humour.

Con. Yea, but you must not make the full show of this, till you may do it without controulment.

You have of late stood out against your brother, and he hath ta'en you newly into his grace; where it is impossible you should take true root, but by the fair weather that you make yourself: it is needful that you frame the season for your own harvest.

D. John. I had rather be a canker in a hedge, than a rose in his grace; and it better fits my blood to be disin'd of all, than to fashion a carriage to rob love from any: in this, though I cannot be said to be a flattering honest man, it must not be denied that I am a plain-dealing villain. I am trusted with a muzzle, and enfranchised with a clog:

therefore I have decreed not to sing in my cage:
If I had my mouth, I would bite; if I had my liberty, I would indulge me; but liking, I mean:
and no man, by the season, let me be that I am,
and seek not to alter me.

Con. Can you make no use of your discontent?

D. John. I make all use of it, for I use it only.

Who comes here? What news, Borachio?

Enter Borachio.

Borachio. I came yonder from a great supper; the prince, your brother, is royally entertained by Leonato; and I can give you intelligence of an intended marriage.

D. John. Will it serve for any model to build mischief on? What is he for a fool, that betroths himself to unquietness?

Borachio. marry, it is your brother's right hand.

D. John. Who? the most exquisite Claudio?

Borachio. Even he.

D. John. A proper sure! And who and who?

which way doth he?

Borachio. marry, on Hero, the daughter and heir of Leonato.

D. John. A very forward March-chick! How come you to tell me this?

Borachio. Being entertained for a performer, as I was smoking a musty room, comes me the prince and Claudio, hand in hand, in sad conference: I whipt myself behind a door; and, there I heard it agreed upon, that the prince should woo Hero for him-well, and having obtained her, give her to count Claudio.

D. John. Come, come, let us thither: this may prove food to my displeasure: that young start up behind the glory of my overthrow; if I can cross him any way, I bless myself every way. You are both sure, and well assist me?

Ces. To the death, my lord.

D. John. So do the great supper: their cheer is the greater, that I am subdued. Would the cook were of my mind! Shall we go prove what's to be done?

Ces. We'll wait upon your lordship. [Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Hall in Leonato's House.

Enter Leonato, Antonio, Hero, Beatrice, and others.

Leon. Was not count John here at supper?

Ant. I saw him not.

Beat. Now truly that gentleman looks I never can see him, but I am heart-burned on hour after.

Hero. He is of a very melancholy disposition.

Beat. He was an excellent man, that were made just in the mid way between him and Benedick: there was no man so good natured, and the other, too like my lady's absent son, over more tawdry.

Leon. The hour half singer Benedick's tongue in count John's mouth, and half count John's melancholy in singer Benedick's face. —

Beat. With a good leg, and a good foot, uncle, and money enough in his purse, such a man would win any woman in the world—if he could get her good will.

Leon. By my truth, niece, thou wilt never get thee a husband, if thou be so shrewd of thy tongue.

Ant. In faith, she is too curt.

Beat. Too curt is more than curt! I shall lesson God's sending that way: for it is said, God sends a curt cow short horns: but to a cow too curt she sends none.

Leon. So, by being too curt, God will send you no horn.

Beat. Just, if he send me no husband; for the which blessing, I am at him upon my knees every morning and evening: Lord! I could not endure a husband with a beard on his face: I had rather lie in the woollen.

Leon. You may light upon a husband, that hath me beard.

Beat. What should I do with him? dress him in my apparel, and make him my waiting gentlement woman? I lie that hath a beard, is more than a youth; and he that hath no beard, is less than a man; and he that is more than a youth, is not for me; and he that is less than a man, I am not for him: Therefore I will even he sixpence in earnest of the beard, and lead his apes into hell.

Leon. Well then, go you into hell.

Ant. No; but to the gate; and there will the devil meet me, like an old cuckold, with horns on his head, and say, Get you to heaven, Beatrice, get you to heaven; here's no place for you maid: so deliver I up my speeches, and away to Saint Vincent for the heavens, he shows me where the bachelors sit, and there live we as merry as the day is long.

Ant. Well, niece, [to Hero.] I trust, you will be relieved by your father.

Beat. You, faith! it is my cousin's duty to make courtesy, and say, Sir, as it please you; but yet for all that, cousin, let him be a handsome fellow, or else make another courtesy, and say, Farewell, Sir, as it please you.

Leon. Well, niece, I hope to see you one day fitted with a husband.

Beat. Not till God make men of some other metal than earth. Would it not grieve a woman to be over-mastered with a piece of valiant dust? to make an account of her life to a clog of wayward marri. No, uncle, I'll none: Adam's sons are my brethren: and truly, I hold it a sin to match in my kindred.

Leon. Daughter, remember, what I told you if the prince do solicit you in that kind, you know your answer.

D. Pedro. Let that fault be in the music, cousin, if you be not woad in good time. If the prince be too important, tell him, there is measure in everything, and so dance out the answer. For hear me, let the dress, and wedding, and repeating, is as a Scotch jig, a measure, and a cinque-pace: the first suit is hot and nasty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantastical; the wedding, mannerly-modest, as a measure full of state and ancienetj; and then comes repentance, and, with his bad legs, falls into the cinque-pace faster and faster, till he sink into his grave.

Leon. Cousin, you apprehend passing shrewdly.

Beat. I have said not 1, for your own sake, for I have many ill qualities.

Bene. Which is one?

Marg. I say my prayers aloud.

Bene. I love you the better; the hearers may cry, Amen.

Marg. God match me with a good dancer!

Balth. Amen.

Marg. And God keep him out of my sight, when the thing is done!—Answer, clerk.

Balth. No more words; the clerk is answered.

Urs. I know you well enough; you are signal of Antonio.

Ant. At a word, I am not.

Urs. I know you by the wagging of your head.

Ant. To tell you true, I counterfeit him.

Urs. You could never do him so ill—unless you were the very man: Here's his dry hand up to your eye; you are he, you are he.

Ant. At a word, I am not.

Urs. Come, come; do you think I do not know you by your excellent wit? Can virtue hide itself? to me, maria, you are: grace will appear, and there's an end.

Beat. Will you not tell me who told you so?

Bene. No, you shall pardon me.

Beat. Will you not tell me who you are?

Bene. Not now.

Beat. That I was disdainful, and that I had my good wit out of the Hundred merry Tales:—Well, this was signified Benedick that said so.

Ant. What's he?

Beat. I am sure, you know him well enough.

Bene. Not I, believe me.

Beat. Did he never make you laugh?

Bene. I pray you, what's he?
Beat. Why, he is the prince's jester; a very dull fool; only his gift is in devising impossible slanderers: none had the power in matchmaking him; and the commendation is not in his wit, but in his villany; for he both pleaseth men, and angers them, and then they laugh at him, and beat him: I am sure he is in the fleet; I would he had boarded me.

Borachio. When I know the gentleman, I'll tell him what you say.

Beat. Do, do; he'll but break a comparison or two on me; which, peradventure, not marked, or not laughed at, strikes him into melancholy; and then there's a partidge! wing saved, for the fool will eat no supper that night. [Musick within.] We must follow the leaders.

Bene. I think it is a very good thing.

Beat. Nay, if they lead to any ill, I will leave them at the next turning.

[Dance. There execut all but Don John, Borachio, and Claudia.]

Don. John. Sure, my brother is anonious on Hero, and hath withdrawn her father to break with him about it: The ladies follow her, and but one visor remains.

Borachio. And that is Claudia: I know him by his bearing.

Don. John. Are you not signior Benedick?

Claudia. You know me well; I am he.

Don. John. Signior, I would have you not bear my brother in his love: he is enamour'd on Hero; I pray you, dissuade him from her, she is no equal for his birth: you may do the part of an honest man in it.

Claudia. I know no such marriage.

Don. John. I heard him swear his affection.

Borachio. So did I too; and he swore he would marry her to-night.

Don. John. Come, let us to the banquet.

[Exeunt Don John and Borachio, and Claudia.]

Re-enter Benedick.

Bene. Count Claudia?

Yea, the same.

Bene. Come, will you go with me?

Claudia. No, I will not go with you.

Bene. Even to the next willow, about your own business, count? What fashion will you wear the garland of? About your neck, like an usurer's chain? or under your arm, like a lieutenant's scarf? You must wear it one way, for the prince hath got your Hero.

Claudia. I wish him joy of her.

Bene. Why, that's spoken like an honest drayer; so they sell bullocks. But did you think, the prince would have served you thus?

Claudia. I pray you, leave me.

Bene. How? now you strike like the blind man; 'twas the boy that stole you money, and you'll be the post.

Claudia. If it will not be, I'll leave you.

Bene. Alas! poor hurt fowl! Now will he creep into every corner. But, that my Lady Beatrice should know me, and not know me! The prince's fool! Ha! it may be, I go under that title, because I am merry—yea; but so; I am apt to do myself wrong; I am not narrowly traced: it is the base, the bitter disposition of Beatrice, that puts the world into her person, and so gives me out. Well, I'll be revenged as I may.

Re-enter Don Pedro.

Don. Pedro. Now, signior, where's the count? Did you see him?
Cleon. Neither, my lord.

Beat. The count is neither mad, nor sick, nor merry, nor well; but civil, count; civil as an orator and a lawyer. And if I know: thou canst far can I praise him; he is of a noble strain, of approved value, and confirmed honesty. I will teach you how to honour your cousin, that she shall fall in love with you: and whatsoever comes of that, be wise, and be not to love gods. (Go in with me, and I will tell you my drift.)

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Another Room in Leonato's House.

Enter Don John and Horace.

Don. John. It is so; the count Claudia shall marry the daughter of Leonato.

Hor. Bora, yes, my lord, but I can cross it.

Don. John. Any bar, any cross, any impediment will be medicinal to me; I am sick in displeasure to him; and whatsoever comes afterward his affection, ranges evenly with mine. How canst thou cross this marriage?

Hor. Bora. Not honestly, my lord: but so covertly that no man may appear in me.

Don. John. Show me briefly how.

Hor. Bora, I think, I told your lordship, a year since, how much I am in the favour of Margaret, the waiting-maid of the Hero.

Hor. Bora, I can, at any unreasonable instant of the night, appoint her to look out at her lady's chamber.

Don. John. What life is in that, to be the death of this marriage?

Hor. Bora. The passion of that lies in you to tempe. Go to you the prince your brother; I have a match in him; he hath wronged his honour in marrying the renowned Claudia (whose estimation do you mightly hold up) to a contumelious state, such a one as Hero. Bora, What proof shall I make of that?

Don. John. Proof enough to misuse the prince, to vex Claudia, to undo Hero, and kill Leonato; Look you for any other issue?

Don. John. Only to desire them, I will endeavour anything.

Hor. Bora. Go then, and find me a meet hour to draw Don Pedro and the count Claudia, alone; tell them, that you know that Hero loves you; intreat a kind and a visit from the prince and Claudia, as—in love of your brother's honour who hath made this match: and his friend's reputation, who is thus like to be ceased with the sense of a maid.—That you shall believe this without trial: offer them instances; which shall bear no less likelihood, than to see me at her chamber-window; bear me call Margaret, Hero; bear Margaret term me Horacio; and bring them to see this, the very night before the intended wed- ding; for, in the mean time, I will so fashion the matter, that Hero shall be absent; and there shall appear surpassing truth of Hero's displeasure, that justice shall be call'd assurance, and all the pre- paration overthrown.

Don. John. Grow this to what adverse issue it can, I will put it in practice: Be cunning in the working this, and the fee to a thousand ducats.

Hor. Bora. Be you constant in the accusation, and my cunning shall not shame me.

Don. John. I will presently go learn their day of marriage.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Leonato's Garden.

Enter Benedick and a Boy.

Benedick. What news?

Boy. The count Claudia is dead.

Benedick. In my chamber-window lies a book: bring it hither to me in the orchard.
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

Act 2.

I. Sing no more ditties, sing no more
Of damps so dull and doleful:
The fraud of men was ever so,
Since summer first was leavy.
Then sigh not so, &c.

D. Pedro. By my troth, a good song.

Balth. And an ill singer, my lord.

Claud. Ha!—no, faith; thou singest well enough for a shift.

Bene. [Aside.] An he had been a dog, that should have howled thus, they would have hanged him: And, lord, I pray thee, had his voice bode no mischief? I had as lief have heard the night-raven, come what plague could have come after it.

D. Pedro. Yea, marry; [to Claudio.]—Dost thou hear, Balthazar? I pray thee, get us some excellent music; for to-morrow night we shall have it at the lady Hero’s chamber-window.

Balth. The best I can, my lord.

D. Pedro. Do so: farewell. [Exit Balthazar and musick.] Come hither, Leonato: What was it you told me to to-day? that your niece Beatrice was in love with signior Benedick?

Claud. O, ay—Stalk on, stalk on: the fowl sits. [Aside.] I do never think that lady would have loved any man.

Leon. No, nor I neither; but most wonderful, that she should so dote on signior Benedick, whom she hath in all outward behaviours seemed ever to abhor.

Bene. Is’t possible? Sits the wind in that corner?

Leon. By my troth, my lord, I cannot tell what to think of it; but that she loves him with an enraged affection,—it is past the infinite of thought.

D. Pedro. May be, she doth but counterfeit.

Claud. ’Faith, like enough.

Leon. O Glov., how now! There never was counterfeit of passion came so near the life of passion, as she discovers it.

D. Pedro. Why, what effects of passion shows she?

Claud. Bait the hook well; this fish will bite.

Leon. What effects, my lord! She will sit you,—You heard my daughter tell you how.

Claud. She did, indeed.

D. Pedro. Now, how prye you? You amaze me: I would have thought her spirit had been invincible against all assaults of affection.

Leon. I would have sworn it had, my lord; especially against Benedick.

Bene. [Aside.] I should think this a gull, but that the white-bearded fellow speaks it: knavery cannot, sure, hide itself in such reverence.

Claud. He hath ta’en the Infection; hold it up.

D. Pedro. Hath she made her affection known to Benedick?

Leon. No; and swears she never will: that’s her torment.

Claud. ’Tis true, indeed; so your daughter says: Shall I, says she, that have so oft encountered him with scorn, write to him that I love him?

Leon. This says she now when she is beginning to write to him: for she’ll be up twenty times a night: and there will she sit in her smock, till she have writ a sheet of paper—my daughter tells us all.

Claud. Now you talk of a sheet of paper, I remember a pretty jest your daughter told us of.

Leon. O!—When she had writ it, and was reading it over, she found Benedick and Beatrice between the sheet?—

Claud. That.

Leon. O! she tore the letter into a thousand half-pence; railed at herself, that she should be so immodest to write to one that she knew would flout her: I measure him, says she, by my own spirit: for I should flout him, if he writ to me; yes, thoug, I love him, I should.

H.
Much Ado About Nothing.

Act 3.

Scene 1.—Leonato’s Garden.

Enter Hero, Margaret, and Ursula.

Hero. Good Margaret, ran thee into the parliour?—Then shall i find my cousin Benedick Proposing with the Prince and Claudio.

Whisper her ear, and tell her, I and Ursula Walk in the orchard, and our whole discourse Is of such a strain, that thou and they be passing busy. And bid her steal into the preacher bower, Where honey-suckles, ripened by the sun, Forbid the sun to enter:—like favourites, Made proud by princes, that in purity Against that power that bred it:—there will she hide her,

To listen our purpose: This is thy office, Bear thee well in it, and leave us alone.

Marg. I’ll make her come, I warrant you, presently.

[Exit.

Hero. Now, Ursula, when Beatrice doth come, As we do trace this affair up and down, Our talk must only be of Benedick. When I do name him, let it be thy part To praise him more than ever man did merit. My talk to thee must be, how Benedick Is sick in love with Beatrice:—of this matter Is little Claudio’s crafty arrow made, That only wounds by hearsay. Now begin;

Enter Beatrice, behind.

For look where Beatrice, like a lapwing, runs Close by the ground, to hear our conference.

Urs. The pleasantest singing is to see the fish Cut with her golden cory; the silver wren, And gravity devour the treacherous bait: So angle we for Beatrice; who even now...
Act 3.  MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

Is touched on the doubling coveret:
Pear you not my part of the piece?

_Hero._ Then go we near her, that her ear lose nothing

Of the false sweet bait that we lay for it.

_[Exit Hero and Ursula._

_Beatrice advances._

_Beat._ What fire is in mine ears? Can this be true?

_Leon._ Stand I condescend for pride and scorn so much?

_Consume._ Contempt, farewell! and maiden pride, adieu!

_No glory lives behind the back of such.

_And, Benedick, love on, I will requite thee;

_Tarn._ I am a world of love to thy loving hand;

_If thou dost love, my kindness shall incite thee

To bind our loves up in a holy band:

_For others say, thou dost deserve; and I

Believe it better than reporting._

_[Exit._

_SCENE II._—A Room in Leonato’s House.

_Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, Benedick, and

_Leon._ D. Pedro, I do but stay till your marriage be consummated, and then I go toward Arragon.

_Claude._ I’ll bring you thither, my lord, if you’ll vouchsafe me.

_D._ Pedro._ Nay, that would be as great a soil in the new gloss of your marriage, as to show a child his new coat, and forbid him to wear it. I will only be bold with Benedick for his company; for, from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot, he is all mirth; he hath twice or thrice cut Cupid’s bow-string, and the little hangman dare not shoot at him; his heart, as sound as a bell, and his tongue is the clapper; for what his heart thinks, his tongue speaks.

_Bene._ Gallants, I am not as I have been.

_Leon._ So say I; methinks, you are sadder.

_Claude._ I hope, he be in love.

_D._ Pedro._ Hang him, truant; there’s no true drop of blood in him, to be truly touch’d with love: if he be sad, he wants money.

_Bene._ I have the tooth-ach.

_D._ Pedro._ Draw it.

_Bene._ Hang it!

_Claud._ You must hang it first, and draw it after wards.

_D._ Pedro._ What? sigh for the tooth-ach?

_Leon._ Where is but a humour, or a worm?

_Bene._ Well, every one can master a grief, but he that has it.

_Claud._ Yet say I, he is in love.

_D._ Pedro._ There is no appearance of fancy in him, unless it be a fancy that he hath to strange disguises. I had him this morning, a Frenchman to-morrow; or in the shape of two countries at once, as, a German from the waist downward, all slops; and a Spaniard from the hip upward, no doublet: Unless he have a fancy to this foolery, as it appears he hath, he is no fool for fancy, as you would have it appear he is.

_Claud._ If he be not in love with some woman, there is no believing old signs: he brushes his hat o’ mornings; What should that bode?

_D._ Pedro._ Hath any man seen him at the barber’s?

_Claud._ No, but the barber’s man hath been seen with him; and the old ornament of his cheek hath already stuffed tennis-balls.

_Leon._ Indeed, he looks younger than he did by the loss of a beard.

_D._ Pedro._ Nay, he rubs himself with civet: Can you smell him out by that?

_Claud._ That’s as much as to say, The sweet youth’s in love.

_D._ Pedro._ The greatest note of it is his melancholy.

_Claud._ And when was he wont to wash his face?

_D._ Pedro._ Yes, or to paint himself? for the which, I hear what they say of him.

_Claud._ Nay, but his jesting spirit; which is now crept into another country, and now governed by stops.

_D._ Pedro._ Indeed, that tells a heavy tale for him:

_Conclude, conclude, he is in love.

_Claud._ Nay, but I know who loves him.
SCENE III.—A Street.

Enter Dogberry and Verges, with the Watch.

Dogb. Are you good men and true?

Verg. Yes, or else it were pity but they should suffer salvation, body and soul.

Dogb. Nay, that were a punishment too good for them, if they should have any allegiance in them, being chosen for the prince's watch.

Verg. We'll, give them their charge, neighbour Dogberry.

Dogb. First, who think you the most desarted man in the court?

1 Watch. Hugh Oatcake, sir, or George Seacoal; for they can write and read.

Dogb. Come hither, neighbour Seacoal: God hath blesst thee with a good name; to be a well-favoured man is the gift of fortune; but to write and read comes by nature.

2 Watch. Both which, master constable,

Dogb. You have; I know it would be your answer; and then the hour favours it; why, give God thanks, and make no boast of it; and for your writing and reading, let that appear when the e is no need of such vanity. You are thought here to be the most senseless and fit man for the constable of the watch, therefore bear you the lantern. This is your charge; You shall comprehend all vagrins men; you are to bid any man stand, in the prince's name.

2 Watch. How if he will not stand?

Dogb. Why then, take no note of him, but let him go; and presently call the rest of the watch together, and thank God you are rid of a knave.

Verg. He will not stand when he is hidden, he is none of the prince's subjects.

Dogb. True, and they are to meddle with none but the prince's subjects. You shall also make no noise with them; you are to set, for, for the watch to bubble and talk, is most tolerable and not to be endured.

3 Watch. We will rather sleep than talk; we know what belongs to a watch.

Dogb. Why, you speak like an ancient and most quiet watchman; for I cannot see how sleeping should offend: only, have a care that your bills be not stolen—Well, you are to call at all the alehouses, and bid those that are drunk get them to bed.

3 Watch. How if they will not?

Dogb. Why then, let them alone till they are sober; if they make you not then the better answer, you may say, they are not the men you took them for.

3 Watch. Well, sir.

Dogb. If you meet a thief, you may suspect him, by virtue of your office, to be no true man: and, for each kind of men, the less you meddle or make with them, why, the more is for your honesty.

3 Watch. If we know him to be a thief, shall we not lay hands on him?

Dogb. Truly, by your office, you may; but, I think, the stronger pitch will be defied; the most peaceable way for you, if you do take a thief, is, to let him show himself what he is, and steal out of your company.

Verg. You have been always called a merciful man, partner.

Dogb. Truly, I would not hang a dog by my will; much more a man who hath any honesty in him.

Verg. If you hear a child cry in the night, you must call to the nurse, and bid her still it.

3 Watch. How if the nurse be asleep, and will not hear?

Dogb. Why then, depart in peace, and let the child wake her with crying; for the ewe that will not hear her lamb when it bales, will never answer a calf when it bales.

Verg. 'Tis very true.

Dogb. This is the end of the charge. You, constable, are to present the prince's own person; if you meet the prince in the night, you may stay him.

Verg. Nay, that, I think, he cannot.

Dogb. Five shillings to one not, with any man that knows the statues, he may stay him: marry, not without the prince be willing: for, indeed, the watch is a most noble and no mean, and it is an office to stay a man against his will.

Verg. 'By your lady, I think, it be so.

Dogb. Ha, ha, ha! Well, masters, good night.
an there be any matter of weighty chances, call up me: keep your fellows' counsels and your own, and good-night, till morrow.
2 Watch. Well, masters, we hear our charge: let us go sit here upon the church-bench till two, and then all to-bed.
Borachio. Well, sir; sword more, honest neighbours: I pray you, watch about signior Leonato's door; for the wedding being there to-morrow, there is a great coil to-night: Adieu, be vigilant, I beseech
you.
[Exit Dogberry and Verges.

Enter Borachio and Conrade.
Bora. What! Conrade,-
Watch. Peace, sir, not.
[Aside.
Con. Here, man, I am at thy elbow.
Bora. Mass, and my elbow itched; I thought, there would a scab follow.
Con. I will owe thee an answer for that; and now forward with thy tale.
Bora. Stand thee close then under this penthouse, for it drizzles rain and I will, like a true drunkard, utter all to thee.
Watch. [aside] Some treason, masters: yet stand close.
Bora. Therefore know, I have earned of Don
John a thousand ducats.
Con. Is it possible that any villainy should be so dear?
Bora. Thou should'st rather ask, if it were possibile any villainy should be so rich; for when rich villainy has need of poor ones, poor ones may make what price they will.
Con. I wonder at it.
Bora. That shows, thou art unconfirn'd: Thou knowest, that the fashion of a doublet, or a hat, or a cloak, is nothing to a man.
Con. Yes, it is apparel.
Bora. I mean, the fashion.
Con. Yes, the fashion is the fashion.
Bora. Tush! I may as well say, the fool's the fool. But see'st thou not what a deformed thief this fashion is?
Watch. I know that Deformed: he has been a wile thief this seven years; he goes up and down like a gentleman: I remember his name.
Bora. Didst thou not hear somebody?
Con. No; 'twas the vane on the house.
Bora. See'st thou not, I say, what a deformed thief this fashion is? how giddily he turns about all the hot bloods, between fourteen and five and thirty? sometime, fash'n them like Pharaoh's soldiers in parading; sometime, like god
Bel's priests in the old church-window; sometime, like the shaven Hercules in the smirched worm-eaten tapestry, where his codec-piece seems as masy as this club?
Con. All this I see; 'nd see, that the fashion wears out more apparel than the man: But art not thou thyself giddied with the fashion too, that thou hast shifted out of thy tale into telling me of the fashion?
Bora. Not so neither: but know, that I have tonight woord Margaret, the lady Hero's gentlewoman, by the name of Hero; she leans me out at her window, bid me come; I saw her thousand times good night,—I tell this tale vilely:—I should first tell thee, how the Prince, Claudio, and my master, planted, and placed, and possessed by my master Don John, saw afar off in the orchard this amidst a tender.
Con. And thought they, Margaret was Hero?
Bora. Two of them did, the Prince and Claudio;
but the devil my master knew she was Margaret;
and partly by his oath, which first possessed them,
partly by the dark night, which did deceive them, but chiefly by my villainy, which did confirm any slander that Don John had made, away went Claudio himself; where he would meet her as he was appointed, next morning at the temple, and there, before the whole congregation, shame her with what he saw over-night, and send her home again without a husband.
1 Watch. We charge you in the prince's name, stand.
2 Watch. Call up the right master Constable: we have here recovered the most dangerous piece of lechery that ever was known in the commonwealth.
1 Watch. And one Deformed is one of them: I know him, he wears a lock.
Con. Masters, masters.
2 Watch. You'll be made bring Deformed forth,
I warrant you.
Con. Masters,—
1 Watch. Never speak; we charge you, let us obey you to go with us.
Bora. We are likely to prove a goodly commodidy, being taken up of these men's bills.
Con. A commodity in question, I warrant you.
Come, we'll obey you.

SCENE IV.—A Room in Leonato's House.
Enter Hero, Margaret, and Ursula.
Hero. Good Ursula, wake my cousin Beatrice, and desire her to rise.
Urs. I will, lady.
Hero. And bid her come hither.
Urs. Well.
[Exit Ursula.
Marg. Troth, I think, your other rabatbo were better.
Hero. No, pray thee, good Meg, I'll wear this.
Marg. By my troth, it's not so good; and I warrant, your cousin will say so.
Hero. My cousin's fool, and thou art another:
I'll wear none but this.
Marg. I like the new tire within excellently, if the hair were a thought browner: and your gown's a most rare fashion, I think. I saw the duchess of Milam's gown, that they praise so.
Hero. O, that exceeds, they say.
Marg. By my troth it's but a night gown in respect of your's: Cloth of gold, and cuts, and laced with silver; set with pearls, down sleeves, side-sleeves, and skirts round, underborne with a blueish tinsel: but for a fine, quaint, graceful, and excellent fashion, yours is worth ten on's.
Hero. God give me joy to wear it, for my heart is exceeding heavy!
Marg. 'Twill be heavier soon, by the weight of a man.

Hero. Fye upon thee! art not ashamed?
Marg. Of what, lady? of speaking honourably?
Is not marriage honourable in a beggar? Is not your lord honourable without marriage? I think, you would have me say, saving your husband is none, this thinking do not wrest true speaking, I'll offend nobody: Is there any harm in—the heavier for a husband? None, I think, an it be the right husband, and the right wife; otherwise
'tis light, and not heavy: Ask my lady Beatrice else, here she comes.

Enter Beatrice.
Beatrice. Good morrow, coz.
Beat. Good morrow, sweet Hero.
Hero. Why, how now! do you speak in the sick tone? do you? I am out of all other tune, methinks.
Marg. Clap us into—Light o' love: that goes without a burden: do you sing it, and I'll dance it.
Beat. Yes, Light o' love, with your heels—then if your husband have stables enough, you'll see he shall lack no barns.
Marg. O illegitimate construction! I scorn that with my heels.
Beat. 'Tis almost five o'clock, cousin; 'tis time you were ready. By my troth I am exceeding ill:—
hey ho!
Marg. For a hawk, a horse, or a husband?
Beat. For the letter that begins them all, H.
Marg. Well, an you be not turned Turk, there's no more sailing by the star.
Beat. What means the fool, troo?
MARG. Nothing I; but God send every one their heart's desire!
Beat. Why gives the count sent me, they are an excellent perfume.
MARG. I am stuffed, counsel, I cannot smell.
Beat. And stuffed! there's goodly catch.
MARG. Three.
Beat. O, God help me! God help me! how long have you preached an apprehension?
MARG. Ever since you left it: dost not my wit become more rare?
Beat. It is not seen enough, you should wear it in your cap. My my troth, I am sick.
MARG. Get you some of this distillled Carduus florescentis, and lay it to your heart: it is the only thing for a qualm.
Beat. There thou pritch a herb with a thistle.
MARG. Benedictus why Benedictus? you have some moral in this Benedictus.
MARG. Moral? no, by my troth; I have no moral meaning; I meant, plain holy-thistle. You may think, perchance, that I think you are in love, may, by lady, I am not such a fool to think what I just; nor I list not to think what I can; nor, indeed, if I would think, if I would think my heart out of thinking, that you are in love, or that you will be in love, or that you can be in love: yet Benedictus was such another, and now is he become a man: aware he would never marry; and yet now, in despite of his heart, he eats his meat with out grudging: and how you may be converted, I know not; but, methinks, you look with your eyes, as other women do.
Beat. What is this that thy tongue keeps?
MARG. Not a false gallop.
Re-enter Ursula.

CRA. Madam, withdraw: the prince, the count, signior Benedict, Don John, and all the gallants of the town, are come to fetch you to church.
Beat. Help to dress me, good coz, good Meg, good Ursula. [Exeunt.

Scene V.—Another Room in Leonato's House.

Enter Leonato, with Dogberry and Verges.

Leon. What would you with me, honest neighbour?
Dogb. Marry, sir, I would have some confidence with you, that doth concern you nearly.
Brie. Brief, I pray you; for you see 'tis a busy time with me.
Dogb. Marry, this it is, sir.
Verg. Yes, in truth it is, sir.
Dogb. It is, my good friends?
Dogb. Goodman Verges, sir, speaks a little off the matter: an old man, sir, and his wits are not so blunt, as God help, I would desire they were; but, in faith, honest, as the skin between his brows.
Verg. Yes, I thank God, I am as honest as any man living, that is an old man, and no honester than I.
Dogb. Comparisons are odorous: polaxes, neighbour Verges.
Leon. Neighbours, you are tedious.
Dogb. It pleases your worship to say so, but we are the poor duke's officers; but, truly, for mine own part, if I were as tedious as a king, I could find in my heart to bestow it all of your worship.
Leon. All thy tediousness on me! ha!
Dogb. Yes, and 'twere a thousand times more 'twas for I hear as good exclamation on your worship, as of any man in the city; and though I be but a poor man, I am glad to bear it.
Verg. And so am I.
Leon. I would fain know what you have to say.
Dogb. It is, sir, our watch to-night, excepting your worship's presence, have 'ten a couple of as arrant knaves as any in Messina.
Dogb. A good old man, sir; be he will be talking; as they say, When the age is in, the wit is out; God help us! it is a world to see!—Well said, my Faith, neighbour Verges:—well, God's a good man: an two men ride of a horse, one must ride behind, and the soul, my Faith, sir; by my truth he is, as ever broke bread: but God is to be worshiped: All men are not alike; alas, good neighbour!
Leon. Indeed, neighbour, he comes too short of you.
Dogb. Gifts, that God give.
Leon. I must leave you.
Dogb. One word, sir: our watch, sir, have, indeed, comprehended two or three persons, and we would have them this morning examined before your worship.
Leon. Take their examination yourself, and bring it me: I am new in great haste, as it may appear unto you.
Dogb. It shall be sufficiency.
Leon. Drink some wine ere you go: fare you well.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, they stay for you to give your daughter to her husband.
Leon. I will wait upon them: I am ready.

[Exeunt Leonato and Messenger.

Dogb. Go, good partner, go, get you to Francis Saccado, bid him bring his pen and inkhorn to the guest: we are now to examine these men.
Verg. And we must do it wisely.
Dogb. We will spare for no wit, I warrant you; here's that [touching his forehead] shall drive some of them to a woman: only get the learned writer to set down our excommunication, and meet me at the goal. [Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

Scene I.—The Inside of a Church.

Enter Don Pedro, Don John, Leonato, Friar, Claudio, Benedict, Hero, and Beatrice, &c.

Leon. Come, friar Francis, be brief: only to the plain form of marriage, and you shall recount their particular duties afterwards.
Frier. You come hither, my lord, to marry this lady?
Claud. No.
Leon. To be married to her, friar; you come to marry?
Frier. Lady, you come hither to be married to this count?
Hero. I do.
Frier. If either of you know any inward impediment, you should not be conjoined, I charge you, on your souls, to utter it.
Claud. Know you any, Hero?
Hero. None, my lord.
Frier. Know you any, count?
Leon. I dare make his answer, none.
Frier. How now! Interjections? Why, then some be of laughing, as, ha! ha! ha!
Claud. Stand thee by, friar,—Father, by your Will you with free and unconstrained soul [leave; Give me this maid, your daughter.
Leon. As freely, son, as God did give her me.
Claud. And what have I to give you back, whose worth May counterpoise this rich and precious gift?
Don. What! Nothing, unless you render her again.
Claud. Sweet prince, you learn me noble thinking. There, Leonato, take her back again:—[solemnly] Give not this rotten orange to your friend: She's but the sign and semblance of her honour: Behold, how like a maid she blushes here! 0, what authority and show of truth Can cunning sin cover itself withal! Comes not that blood, as modest evidence, To witness simple virtue? Would you not swear,
All you that see her, that she were a maid, By these exterior shows? But she is none: She shows the heat of a luxurious bed: Her blush is guiltiness, not modesty.

Leon. What do you mean, my lord?

Claud. Not to be married, Not slit my soul to an approved wanton.

Leon. Dear my lord, if you, in your own proof Have furnish'd the report of this youth, And made defeat of her virginity,-

Claud. I know what you would say; if I have known her, You'll sit and shame me as a husband, And so excommunicate the forehand sin: No, Leonato, I never tempted her with word too large; But, as a brother to his sister, show'd Rashful sincerity, and comely love. Hero. And seem'd I ever otherwise to you? Claud. Out on thy seeming! I will write against You seem'd to me as Diana in her orb; [it: As chaste as is the bud ere it be blown; But you are more intemperate in your blood Than Venus, or those pampier's animals That rage in savage sensuality. Hero. And may I ever doth speak so wide? Leon. Sweet prince, why speak not you?

D. Pedro. What should I speak? I stand dishonour'd, that have gone about The world as a friend to a common state. Leon. Are these things spoken? or do I but dream?

D. John. Sir, they are spoken, and these things are true. O God

Claud. Leonato, stand I here? Is this the prince? Is this the prince's brother? Is this the face Hero's? Are our eyes our own? Leon. All this is so; but what of this, my lord? Claud. Let me but move one quest to your daughter; By that fatherly and kindly power That you have in your command over her. Leon. I charge thee do so, as thou art my child. Hero. O God defend me! how am I beset! What kind of cатегичall'ing you this?

Claud. To make you answer truly to your name. Hero. Is it not Hero? Who can blot that name With any just reproach?

Claud. Marry, that can Hero; Hero itself can blot, but Hero's virtue. Why was he talk'd with till midnight out at your window, betwixt twelve and one? Now, if you are a maid, answer to this. Hero. I talk'd with no man at that hour, my lord.

D. Pedro. Why, then are you no maiden? Leonato, I am sorry you must hear; Upon mine honour, Myself, my brother, and this griev'd count, Did see her, hear her, at that hour last night, Talk with a ruffian at her chamber-window; Who hath, indeed, most like a liberal villain, Confess'd the vile encounters they have had A thousand times in secret.

D. John. Fye, fye! they are Not to be nam'd my lord, not to be spoke of; There is not chastity enough in language, Without offence, to utter them: Thus, pretty lady, I am sorry for thy much misgovernment. Claud. O Hero! what a Hero hast thou been, If half thy outward graces had been placed About thy thoughts, and counsels of thy heart! But as they were, most foul, most fair! farewell, Thou pure simplicity, and impious purity! For thee I'll lock up all the gates of love, And on my eye-lids shall conjecture hang, To turn all beauty into thoughts of harm, And never shall it more be gone.

Leon. Hath no man's dagger here a point for me? [Hero swoons. Beat. Why, how now, cousin? wherefore sink you down? D. John. Come, let us go: these things, come Smother her spirits up. [thus to light, [Enter Don Pedro, Don John, and Claudio. Bene. How doth the lady? Friar. I think, I shall do, uncle;— Hero! why, Hero!—Uncle!—Signior Benedict— Friar! Leon. O fate, take not away thy heavy hand! Death is the best cover for her shame, That may be wish'd for. Beat. How now, cousin Hero? Friar. Have comfort, lady. Leon. But thou look up? Friar. Yea: Wherefore should she not? Leon. Wherefore? Why, doth not every earthly thing Cry shame upon her? Could she here deny The story that is printed in her blood? Do not live, Hero; do not one thine eyes: For did I think thou wouldst not quickly die, Thought I thy spirits were stronger than thy shames, Myself would, on the rearward of reproaches, Strike at thy life. Grie'ed I, had I but one? Child I for that at frugal nature's frame? O, one too many! For thee! Why had I one? Why ever wast thou not! Why dost thou live? Why had I not with charitable hand, Took up a beggar's issue at my gate; Who smirched thus, and withered with inanity, I might have said, No part of it was thine. This shame derives itself from unknown loans But mine, and mine I lov'd, and mine I prais'd, And mine that I was proud on; mine so much, That I myself was to myself not mine Valuing of her; why, she—O, she is fallen Into a pit of ink! that the wide sea Hath drops too few to wash her clean again; And salt too little, which may season give To her foul tainted flesh!

Bene. Sir, sir, be patient: For my part I am so attir'd in wonder, I know not what to say. Beat. O, on my soul, my cousin is belied! Bene. Lady, were you her bedfellow last night? Beat. No, truly not; although, until last night, I have this twelvemonth been her bedfellow. Leon. Confir'm'd, confirm'd! O, that is stronger made, Which was before barr'd up with ribs of iron! Would the two princes lie? and Claudio lie? Who lov'd? one! so, that, avowing of her foulness, Wash'd it with tears? Hence from her; let herdie.

Friar. Hear me a little; For I have only been silent so long, And given you this commendable fortune, By noting of the lady, I have mark'd A thousand blushing apparitions start Into her face; a thousand innocent shames In angel whiteness bear away those blushed; And in her eye there hath apparry'd a fire, To burn the errors that these princes hold Against her maiden truth:—Call me a fool; Trust not my reading, nor my observations, Which with experimental seal doth warrant The tenour of my book; trust not my age, My reverence, calling, nor divinity, If this sweet lady lie not guiltless here Under some bitting error.

Leon. Friar, it cannot be; Thou seest, that all the grace that she hath left, Is, that she will not add to her damnation A sin of perjury; she not denies it; Why seek'st thou then to cover with excuse That which appears in proper nakedness? Friar. Lady, what man is he you are accus'd of? Hero. They know, that do accuse me; I know If I know more of any man alive, Than that which maiden modesty doth warrant, Let all my sins lack mercy!—(1) my father, Prove you that any man with me convers'd
At hours unmeet, or that I yesterday
Maintained the change of words with any creature,
Refuse me, hate me, torture me to death.

Frie. This is some strange misprision in the prince.

Beat. Two of them have the very bent of honour;
And of their wisdom be misled in this,
They think in us as in the plow’s bastard,
Whose spirits steal in frames of villains.

Lest I know not, if they speak but truth of her,
These hands shall tear her; if they wrong her honour.

The possession of them shall well hear it.
Time hath not yet so dried this blood of mine,
Nor age so cut up my invention,
Nor fortune made such havock of my means,
Nor my bad wife nor any misfortune ended,
But they shall find, aw’ard to such a kind,
Both strength of limb, and policy of mind,
Ability in means, and choice of friends,
To quit me of them thoroughly.

Frie. Peace a while, and let my counsel sway you in this case.
Your daughter here the princes left for dead;
Let her a while be secretly kept in,
And whate’er which is this she charge beoord:
Maintain a mourning ostentation;
And on your family’s old monument
Hang mournful epistles, and do all sites
That appertain unto a burial.

Lest What shall become of this? What will this do?

Frie. Marry, this well carried, shall on her behalf
Change danger to remorse; that is some good,
But not for that, dream I on this strange course.
But on this travail look for greater birth.
She dying, as it must be so maintained,
Upon the instant that she was accord’d,
Shall be lamented, pitied, and excused,
Of every必要 For it so falls out,
That what we have we prize not to the worth,
While we enjoy it; but being lack’d and lost,
Why, then we rock the value, then we find
The virtu, that possession would not show us
While it was ours, so will it fare with Claudius:
When he shall hear she died upon his words,
The idea of her life shall sweetly creep
Into his study of imagination;
And every lovely organ of her life
Shall come apparel’d in more precious habit,
More moving delicate, and full of life,
Into his love, eyes, and thoughts of her,
Shall be as lost; and to him she made, when
She shall be found indeed, then shall be mourn’d,
(If ever love had interest in his liver,)
And wish he had not so accurs’d her;
Not though he thought her accursation true;
Let this be so, and demi but not success
Will fashion the event in better shape
Than I can lay it down in likelihood.
But if all aim but this be lov’d false,
The supposition of the lady’s death
Will quench the wonder of her insamy:
And, if it sort not well, you may conceal her
(As best betts her wound’d reputation.)
For she is serious and religious.
Out of all eyes, tongues, minds, and injuries.

Beat. Signior Leonato, let the friar advise you:
And though, you know, my inwardness and love
Is very much unto the prince and Claudius,
You may advise him, I will shew this
As secretly, and justly as your soul
Should with your body.

Louv. The smallest twine may lend the curve.

Frie. This well consented: presently away;
For to strange shores strangely they strain the Come, lady, die to live; this wedding day,
Perhaps, it is prolong’d; have patience, and [Enter Friar, Hero, and Leonato.

Beat. Lady Beatrice, have you kept all this while?

Beat. Yes, and will weep while longer.

Beat. I will not desire that.

Beat. You have no reason, I do it freely.

Beat. Surely, I do believe your fair cousin is Beat. How much might the man deserve of me that would right her?

Beat. Is there any way to show such friendship?

Beat. A very even way, but no such friend.

Beat. Nay, a man do it.

Beat. In a man’s office, but not your’s.

Beat. I do love nothing in the world so well as you; is not that strange?

Beat. As strange as the thing I know not it
Were as possible for me to say, I loved nothing so well as you: but believe me not; and yet I lie not:
I confess nothing, nor I deny nothing — I am sorry for my cousin.

Beat. By my sword, Beatrice, thou lovest me.

Beat. Do not swear by it, and eat it.

Beat. I will swear by it, that you love me; and Beat. Will you not eat your word?

Beat. That it may be deemed to that can be devised to it

Beat. I protest, I love thee.

Beat. Why them, God forgive me!

Beat. What offence, sweet Beatrice?

Beat. You have made me in a happy hour; I was Beat. It was a present I loved you in;

Beat. And do it with all thy heart.

Beat. I love you with so much of my heart, that none is left to protest.

Beat. Come, bid me do any thing for thee.

Beat. Kill Claudius.

Beat. Ha! not for the wide world.

Beat. You kill me to deny it: Farewell.

Beat. Tarry, sweet Beatrice.

Beat. Our wills and our thoughts are here; — There is Beat. Nay, I pray you, let me go.

Beat. Good Sirs; We’ll be friends first.

Beat. You dare easier be friends with me, than

Beat. Claudius thine enemy!

Beat. Is he not approved in the height a villain, that hath ambition, scorned, disdained my kinsman? — That I were a man! — What’s he in hand until they come to take hands; and then with public accusation, uncovered slander, manifold and monstrous calumny, I am here: — There is no love in you — Nay, I pray you, let me go.

Beat. Beatrice.

Beat. In faith, I will go.

Beat. We’ll be friends first.

Beat. You dare easier be friends with me, than

Beat. Claudius thine enemy!

your cousin: I must say, she is dead; and, so farewell.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—A Prison.

Enter Dogberry, Verges, and Sexton, in gowns; and the Watch, with Comrade and Borachio.

Dogb. Is our whole disassembly appeared?

Verg. O, a stool and a cushion for the sexton!

Sexton. Which be the malcontents?

Dogb. Marry, that am I and my partner.

Verg. Nay, that's certain; we have the exhibition to examine.

Sexton. But which are the offenders that are to be examined? let them come before master constable.

Dogb. Yea, marry, let them come before me.

What is your name, friend?

Bora. Borachio.

Dogb. Pray write down—Borachio.—Yours, sirrah?

Con. I am a gentleman, sir, and my name is Conrade.

Dogb. Write down—master gentleman Conrade.

—Masters, do you serve God?

Con. Bora. Yea, sir, we hope.

Dogb. Write down—that they hope they serve God;—and write God first; for God defend but God should go, let it be such villains!—Masters, it is proved already that you are little better than false knaves; and it will go near to be thought so shortly.

How answer you for yourselves?

Con. Marry, sir, we say we are none.

Dogb. A marvellous witty fellow, I assure you; but I will go about with him.—Come you hither, sirrah; a word in your ear, sir; I say to you, it is thought you are false knaves.

Bora. Sir, I say to you, we are none.

Dogb. Well, stand aside.—Fore God, they are both in a tale: Have you writ down—that they are none?

Sexton. Master constable, you go not the way to examine; you must call forth the watch that are their accusers.

Dogb. Yea, marry, that's the easiest way:—Let the watch come forth:—Masters, I charge you, in the prince's name, accuse these men.

1 Watch. This man said, sir, that Don John, the prince's brother, was a villain.

Dogb. Write down—prince John a villain:—Why this flat perjury, to call a prince's brother—villain.

Bora. Master constable,—

Dogb. Pray thee, fellow, peace; I do not like thy look, I promise thee.

Sexton. What does the law say him you say else?

2 Watch. Marry, that he had received a thousand ducats of Don John, for accusing the lady Hero wrongfully.

Dogb. Flat burglary, as ever was committed.

Verg. Yea, by the mass, that it is.

Sexton. What else, fellow?

1 Watch. And that count Claudio did mean, upon his words, to disgrace Hero before the whole assembly, and not marry her.

Dogb. O villain! thou wilt be condemned into everlasting redemption for this.

Sexton. What else?

2 Watch. This is all.

Sexton. And this is more, masters, than you can deny. Prince John is this morning secretly stolen away; Hero was in this manner accused, in this very words you heard, and upon the grief of this, suddenly died.—Master constable, let these men be bound, and brought to Leonato's; I will go before, and show him their examination.

[Exeunt.]

Dogb. Come, let them h—h summoned.

Verg. Let them be in band.

Con. Off, coxcomb!

Dogb. God's my life! where's the sexton? let him come before the prince, officer, coxcomb.—

Come, blind them:—Thou naughty varlet!

Con. Away! you are an ass, you are an ass.

Dogb. Dost thou not suspect my place? Dost thou not suspect my years?—O that he were here to write me a line, as but, master, remember, that I am an ass; though it be not written down, yet forget not that I am an ass:—No, thou villain, thou art full of piety, as shall be proved upon thee by good so much, as will arise fellow; and, which is more, an officer; and, which is more, a householder, and, which is more, as pretty a piece of flesh as any is in Messina; and one that knows the law, go to, and a rich fellow enough, go to; and a fellow that hath had masses; and one that hath few gowns, and every thing handsome about him:—Bring him away. O, that I had been writ down—an ass!

[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Before Leonato's House.

Enter Leonato and Antonio.

Ant. If you go on thus, you will kill yourself;
And 'tis not wisdom, thus to second grief
Against yourself.

Leon. I pray thee, cease thy counsel,
Which falls into mine ears as profitless
As water in a sieve: give me no counsel;
Nor let no comforter delight mine ear,
But such a one whose wrongs do suit with mine.
Bring me a father, that so 'lors his child,
Whose joy of her is overweigh'd like mine,
And bid him speak of patience.
Measure his woe the length and breadth of mine,
And let it answer every strain for strain;
As thus for thus, and such a grief for such,
In every lineament, branch, shape, and form:
If such a one will smile, and stroke his beard:
Cry—sorrow, wag! and hem, when he should go groan;
Patch grief with provers; make misfortune drunk
With candle-wasters; bring him yet to me,
And I of him will gather patience.
But there is no such man: For, brother, men
Can counsel, and speak comfort to that grief
Which they themselves not feel; but, tasting it,
Their counsel turns to passion, which before
Would give preceptual medicine to rage,
Fetter strong madness in a silken thread,
Charm aching and angry words;
No, no; 'tis all men's office to speak patience
To those that wring under the load of sorrow;
But no man's virtue, nor sufficiency,
To be so moral, when he shall endure
The like high passion; therefore give me no counsel:
My griefs cry louder than advertisement.
[Exeunt.]

Ant. Therein do men from children nothing Leon. I pray thee, peace; I will be fleshy and
For there was never yet philosopher,
[Blood;
That could endure the tooth-ach patiently;
However they have writ the style of gods,
And made a pish at chance and sufferance.
Ant. Yet bend not all the harm upon yourself:
Make those, that do offend you, suffer too.
Leon. There thou speak'st reason, nay, I will do
My soul doth tell me, Hero is believed:
[Exeunt.
Ant. Good day to both of you.
Leon. I pray thee, peace; I will be fleshy and
For there was never yet philosopher,
[Blood;
That could endure the tooth-ach patiently;
However they have writ the style of gods,
And made a pish at chance and sufferance.
Ant. Yet bend not all the harm upon yourself:
Make those, that do offend you, suffer too.

Enter Don Pedro and Claudio.

Ant. Here comes the prince, and Claudio, hastily.
D. Pedro. Good den, good den.
Claud. Good day to both of you.
Leon. Hear you, my lords,—
D. Pedro. We have some haste, Leonato.
Leon. Some? haste, my lord!—well, fare you well, my lord:
Are you so hasty now?—well, all is one.
[Exeunt.
D. Pedro. Nay, do not quarrel with us, good old
Ant. If he could right himself with quarrelling,
Some of us would lie low.
Claud. Who wrongs him?

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

Act 3.

Lord. They, when she was wrong me: then doonavary,

That, now, marry, be'fore, I marry thee?

Marry, be'fore, look upon thy sword,

I fear they not, now.

And marry, be'fore, how art thou, my son?

Is there, my love, not in my sword?

Snow, thou, thou art, never then, and well at

Is there the dart, nor a flaw?

And, under privilege of age, so bung

What have I done, how, or what would do,

Were I also, know, to thee, thine head,

How art thy sword, mine innocent child, and that,

And, with grey hairs, and brows of many days,

I say, then hath been that innocent child,

That till her heart hath gone through, and through her heart.

And she is buried with her ancestors,

In a tomb where never scandal slept,

Save this of her, framed by thy villainy.

Clown. By your leave.

Lord. Thy friend, Claudio, thing, I say.

Lord. My lord, my lord,

I'll have it on his body, if he dare,

Being to his noble use, and his active practice.

His lay of youth, and brisk of lost head.

Lord. Away! I will not have to do with you.

Lord. Come, come, boy, come, follow me, sir boy;

I will have you from your fouling fence.

That dare as well answer a man, indeed,

As I dare take a serpent by the tongue;

Boys, aye, aye, hang, Jacks, vile keepers.

Lord. Brother Antonio.

And. Hold you content; What man, I know not;

And what they weigh, even to the utmost scrapes,

Scambling, out-facing, foolish, mongering boys,

That lie, and clog, and flout, deprave and slander,

On either hand, and every harlot's hideousness,

And speak off half a dozen dangerous words,

How they might hurt thee: content, if they hurt,

And this is all.

Lord. But, brother Antonio.

And. Come, 'tis no matter.

Do not meddle, let me deal in this.

D. Pedro. Gentlemen both, we will not wake

Your patience.

My heart is sorry for thy daughter's death;

But, on my honour, thou was charg'd with nothing

But what was true, and very full of proof.

Lord. My lord, my lord,

D. Pedro. I will not hear you.

Lord. No?

Brother, away — I will be heard —

And shall.

Or some of us will smart for it.

[Exit Leonato and Antonio.]

Enter Benedick.

D. Pedro. See, see; here comes the man we went to seek.

Claud. Now, signior! what news?

D. Pedro. Welcome, signior; You are almost covered with the drops of love.

Claud. We had like to have had our two noses snapped off with two old men without teeth.

D. Pedro. Leo'mato and his brother; What think'th

Then had we fought; I doubt, we should have been too young for them.

But, in a fair quarrel there is no true valour:

I came to seek you both.

They were up and down to seek you;

For we are high proof of worth, and would have

It be a pleasant. What more on your parts?

What more on your parts, draw, to please us.

D. Pedro. As I am an honest man, he looks Pleasure, I pray you.

Claud. What courage, man! What though care

Killed a cat, you must be niggardly in th' toil care.

Sir, I shall meet your wit in the career, and you charge it against me — I pray you choose another subject.

Claud. Nay, then give him another staff; this last was but a taffy.

D. Pedro. By this light, he changes more and more. I think, he be as gay indeed.

Claud. If he be, he know how to turn his gibes.

B. What! Shall I speak a word in your ear?

Claud. God beaves me from a challenge!

B. You are a villain — I jest not — I will make it go good how you dare, with what you dare,

Serve me right, or I will pro treat your cowardice. You have killed a sly wench,

And her death shall fall heavy on you. Let me hear from you.

Claud. Well, I will meet you, so I may have good cheer.

D. Pedro. What, a feast? a feast?

Claud. I thank thee; he hath bid me to a calf's head and a capon, the which if I do not care

Much, I will have thine other foot, my knife's hatchet. Shall I not find a woodcock too?

B. Sir, your wit ambles well; it goes easily.

D. Pedro. I'll tell thee how Beatrice praised thy wit the other day: I said, thou hadst a fine wit;

True, says she, a fine little one: No, said I, a great

Well; Right, says she, a great good one. Nay, said I, a good well; Just, said she, if hurts no body. Nay, said I, the gentleman is wise; Certain, said she, a wise gentleman, said I, in a wise kind. That I believe, said she, for he shew a thing to me on Monday night, which he foresaw on Tuesday morning; there's a double tongue; there's two tongues.

This was a fortune in my favor, a par ticular virtues; yet, at last, she concluded with a sigh, thou wast the properest man in Italy.

Claud. For the which she wept heartily, and said, she cared not.

D. Pedro. Yes, that she did; but yet, for all that, an if she did not hate him deadly, she would love him dearly: the old man's daughter told us all.

Claud. All, all; and moreover, God saw him when he went to the garden.

D. Pedro. But when shall we set the savage bull's horns on the sensible Benedick's head?

Claud. Yea, and text underneath, Here dwells Benedick the married man?

D. Ped. Fare you well, boy; you know my mind;

I will leave you now to your gospel-like humour;

You break jests as braggarts do their blades, which, God be thanked, hurt not. — My lord, for your many kindnesses, I thank you: I must conclude your company; your brother, the bastard, is fled from Messina: you have, among you, killed a sweet and innocent lady. For my lord Jack beard, there, be and I shall meet; and till them, peace be with him.

[Exit Benedick.]

D. Pedro. He is in earnest.

Claud. In most profound earnest; and I'll war rant for the love of Leo'mato.

D. Pedro. And hath challenged thee?

Claud. Most sincerely.
D. Pedro. What a pretty thing man is, when he goes in his doublet and hose, and leaves off his wit!

Enter Dogberry, Verges, and the Watch, with Conrade and Borachio.

Claud. He is then a giant to an ape: but then is an ape a doctor to such a man.

Pedro. Poor old fool, let be; pluck up, my heart, and be sad! Did he not say, my brother was fled?

Dogb. Come, you, sir: if justice cannot tame you, she shall net you high; she shall follow you, as you are a courting hypocrite once, you must be looked to.

D. Pedro. How now, two of my brother's men bound! Borachio, one! Borachio.

Claud. Hearten after their officers, my lord! D. Pedro. Officers, what offence have these men done?

Dogb. Marry, sir, they have committed false report; moreover, they have spoken untruths; secondarily, they are slanders; sixth and lastly, they have beiled a lady: thirdly, they have verified unjust things: and, to conclude, they are lying knaves all.

D. Pedro. First, I ask thee what they have done: thirdly, I ask thee what's their offence; sixth and lastly, why they are committed; and, to conclude, what you lay to their charge.

Claud. Rightly was pack'd in his own division; and, by my troth, there's one meaning well suited. D. Pedro. Whom have you offended, masters, that you are thus bound to your answer? this learned constable is too cunning to be understood: What's your offence?

Bora. Sweet prince, let me go no further to mine answer; do you hear me, and let this count kill me. I have received even your very eyes: what you have laid to their charge shall follow, I have brought to light; who, in the night, overheard me confessing to this man, how Don John your brother incensed me to slander the lady Hero; how you were brought into the orchard, and saw me court Margaret in Hero's garments; how you disgraced her, when you should marry her; my villainy they have upon record: which I had rather seal with my death, than repeat over to my shame: the lady is dead upon mine and my master's false accusation; and, briefly, I desire nothing but the reward of a villain.

D. Pedro. Runs not this speech like iron through your blood? Claud. I have drunk poison, whilsts he uttered it. D. Pedro. But did my brother set thee on to this? Bora. Yes, and paid me richly for the practice of it.

D. Pedro. But, is composed and framed of treachery:—And fled he is upon this villainy.

Claud. Sweet Hero! now thy image doth appear In the rare semblance that I loved it first.

Dogb. Come, bring away the plaintiffs: by this time our Sexton hath reformed signior Leonato of the matter: And masters, do not forget to specify, when time and place shall serve, that I am an ass. Bora. But, sir, you master signior Leonato, and the Sexton too.

Re-enter Leonato and Antonio, with the Sexton.

Leon. Which is the villain? Let me see his eyes: That when I note another man like him, I may avoid him. Which of these is he? [me. Bora. If you would know your wronger, look on Leon. Art thou the slave, that with thy breath to Mine innocent child? [last kill'd Bora. Yes, even I alone. Leon. No, not so, villain; thou belyst at' thyself: Here stand a pair of honourable men, And they had life. Thou hast killed them: Record it with thy high and worthy deeds; 'Twas bravely done, if you beheth you of it.

Claud. I know not how to pray your patience, Yet I must speak: Choose your revenge yourself; Impose me to what penance your invention Can lay upon my sin: yet sign'd I not, But in mistakeing.

D. Pedro. By my soul, nor I; And yet, to satisfy this good old man, I would bend under any weight That hell' ungeth to.

Leon. I cannot bid you bid my daughter live, That were impossible; but I pray you both, Possess the people in Messina here How innocently I died; and, if your love Can labour aught in sad invention, Hang her an epitaph upon her tomb, And sing to it her bones; sing it to-night:— To-morrow morning come you to my house; And since you could not be my son-in-law, Be yet my nephew: my brother hath a daughter, Almost the copy of my child that's dead, And she alone is heir to both of us; Give her the right you should have given her cousin, And so dies my revenge.

Claud. O, noble sir, Your over kindness doth wring tears from me! I do entreat your offer and compose For henceforth of poor Claudius. [sings. Leon. To-morrow then I will expect your com- To-night I take my leave. This naughty man Shall face to face be brought to Margaret, Who, I believe, was pack'd in all this wrong. Hid't to it by your brother.

Bora. No, by my soul, she was not; Nor knew not what she did, when she spoke to me; But always hath been just and virtuous, In any thing that I do know by her.

Dogb. Moreover, sir, (which, indeed, is not under white and black,) this plaintiff here, the offender, did call me ass: I beseech you, let it be setteth down; and, moreover, the watch heard them talk of one Deformed: they say, he wears a key in his ear, and a lock hanging by it; and borrows money in God's name; the which he hath used so long, and never paid, that now men grow hard-hearted, and will lend nothing for God's sake: Pray you, examine him upon that point.

Leon. I thank thee for thy care and honest pains. Dogb. Your worship speaks like a most thankful and reverend youth; and I praise God for you. Leon. There's for thy pains.

Dogb. God save the foundation! Leon. Go, I discharge thee of thy prisoner, and I thank thee. Dogb. I leave an arrant knave with your worship; which, I beseech your worship, to correct yourself, for the example of others. (God keep your worship! I wish your worship well; God restore you to health: I humbly give you leave to depart; and if a merry meeting may be wished, God pro- nimit it.) Come, neighbour.

[Exeunt Dogberry, Verges, and Watch. Leon. Untill to-morrow morning, lords, farewell. Ant. Farewell, my lords; we look for you to- D. Pedro. We will not fail. [sorrow. Claud. To-night I'll mourn with Hero. [Exeunt Don Pedro and Claudius. Leon. Bring you these fellows on; we'll talk with Margaret, How her acquaintance grew with this lewd fellow. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Leonato's Garden.

Enter Benedick and Margaret, meeting.

Bene. Pray thee, sweet mistress Margaret, des- serve well at my hands, by helping me to the speech of Beatrice.

Marg. Will you then write me a sonnet in praise of my beauty?

Bene. In so high a style, Margaret, that no man living shall come over it; for, in most comely truth, thou deservest it.
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

Act 5.

Much ado has never come over me, why, shall I always keep below stairs?

Bell. They will as soon as the greyhound's mouth, it catches.

Mons. And your's as blunt as the turner's tools, which hit, but hurt not.

Bell. A most eased wit, Margaret, it will not hurt me, and yet, I pray thee, call Beatrice. I give thee the bawds.

Mons. Give me the swords, we have bucklers of our own.

Beat. If you use them, Margaret, you must put in the pikes with a vice; and they are dangerous weapons for maid's.

Mons. Well, I will call Beatrice to you, I think, hath both love. [Exit Margaret.

Beat. And therefore will come.

The god of love;

[Slaning.

That sits above,

And know me, and know me,

Now pitiful I deserve...

I mean, in hearing; but in loving-Leander the good swimmer, I saw the first employments of praise, and it being full of the commonplace compact-men, whose names yet run smoothly in the even road of a blank verse, why, they were never so truly turned over and over as my poet and, in love.

Mons. I cannot show it in rhyme; I have tried; I can show it in rhyme; that here lies:

Death, in guardian of her wrongs, gave her frame which never dies:

So the fifty, that died whilst absented.

Love to death with glorious form.

Shall there be none upon the tomb,

[affixit it.

Praying her when I am dumb...

Now, men, wind, and sing your solemn hymn.

SONG.

Pardon, Goddess of the night;

Those that slay thy virgin knight;

For the which, with songs of wrongs,

Knew about her tomb they go.

Midnight, assist our wight;

Help us to sigh and groan,

Hymning, hopefully.

Grave, yea, and yind your dead;

Tell doubly be uttered,

Heavily, heavily.

Claud. Now unto thy bones good night!

Yeastly will I do this rite.

D. Pedro. Good morrow, masters; put your torches out.

The wolves have prey'd; and look, the gentle day,

Before the sext of th'ambassado, round about

Dapples the drowsy cast with spots of gray:

Thanks to you all, and leave us; fare you well.

Claud. Good morrow, masters; each his several work.

D. Pedro. Come, let us hence, and put on other And then to Leonato's we will go.

Claud. And, Ihymen, now with luckier issue speed,

Than this, for whom we render'd up this woe.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A Room in Leonato's House.

Enter Leonato, Antonio, Benedick, Beatrice, Ursula, Friar, and Hero.

Friar. Did not I tell you she was innocent?

Leon. So are the prince and Claudio, who acccus'd her.

Upon the error that you heard debated:

How Mulianus saved some faults for them; Although against her will, as it appears In the true course of all the question.

Ant. Well, I am glad that all things sort so well.

Beat. And so am I, being else by faith enforce'd To call young Claudio to a reproof for it.
Mean time, let wonder seem familiar, And to the chapel let us presently. Bene. Soft and fair, friar.—Which is Beatrice? Beat. I will confess to that name; [Unmasking.] What is your will? Bene. Do not you love me? Beat. No, no more than reason. Bene. Why, then your uncle, and the prince, and Claudio, Have been deceiv'd; for they swore you did. Beat Do not you love me? Bene. No, no more than reason. Bene. They swore that you were well-nigh dead for me. Bene. They swore that you were well-nigh dead for me. Bene. 'Tis no such matter.—Then you do not love me? Bene. No, truly, but in friendly recompense. Leon. Come, cousin, I am sure you love the gentleman. Claud. And here he sworn upon; that he loves For here's a paper, written in his hand, [her] A halting sonnet of his own pure brain, Fashion'd to Beatrice. Hero. And here's another, Writ in my cousin's hand, stolen from her pocket, Containing her affection unto Benedick. Bene. A miracle! here's our own hands against our hearts!—Come, I will have thee; but, by this light, I take thee for pity. Beat. I would not deny you;—but, by this good day, I yield upon great persuasion; and, partly, to save your life, for I was told you were in a consumption. Bene. Peace, I will stop your mouth. [Kissing her.] D. Pedro. How dost thou, Benedick the married man? Bene. I'll tell thee what, prince; a college of wits-crackers cannot flout me out of my humour: Dost thou think, I care for a satire, or an epigram? No: if a man will be beaten with brains, he shall wear nothing handsome about him: in brief, since I do propose to marry, I will think nothing to any purpose that the world can say against it; and therefore never flout at me for what I have said against it; for man is a giddy thing, and this is my conclusion.—For thy part, Claudio, I did think to have beaten thee; but in that thou art like to be my kinsman, live unbruised, and love my cousin. Claud. I had well hoped, thou wouldst have denied Beatrice, that I might have cudgelled thee out of thy single life, to make thee a double dealer; which, out of question, thou wilt be, if my cousin do not look exceeding narrowly to thee. Bene. Come, come, we are friends;—let's have a dance ere we are married, that we may lighten our own hearts, and our wives' heels. Leon. We'll have dancing afterwards. [sick.— Bene. First, o' my word; therefore, play music, Prince, thou art said; get thee a wife, get thee a wife: there is no staff more reverend than one tipped with horn. Enter a Messenger. Mess. My lord, your brother John is taken in flight, And brought with armed men back to Messina. Bene. Think not, friar, I desire him till to-morrow; I'll devise thee brave punishments for him.—Strike up, pipers. [Dance. [Exeunt

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Athena. A Room in the Palace of Theseus.

Enter Theseus, Hippolyta, Phileas, and Attendants.

For, now, fair Hippolyta, our nuptial hour
Draws on apace; four happy days have Since the witchcraft of your magic pow'r
Turned me, and made me Duke of Athens;
And, in the name of the new-gained title,
I pay this visit to my dear Athena.

Hippolyta, I would thee with my word,
And, in the name of the new-gained title,
I pay this visit to my dear Athena.

Egeus, Hermia, Lysander, and Demetrius.

Egeus. Happy be Theseus, our renowned duke!
Hermia. Thank you, good Egeus! What's the news with thee?

Ful of vexation come I, with complaint
Against my child, my daughter Hermia.—
Stand forth, Demetrius.  —My noble lord,
This man hath my consent to marry her.—
Stand forth, Lysander;—and, my gracious duke,
This hath bewitch'd the bosom of my child:
Thou, thou, Lysander, thou hast given her dyne,
And interchang'd love-tokens with my child:
Then hast by moon-light at her window sung,
With feigning voice, verses of feigning love:
And real'd the impression of her fancy.
With bracelets of thy hair, rings, gauds, conceits,
Kisses, caresses, pageants, sweetmeats; messengers
Of strong prevailment in unharmon'd youth:
With cunning hast thou flout'd my daughter's heart;
Turn'd her obedience, which is due to me,
To stubborn harshness,—And, my gracious duke,
Be it to she will not hear before thy grace.

Egeus. Consent to marry with Demetrius,
I beg the ancient privilege of Athens;
As she is mine, I may dispose of her;
Which shall be either to this gentleman,

Or to her death; according to our law,
Immediately provided in that case.

This is the question, sir.  If my daughter
Entreat your father's grace to do this marriage;

MIDSUMMER-NIGHTS DREAM.
And what is mine my love shall render him;
And she is mine; and all my right of her
I entrate unto Demetrius.

_Lys._ I am, my lord, as well deriv'd as he,
As well posses'd; my love is more than his;
My fortunes every way as fair rank'd,
If not with vantage, as Demetrius';
And, which is more than all the rest of joys can be,
I am belov'd of beauteous Hermia;
Why should not I then prosecute my right?
Demetrius, I'll avouch it to his head,
My story to Neseus I'll make known,
And won her soul; and she, sweet lady, dotes,
Devoutly dotes, dotes in idolatry,
Upon this spotted and inconstant man.
These I, that I have heard so much,
And with Demetrius that I too have spoke thereof;
But, being over-full of self-affairs,
My mind did lose it.—But, Demetrius, come;
And come, Egeus; you shall go with me,
I have some private schooling for you both.—
For you, fair Hermia, look you arm yourself
To fit your fancies to your father's will;
Or else the law of Athens yields you up
(When by no means we may consent)
To death, or to a vow of single life.
Come, my Hippolyta; What cheer, my love?
Demetrius, and Egeus, go along;
I must employ you in some business
Against our nuptial; and confide with you
Of something nearly that concerns yourselves.
_Ege._ With duty, and desire, we follow you.

_Lys._ How now, my love? Why is your cheek so pale?

_Her._ How chance the roses there do fade so fast?
_Belike_ for want of rain; which I could well
Betray them from the temper of the Helene's eyes.
_Lys._ Ah me! for ought that ever I could read,
Could ever hear by tale or history,
The course of true love never did run smooth;
But, either it was different in blood;
Or _O cross! too high to be enthrall'd to love!_
_Lys._ Or else misgiv'd, in respect of years;
_O spite! too old to be engag'd to young!_
_Lys._ Or else it stood upon the choice of friends:
_Her._ O hell! to choose love by another's eye!
_Lys._ Or, if there were a sympathy in choice,
War, death, or sickness did lay siege to it;
Making it momentary as a sound,
Swift as a shadow, a momentary dream;
As bright as the lightning in the collied night,
That, in a spleen, unfolds both heaven and earth,
And ere a man hath power to say,—Behold!
The jaws of darkness do devour it up;
No such bright things come to our elevation.
_Her._ If then true lovers have been ever cross'd,
It stands as an edict in destiny:
Then let us teach our trial patience,
Because it is a customary cross;
As due to love, as thoughts and dreams, and sights,
Wishes, and tears, poor fancy's followers.

_Lys._ A good persuasion; therefore, hear me
I have a widow aunt, a dowager
_Hermia._ Of great revenue, and she hath no child;
From Athens is her house remote seven leagues;
And she respects me as her only son.
There, gentle Hermia, may I marry thee;
And to that place the sharp Athenian law
Cannot pursue us: if thou lov'st me then,
Steal forth thy father's house to-morrow night;
And in the wood, a league without the town,
Where I did meet thee last night,
To do observance to a mourn of May.
There will I stay for thee.

_Her._ My good Lysander!
I do entreat thee by Cupid's sweetest bow,
By his best arrow with the golden head;
By the simplicity of Venus' doves;
By that which knitteth souls, and prosper loves;
And by that fire which burn'd the Carthage queen,
When the false Trojan under sail was seen;
By all the vows that ever men have broke,
In number more than ever women spoke;—
In that same place thou hast appointed me,
To-morrow night will I meet with thee.

_Lys._ Keep promise, love; Look, here comes Helena.

_Enter Helena._

_Hel._ God speed fair Helena! Whither away?
_Her._ Call ye me fair? that fair again unsay.
Demetrius loves your fair: _O happy fair!_
Your eyes are a lode-star, and your tongue's sweet
More tunable than lark to shepherd's ear.
[Air When wheat is green, when hawthorn buds appear.
Sickness is catching; _O, were favour so!_
Your's would I catch, fair Hermia, ere I go;
My ear should catch your voice, my eye your eye;
My tongue should catch your tongue's sweet melody.
Were the world mine, Demetrius being bated,
The rest I'll give to be to you translated.
O, teach me how you look; and with what art
You away the motion of Demetrius' heart.
_Her._ I frown upon him, yet he loves me still.
_Hel._ 0, to that which frowns would teach my smiles such skill!
_Her._ I give him curses, yet he gives me love.
_Hel._ 0, that my prayers could such affection move.
_Her._ The more I hate, the more he follows me.
_Hel._ The more I love, the more he hateth me.
_Her._ His folly, Helena, is no fault of mine.
_Hel._ None, but your beauty; _Would that fault were mine!_
_Her._ Take comfort; he no more shall see my face:
Lysander and myself will fly this place.—
Before the time I did Lysander see,
Seem'd Athens a paradise to me.
_O_ Then, what graces in my love do dwell,
That he hath turn'd a heaven unto hell!
_Lys._ Helena, to you our minds we will unfold:
To-morrow night when Phæbe doth behold
Her silver visage in the wat'ry glass,
Decking with liquid pearl the bladed grass,
(A time that lovers' flights doth still conceal,)
Through Athen's gates have we devis'd to steal.
And in the wood, where often you and I
Upon faint primrose beds were wont to lie,
Emptying our bosoms of their counsel sweet;
There my Lysander and myself shall meet:
And thence from Athens, turn away our eyes,
To seek new friends and strange companions.
Farewell, sweet playfellow; pray thou for us,
And good luck grant thee thy Demetrius!—
Keep word, Lysander: we must starve our sight
From lovers' food, till to-morrow deep midnight.
[Exit Herm.]

_Lys._ I will, my Hermia.—Helena adieu:
As you on him, Demetrius dote on you!
[Exit Lys.]

_Hel._ How happy some, o'er other some can be!
Through Athens I am thought as fair as she.
But what of that? Demetrius thinks not so;
He will not know what all but he do know.
And as he errs, dotting on Hermia's eyes,
So I, admiring of his qualities,
Things base and vile, holding no quantity,
Love can transpose to form and dignity,
Love looks not with the eyes, but with the mind;
And therefore is wing'd Cupid painted blind.
Nor hath love's mind of any judgment taste;
Wings, and no eyes, figure unheedy haste;
And therefore is love's absence bettered.
Because in choice he is so oft beguil'd,
As waggish boys in game themselves forswear,
So the boy Love is perjur'd every where;
For ere Demetrius look'd on her, in Lysander's eye,
He hail'd down oaths, that he was only mine;
And when this half some heat from Hermia felt,
So he dissolv'd, and showers of oaths did melt.
I will go tell him of fair Hermia's skill.
Then to the wood will he, to-morrow night,
I will do any man's heart good to hear me; I will roar, that I will make the duke say, Let him roar again, Let him roar again.

Quin. An you should do it too terribly, you would fright the Duchess and the ladies, that they would shriek; and that were enough to hang us all.

All. That would hang us every mother's son.

But. I grant you, friends, if that you should fright the ladies out of their wits, they would have no more Shoreness but to hang us; but I will aggravate my voice so, that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an 'twere any nightingale.

Quin. You can play no part but Pyramus: for Pyramus is a sweet-faced man; a proper man, as one shall see in a summer's day; a most lovely, gentleman-like man; therefore you must needs play Pyramus.

But. Well, I will undertake it. What beard were I best to play it in?

Quin. Why, what you will.

But. I will discharge it in either your straw-coloured beard, your orange-tawny beard, your purple-in-grain beard, or your French-crown-colour beard, your perfect yellow.

Quin. Some of your French crowns have no hair at all, and these, I think will play bare-faced. But masters, here are your parts. And I am to entreat you, request you, and desire you, to come thither by to-morrow night; and meet me in the palace wood, a mile out of the town, by moonlight; there will we rehearse: for if we meet in the city, we shall be dogged with company, and our devices known. In the mean time I will draw a bill of properties, such as our play wants. I pray you fail me not.

But. We will meet; and there we may rehearse more obscurely, and courageously. Take pains, be perfect; adieu.

Quin. At the duke's oak we meet.

But. Enough; hold, or cut bow strings. [Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Wood near Athens.

Enter a Fairy at our door, and Puck at another.

Puck. How now, spirit! whither wander you?

Fai. Over hill, over dale, Through bush, through brier, Over rock, over rye, Through flood, through fire, I do wander everywhere, Swifter than the woodcocks' wings; And I serve the fairy queen, To dew her orbs upon the green. The cowslips tall at her pensioners be; In their gold coats spots you see; Those be rubies, fairy favours, In those freckles live their savours.

I must go seek some dew drops here, And hang a pear in every cowslip's ear. Farewell, thou lob of spirits, I'll be gone. Our queen is up, all our elves come here anon. Puck. The king doth keep his revels here tonight; Take heed, the queen come not within his sight. For Oberon is passing fierce and wrathful, Because she sought his former attendant, hath A lovely boy, stol'n from an Indian king; She never had so sweet a changeling. And jealous Oberon would have the child And his father, and his nurse, and his train, to trace the forest wild. But she, perforce, withholds the loved boy, Crowns him with flowers, and makes him all her joy! And now they never meet in grove, or green, By fountain clear, or spangled starlight sheen, But they do square; that all their elves, for fear, Creep into acorn cups, and hide them there.
Fai. Either I mistake your shape and making quite,
Or else you are that shrewd and knavish sprite, Call'd Robin Good-fellow: are you not he?
That fright the maidens of the villagery;
Skim milk; and sometimes labour in the quern,
And sometimes at the housewife churn: And sometimes make the drink to bear no harm;
Mislead night-wanderers, laughing at their harm?
Those that Hobgoblin call you, and sweet Fuck,
You vex their work, and they shall have good luck:
Are you not he?

Puck. Thou speakest droll.
I am that merry wanderer of the night.
I jest to Oberon, and make him smile,
When I a fit and beam of mischievous Nile,
Neighing in likeness of a silly foal:
And sometime lurk I in a gossip's bowl,
In very likeness of a roasted crab;
And, when she drinks, against her lips I bob,
And on her wither'd dew-lap pour the ale.
The wisest aunt, telling the saddest tale,
Sometime for three-foot stool mistaketh me;
Then slip I from her bun, down topples she,
And tailor cries, and falls into a cough;
And then the whole quadril hold their hips, and loffe;
And waxen in their mirth, and niecee and swear
A merrier hour was never wasted there.—
But now, now, Puck.

Fai. And here my mistress:—Would that he were gone!

SCENE II.—Enter Oberon, at one door, with his train, and Titania, at another, with here.

Obe. Ill met by moon-light, proud Titania.

Tita. What, jealous Oberon? Fairy, skip hence; I have forsworn his bed and company.

Obe. Tarry, rash wanion; Am not I thy lord?

Tita. Then I must be thy lady: But I know
When thou hast stol'n away from fairy land,
And in the shade of Corin sat all day,
Playing on pipes of corn, and venering love
To amorous Hillida. Why art thou here,
Come from the farthest steep of India?

Obe. But, forsooth, the bouncing Amazon,
Your buxin'd mistress, and your warrior love,
To Theseus must be wedded; and you come to give their bed joy and prosperity.

Obe. How canst thou thus, for shame, Titania,
Going on my pranks, and taking up my sport?
Knowing I know thy love to Theseus?
Didst thou not lead him through the glistening
night
From Puck, whom he ravished?
And make him with fair Jigle break his faith,
With Ariadne, and Antiope?

Tita. These are the forgeries of jealousy:
And never, since the middle summer's spring,
Met on hill, in dale, forest, or mead,
By paven fountain, or by rough brook,
Or on the beached margin of the sea,
To dance our ringlets to the whistling wind,
But with thy brawls thou hast disturb'd our sport.
Therefore the winds, piping to us in vain,
As in revenge, have suck'd up from the sea
Contagious fogs; which falling in the land,
Have every small cleave, and cast them so proud,
That they have overborne their continent:
The ox hath therefore stretch'd his yoke in vain,
The ploughman lost his sweat; and the green corn
Hath rotted, ere his youth attain'd a beard:
But with this store empty in doth see,
And cows are fatted with the murrain flock;
The nine men's morris is fill'd up with mud;
And the quaint mazes in the wanton green,
For want of tread, are distinguishtable:
The human mortals want their winter here;
No night is now with hymn or carol blest:
Therefore the moon, the governers of floods,
Fails in her anger, washes all the air,
That rheumatic diseases do abound:
And thorough this distemperature, we see

The seasons alter: hoary-headed frosts
Fall in the fresh lap of the crimson rose,
And on old Hyacinth, and icy crown,
An odorous chaplet of sweet summer buds:
Is, as in mockery, set: The spring, the summer,
The childing autumn, angry winter, change
Their wonted liveliness, and the mazed world,
By their increase, now known, are this:
And this same progeny of evils comes
From our debate, from our dissension;
We are their parents and original.

Obe. Do you amend it then: It lies in you:
Why should Titania cross her Oberon?
I do but beg a little changeling boy,
To be my chamberlack.

Tita. Set your heart at rest,
The fairy land buys not the child of me.
His mother was a vot'ress of my order:
And, in the spiced Indian air, by night,
Full often hath she gossip'd by my side:
And sat with me upon Neptune's yellow sands,
Marking the embarked traders on the flood;
When we have laugh'd to see the sails conceive,
And grow big-bellied, with the wanton wind:
Which she, with pretty grace and with swimming gait, Following (her womb, then rich with my young squire)
Would imitate; and sail upon the land,
To fetch new flap, and return a name:
As from a voyage, rich with merchandize.
But she, being mortal, of that boy did die;
And, for her sake, I do rear up her boy;
And, for her sake, I will not part with him.

Obe. How long within this wood intend you stay?

Tita. Perciball, till after Theseus' wedding-day.

Obe. If you will patiently dance in our round,
And see our moon-light revels, go with us:
If not, shun me, and I will spare your haunts.

Obe. Give me that boy, and I will go with thee.

Tita. Not for thy kingdom:
Fairies, away:
We shall chide down-right, if I longer stay.

[Exit Titania and her train.]

Obe. Well, go thy way: thou shalt not from this grove,
Till I torment thee for this injury.
My gentle Puck, come hither: Thou rememberst
Since once I sat upon a promontory,
And heard a mermaid, on a dolphin's back,
Utering such dulcet and harmonious breath,
That the rude sea grew civil by her song;
And certain stars shot madly from their spheres,
To hear the sea-maid's music.

Puck. I remember.

Obe. That very time I saw, (but thou couldst not,) Flying between the cold moon and the earth,
Cupid all arm'd: a certain aim he took
At a fair vestal, throne by the west;
And loo'sd his love-shaft smartly from his bow,
As it should pierce a hundred thousand hearts:
But I might see young Cupid's fiery shaft
Quench'd in the chaste beams of the wat'ry moon;
And the imperial votress passed on,
In maiden meditation, fancy-free.
Yet mark'd I where the bolt of Cupid fell:
It fell upon a little western flower,—
Before, milk-white; now purple with love's wound,
And maidsen call it love-in-idleness.
Fetch me that flower; the herb I show'd thee once;
The juice of it on sleeping eye-lids laid,
Will make or man or woman madly dote
Upon the next live creature that it sees;
Fetch me this herb: and be thou here again,
 Ere the leviathan can swim a league.

Puck. I'll put a girdle round about the earth
In forty minutes:
[Exeunt Puck.]

Obe. Having once this juice,
I'll watch Titania when she is asleep,
And drop the liquor of it in her eyes;
The next thing then she wak'd, she makes use upon,
( Be it on lady, knavish, or cow, or bull,
On meddling monkey, or on busy ape.)
She shall pursue it with the soul of love.
And ere I take this charm off from her sight,
As I must take it, from her heart,
I'll make her render up her page to me.
But who comes here? I say myself,
And I will overhear their conference.

Enter Demetrius, Helen, following him.

Dem. I love thee not, therefore pursue me not.
Where is Lyndard, and fair Irina?
The one I say, the other the swain.
They have been here, they were here in this wood,
And here am I; and wood is good wood, because I cannot meet with Helen.
Hence, get thee gone, and find me no more.

Dem. Do I speak fair? I speak fair? O, indeed,
I do not in pure truth.

Full. Then do not,
I cannot love you.

Dem. And even for that do I love you the more.
I am your slave;

Dem. The more you beat me, I am sworn on you
Like me but as your enterprise, mark me,
Nay, love me, lose me; only give me leave,
Worthy as I am, to follow you.

Full. What wert worse place, or beg in your love,
And yet a place of worse fortune with me.

Dem. To be as used as you use your dogs.

Dem. To not too much the hatred of my spirit
For I am sick, when I do look on thee.

Full. And I am sick, when I look not on you.

Dem. When do not I love you too much,
To leave the care, and care of you,
Into the hands of one that loves you not;
To trust the propriety of night,
And the discourse of waking,
With the real worth of your majesty.

Full. Your verse is in my privilege for that.
It is not sick, when I do see your face,

Dem. I am not sick, I am not the night.
Nor death this wood and world of man;
For you in my respect, are all the world.
Then how can it be said, I am sick?

Dem. I ran from this, and hid me in the brakes,
And leave thee to the sound of wild beasts.

Full. The wily with me, such a heart as you,
But when you will, the arrow shall be hang'd.

Dem. Lame bow and Dandies.

Full. To love parasites from the ground,
And make me love as from the sound of wild beasts.

Dem. I will not, such a parasite as you,
But I will do thee mischief in the wood.

Full. Ay, in the wood, in the wood, the field.
You do me wrong.

Dem. Your wrongs do set a scandal on my heart,
We cannot live for love, as men may do.
We should be used, and were not made to woo.
I'll lose thee, and make a heaven of hell,
To die upon the hand, I love so well.

Exeunt Dem. and Hel.

Ose. Fare thee well, nymph; ere he do leave this grove,
Then shall by him, and he shall seek thy love.—

Retruer Fick.

Hast thou the flower there? Welcome wanderer.
Fick. Ay, there it is.

I pey thee, give me it.
I have a bawd wherein the wind the my bees blowes,
Where on lips and the noddling violet grows;
Whose over-canopied with lust a woodbine,
Which sett moss roses, and lace with those;
There leaves Tisania, some time of the night,
I'd in these flowers with dances and delight;
And there the snake throws her enamel'd skin,
Heed wide enough to wear a fasty in
And with the juice of this, I'll streak her eyes,

And make her full of hateful fantasies.
Take thin of some of it, and sett through this grove.
A sweet is best, and looking in love with it.
With a disdainful youth on his eyes:
But do it, when the next thing he copy
May he the lady? Then shall know the man
For the Athenian garrisons be in love with on.
I feel it with some care, that he may prove
More fond on her, than she upon her love.
And lock those me meet me ere the first cock crow.
Fick. Fear not, my lord, your servant shall do so.

[Exeunt.

Scene III.—Another part of the Wood.

Enter Titania, with her train.

Tit. Come, now a round, and a fairy song;
Then, for the third part of a minute, hence;
Some, to keep canker in the musk-rose heads;
Some, war with rear-court for their heather wings;
To make my small elves chase; and some, keep back
The clamorous owl, that nightly hoots, and wonders
At our quaint spirits: Sing me now asleep;
Them to their caresses, and into base.

SONG.

1. Fair, you spotted rookers, with double tongue,
Through hedge-banks, do not soar
Never, and blind-worms, do no wrong;
Come out near our fairy queen.

Chor. Philomel, with melody,
Sing to our sweet ladybird,
Lullaby, lullaby, cede, lullaby,
Never harm, be ever warm,
Come, our baby sing and play,
So, good night, with being.

II. 2. Fair, wearing spiders, come and have Hence, you long-beard'd epioneris, hence
Fiddle-bits, approach near;
Worms, nor scratch, do us no offence.

Chor. Philomel, with melody.

2. Fair, hence, away; now all is well;
One, auntie, and sentiment.

[Auxil. Fairies. Titania asleep.—

Enter Oberon.

Ober. What thou seest, when thou dost wake,
Strengthen the flower on Titania's eye-brows.
Do for thy true love take;
Love and languish for the sake,
Be it owner, or cut, or eat.
For, or hear with bewildered hair,
In thy eye that shall appear
When they shall not, it is thy dear;
Wake, when some vile thing is near.

[Exit.

Enter Lyander and Hermia.

Ly. Fair love, you faint with wandering in the
And speak truth, I have forgot our way
Wood. We'll rest us, Hermia, if you think it good,
And tarry for the comfort of the day.
Her. He it so, I, Lyander, find you out a bed,
For upon this bank will rest my head.
Ly. One turf shall serve as pillow for us both
One heart, one bed, two bosoms, and one truth.
Her. Nay, good I, Lyander; for my sake, my dear,
Lie further off yet, do not lie so near.
Ly. O, take the sense, sweet, of my innocence,
Love takes the meanest instruments for conference.
I, mean that my heart unto yours is knit.
So that but one heart we can make of it,
Two bosoms interchanged with an oath,
So then be two bosoms, and a single truth.
Then, by your side no bed-room me deny
For, lying so, Hermia, I do not lie.
Her. Lyander liddles very prettily.
Now much beshrew my manners and my pride,
If Hermia means to say, Lyander lied.
Deserve a sweet look from Demetrius' eye,
But you must flout my insufficiency;
Good time, or well, or wrong, good sooth, you do,
In such disdainful manner me to woo.
But fare you well: perchance I must confess,
I thought you lord of more true gentleness.
O, that too many mortal errors might be
Should, of another, therefore he abus'd! [Exit.
Lys. She sees not Hermia -- Hermia, sleep thou there;
And never may'st thou come Lysander near!
For, as a surfeit of the sweetest things
The deepest loathing to the stomach brings;
Or, as the heresies, that men do leave,
Are hated most of those they did deceive;
So thou, my surfeit, and my heresy,
Of all be hated; but the most of me!
And all my powers, address your love and might,
To honour Helen, and to be her knight! [Exit.
Her. [starting.] Help me, Lysander, help me! do thy best,
To pluck this crawling serpents from my breast!
Ah me, for pity! -- what a dream was here?
Lysander, look, how I do quake with fear!
Methought a serpent sat my heart away,
And you sat smiling at his cruel prey! --
Lysander! what, removed? Lysander! lord!
What, out of hearing? gone? no sound, no word?
Alack, am I wise? am I wise? or am I mad?
Speak, of all loves; I swoon almost with fear.
No? -- then I well perceive you are not nigh:
Either death, or you, I'll find immediately. [Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I. -- The same. The Queen of Fairies lying asleep.

Enter Quince, Snug, Bottom, Flute, Snout, and Starveling.

Bot. Are we all met?
Quin. Pat, pat; and here's a marvellous convenient place for our rehearsal! This green plot shall be our stage, this hawthorn brake our tiring-house; and we will do it in action, as we will do it before the duke.

Bot. Peter Quince, --
Quin. What say'st thou, bully Bottom?
Bot. Think'st thou things in this compact of Pyramus and Thisby, that will never please. First, Pyramus must draw a sword to kill himself; which the ladies cannot abide. How answer you that?

Snout. By 'nkle, a parious fear.

Star. We must not leave the killing out, when all is done.

Bot. Not a whit: I have a device to make all well. Write me a prologue: and let the prologue seem to say, we will do no harm with our swords: and that Pyramus is not killed indeed: and, for the more better assurance, tell them, that I Pyramus am not Pyramus, but Bottom the weaver: This will put them out of fear.

Quin. Well, we will have such a prologue; and it shall be written in eight and six.

Bot. No, make it two more; let it be written in eight and eight.

Snout. Will not the ladies be afraid of the lion?

Star. I fear it, I promise you.

Bot. Masters, you ought to consider with yourselves: to bring in, God shield us! a lion among ladies, is a dangerous thing: for there is not a more fearful wild-fowl than your lion, living; and we ought to look to it.

Snout. Therefore, another prologue must tell, he is not a wild lion.

Bot. Nay, you must name his name, and half his face must be seen through the lion's neck: and he himself must speak through, saying thus, or to the like effect, -- Ladies, or fair ladies, I would wish you, or, I would request you, or, I would entreat you, not to fear, not to tremble: my life for yours. --

If you think I come hither as a dream, it were pity of my life: No, I am no such thing, I am a man as other men are: and there's, indeed, let him name his name: and tell them plainly, he is being the Jokum.

Quin. Well, it shall be so. But there is two hard things: that is, to bring the moon-light into a chamber, for you know, Pyramus and Thisby meet by moon-light.

Snow. Doth the moon shine that night we play our part?

Quin. Ay, or else one must come in with a bush of thorns and a lantern, and say, he comes to disfigure, or to prevent, the person of moon-shine. Then, there is another thing: we must have a wall in the great chamber: for Pyramus and Thisby, says the story, did talk through the chink of a wall.

Snow. You never can bring in a wall. What say you, Bottom?

Bot. Some man or other must present wall; and let him have some planter, or some becom, or some rough-earth about him, to signify wall; or let him have in his hand that long and through that grass Busy Pyramus and Thisby whisper.

Quin. If that may be, then all is well. Come, sit down, every mother's son, and rehearse your parts. Pyramus, you begin, when you have spoken your speech, enter into that brake; and so every one according to his cu.

Knaves Puck behind.

Puck. What hemen home-opens have we swaggaring here,

So near the cradle of the fairy queen?

What, a play toward? I'll be an auditor;

An actor too, perhaps, if I see cause.

Quin. Speak, Pyramus—Thisby, stand forth.

Pyramus. O flowers of amore, o sweet Valentines,

Quin. Odeoms, odeums.

Pyramus. O deoh oodeums oodeums.

So doth thy breath, my dearest Thisby dear.

But, bark, a voice! stay thou here while I,

And by and by I will to thee appear.

Exit. Puck. A stranger Pyramus than ever play'd here!

[Aside. — Exit.

This. Must I speak now?

Quin. Ay, marry, must you: for you must understand, he goes but to see a noise that he heard, and to see what it is to come to the wall.

This. Most rudious Pyramus, most lily white of hue;

Of clime like the red rose on triumphant brier,

Most briskly jovial, and the most lovable Jew,

As true as truest horse, that yet would never tire,

I'll meet thee, Pyramus, at Night's tomb.

Quin. Nimmus' tomb, man: Why you must not speak that yet; that you answer to Pyramus: you speak all your parts at once, cues and all.—Pyramus enter: your cue is past: it is, never fire.

Re-enter Puck, and Bottom with an ass's head.

This. O — As true as truest horse, that yet would honest men swear.

Pyramus. If I were fair, Thisby, I were only thing:

Quin. O monstrous! O strange! we are haunted.

Fray masters! fly, masters! help! —[Erewhon Crows.

Puck. I' ll follow you, I'll lead you about a round.

Through bag, through bush, through brake, through brier; sometimes a horse I' ll be, sometimes a hound;

A horse, a head, a hand, sometimes a fire:

And neigh, and bark, and grunt, and roar, and burn,

Like horse, bound, hog, bear, fire, at every turn. —[Exit.

But. Why do they run away? this is a knavery of them, to make me afraid.

Re-enter Snowball.

Snow. O Bottom, thou art changed! what do I see on thee?

But. What do you see? you see an ass's head of your own; Do you?

Re-enter Quince.

Quin. Bless thee, Bottom; bless thee! thou art translated.

[Exit. But. I see their knavery; this is to make an ass of me; to fright me, if they could. But I will not stir from this place, do what they can: I will walk up and down here, and I will sing that they shall hear I am not afraid.

[Song.

The sweet cock, so black of hue,
With orange-humming bill,
The throat with his note so true,
The warm with little quill;

This. What angel wakes me from my flowery bed?

[Waking.

Bot. The flinch, the sparrow, and the lark,
The plain-song cocke grey,
Whose note Full many a sombre dark
And darts out answer, say — for, indeed, who would set his wit to so foolish a bird? who would give a bird the lie, though he cry cock, never so?

This. I pray thee, gentle mortal, sing again:

Mine ear is much enamoured of thy note,

So is mine eye embrailed to thy shape;

And thy fair virtue's force perforce doth move me,

On the first view, to say, to swear, I love thee.

Bot. Methinks, mistress, you should have little reason for that: and yet, to say the truth, reason, and love keep little company together now-a-days: The more the pity, that some honest neighbours will not make them friends. Nay, I can gleek upon occasion.

This. Thou art as wise as thou art beautiful.

Bot. Not so, neither: but if I had wit enough to get out of this wood, I have enough to serve mine own turn.

This. Out of this wood do not desire to go;

These shall remain here, whether thou wilt or no:

I am a spirit of no common rate;

The summer still doth tend upon my state,

And I do learn thee: therefore, go with me;

I'll give thee fauries to attend on thee;

And they shall fetch thee jewels from the deep,

And sing, while thou on pressed flowers dost sleep.

And, if I may change the mortal grossness so,

That thou shalt like an airy spirit go—

Pea-blossom! Cobweb! Moth! and Mustard-seed!

Enter four Fairies.

1 Fair. Ready. and I.

2 Fair, and I.

4 Fair. Where shall we go?

This. Be kind and courteous to this gentleman: Hop in his walks, and gambol in his eyes:

Feed him with apricocks and dewberries,

With purple grapes, green figs, and mulberries:

The honey bag from the humble-bees, and,

For night-tapers, crop their waxen thighs,

And light them at the fiery glow-worm's eyes,

To have my love to bed, and to arise;

And pick the wings from painted butterflies,

To fan the moon-beams from his sleeping eyes.

Nod to him, eves, and do him courteous.

1 Fair. Hall, mortal!

2 Fair. Hall!

4 Fair. Hall!

Bot. I cry your worship's mercy, heartily;—I beseech your worship's name.

Cob. Cobweb.
Act 3.

MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM.

But, I shall desire you of more acquaintance, good master Cobweb: if I cut my finger, I shall make bold with you.—Your name, honest gentleman?

Peas-blossom.

Bot. I pray you, commend me to mistress Squall, your mother, and to master Peas-cod, your father. Good master Peas-blossom, I shall desire you of more acquaintance too.—Your name, I beseech you, sir?

Murr. Mustard-seed.

Bot. Good master Mustard-seed, I know your patience well: that same cowardly, giant-like ox-beef had forgot his lines in the summer of your house: I promise you, your kindred hath made my eyes water ere now. I desire you more acquaintance, good master Mustard-seed.

Titus. Come, wait upon him; lead him to my bower.

The moon, methinks, looks with a watery eye; And when she weeps, weeps every little flower, Lamenting some enforced chastity. Tie up my love's tongue, bring him silently. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Another Part of the Wood.

Enter Oberon.

Obe. I wonder, if Titania be awak'd; Then, what it was that next came in her eye, Which she must dote on in extremity.

Enter Puck.

Here comes my messenger.—How now, mad spirit? What night-rule now about this haunted grove? Puck. His mistress with a monster is in love, Near to her close and consecrated bower, While she was in her dull and sleeping hour, A crew of patches, rude mechanics, That work for bread upon Athenian stalls, Were brought together to rehearse a play Intended for great Theseus' nuptial day. The shallowest thick-skinned of that barren sort, Who Pyramus presented, in their sport Porsook his scene, and enter'd in a brake; When I did him at this advantage take, An ass's nowl I fixed on his head; Anon, his Thiseus must be answered, And forth my mimick comes: When they him spy, As wild glee that the creeping Fowler eye, Or russet-patched choughs, many in sort, Rising and cawing at the gun's report Sever themselves, and madly sweep the sky; So at his sight, away his fellows fly: And, at our stamp, here o'er and o'er one falls; He murder cries, and help from Athens calls. Their sense, thus weak, lost with their fears, thus strong.

Made senseless things begin to do them wrong: For briars and thorns at their apparel snatch; Some, sleeves; some, hats: from yielders all things I led them on in this distracted fear, [catch. And left sweet Pyramus translated there; When in that moment (so it came to pass) Titania wak'd, and straightway lov'd an ass. Obe. This falls outbetter than I could devise. But hast thou yet catch'd the Athenian's eyes With the love-juice, as I did bid thee do? Puck. I took him sleeping,—that is finish'd too;— And the Athenian woman by his side; That when he wak'd, of force she must be ey'd.

Enter Demetrius and Hermia.

Obe. Stand close; this is the same Athenian.

Puck. That is the woman, but not this the man. Dem. O, why rebuke you him that love you so? Lay breath so bitter on your bitter foe.

Herm. Now I but chide, but I should use thee worse.

For thou, I fear, hast given me cause to curse. If thou hast slain Lyander in his sleep, Being o'er shoes in blood, plunge in the deep, And kill me too. The sun was not so true unto the day, As he to me: Would he have stol'n away From sleeping Hermia? I'll believe as soon, This whole earth may be bor'd; and that the moon May turn through another creeps, and so displease Her brother's noon-tide with the Antipodes. It cannot be, but thou hast murder'd him; So should a murderer look; so dead, so grim.

Dem. So shall the murder'd look; and so should I, Pierc'd through the heart with your stern cruelty: Yet you, the murderer, look as bright, as clear, As wonder in her glittering sphere. Her. What's this to my Ly'ramus, here or here? Ah, good Demetrius, wilt thou give him me? Dem. I had rather give his carcass to my hounds. Her. Out, dog! out, cur! thou driv'st me past the bounds Of maiden's patience. Hast thou slayn him then? Hencorefore be never number'd among men! Oh! once tell true, tell true, even for my sake; Bust thou have look'd upon him, being awake, And hast thou kill'd him sleeping? O brave touch! Could not a worm, an adder, do so much? An adder did it; for with doubler tongue Than thing, thou serpent, never adder stung. Dem. You spend your passion on a mispris'd mood I am not guilty of Ly'sander's blood; Nor is he dead, for sure that I can tell. Her. I pray thee, tell me then, tell me then that he is well. Dem. An if I could, what should I get therefore? Her. A privilege, never to see me more,— And from thy hated presence part I so: See me no more, whether he be dead or no. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Another Part of the Wood.

Dem. There is no following her in this fierce vein: Here, therefore, for while I will remain. So sorrow; love's doth in her heart grow For debt that bankrupt sleep doth sorrow owe; Which now, in some slight measure it will pay, If for his tender here I make some stay. [Lies down.

Obe. What hast thou done? thou hast mistaken quite, And laid the love-juice on some true-love's sight: Of thy misprision must perforce enforce The truth which thou turn'dst, and not a false turn'dt true. Puck. Then fate o'er-rules; that, one love's holding truth, A million fall, confounding oath on oath. Obe. Alas! a word too much! doth sooner than the wind, And Helena of Athens look thou find: All fancy-sick she is, and pale of cheer With sighs of love, that cost the fresh blood dear. But some illusion see thou bring her here; I'll charm his eyes, against she do appear. Puck. I go, I go; look, how I go; Swifter than arrow from the Tartar's bow. [Exit. Obe. Flower of this purple die, Hit with Cupid's archery, Sink in apple of his eye! When his love he doth espy, Let her shine as gloriously As the Venus of the sky; When thou wak'st, if she be by, Beg of her for remedy. [Re-enter Puck.

Puck. Captain of our fairy band, Helena is here at hand, And the youth mistook by me, Pleading for a lover's fee; Shall we the fair pageant see? Lord, what fools these mortals be! Obe. Stand aside: the noise they make, Will cause Demetrius to awake. Puck. There will two at once, woo one; That must needs be sport alone; And those things do best please me, That befit preposterously.
Enter Lyndaner and Helena.

Ly. Why should you think, that I should vow
Scorn and discretion never come in tears.
Loch, when I vow, I weep; and vows so born,
In their nativity all truth appears.
Heav'ns know these things in me seem scorn to you,
Heaven know these things in me seem faith, to prove them true?

Hel. You do advance your cunning more and more.
When truth is truth, O do thy heart lay To this averse Helena's? Will you give her o'er?
Weigh oath with oath, and you will nothing weigh
Your vows, to her and me, put in two scales,
Weigh both as light as tales.

Ly. I had no judgment, when to her I swore.

Hel. Nor none, in my mind, now you give her o'er.

Ly. Desperate love her, and he loves not me.

Dem. (awakening.) O Helena, goddess, nymph, per- fest, divine,
To what, my love, shall I compare this eye? Crystal is muddy. O, how ripe in show
Thy lips, those blazing cherries, tempting grow! That pure concealed white, high Taurine snow, Fane'd with the rose, and brightening, grew,
When thou hast up thy hand, O let me kiss
This princess of pure white, this soul of bliss!

Hel. O spite! O hell! I see you all are bent To make me mad, and make not Lyndaner.

If you were civil, and knew courtesy,
You would not do me so much injury.
Can you not hate me, as I know you do,
But you must join in, in souls, to mock me too?
If you were men, as men you are in show,
You would not use a gentle lady so,
To vow, and swear, and superpraise my parts,
When, in so sure, you hate me with your hearts.

And now both rivals, to mock Helena,
A trim expost, a manly enterprise,
To conjure tears up in a poor maid's eyes,
With your discretion! love, of noble sort,
Would so offend a virgin; and enter
A poor soul's patience, all to make you sport.

Ly. You are unkind, Demetrius: be not so;
For you love Helena: this, you know, I know;
And here, with good will, with all my heart,
In Helena's love I yield you up my part;
And yours of Helena to me bequeath,
Whom I do love, and will do to my death.

Dem. Lyndaner, keep thy Helena; I will none:
If ever I loved her, all that love is gone.
My heart with her but, as guest-wise, sojourning;
And yours to Helena it hence return'd,
There to remain.

Hel. Helena, it is not so.

Dem. Disparage not the faith thou dost not know.
Let, so thy peril, thou say it dear.—
Look, where thy love comes; yonder is thy dear.

Exit Helena.

Ly. Her. Dark night, that from the eye his function taketh,
The ear more quick of apprehension makes;
Wherein doth impair the seeing sense,
It pays the hearing double recompense:
Then are not by mine eye, Lyndaner, found;
Mine ear, I thank it, brought me to thy sound.
But why unkindly didst thou leave me so? (to go?

Ly. Why should she stay, whom love doth press
Her. Love that love could press Lyndaner from my side?

Ly. Lyndaner's love, that would not let him hide,
Fair Helena, who more engilds the night
The eye, with every ray and eye of light;
What seekst thou there? could not this make thee know,
The hate I bare thee made me leave thee so?

Her. You speak not as you think: it cannot be.

Hel. Lo, she is one of this confederacy!
Now I perceive they have conjoin'd, all three,
To fashion this false sport in spite of me.
Jovian Helena! most ungrateful maid!
I have conceived thee; have you conceived these contriv'd To bait me with this foul delusion?
Is it all the counsel that we two have shard?
The sister's vows, the hours that we have spent,
I have been, and shall be, a base-footed time
For parting us,—O, and is all forgot?
All school-days' friendship, childhood innocence.
We, Helena, like two artificial gods,
Hath not the same respect. Both one flower,
Both on one sampler, sitting on one cushion,
Both warbling of one song, both in one key;
As if our hands, our sides, voices, and minds,
Had been incorporate. So we grow together,
Like to a double cherry, seeming parted; But yet a union in partition.
Two lovely berries moulded on one stem:
So, with two seeming bodies, but one heart;
Two of the first, like costs in heraldry,
Due but to one, and crowned with one crest.
And will you rend our ancient love asunder,
To join with men in scorning your poor friend?
It is not friendly, 'tis not madly
Our sort, as well as yours, should dance this part for it;
Though I alone do feel the injury.

Her. I am amazed at your passionate words
I scorn you not; it seems that you scorn me.

Ly. She of the first, whom I did leave in scorn,
To follow me, and praise my eyes and face?
And made your other love, Demetrius,
(Who even but now did spurn me with his foot,) To call me goddes, nymph, divine, and rare,
Precious, celestial! Wherefore speaks he this?
To her he hates? and wherefore doth Lyndaner
Deny your love, so rich within his soul,
And tender me, far smooth, affection;
But by your setting on, by yon attack?
What though I be not so in grace as you,
So hang upon love, so fortunate,
But miserable most, to love unloved?
This you should pity, rather than despise.

Her. I understand not what you mean by this.

Ly. Ay, do, perceiver, counterfeit and looks,
Make mews upon me, when I turn my back;
Wink at each other; hold the sweet jest up:
This sport, well carried, shall be chronicled.
If you have any pity, grace, or manners,
You would not make me such an argument.
But, fare ye well: 'tis partly mine own fault;
Which you can best excuse, signifying it once.

Ly. Stay, gentle Helena, bear my excuse;
My love, my life, my soul, fair Helena!

Hel. O excellent!

Dem. Sweet, do not scorn her so.

Ly. If she cannot entertain, I can compel.

Hel. Thou cannot compel no more than she entertain;
Thy threats won no more strength, than her weak Helena, I lose thee; by my life I do; [prayers— I swear by that which I will lose for thee,
To prove him false, that says I love thee not.

Dem. I say, I love thee more than he can love;

Ly. To-day so with draw, and prove it too.

Dem. Quick, come.—

Her. Lyndaner, whereto tends all this?

Ly. Away, you Ethiope!

Dem. No, no, sir—he will seem to break loose; take on, as you would follow; But yet come not: You are a tame man, go!

Ly. Hang off, thou cat, thou burro: vile thing

Hel. Or I will shake thee from me, like a serpent.

Her. Why are you grown so rude? what change
Sweet love! [in this

Ly. Thy love? out, thou Tartar, out! Out, lost, mad, madman! hatred potion, hence!

Hel. Do you not jest?

Ly. Ye, booth; and so do you

Ly. Demetrius, I will keep my word with thee.
Dem. I would, I had your bond; for, I perceive,
A weak bond holds you; I'll not trust your word.

Lys. What, should I hurt him, strike him, kill
Although I hate her, I'll not harm her so.

Her. What, can you do me greater harm, than hate?

Hate me! wherefore? O me! what news, my love?
Am not I Hermia? Are not you Lysander?
I am as fair now, as I was erewhile.
Since night, you lovd me; yet, since night you left me.
Why, then you left me,—O, the gods forbid!—
In earnest, shall I say?

Lys. Ay, by my life;
And never did desire to see thee more.
Therefore, be out of hope, of question, doubt,
Being certain, truester; 'tis no jest,
That I do hate thee, and love Helena.

Her. O me! you juggler! you canker-blossom!
You thief of love! what, have you come by night,
And stol'n my heart's love from him?

Hel. Fine, I'faith!

Have you no modesty, no maiden shame,
No touch of bashfulness? What, will you tear
Impatiencing answers from my gentle tongue?
Fie, fie! you counterfeit, you puppet you!

Her. Puppet! why so? Ay, that way goes the game.

Now I see, methinks, that she hath made compare
Between our statures, she hath urg'd her height;
And with her personage, her tall personage,
Her height, forsooth, she hath prevail'd with him—and are you grown so high in his esteem,
Because I am so dwarfish, and so low?
How low am I, thou painted maypole? speak?
How low am I? I am not yet so low,
But that my nails can reach unto thine eyes.

Hel. I pray you, though you mock me, gentlemen.
Let her not hurt me: I was never curst;
I have no gift at all in shrewishness;
I am a right maid for my cowardice.

Her. Let her not strike me: You, perhaps, may think,
Because she's something lower than myself,
That I can match her.

Her. Lower! hark, again.

Hel. Good Hermia, do not be so bitter with me.
I evermore did love you, Hermia,
Did ever keep your counsels, never wrong'd you; save that, in love unto Demetrius,
I told him of your stealth unto this wood:
He follows you: for love, I follow you;
But he hath chid me hence; and threaten'd me To strike me, spur me, may, to kill me too:
And now, so you will let me quiet go,
To Athens will I bear my folly hence,
And follow you no further: Let me go:
You see how simple and how fond I am.

Her. Why, get you gone: Who is't that hinders you?

Hel. A foolish heart that I leave here behind
Her. What, with Lysander?

Dem. No, sir; she shall not, though you take her part.

Hel. O, when she's angry, she is keen and shrewd:
She will out-wit you when she won't have it;
And, though she be but little, she is fierce.

Her. Little again? nothing but low and little;—
Why will you suffer her to flout me thus?

Let me come to her.

Lys. Get you gone, you dwarf;
You minims, of hindering knot-grass make;
You beast, you acon.

Dem. You are too officious,
In her behalf that scorns your services.
Let her alone; speak not of Helena;
Take not her part: for if thou dost intend
Never so little show of love to her,
Thou shalt aby it.
The man shall have his mace again, and all shall be well. [Exit Puck.—Dem. Hel. &c. sleep.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The same.

Enter Titania and Bottom, Fairies attending : Oberon behind unseen.

Tit. Come, sit thou down upon this flowery bed. While I thy amiable cheeks do court, And stich much roses in thy sleek smooth head, And make thy brows fair with thy own gentle joy. But, Where’s thy Peas-blossom? Peas. Ready. But. Scratch my head, Peas-blossom.—Where’s your mock-sieur Cobweb? Cob. Ready. But. Monseur Cobweb; good monsieur, get your weapons in your hand, and kill me a red-hipped humble-bee on the top of a thistle; and, good monsieur, bring me the honey-bag. Do not fret yourself too much in the action, monsieur; and, good monsieur, have a care the honey-bag break not; I would be loth to have you overthrown with a honey-bag, sigher.—Where’s your monsieur Mustard-seed? Must. Ready. But. Give me your neck, monsieur Mustard-seed. Pray you, leave your courtesy, good monsieur. Must. What is your will? But. Nothing, good monsieur, but to help cava- lore Cobweb to scratch. I must to the barber’s, monsieur; for, methinks, I am marvelling hairy about the face, and I am such a tender ass, if my hair do but tickle me, I must scratch. Tit. What, wilt then hear some music, my lord? But. I have a reasonable good ear in music; let us have the song and the bonde. Tit. Or, say, sweet love, what thou dost not eat. But. Truly, a peck of provender; I could munch your good dry oats. Metheinks, I have a great desire to a bottle of hay; good hay, sweet hay, hath no fellow. Tit. I have a venturous fairy that shall seek The squirrel’s board, and fetch thee new nuts. But. I had rather have a handful, or two, of dried peas. But, I pray you, let none of your people stir me; I have an expiration of sleep come upon me. Tit. Sleep thou, and I will wind thee in my arms. Fairies, be gone, and be all ways away. So doth the woodbine, the sweet honeysuckle, Gentilly entwist,—the female isy so Enrings the barty fingers of the elm. O, how I love thee! how I dote on thee! [They sleep.

Oberon advances. Enter Puck.

Ow. Welcome, good Robin. Seest thou this sweet sight? Her dotage now I do begin to pity. For meeting her of late, behind the wood, seeking sweet savours for this hateful fruit, I did upbrand her, and fall out with her; For she his hairy temples then had rounded With coronet of fresh and fragrant flowers; And that same dew, which sometime on the buds Was wont to swell, like round and orient pearls, Stood now within the pretty florettes’ eyes, Like tears, that did their own disgrace bewail. When I had, at my pleasure, taunted her, And she, in mild terms, begg’d my patience, I then did ask of her her changing child; Which straight she gave me, and her fairy sent To be brought to mybower in fairy land. And now I have the boy, I will undo

This hateful imperfection of her eyes. And, gentle Puck, take this transformed scalp
Act 4.

MIDSUMMER-NIGHT’S DREAM.

From off the head of this Athenian swain;
That he awaking when the other do,
May all to Athens back again repair;
And think no more of this night’s accidents,
But as the fierce vexation of a day
But first I will release the fairy queen.
Be, as thou wist want to be;
[Touching her eyes with an herb.
See, as thou wist want to see;
Dian’s bud o’er Cupid’s flower.
Hath such force and blessed power.
Now, my Titania; wake you, my sweet queen.
Tita. My Oberon! what visions have I seen!
Methought I had sworn with an ass.
Obe. There lies your love.
Tita. How came these things to pass?
O, how mine eyes do loath his visage now!
Obe. Silence, a while.—Robin, take off this head.
Titania, musick call; and strike more dead
Than common sleep, of all these five the sense.
Tita. Musick, ho! musick; such as charmeth Sleep.
Puck. Now, when thou wak’st, with thine own
Tits of eyes peep.
Obe. Sound, musick. [Still musick. Come, my queen, and sport with me.
And rock the ground whereon these sleepers be,
Now thou and I are new in amity;
And will, to-morrow midnight, solemnly,
Declare Duke Theseus triumphant, and
And bless it to all fair posterity.
There shall the praises of faithful lovers be Wedded, with Theseus, all in jollity.
Puck. Fairy king, attend, and mark;
I do hear the morning lark.
Obe. Then, my queen, in silence sad,
Trip we after the night’s shade:
We the globe can compass soon,
Serene than the wandering of the star.
Tita. Come, my lord; and in our flight,
Tell me how it came this night,
That I sleeping here was found,
With these mortals, on the ground. [Exeunt.
[Horns sound within.

Enter Theseus, Hippolyta, Egeus, and train.
The. Go, one of you, find out the forester;—
For now our observation is perform’d,
And since we have the vaward of the day,
My love shall hear the musick of my hounds.—
Uncouple in the western valley; go——
Despatch, I say, and find out your master.——
We will, fair queen, up to the mountain’s top,
And mark the musical confusion
Of hounds and echo in conjunction.
Hipp. I was with Hercules, and Cadmus, once,
When in a wood of Crete they bled the bear
With hounds of Sparta: never did I hear
Such gallant chiding; for, besides the groves,
The skies, the fountains, every region near Seem’d all one mutual cry: I never heard
So musical a discord, such sweet thunder.
The. My hounds are bred out of the Spartan kind,
So flew’d, so sanded; and their heads are hung
With rope: with the sweeping dew;
Crook-knee’d and dew-lap’d like Thessalian bulls;
Slow in pursuit, but match’d in mouth like bells,
Each under each. A cry more tuneful
Was never heard to do, nor cheer’d with horn,
In Crete in sitting in Theseus’ day.
Judge, when you hear.—But, soft; what nymphs are these?
Ege. My lord, this is my daughter here asleep;
And this, my daughter; this Demetrius is;
This Helena, old Nedar’s Helena:
I wonder of their being here together.
The. The no doubt, they rose up early, to observe
The rites of May; and, hearing of the dream,
Came here in grace of our solemnity.—
But, speak, Egeus; is not this the day
That Hermia should give answer of her choice?
Ege. It is, my lord.
The. Go, bid the huntsmen wake them with their horns.
Horns, and shadé within. Demetrius, Lysander,
Hermia, and Helena, wake and start up.

The. The good-morrow, friends. Saint Valentine is past;
Begin these wood-birds but to couple now?
Ly. Pardon, my lord.
[He and the rest kneel to Theseus.
The. I pray you all, stand up.
I know, you are two rival enemies;
How comes this gentle concord in the world,
That hatred is so far from jealousy,
To sleep by hate, and fear no enmity?
Ly. My lord, I shall reply amazely,
Half’sleep, half waking. But as yet, I swear,
I cannot truly say how I came here;
But, as I think, (for truly would I speak,——
And now I do bethink me, so it is;)——
I came with Hermia hither: our intent
Was, to be gone from Athens, where we might be Without the peril of the Athenian law.
Ege. Enough, enough, my lord; you have enough:
I beg the law, the law upon his head—
They would have stol’n away, they would, Demetrius.——
Thereby to have defeated you and me:——
True, you, of your wife; and, me, of my consent;
Of my consent that she should be your wife.
Dem. My lord, fair Helena, in their stealth,
Of this their purpose hither, to this wood;
And I in fury hither follow’d them;
Fair Helena in fancy following me.
But, my good lord, I wot not by what power,
(But, by some power it is,) my love to Hermia,
Melted as doth the snow, seems to me now
As the remembrance of an idle gawd,
Which in my childhood I did dote upon
And all the faith, the virtue of my heart,
The object, and the pleasure of mine eye,
Is only Helena. To her, my lord,
Was I betroth’d ere I saw Hermia:
But, like In sickness, did I loath this food;
But, as in health, come to my natural taste,
Now do I wish it, love it, long for it,
And will for evermore be true to it.
The. Fair lovers, you are fortunately met;
Of this discourse we more will bear anon.—
Egeus, I will overbear your will;
For in the temple, by and by with us,
These couples shall eternally be knit.
And, for the morning now is long worn,
Our purposed hunting shall be set aside.—
Away, with us, to Athens: Three and three,
We’ll hold a feast in great solemnity.—
Come, Hippolyta. [Exeunt Theseus, Hippolyta, Egeus, and train.
Dem. These things seem small and undistinguishable,
Like far-off mountains turned into clouds.
Hipp. Methinks, I see these things with parted eye,
When every thing seems double.
Hel. So, methinks;
And I have found Demetrius like a jewel,
Mine own, and not mine own.
Dem. It seems to me,
That yet we sleep, we dream.—Do not you think,
The duke was here, and bid us follow him?
Hel. Yea; and my father.
Hipp. And Hippolyta.
Ly. And he did bid us follow to the temple.
Dem. Why then, we are awake: let’s follow him;
And, by the way, let us recount our dream. [Exeunt.

As they go out, Bottom awakes.

But, when my cue comes, call me, and I will answer:—my next is, Most fair Pyramus.—Hey, ho!—Peter Quince! Flute, the bellows-mender! Snout, the thiner! Starveling! God’s my life! stolen hence, and left me asleep! I have had a most rare vision. I have had a dream—past the wit of man to say what dream it was. Man is but an ass, if he go about to expound this dream. Methought I was there is no man can see what. Methought I was,
and methought I had,—but Man is but a patched fool, if he will offer to say what methought I had.
The eye of man hath not heard, the ear of man hath not seen; man's hand is not able to taste, his tongue to conceive, nor his heart to report, what my dream was. I will get Peter (Unlece to write a ballad of this dream: it shall be called Bottom's Dream, because it hath no bottom; and I will sing it in the largest place, to shapes, and invention, and adventure, to make it more gracious, I shall sing it to her death.

[Exeunt Quince, Elise, Snout, and Starveling.

Quin. Have you sent to Bottom's house? Is he come home yet?

Wife. He cannot be heard of. Out of doubt, he is transported.

Fin. If he be come not, the play is marred: It goes not forward, death it.

Quin. It is not possible you have not a man in all Athens, able to discharge Pyramus, but he.

Fin. No he hath simply the best wit of any

Quin. Yes, and the best person too, and he is a very paramour, for a sweet voice.

Fin. You must use your patience; a paramour is,
God bless us, a thing of thought.

Enter Song.

Song. Masters, the duke is coming from the temple, and there is two or three lords and ladies more married; if our sport had gone forward, we had all a made more.

Fin. O sweet bully Bottom! Thus hath he lost sixpence a-day during the time; he could not have been a day; an he the duke had not given him sixpence a-day for playing Pyramus, I'll be hanged; he would have deserved it; sixpence a day in Pyramus, or nothing.

Enter Bottom.

Quin. Where are these ladies? where are these hearts?

Wife. Bottom! O most courageous day! O most happy hour!

Fin. Masters, I am to discourse wonders—but ask me not what; for if I tell you, I am no true Athenian. I will tell you every thing, right as it fell out.

Quin. Let us hear, sweet Bottom.

Fin. Not a word of me. All that I will tell you, is, that the duke hath dined; took your apparel to gether; good strings to your beards, new ribbons to your pampas; meet presently at the palace; every man look o'er his part, for, the short and the long is, our play is preferred in any case; let Thisby have clean linen; and let not Lysander, that plays the lion, pate his nails, for they shall hang out for the lion's claws. And, most dear actors, est no onions, nor garlic, for we are to utter swearings, and we do not doubt, but to hear them say, it is a sweet comedy. No more words; away; go, away.

[Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The same. An Apartment in the Palace of Theseus.

Enter Theseus, Hippolyta, Philostrate, Lords, and Attendants.

Hipp. 'Tis strange, my Theseus, that these lovers speak of.

This. More strange than true. I never may be
These antique fables, nor these fairy toys.

Lovers and madmen have such seething brains,
Such shaping fantasies, that apprehend
More than cool reason ever comprehends.

The imagistics, the lover, and the poet,
Are of imagination all compact;
One sees more devils than vast hell can hold;
That is, the madman, the lover, all as frantic,
New Helen's beauty in a brow of Egypt.
The poet's eye, in a fine frenzy rolling,
Both glance from heaven to earth, from earth to
And, as imagination bodies forth
The forms of things unknown, the poet's pen
Is, as the Developed man's, to shape the brave,
And so to air nothing a local habitation,
And a name. Such tricks hath strong imagination:
That, if it would but apprehend some joy,
It comprehends some bringer of that joy:
Or, in the night, imagining some fear,
How easy is a bush supposed a bear?

But all the story of the night told over,
And all their minds transfigured so together,
More winsome than fancy's image,
And grows to something of great constancy:
But, however, strange, and admirable.

Enter Lysander, Demetrius, Hermia, and Helena.

The. Here come the lovers, full of joy and mirth.—
Joy, gentle friends! I joy, and fresh days of love, Adorn your hearts! More than to us
Wait on your royal walks, your board, your bed.

Thee. Come now; what masks, what dances shall have,
To wear away this long age of three hours,
Between our after-supper and bed-time?
Where is our usual manager of mirth?
Who is on hand? I think you have a play up,
To ease the anguish of a torturing hour?

Call Philostrate.

Philo. Here, mighty Theseus.

The. Say, what assassination have you for this evening?

What mask, what music? How shall we beguile
The lazy time, if not with some delight?

Philo. There is a brief, how many sports are up.

Make choice of which your highness will see first.

[Aside to Theseus.]

The. [Aside.] The battle with the Centaurs, to be sung.

By an Athenian string to the harp.
We'll none of that: that have I told my love,
in glory of my kinman Heracles.

The thrice three Muses mourning for the death
Of Icareus, late devoted in the galleys.
That is some satire, keen, and critical,
Not sorting with a nuptial ceremony.

Tis a brieve of some young Pyramus,
And his love Thisbe: very tragical mirth.
Merry and tragical? Tedious and brief?
That is, hot ice, and wonderous strange snow.
How shall we find the concord of this discord?

Philos. A play there is, my lord, some ten words long;
Which is as brief as I have known a play;
But by ten words, my lord, it is too long.

Theseus. What makes it tedious? for in all the play
There is not one word apt, one player fitted.
And tragical, my noble lord, it is;
For Pyramus therein doth kill himself.

Philos. I saw rehearsed, the most confus'd
Made mine eyes water; but more merry tears
The passion of loud laughter never shed.

The. What are they that do play it?

Philos. Hard-handed men, that work in Athens
here,
Which never laboured in their minds till now;
And now have toil'd their unbreath'd memories
With this same play, against your nuptial.
The. And we will hear it.
Phil. No, my noble lord,
It is not for you. I have heard it over,
And for nothing, nothing in the world:
Unless you can find sport in their intents,
Extremely stretch'd and conn'd with cruel pain,
To do you service.
The. I will hear that play:
For never any thing can be amiss,
When simplicity and duty tender it.
Go, bring them in: and take your places, ladies. [Exit Pyramus and Thisbe.

Hip. I love not to see wretchedness o'ergrown,
And duty in his service perishing. [thing.

The. The, why gentle sweet, you shall see no such Hip. He says, they can do nothing in this kind.
The. The kinder we, to give them thanks for nothing.
Our sport shall be, to take what they mistake:
And what poor duty cannot do,
Noble respect takes it in might, not merit.
Where I have come, great clerks have purposed
To greet me with premeditated welcomes;
Where I have seen them shiver and look pale,
Make periodic in the midst sentences,
Throttle their practis'd accent in their fears,
And, in conclusion, dumbly have broke off,
Not paying me a welcome: Trust me, sweet,
Out of this silence, yet, I pick'd a welcome;
And in the modesty of fearful duty,
I read as much, as from the rattling tongue
Of sassy and audacious eloquence.
Love, therefore, and tongue-tied simplicity,
In least, speak most, to my capacity.

Enter Philostrate.

Phil. So please your grace, the prologue is address'd.

The. Let him approach. [Flourish of trumpets.

Enter Prologue.

Prol. If we offend, it is with our good will.
That you should think, we come not to offend,
But with good will. To show our simple skill,
That is the true beginning of our end.
Consider then, we come but in despite.

If we do come and content you,
Our true intent is. All for your delight,
We are not here. That you should here repent you,
The actors are at hand; and, by their show,
You shall know all, that you are like to know.
The. This fellow doth not stand upon points.

Igs. He hath rid his prologue, like a rough colt;
He knows not the stop. A good moral, my lord: It is not enough to speak, but to speak true.

Hip. Indeed he hath play'd on this prologue, like a child on a recorder; 'a sound, but not in government.
The. His speech was like a tangled chain:
nothing impair'd, but all disorder'd. Who is next?
Enter Pyramus and Thisbe, Wall, Moonshine, and Lion, as in dumb show.

Prol. "Gentles, perchance, you wonder at this show;
"But wonder on, till truth make all things plain.
"This man is Pyramus, if you would know;
"This beauteous lady Thisby is, certain.
"This man, with lime and edged jest, doth present
"Wall, that vile wall which did these lovers
sunder:
"And through wall's chink, poor souls, they are the
"To whisper, at the which let no man wonder.
"This man, with lantern, dog, and bush of thorn,
"Presenteth moon-shine: for, if you will know,
"By moon-shine did they lover's bladders scor'd.
"To meet at Ninus' tomb, there, there to woo.
"This grisly beast, which by name lion hight,
"The trusty Thisby, coming first by night,

"Did seare away, or rather did affright
"And, as she fled, her mantle she did fall;
"Which lion vile with bloody mouth did stain:
"Anon comes Pyramus, sweet youth, and tall,
"And finds his trusty Thisby's mantle stain:
"Whereas with blade, with bloody blam'de blade,
"He bravely broach'd his boiling bloody breast;
"And, Thisby tarrying in mulberry shade,
"His dagger drew, and died. For all the rest,
"Let Lion, Moon-shine, Wall, and lovers twain,
"At large discourse, while here they do remain."

[Exeunt Prol. Thisebe, Lion, and Moon-shine.
The. I wonder, if the lion be to speak.

Dem. No wonder, my lord: one lion may, when many does.

Wall. "In this same interlude, it doth behove,
"That I, one Snout by name, present a wall:
"And such a wall as I would have you think,
"That had in it a cromy'd hole, or chink,
"Through which the lovers, Pyramus and Thisby,
"Did whisper often very secretly. [show
"This loam, this rough-cast, and this stone, doth
"That I am that same wall; the truth is so:
"And this the cranys is, right and sinister,
"Through which the fearful lovers are to whisper."
The. You would desire line and hair to speak better.

Dem. It is the wittiest partition that ever I heard discourse, my lord.

The. Pyramus draws near the wall: silence!

Enter Pyramus.

Pyr. "O grim, look'd night! O night with hue so black!
"O night, which ever art, when day is not!
"O night, O night, alack, alack, alack,
"I fear my Thisby's promise is forgot!-

"And thou, O wall, O sweet, O lovely wall,
"That stand'st between her father's ground and mine

"Thou wall, O wall, O sweet and lovely wall,
"Shew me thy chink, to blink through with mine eyne.
"Wall holds up his fingers.
"Thanks, courteous wall: Jove shield thee well.
"But what see I? No Thisebe do I see. [for this!
"O wicked wall, through whom I see no bliss;
"Curtse thy stones for thus deceiving me!"

The. The wall, methinks, being sensible, should curse again.

Pyr. No, in truth, sir, he should not. Deceiving me, is Thisby's cue: she is to enter now, and I am to spy her through the wall. You shall see, it will fall pat as I told you!—Yonder she comes.

Enter Thisebe.

This. "O wall, full often hast thou heard my
"For parting my fair Pyramus, and me [means,
"My cherry lips have often kiss'd thy stones;
"Thy stones with lime and hair knit up in thee.
Pyr. "I see a voice: now will I to the chink,
"To spy an I can hear my Thisby's face.

Thisby!"

This. "My love! thou art my love, I think.
Pyr. "Think what thou wilt, I am thy lover's
"And like Limander am I trusty still. [grace;
This. "A I like Helen, till the gates I kill.
Pyr. "Not Shafalus to Procrus, was so true.
This. "As Shafalus to Procrus, I to you.
Pyr. "O, kiss me through the hole of this vile wall.
This. "I kiss the wall's hole, not your lips at all.
Pyr. "Wilt thou at Ninus's tomb meet me straightway?"
[Exeunt.

This. "To the moon, tide death, I come without Wall. "Thus have I, wall, my part discharge'd so;
"And, being done, thus wall away do go."

[Exeunt Wall, Pyramus, and Thisebe.

The. Now is the mural down between the two neighbours.

Dem. No remedy, my lord, when walls are so wilful to hear without warning.

Hip. This is the silliest stuff that ever I heard.
The. The best in this kind are but shadows; and the worst are no worse, if imagination amend them.

Hip. It must be your imagination then, and not theirs.

The. If we imagine no worse of them, than they of themselves, then we may pass for excellent men. Here come two noble beasts in a moon and a lion.

[unit: lion and moonshine.]

Lion. "You, ladies, you, whose gentle hearts do fear The smallest moonbeams: moose that creeps on May now, purchase, both quake and tremble here.

"When Lion rough in wildest rage doth rear.
The Lion, the crescent, and his horns are invicible within the circumference.

Moon. "This lantern doth the horned moon present,"

Dem. He should have worn the horns on his head. The Lion, the crescent, and his horns are invisable within the circumference.

Moon. "This lantern doth the horned moon present;"

"Myself the man 'tis moon do seem to be."
The Lion, the crescent, which is the least of all the rest, the man should be put into the lantern: How is it else the man 'tis the moon.

Dem. He dare not come there for the candle for, you see, it is already in moss.

Hip. I am aware of this moon: Would he be chang'd?
The Lion, the crescent, is the least, but yet, in courtesy, in all reason, we must stay the time.

Moon. "All that I have to say is, to tell you, that this thorn-bush, this thorn-bush, and this dog, my dog."

Dem. Why, all these should be in the lantern; for they are in the moon. But, silence, here comes Thibes.

[unit: thibes.]

This. "This is old Ninny's tomb: Where is my Lion. "Oh." [The Lion roars.]

Dem. Well roared, lion.

Hip. Well run, Thibes.

Dem. Well chance, moon. Truly, the moon shines with a good grace.

The. Well measured, lion.

[The Lion were Thibes's mantle, and exit.]

Dem. And so comes Pyramus.

Hip. And then the moon vanishes.

[unit: pyramus.]

Pyr. "Sweet moon, I thank thee for thy sunny beams;"

"I thank thee, moon, for shining now so bright;"

"For, by thy gracious, golden, glittering streams,
I trust to taste of truest Thibes's sight."

"But stay:—O sprite."

"But mark:—Poor knight,
What dreadful date is here?

"Fies, do you see?"

"How can it be?"

"O death's duck! O dear?"

"Thy mantle good."

"What, staint'd with blood?"

"A phantom, ye furies feel!"

"Is she? I come to make a man look sad;"

"I at thread and thrum;"

"Oual, crush, conclude, and quell."

The. This passion, and the death of a dear friend,

"Intended to make a man look sad."

Hip. Beata men's heart, but I pity the man.

Pyr. "It, wherefore, nature, didst thou lions frame?"

Since men vile hosts here disturb'd my dear, Whose name, no name— which was the fairest dama,
That liv'd, that lov'd, that lik'd, that look'd with cheer."

"Come, tears, consol'd;"

"Out, sword, and wound"

"The pop of Pyramus:

"Ah, that left pop,"

"Where heart doth hop—"

"This die I, thus, thus, thus."

"Now am I dead."

"Now am I flied;"

"My soul is in the sky:"

"Iongue, how thy light!"

"Moon, take thy light!
"Now die, die, die, die, die."

[Dies.—End Moonshine.]

Dem. No die, but an ace for him; for he is but one.

Lys. Less than an ace, man: for he is dead; he is nothing.

The. With the help of a surgeon, he might yet recover.

Dem. A more will turn the balance, which Pyramus, which Thibes, is the better. Lys. She has spied him already with those sweet eyes.

Dem. And thus she moans, widdler.—

This. "Asleep, my love?

"What, dead, my dove?

"O Pyramus, arise;

"What is this, my moon? Quite dumb?"

"Dead, dead? A tomb

"Must cover thy sweet eyes."

"These lily brows,"

"This cherry nose,"

"These yellow cowslip cheeks,"

"Are gone, are gone;"

"Lovers, make moon!

"His eyes were green as leeks."

"O sisters three,"

"Come, come to me,"

"With hands as pale as milk;"

"Lay them in gore,"

"Since you have shore

"With shear's his thread of silk.

"Tongue, not a word—"

"Come, trusty sword;"

"Come, blinding Pyramus, imbrace;"

"And farewell, friends;"

"Thus Thibes ends:

"Adieu, adieu, adieu."

[Dies.]

The. Moonshine and lion are left to bury the dead.

Dem. Ay, and wall too.

But, No, I assure you; the wall is down that parted their fathers. Will it please you to see the epilogue, or to hear a Bergamasque dance, between two of our company.

The. The No epilogue, I pray you; for your play needs no excuse. Never excuse; for when the players are all dead, there need none to be blamed. Marry, if he that writ it, had play'd Pyramus, and hanged himself in Thisbe's garer, it would have been a fine tragedy: and so it is, truly; and very notably discharged. But come, go, your Bergomask; let your epilogue alone. [Here a dance of Clowns. The iron tongue of midnight hath told twelve:—Lovers, to bed; 'tis almost fairy time. I fear we shall out-sleep the coming morn, As much as we this night have over-watch'd. This palpable-gross play hath well beguil'd The heavy gait of night.—Sweet friends, to bed.—A fortnight hold we this solemnity, In nightly revels, and new jollity. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.

Enter Puck.

Puck. Now the hungry lion roars, And the wolf bewails the moon; Whilst the heavy ploughman snores, All with weary task fordone. Now the wasted brands do glow, Whilst the scratch-owl, scratching loud, Puts the wretch, that lies in woe, In remembrance of a proud. Now it is the time of night, That the graves, all gaping wide, Every one lets forth his sprite, Long in the church-way paths to glide: And we fairies, that do run By the triple Hecat's team, From the presence of the sun, Following darkness like a dream, Now are frolick; not a mouse Shall disturb this hallow'd house: I am sent, with broom, before, To sweep the dust behind the door. Enter Oberon and Titania, with their train.

Obe. Through this house give glimmering light, By the dead and drowsy fire: Every elf, and fairy sprite, Hop as light as bird from brier; And this ditty, after me,

Sing, and dance it trippingly.

Tit. First, rehearse this song by rote: To each word a warbling note, Hand in hand, with fairy grace, Will we sing, and bless this place.

SONG, and DANCE.

Obe. Now, until the break of day, Through this house each fairy stray. To the best bride-bed will we, Which by us shall blessed be; And the issue there create, Ever shall be fortunate. So shall all the couples three Ever true in loving be; And the goods of nature's hand Shall not in their issue stand; Never mole, hare-lip, nor scar, Nor mark prodigious, such as are Despised in nativity, Shall upon their children be.— With this field-dew consecrate, Every fairy take his gait; And each several chamber bless, Through this palace with sweet peace: E'er shall it in safety rest, And the owner of it blessed.

Trip away, Make no stay: Meet me all by break of day. [Exeunt Oberon, Titania, and train. Puck. If my shadows be offended, Think but this, (and all is mended,) That you have but slumber'd here, While these visions did appear. And this weak and idle theme, No more yielding but a dream, Gentles, do not reprehend; If you pardon, we will mend. And, as I am an honest Puck, If we haveewraten you Not to 'scape the serpent's tongue, We will make amends ere long: Else the Puck a liar call. So, good night unto you all, Give me your hands, if we be friends, And Robin shall restore amends. [Exeunt.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Navarre. A Park, with a Palace in it.

Enter the King, Biron, Longaville, and Dumain.

King. Let fame, that all hunt after in their lives,
Live regist'red upon our brazen tombs, And then grace us in the disgrace of death; When, spite of cormorant devouring time, The endearment of this present breath may buy That honour, which shall bate his scythe's keen
And make us heirs of all eternity. [Exeunt, Therefore, brave conquerors!—for so you are, That war against your own affections,

And the huge army of the world's desires,—
Our late edict shall strongly stand in force: Navarre shall be the wonder of the world; Our court shall be a little Academe, Still and contemplative in living art. You three, Biron, Dumain, and Longaville, Have sworn for three years' term to live with me, My fellow-scholars, and to keep those statutes, That are recorded in this schedule here; Your oaths are past, and now subscribe your names; That his own hand may strike his honour down, That violates the smallest branch herein:
If you are arm'd to do, as sworn to do, Subscribe to your deep oath, and keep it too.
Long. In reason nothing.

Biron. Something then in rhyme.

Long. Biron is like an envious sweeping frost, That bites the first green leaves of spring. Biron. Well, say I am; why should proud summer boast,

Before the birds have any cause to sing? What should I joy in an absence, and die? At Christmas I no more desire a rose,

Than wish a snow in Naves new-fangled shows; But like of each thing, that in season grows.

Climb o'er the house to unlock the little gate. King. Well, sit you out go home, Biron; adieu! Biron. No, my good lord; I have sworn to stay.

And, though I have for barbarism spoke more, Than for that angel knowledge you can say, Yet confident I'll keep what I have swore, And hide the penance of each three years' day. Give me the paper, let me read the same;

And to the strictest degree I'll write my name. King. How well this yielding rescues thee from shame.

Biron. [Aside.] Item, That no woman shall come within a mile of my court.

And hath this been proclaimed? Four days ago.

Long. Let's see the penalty.

[Reads.] On pain of losing her tongue.

Biron. A dangerous law against gentility. [Reads.] Item, If any man be so bold as to think in the term of three years, he shall endure such public shame as the rest of the court can possibly devise.

This article, my liege, yourself must break; For well you know, here comes in embassy The French King's daughter, with yourself to speak.

A maid of grace, and complete majesty,— About surrender-up of Aquitain To her decept's, sick, and bedridden father; Therefore this article is made in vain, Or vainly comes the admird princes hither. King. What say you, lords? why, this was quite unadvised.

Biron. No study evermore is over-shot; While it doth study to have what it would, It doth forget to do the thing it should. And when it hath the thing it hunteth most, Tis won, as towns with fire; so won, so lost.

King. We must, of force, dispense with this de- She must lie here on mere necessity. [creep.

Biron. Necessity will make us all forsworn Three thousand times within this three years' space; For every man with his affects is born; Not by might master'd, but by special grace If I break faith, this word shall speak for me, I am forsworn on mere necessity. So to the laws at large I write my name; [Subscrib.

And, he that breaks them in the least degree, Stands in alatteder of eternal shame: Suggestions are to others, as to me: But, I believe, although I seem so lost I am the last that will last keep this; But break faith, this word shall speak for me.

King. Ay, that there is: our court, you know, is haunted With a refined traveller of Spain; A man that propos'd the world's new fashion planted, That hath a mint of phrases in his brain One, whom the musick of his own vain tongue Doth ravish, like enchanting harmony; A man of compliments, whom the right and wrong Have chose as emperor of their mutiny
This child of fancy, that Armado hight,
For interim to our studies, shall relate
In high-born words, the worth of many a knight.
From tawny Spain, lost in the world's debate.
How you delight, my lords, I know not, I;
But, I protest, I love to hear him lie.
And I will use him for my minstrelsy.
Biron. Armado is a most illustrious wight,
A man of fire-new words, fashion's own knight.
Love, perchance the swarm, and he, shall be our
And, so to study, three years is but short. [sport;
Enter Dull, with a letter, and Costard.
Dull. Which is the duke's own person?
Biron. This, fellow; What would't?
Dull. I myself reprehend his own person, for I am his grace's tharborough: but I would see his own person in flesh and blood.
Biron. This is he.
Dull. Signior Arme—Arme—commends you.
There's villainy abroad; this letter will tell you more.
Cost. Sir, the contempt thereof are as touching me.
King. A letter from the magnificent Armado.
Biron. How low soever the matter, I hope in God for high words.
Long. A high hope for a low having: God grant us patience!
Biron. To hear? or forbear hearing?
Long. To hear weekly, sir, and to laugh moderate;
or to forbear both.
Biron. Well, sir, be it as the style shall give us cause to climb in the merrines.
Cost. The matter is to me, sir, as concerning Jaquenetta. The manner of it, I, was taken with the manner.
Biron. In what manner?
Cost. In manner and form following, sir; all these three: I was seen with her in the manor house, sitting with her upon the form, and taken following her into the park; which, put together, is in manner and form following. Now, sir, for the manner,—it is the manner of a man to speak to a woman: for the form,—in some form.
Biron. For the following, sir?
Cost. As it shall follow in my correction; And God defend the right!
King. Will you hear this letter with attention?
Biron. As we would hear an oracle.
Cost. Such is the simplicity of man to hearken after the world's words. [Reads.] Great deputy, the melkin's viceregent, and sole dominator of Navarre, my soul's earth's God, and body's fostering patron,— Cost. Not a word of Costard yet.
King. So it is.
Cost. It may be so: but if he say it is so, he is, in telling true, but so, so.
King. Peace.
Cost. —be to me, and every man that dares not fight!
King. No words.
Cost. —of other men's secrets, I beseech you.
King. So it is, besieg'd with skirl-coloured melancholy, I did commend the black-oppressing humour to the most wholesome physic of thy health-giving air; and, as I am a gentleman, betook myself to walk.
The time when? About the sixth hour: when beasts most graze, birds best peck, and men sit down to that nourishment which is called supper. So much for the time when: Now for the ground which; which, I mean, I walked upon: it is gleaped thy park. Then for the place where: where I, mean, I did encounter that obscene and most preposterous event, that dreweth from my snow-white pen the ebon-coloured ink, which here thou viewest, beholdest, surveyest, or seest: But to this word,—it standeth north-west and east, by east from the very corner of thy curiously-knotted garden. There did I see that low-spirited swain, that base minnow of thy mirth,
Cost. Me.
King. —that unletter'd small-knowing soul,
Cost. Me.
King. —that shallow vessel,
Cost. Still me.
King. —which, as I remember, hight Costard,
Cost. O me.
King. —sorted and consort'd, contrary to thy established proclaimed edict and continuance with,—with, O with—but with this I passon to say no more.
Cost. With a wench.
King. —with a child of our grandmother Eve, a female; or, for thy more sweet understanding, a woman. Him I (for my ever esteemed duty pricks me) have sent to thee, to receive the need of punishment, by thy sweet grace's officer, Antony Dull; a man of good repute, carriage, bearing, and estimation.
Dull. Me, an't shall please you; I am Antony Dull.
King. For Jaquenetta, (so is the weaker vessel dcall, which I apprehended with the aforesaid swains,) I keep her as a vessel of thy love's fury; and shall, at the least of thy sweet wishes, bring her to trial. Thine, in all compliments of doved and heart-burning host of duty, Don Adriano de Armado.
Biron. This is not so well as I looked for, but the best that ever I heard.
King. Ay, the best for the worst. But, sirrah, what say you to this?
Cost. Sir, I confess the wench.
King. Did you hear the proclamation?
Cost. I do confess much of the hearing it, but little of the marking of it.
King. It was proclaimed a year's imprisonment, to be taken with a wench.
Cost. I was taken with none, sir; I was taken with a damosel.
King. Well, it was proclaimed damosel.
Cost. This was no damosel neither, sir; she was a virgin.
King. It is so varied too; for it was proclaimed virgin.
Cost. If it were, I deny her virginity; I was taken with a maid.
King. This maid will not serve your turn, sir.
Cost. This maid will serve my turn, sir.
King. Sir, I will pronounce your sentence; You shall fast a week with bran and water.
Cost. I had rather pray a month with mutton and porridge.
King. And Don Armado shall be your keeper.—
My lord Biron, see him deliver'd o'er.—
And go we, lords, to put in practice that Which each to other hath so strongly sworn.—
[Exeunt.]
Biron. I'll lay my head to any good man's hat,
These oaths and laws will prove an idle scorn.—
Sirrah, come on.
Cost. I suffer for the truth, sir; for true it is, I was taken with Jaquenetta, and Jaquenetta is a true girl; and therefore, Welcome the sour cup of prosperity! Affliction may one day smile again, and till then, Sit thee down, sorrow! [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Another part of the same. Armado's House.
Enter Armado and Moth.
Arm. Boy, what sign is it, when a man of great spirit grows melancholy?
Moth. A great sign, sir, that he will look sad.
Arm. Why, sadness is one and the self-same good thing; dear imp.
Moth. No, no, O lord, sir, no.
Arm. How canst thou part sadness and melancholy, my tender juvenile?
Moth. By a familiar demonstration of the working, my true senior.
Arm. Why tough senior? why tough senior?
Moth. Why tender juvenal? why tender juvenal?
Arm. I spoke it, tender juvenal, as a congruent epithetos, appertaining to thy young days, which we may nominate tender.

Act I.

Love's Labours Lost.

Love. And I, tough senior, as an appertaining to thy candid praise, which we may name tough.

Art. Pretty, and apt.

Love. How mean you, sir; I pretty, and my saying apt, or I apt, and my saying pretty?

Art. They pretty, because little. Little pretty, because little. Wherefore apt?

Art. And therefore apt, because quick.

Love. Speak you this in my praise, master?

Art. I like your kindling praise.

Love. I will praise an eel with the same praise.

Art. What? that an eel is ingenious?

Love. That an eel is quick.

Art. I do say, then. Art quick in answers: Thou hast not-clouded my blood.

Love. I am answered, sir.

Art. I love not to be crossed.

Love. He speaks the more contrary, crossing love not him.

Art. I have promised to study three years with the duke.

Love. You may do it in an hour, sir.

Art. Impassibly.

Love. How many is one thrice told?

Art. I am ill at reckoning, it fits not the spirit of a tapster.

Art. You are a gentleman, and a gamester, sir.

Love. I confess both; they are both the varnish of a complete man.

Art. Then, I am sure, you know how much the gross sum of ducceas amounts to.

Love. It doth amount to one more than two.

Art. Which the base vulgar do call, three.

Love. True.

Art. Why, sir, is this such a piece of study?

Love. Here is three years studied, one you will scarce win, and how easy it is to put years to the word three, and study three years in two words, the dancing horse will not tell you.

Art. A most fine figure!

Art. To prove you a cipher. [Aside.]

Art. I will hereupon confess, I am in love and, as it is base for a soldier to love, so am I in love with a base wench. If drawing my sword against the honour of affection would deliver me from the reproach thought of it, I would take desire prisoners, and ransom him to any French courtier for a new devised courtesy. I think scorn to sigh: methinks I should outwear my expected compliments. How long, boy? What great men have been in love?

Art. Hercules, master.

Love. Most sweet Hercules!—more authority, doth he have more; and, sweet my child, let them be men of good repute and carriage.

Art. Sampson, master; he was a man of good carriage, great carriage; for he carried the town-gates on his back, like a porter; and he was in love.

Art. Or well knit Sampson! strong jointed Sampson. I desist thee in my rapier, as much as thou didst me in carrying praises. It is love, and I am in love too.—What was Sampson's love, my dear Moth?

Art. A woman, master.

Love. Of what complexion?

Art. Of all the four, or the three, or the two; or one of the four.

Art. Tell me precisely of what complexion?

Art. Of the sea-water green, sir.

Love. Is that one of the four complexions?

Art. As I have read, sir: and the best of them too.

Art. Green, indeed; is the colour of lovers; but to have a love of that colour, methinks, Sampson had small reason for it. He, surely, affected her for her wit.

Love. It was so, sir; for she had a green wit.

Art. My love is most immaculate white and red.

Art. Most morose thoughts, master, are masked under such colours.

Love. Define, define, well-educated infant.

Art. My father's wit, and my mother's tongue, assist me.

Love. Sweet invocation of a child: most pretty, and pathetical!

Art. If she be made of white and red, Moth. Her faults will never be known.

Art. For blest cheeks by faults are bred, and tears by pale-white shown:

Love. Then, if she fast, or to be blamed,

Art. By this you shall not know.

Love. For still her cheeks possesses the same,

Art. Which nature she doth owe.

Art. A dangerous rhyme, master, against the reason of white and red.

Love. Is there not a bawd, boy, of the King and the Hoggart.

Art. The world was very guilty of such a bawd some three ages since; but, I think, now 'tis not to be found; or, if it were, it would neither serve for the writing, nor the time.

Art. I will have the subject newly writ over, that I may example my digression by some mighty proper sing-song, for I do love that country girl, that I took in the park with the rational hind Costard; she deserves well.

Art. To be whipp'd; and yet a better love than this.

Love. Ah, say, sing.

Art. Forbear till this company be past.

Enter Dull, Costard, and Jaquenetta.

Dull. Sir, the duke's pleasure is, that you keep Costard thus; for never you must have him take no delight, no no peace; but 's must fast three days a week.

Love. For this damsel, I must keep her at the park; she is allowed for the day-woman. Fare you well.

Art. I do betray myself with blushing.—Maid.

Dull. Good night, sir.

Dull. I will visit thee at the lodge.

Love. That's hereby.

Love. I know where it is situate.

Dull. Lord, how wise you are!

Love. I will tell thee wonders.

Dull. With that face?

Love. I love thee.

Dull. Do you say, you know, sir?

Dull. And so farewell.

Love. Fair weather after you!

Dull. Come, Jaquenetta, away.

Love. Villain, thou shalt fast for thy offences are thou shall be pardoned.

Dull. Well, sir, I hope, when I do it, I shall do it on a full stomach.

Love. Thou shall be heavily punished.

Dull. I am more bound to you, than your fellows, for they are but lightly rewarded.

Dull. Take away this villain; shut him up.

Dull. Lord, how wise you are!

Love. Let me not be pent up, sir: I will fast, being loose.

Dull. No, sir; that were fast and loose: thou shouldst keep time.

Love. Well, if ever I do see the merry days of desolation that I have seen, some shall see—

Dull. What shall some see?

Dull. Nay nothing, master Moth, but what they look to. Nay, it is not for princes to be too silent in their words; and, therefore, I will say nothing: I thank God, I have as little patience as another man; and, therefore I can be quiet.

Dull. I renew Moth and Costard.

Dull. I do affect the very ground, which is base, where her shoe, which is base, guided by her foot, which is base, doth tread. I shall be forewarned (which is a great argument of falsehood,) if I love!
ACT II.

SCENE I.—Another part of the same. A Pavilion, and Tents at a distance.

Enter the Princess of France, Rosaline, Maria, Katharine, Boyet, Lords, and other Attendants.

Boyet. Now, madam, summon up your dearest spirits; consider who the king your father sends; to whom he sends; and what's his embassy: Yourself, held precious in the world's esteem; To parley with the sole inheritor Of that fair jewel, which may o'ere, Matchless Navarre; the plea of no less weight Than Aqualia; a dowry for a queen. Be now as prodigal of all dear grace, As nature was in making graces dear, Which did starve the general world beside, And prodigally gave them all to you. [mean.

Prin. Good lord Boyet, my beauty, though but Needs not the painted flourish of your praise; Beauty is bought by judgment of the eye, Not utter'd by base sale of chappen's tongues: I am less proud to hear you tell my worth, Than you much willing to be count'd wise In spending your wit in the prize of mine. But now to task the tasker.—Good Boyet, You are not ignorant, all-telling fame Loth noise abroad, Navarre hath made a vow, Will pay full pain study shall out-wear three years, No woman may approach his court; Therefore to us seemeth it a needful course, Before we enter his forbidden gates, To know his pleasure; and in that behalf, Lord, we have heard you so much, that we cannot do with out your good advice as our best-moving fair solicitor. Tell him, the daughter of the king of France, On serious business, craving quick despatch, Imports personal conference with his grace. Hast, signify so much; while we attend, Like humble-visag'd eunuchs, his high will. Boyet. Proud of employment, willingly I go. [Exit.

Prin. All pride is willing pride, and your's is so.—Who are the votaries, my loving lords, That are now fellows with this virtuous duke? 1 Lord. Longaville is one. Prin. Know you the man? 2 Lord. I know him, madam; at a marriage feast, Between lord Perigot and the beauituous heir Of Jaques Falconbridge solemnized, In Normandy, say I this Longaville: A man of sovereign parts he esteem'd; Well fitted in the arts, glorious in arms: Nothing becomes him ill, that he would well. The only sill of his fair virtue's gloss, (If strong enough, though but slight the roll,) Is a sharp wit match'd with too blunt a will; Whose edge hath power to cut, whose will still'lls It should none spare that come within his power. Prin. Some merry mocking lord, belike; is't so? 3 Lord. They say so most, that most his humour's know.

Prin. Such short-lived's wit do wither as they grow. Who are the rest? 4 Lord. The young Dumaín, a well-accomplish'd youth, Of all that virtue love for virtue lov'd: Most power may go to most hand, for I am living ill; For he hath wit to make an ill shape good, And shape to win grace though he had no wit. I saw him at the duke Alençon's once; And much too little of the gentleness saw, Is my report, to his great worthiness. Ros. Another of these students at that time Was there with him: if I have heard a truth, Biron that I call him: but a merrier man, Within the limit of becoming mirth, I never spent an hour's talk withal: His eye begets occasion for his wit; For every object that the one doth catch, The other turns to a mirth-moving jest; Which his fair tongue (conceit's expositor,) Delivers in such apt and gracious words, That aged ears play truant at his tales, And younger hearings are quite ravished; So sweet and volatile is his discourse. Prin. God bless my ladies! are they all in love; That every one her own heart garnished With such bedecking ornaments of praise? 5 Lord. Here comes Boyet. Re-enter Boyet.

Prin. Now, what admittance, lord? Boyet. Navarre had notice of your fair approach; And he, and his competitors in state, Were all address'd to meet you, gentle lady, Before I came. Marry, thus much I have learnt, He rather means to lodge you in the field, Like one that comes here to besiege his court. Than seek a dispensation for his oath, To let you enter his unpeopled house. Here comes Navarre. [The Ladies-mak.

Enter King, Longaville, Dumaín, Biron, and Attendants.

King. Fair princess, welcome to the court of Navarre. Prin. Fair, I give you back again; and, welcome I have not yet: the roof of this court is too high to be yours; and welcome to the wild fields too bare to be mine. King. You shall be welcome, madam, to my court. Prin. I will be welcome then; conduct me thither. King. Hear me, dear lady; I have sworn an oath. Prin. Our lady keep it well: he'll be forsworn. King. Not for the world, fair madam, by my will. Prin. Why, will shall break it; will, and nothing else. King. Your ladyship is ignorant what it is. Prin. Were my lord so, his ignorance were wise, Where now his knowledge must prove ignorance. I hear your grace hath sworn-out house-keeping: 'tis deadly sin to keep that oath, my lord, And sin to break it, to be(1) Hence. But pardon me, I am too sudden-bold; To teach a teacher ill beseech'meth me. Vouchsafe to read the purpose of my coming, And suddenly resolve me in my suit. [Gives a paper. King. Madam, I will, if suddenly I may. Prin. You will the sooner, that I were away For you'll prove perjurd, if you make me stay. Biron. Did not I dance with you in Jibrant once? Ros. Did not I dance with you in Jibrant once? Biron. I know you did. Ros. How needless was it then To ask the question! You must not be so quick. Biron. 'Tis long of you that spur me with such questions. Ros. Twill tire. Biron. Your wit's too hot, it speeds too fast. Ros. Not till I leave the ring in the mire. Biron. What time o'day? Ros. The hour that fools should ask. K.
Love's Labours Lost

Act 2

Scene 1: A woman sometimes, an you saw her in the light.

Boyel. She hath but one for herself; to desire that, were a shame.

Long. Pray you, sir, whose daughter?

Boyel. Her mother's, I have heard.

Long. God's blessing on your heart!

Boyel. Good sir, be not offended.

She is an heir of Fauconbridge.

Long. No, we are not choicer, I assure you.

She is a most sweet lady.

Boyel. Not unlike, sir; that may be. [Exit Long.

Boyel. What's her name, in the cap?

Boyel. Katharine, by good hap.

Boyel. Is she wedded, or no?

Boyel. To her will, sir, or so.

Boyel. You are welcome, sir; adieu!

Boyel. Farewell to me, sir, and welcome to you.

Scene 2: A man, a woman, a boy.

Mar. That last is Hiron, the merry mad-cap lord.

Not a word with him but a jest.

Boyel. And every jest but a word.

Boyel. It was well done of you to take him at his word.

Boyel. I was as willing to grapple, as he was to

Mar. Two hot sheeps, marry! [board.

Boyel. Wherefore not ships?

No sheep, sweet lamb, unless we feed on your lips.

Mar. You sheep, and I pasture: Shall finish the jest?

Boyel. So you grant pasture for me.

Mar. Not so, gentle beast.

My lips are no common, though several they be.

Boyel. Belonging to whom?

Mar. To my fortunes and me.

Boyel. Good wits will be jangling: but, gentle, agree:

The civil war of wits were much better used

On Navarre and his book-men; for here 'tis abused.

Boyel. If my observation, (which very seldom lies,) By the heart's still rhetorick, disclosed with eyes, Deceive me not now, Navarre is infected.

Boyel. With what?

Boyel. With that which we lovers entitle, affected.

Boyel. Your reason.

Boyel. Why, all his behaviour did make their

To the court of his eye, peeping thorough desire: His boxer of too great, with you a want impresed:

Proud with his form, in his eye pride expressed;

His tongue, all impatient to speak and not see,

Did stumble with haste in his eye-sight to be;

All serving at his feet did make their repair,

To feel only looking on fairest of fair:

Methought all his senses were lock'd in his eye,

As jewels in crystal for some prince to buy; Who, tendering their own worth, from where they were glass'd,

Did point you to buy them, along as you pass'd.

His face's own margent did quote such amaze,

That all eyes saw his eye enchanted with gazes:

I'll give you Aquitain, and all that is his,

An you give him for my sake but one loving kiss.

Boyel. Come, to our pavilion: lovet is dispand'd.

Boyel. But to speak that in words, which his eye hath dispand'd:

I only have made a month of his eye,

By adding a tongue which I know will not lie.

Boyel. Thou art an old love-monger, and speakst skilfully.

Mar. He is Cupid's, grandfather, and learns news of him.

Boyel. Then was Venus like her mother; for her

Looking over is but grim.

Boyel. Do you hear, my mad wenches?

Boyel. No.

Boyel. What then, do you see?

Boyel. Ay, our way to be gone,

Boyel. You are too hard for me.

Boyel. [Exit.

Biron. Nay, then will I be gone.

Long. Fair fill the face it covers!

Boyel. And send you many lovers!

Boyel. Amen, so you be none.

Biron. Nay, you will then be gone.

King. Madam, your father here doth intimate That he will have a hundred thousand crowns; Being the one half of our estate, Disbursed by my father in his will.

But say, that he, or we, (as neither have,) Received that sum; yet there remains unpaid A hundred thousand crowns; in sum, of which One part of Aquitain is bound to us, Although not valued to the money's worth. If then the king your father will restore But that one half which is unmitigated, We will give up our right in Aquitain, And hold fair friendship with his majesty. But that, it seems, he little purposeth, For here doth demand to have repaid An hundred thousand crowns; and not demands, The payment of a hundred thousand crowns; To have his title live in Aquitain:

Which we much rather had depart withal, And have by the money by our father lent, Than Aquitain so guided as it is.

Dear princess, were not his requests so far From reason's yielding, your fair self should make A just reason, against reason, In my breast, And go well satisfied to France again.

Prin. You do the king my father too much wrong.

And wrong the reputation of your name, In so unmanly to commit receipt Of that which hath so faithfully been paid.

King. I do protest, I never heard of it;

And, if you please it, I'll repay it back,

To hold up Aquitain.

Prin. We arrest your word—

Boyel. You can produce acquittances,

For such a sum, from special officers Of Charles his father.

King. Satisfy me so. [frame.

Boyel. So please your grace, the packet is not

Where that and other specialties are bound; To-morrow you shall have a sight of them.

King. It shall suffice me, at which interview, All liberal reason I will yield unto.

Mean time, receive such welcome at my hand, As honour, without breach of honour, may Make me a true witness to your honesty.

You may not come, fair princess, in my gate;

But here without you shall be so receiv'd,

As you shall deem yourself lodg'd in my heart, Though his subjects were no house.

Your own good thoughts excuse me, and farewell:

To-morrow shall we visit you again.

Gracie.

Prin. Sweet health and fair desires concord your king. Thy own wish I thee in every place! [Exit. King and his train.

Biron. Lady, I will commend you to my own heart.

Ros. Pray you, do my commendations; I would be glad to see it.

Biron. I would, you heard it groan.

Ros. Is the fool sick?

Biron. Sick at heart.

Ros. Aft, let it blood.

Biron. Would that it do good?

Ros. My physic says I.

Biron. Will you prick with your eye?

Ros. No, gentle, with my knife.

Biron. Now, God save thy life!

Ros. And yours from long living!

Biron. I cannot stay thanksgiving. [Retiring.

Dum. Sir, I pray you, a word: What lady is That so tame?

Boyel. The heir of Alencon, Rosaline her name.

Dum. A gallant lady! Monstre, fare you well,

Though you be but a woman. [Exit.

Long. I beseech you a word: What is she in the white?
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Another part of the same.

Enter Armado and Moth.

Arm. Warble, child; make passionate my sense of hearing.

Moth. Cancelled— [Singing. Arm. Sweet air—Go, tenderness of years! take this key, give enlargement to the swain, bring him festinately hither; I must employ him in a letter to my love.

Arm. Child, will you win your love with a French brawl?

Moth. How mean'st thou? brawling in French?

Arm. No, my complete master; but to jog off a tune at the tongue's end, canary to it with your feet, humour it with turning up your eye-lids; sigh a note, and sing a note; sometimes through the throat, as if you swallowed love with singing love; sometimes through the nose, as if you snuff'd up love by smelling love; with your hat pent-house-like, o'er the shop of your eyes; with your arms crossed on your thin belly-doublet, like a rabbit on a spit; or your hands in your pocket, like a man after the old painting; and keep not too long in one tune, but break and away: These are compliments—there are humours; these betray nice wenchers—would be betrayed without these; and make them men of note, (do you note, men?) that most are affected to these.

Arm. How hast thou purchased this experience?

Moth. By my penny of observation.

Arm. But O,—but O—

Moth. —the hobby-horse is forgot.

Arm. Callest thou my love, hobby-horse?

Moth. No, master; the hobby-horse is but a colt, and your love, perhaps, a hackney. But have you forgot your love?

Arm. Almost I bad.

Moth. Negligent student! learn her by heart.

Arm. By heart, and in heart, boy.

Moth. And out of heart, master: all those three I will prove.

Arm. What wilt thou prove?

Moth. A man, if I live; and this, by, In, and without, upon the instant: By heart you love her, because your heart cannot come by her; in heart you love her, because your heart is in love with her; and out of heart you love her, being out of heart you cannot enjoy her.

Arm. I am all these three.

Moth. And three times as much more, and yet nothing at all.

Arm. Fetch hither the swain; he must carry me a letter.

Moth. A message well sympathized; a horse to be ambassador for an ass!

Arm. Ha, ha! what sayest thou?

Moth. Marry, sir, you must send the ass upon the horse, for he is very slow-gaited. But I go.

Arm. The way is but short; away.

Moth. As swift as lead, sir.

Arm. Thy meaning, pretty ingenious?

Moth. Is not lead a metal heavy, dull, and slow?

Moth. Mumble, honest master; or rather, master, no.

Arm. I say, lead is slow.

Moth. You are too swift, sir, to say so: Is that lead slow which is first from a gun?

Moth. Sweet smoke of rhetoric! [Exit. He reputes me a cannon; and the bullet, that's I shoot thee at the swain.

Arm. Thump then, and I flee. [Exit.

Arm. A most acute juvenal; voluble and free of grace!

By thy favour, sweet welkin, I must sigh in thy breast.

Moth. Most rude melancholy valour gives thee place. My herald is return'd.

Re-enter Moth and Costard.

Moth. A wonder, master; here's a Costard broken in a shin.

Arm. Some enigma, some riddle: come,—thy Penelope begin.

Cost. No enigma, no riddle, no Penelope; no salve in the mail, sir: O, sir, plantain, a plain plantain; no Penelope, no Penelope, no salve, sir, but a plantain.

Arm. By jove, thou dost enforce laughter; thy silly thought, my spleen; the heaving of my lungs provokes me to ridiculous smiling: O, pardon me, my stars! Doth the inconsiderate take salve for Penelope, and the word, Penelope, for a salve.

Moth. Do the wise think them other? is not Penelope a salve?

Arm. No page: it is an epilogue or discourse, to make plain

Some obscure precedent that hath tofore been seen. I will example it:

The fox, the ape, and the humble-bee,

Were still at odds, being but three.

There's the moral: Now the Penelope.

Moth. I will add the Penelope: say the moral again.

Arm. The fox, the ape, and the humble-bee,

Were still at odds, being but three:

Cost. Until the goose came out of door,

And stay'd the odds by adding four.

Now will I begin your moral, and do you follow with my Penelope.

The fox, the ape, and the humble-bee,

Were still at odds, being but three:

Arm. Until the goose came out of door,

Staying the odds by adding four.

Moth. A good Penelope, ending in the goose;

Would you desire more?

Cost. The boy hath sold him a bargain, a goose, that's flat— [Fat. Sir, your pennry worth is good, an your goose be To sell a bargain well, is as cunning as fast and low the market.

Arm. But tell me; how was there a Costard broken in a shin?

Moth. I will tell you sensibly.

Cost. Then call'd you for the Penelope. [Shin.

Arm. Come hither, come hither: How did this argument begin?

Moth. By saying that a Costard was broken in a shin. Why call'd you for the Penelope?

Arm. Come hither, come hither:

Moth. Costard, to I for a plantain: Thus came your argument;

Then by two fat Penelope, the goose that you bought;

And he ended the market.

Arm. But tell me; how was there a Costard broken in a shin?

Moth. I will tell you sensibly.

Cost. Then by two fat Penelope, the goose that you bought:

Arm. We will talk no more of this matter.

Cost. Till ther be more matter in the shin.

Arm. Sirrah Costard, I will enfranchise thee.

Cost. O, marry me to one Frances; —I smell some Penelope, some goose. In this.

Arm. By my sweet soul, I mean, setting thee at liberty, enframing thy person; thou wert immured, restrained, captivated, bound.

Cost. True, true; and now you will be my pursuer, and I the loose.

Arm. I give thee thy liberty, set thee from duration; and, in lieu thereof, impose on thee nothing by this: Bear this significant to the country maid Jaquenetta: there is remuneration; [giving him money.] for the best ward of mine honour, is, regarding my dependents. Moth. follow. [Exit. Moth. Like the sequel, I.—Signior Costard, I will adjudge.

Cost. My sweet ounce of man's flesh! my incony Jew! [Exit Moth.

Now will I look to his remuneration. Remuneration, O, that's the Latin word for these earnings; Remuneration.—What's the price of this inkle? a penny:—No, I'll give you a remuneration: why, it carries it.—Remuneration!
why, it is a fairer name than French crown. I will never buy and sell out of this word.

Enter Birgon.

Birgon. O, my good knave Costard! exceedingly well met.

Cost. Pray you, sir, how much carnation ribbon may a man buy for a remuneration?

Birgon. What is a remuneration?

Cost. Marry, sir, half-penny farthing.

Birgon. O, why, then, three farthings worth of silk.

Cost. I thank you, sir.

Birgon. O, stay, slave; I must employ thee:
As thou wilt win my favour, good my knave,
Do one thing for me that I shall entreat.

Cost. When would you have it done, sir?

Birgon. (), this afternoon.

Cost. Well, I will do it, sir: Fare you well.

Birgon. O, thou knowest not what it is.

Cost. I shall know, sir, when I have done it.

Birgon. Why, villain, thou must know first.

Cost. I will come to your worship to-morrow morning.

Birgon. It must be done this afternoon. Hark, slave, it is but this:—
The princess comes to hunt here in the park,
And in her train there is a gentle lady;
When tongues speak sweetly, then they name her
And Rosaline they call her; ask for her;
And to her white hand they do commend
This seal'd-up counsel. There's thy guardian: go.

Cost. Guardian,—O sweet guardian! better than remuneration; eleven-pence farthing better: Most sweet guardian! I will do it, sir, in print.—

Guardian.—(Exit.)

Birgon. ()!—And I, forsooth, in love! I, that have been love's whip;
A very beadle to a humours sib,
A very hand, a night-watch constable;
A dissolute pedant over the boy,
Than whom no mortals so magnificent!
This wimpated, whining, parbold, wayward boy;
This sensible jester, giant-swain, Dan Caplet;
Regent of love-rhymes, lord of folded arms,
The anointed sovereign of sighs and groans,
Liege of all lovers and maconsents,
Dread prince of plackets, king of cod-pieces,
Sole inspirer, and great general
Of trotting paritiers, O my little heart!—
And I to be a corporal of his field,
And wear his colours like a tumber's heap!
What? E'en thus! E'en thus! E'en thus!
A woman, that is like a German clock,
Still a repairing; ever out of frame;
And never going aright, being a watch.
But being watch'd that it may still go right:
Nay, to be purjur'd, which is worst of all;
And, among three, to love the worst of all;
A whitely wanton with a velvet brow,
With two pitch balls stuck in her face for eyes:
Ay, and, by heaven, one that will do the deed,
Though Argo was her eunuch and her guard:
And I to sigh for her! to watch for her!
To pray for her! Go to; it is a plague
That Caplet will impose for my respect:
Of his allmighty dreadful little might.
Well, I will love, write, sigh, pray, sue, and groan;
Some men must love my lady, and some Joan.

[Exit.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Another part of the same.

Enter the Princess, Rosaline, Maria, Katharine, Boyet, Lords, Attendants, and a Forester.

Prin. Was that the king, that spurr'd his horse so hard
Against the steep uprising of the hill?

Boyet. I know not; but, I think, it was not he.

Prin. Who'er he was, he shou'd a mounting mind

Well, lords, to-day we shall have our despatch;
On Saturday we will return to France.—
Then, forester, my friend, where is the bush,
That we must stand and play the murderer in?

For. Here by, upon the edge of yonder coprice;
A stand, where you may make the fairest shoot.

Prin. I think my beauty, I am fair that shoot.

Boyet. Whose that, is, he shou'd speak it, the fairest shoot.

For. Upon madam, I shan't, for I don't so.

Prin. What, what? first praise me, and again say,

O showers'd! Pride! Not fair? slack for woe.

For. Yes, madam, fair.

Prin. Nay, never paint me now;

Where fair is not, praise cannot mend the brow.
Here, good my glass, take this for telling true;

[Giving him money.

Fair payment for foul words is more than due.

For. Nothing but fair is that which you inherit.

Prin. See, see, my beauty will be sa'd by merit.

Here's my fair lady, in fit for these days:

A giving hand, though foul, shall have fair praise.—

But come, the bow!—Now mercy goes to kill,
And shooting well is then accounted ill.

Thus will I save my credit in your shoot:
Not wounding, pity would not let me do;
If wounding, then it was to show my skill,
That more for praise, than purpose, meant to kill.

And, out of question, so it is sometimes;

The power of danger, and the goodly device
When, for fame's sake, for praise, an outward part,
We bend to that the working of the heart.

As I, for praise alone, now seek to spill
The poison'd blood, that my heart means no ill.

Boyet. Do not curst wives hold that self-sovereignty,

Only for praise's sake, when they strive to be

Lovers in their lords' loves?

Prin. Only for praise: and praise we may afford

To any lady that subdued a lord.

Enter Costard.

Prin. Here comes a member of the common-wealth.

Cost. God dig-you don all! Pray you, which is the head lady?

This shall know her, fellow, by the rest
That have no heads.

Cost. Which is the greatest lady, the highest?

Prin. The thickest, and the tallest.

Cost. That is the best, and the tallest! It is so; truth is true;

An your waist, mistress, were as slender as my wit,
One of these maid's girdles for your waist should be fit.

Are not you the chief woman? you are the thickest

Prin. What's your will, sir? what's your will?

Cost. I have a letter from monsieur Birgon, to one lady Rosaline.

Prin. (), thy letter, thy letter; he's a good friend of mine:

Stand aside, good beayer.—Boyet, you can carve;

Break up this capon.

I am bound to serve.—

This letter is misprint, it importeth none here;

It is writ to Jaquenetta.

Prin. We will read it, I swear.

Break the neck of the wax, and every one give ear.

Boyet. [Reads.] By heaven, that thou art fair is most insatiable; true, that thou art beauteous; true itself, that thou art lovely: More fitter than fair, Beautiful than beauteurous; truer than truth itself, have commodification on thy heraldic vassal! The magnanimous and most illustrious Copehetus set eye upon the pernicious and unsublime beggar Zenelopho, a sort that weigheth righteously, varch, vid, vid; which to anatomize in the vulgar, (I base and obscure vulgar!) videlicet, he came, saw, and overcome: he came, one; saw, two; overcome, three.
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

LOST. 133.

Who came the king? Why did he come to see me? Why did he see me to overcome? To whom came he? To the beggar. Whom came the beggar? Who came to the beggar? The conclusion is victory; on whose side the king's? the captive is enriched; on whose side the beggar's? The catastrophe is a nuptial; on whose side? The king's!—no, on both in one, or one in both. I am the king; for so stands the comparison: thou the beggar; for so witnesseth thy lowliness. Shall I command thy love? I may: Shall I enforce thy love? I could: Shall I enreat thy love? I must. I shall give thee for thy price; for it is thy price; for it is one of thee; for it is one of thee. But, as I am not a chapman, I shall sell thee for thy value. Doth he love thee? Doth he love thee? Doth he love thee? Here, I think, doth he love thee; and here, I think, doth he love thee. Thus dost thou hear the Nemean lion roar.'Gainst thee, thou lamb, that standest as his prey; Submissive fall his princely feet before, And he from forage will incline to play; But if thou strive, poor soul, what art thou then? Food for his rage, repasture for his den. Prin. What plume of feathers is he, that indited this letter? [better] What vane? what weather-cock? did you ever hear Boyet. I am much deceived, but I remember the [erewhile.] Prin. Else your memory is bad, going o'er it. Boyet. This Armado is a Spaniard, that keeps here in court; A phantasm, a Monarch, and one that makes sport To the prince, and his bed. Prin. Thou, fellow, a woman. What gave thee this letter? Cost. I told you; my lord. Prin. To whom shouldst thou give this letter? Cost. From my lord to my lady. Prin. From which lord, to which lady? [mine] Cost. From my lord Biron, a good master of To a lady of France, that call'd Rosaline. Prin. Thou hast mistaken his letter. Come, lords, away. Here, sweet, put up this; 'twill be thine another day. [Exit Princess and train. Boyet. Who is the suitor? who is the suitor? Ros. Shall I teach you to know? Boyet. Ay, my continent of beauty. Ros. Why, she that bears the bow. Finely put off! Boyet. My lady goes to kill horses; but, if thou Hang me by the neck, if horses that year miscarry. Finely put off! Ros. Well then, I am the shooter. Boyet. And who is your deer? Ros. If we choose by the horns, yourself; come Finely put on, indeed! [near Mar. You still wrangle with her, Boyet, and she strikes at the brow. [her now. Boyet. But she herself is hit lower: Have I hit Ros. Shall I come upon thee with an old saying, that was a man when king Pepin of France was a little boy, as touching the hit it? Boyet. So I may answer thee with one as old, that was a woman when queen Guinever of Britain was a little wench, as touching the hit it. Ros. Thou canst not hit it, hit it, hit it; [Singing, Thou canst not hit it, my good man. Boyet. An I cannot, cannot, cannot, An I cannot, another can. [Exeunt Ros. and Kath. Cost. By my troth, most true indeed! how both did hit it! [both did hit it. Mar. A mark marvellous well shot; for they Boyet. A mark! O, mark but that mark; A come he? A come he? Let the mark have a 'prick in't, to mete at. If it may Mar. Wide o' the bow hand! I faith your hand is out. Cost. Indeed, a must shoot nearer, or he'll never hit the clout. Boyet. An if my hand be out, then, belike your hand is in. [the pin. Cost. Then will she get the shot by cleaving Mar. Come, come, you talk greedily, your lips grow foul. [lenege her to bowl. Cost. She's too hard for you at pricks, sir; chal- Boyet. I fear too much rubbing; Good night my good fortune. [Exit Boyet and Marla. Cost. By my soul, a swain! a most simple clown! Lord, lord! how the ladies and I have put him down! [wit! O' my troth, most sweet jests! most Incony vulgar When it comes so smooth off, so obscene, as it were, so fit. Armatho o' the one side,—O, a most dainty man! To see him walk before a lady, and to bear her fan! To see him kiss his hand! and how most sweetly a will swear! — And his page o' other side, that handful of wit! Ah, heavens, it is a most pathetical nit! Solh, sola! [Shouting within. SCENE II.—The same.

Enter Holofernes, Sir Nathaniel, and Dull.

Nath. Very reverent sport, truly; and done in the testimony of a good conscience.

Hol. The deer was, as you know, in angua... voided; ripe as a pomewater, who now hangeth like a jewel in the ear of colo,—the sky, the welkin, the heaven; and anon falleth like a crab, on the face of terra,—the soil, the land, the earth.

Nath. Truly, master Holofernes, the epithets are sweetly varied, like a scholar at the least: But, sir, I assure ye, it was a buck of the first head.

Hol. Sir Nathaniel, hau'd credo.

Dull. 'Twas not a hau'd credo; 'twas a pricket.

Hol. Most barbarous intimation! yet a kind of insinuation, as it were, in via, in way, of explication; scire, as it were, replication, or, rather ostentare, to show, as it were, his inclination,—after his undressed, unpollished, uneducated, unpruned, untrained, or rather unlettered, or, ratherest, unconfirmed fashion,—to insert again my hau'd credo for a deer.

Dull. I said, the deer was not a hau'd credo; 'twas a pricket.

Hol. Twice sod simplicity, bis coactus!—O thou monster Ignorance, how deformed dost thou look! But, omne bene, say I; being of an old father's mind, Many can brook the weather, that love not the wind.

Dull. You two are book-men: Can you tell by your wit, What was a month old at Cain's birth, that's not five Hol. Dietynna, good man Dull; Dietynna, good man Dull.

Dull. What is Dietynna?

Nath. A little to Phoebus, to Luna, to the moon.

Hol. The moon was a month old, when Adam was no more:

And taught not to five weeks, when he came to fives.

The allusion holds in the exchange.

Dull. 'Tis true indeed; the collusion holds in the exchange.

Hol. God comfort thy capacity! I say, the allusion holds in the exchange.

Dull. And I say the pollution holds in the ex-

Enter the King, with a paper.

King. Ah me!

Biron. [Aside.] Shot by heaven!—Proceed, sweet Cupid; thou hast loaded me with thy bird, bolt under the left lap—[Fairy secrets.]

King. [Reads.] So sweet a kiss the golden sun gives not.

To those, fresh morning drops upon the rose,
As thy eye-beams, when their fresh rays have smote
The night of dam that on my cheeks down flows:
Nor shines the silver moon one half so bright
Then thou, transparent bosom, so bright.
As doth thy face through tears of mine give light:
Thou shin'st in every tear that I do weep;
No drop but as a coach doth carry thee,
So riddle thou triumphing in my joy:
Do but behold the tears that swell in me,
And they thy glory through my grief will show:
But do not love thyself; then thou wilt keep
My tears for glasses, and still make me weep.
O queen of queens, how fair dost thou excel!—
No thought can think, nor tongue of mortal tell,
How shall she know my griefs? I'll drop the paper;
Sweet leaves, shade folly. Who is he comes here?—
[Steps aside.]

Enter Longaville, with a paper.

What, Longaville! and reading! listen, ear.

Biron. Now, in thy likeness, one more fool, appear!—[Aside.]

Long. Ah me! I am forsorn.

Biron. Why, he comes in like a perjuré, wearing paper.

King. In love, I hope; Sweet fellowship in shame!—[Aside.]

Biron. One drunkard loves another of the name.

Long. Am I the first that have been perfur'd?

Biron. [Aside.] I could put thee in comfort; not by two, that I know,—[Aside.]

Thou mak'st the triumvir, the corner cap of so-
The shrewd beauty's Tyburn that hangs up simplicity.

Long. I fear, these stubborn lines lack power to move:
O sweet sweet, the empress of my love!
These numbers will I tear and write in prose.
Biron. [Aside.] O, rhymes are guards on wanton Disfigure not his slop.[Cupid's hose: Long.

Stay.]

This same shall go. [He reads the sonnet.

Did not the heavenly rhetorick of thine eye
[Gaius what the world cannot hold argument.]
Persuade my heart to this false perjur'y?
Vores, for thee broke, deserve not punishment.
A woman I forswore; but, I will prove
Thou being a goddess, I forswore not thee:
My vow was earthly, thou a heavenly love:
Thy grace being gain'd, cure all distress in me.
Vores are but breath, and breath a vapour to me:
Then thou, fair sun, which on the earth dost shine,
Exh'ist this vapour vore: in thee is it:
If broken then, it is no fault of mine;
If by me broke, what fault is not mine,
To lose an oath to win a paradise?—
Biron. [Aside.] This is the liver vein, which makes flesh a deity:
A green goose, a goddess: pure, pure idolatry.
God amend us, God amend we are much out o' the way.

Enter Dumain, with a paper.

Long. By whom shall I send this?—Company!—[Stepping aside.]

Biron. [Aside.] All hid, all hid, an old Infant
Like a demi-god here sit I in the sky, [play:
And wretched fools' secrets heedfully o'er-eye.
More said, more null! O heaven, I have my wish; Dumain transformed: four wood-cocks in a dish.
Dum. O most diviné Kate!

Biron. O most prophané coxcomb!—[Aside.

Dum. By heaven, the wonder of a mortal eye!—[Aside.

Biron. By earth she is but corporal: there you
Dum. Her amber hairs for full have amber coted.

Biron. An amber colour'd raven was well noted. [Aside.

Dum. As upright as the cedar.

Biron. Stoop, I say;

Her shoulder is with child. [Aside.

Dum. As fair as day.

Biron. Ay, as some days; but then no sun must shine. [Aside.

Dum. O that I had my wish!—

Long. And I had mine.

King. And I mine too, good lord!

Biron. Amen, so I had mine: Is not that a good word?—[Aside.

Dum. I would forget her; but a fever she Reigns in my blood, and will remember'd be.

Biron. A fever in your blood, why, then inclusion
Would let her out in saucers; Sweet misprision!—[Aside.

Dum. Once more I'll read the ode that I have writ.

Biron. Once more I'll mark how love can vary

Dum. On a day, (alack the day!)—

Love, whose month is ever May,
Spied a blossom, passing fair,
Playing in the muskion air:—
Through the vaulted leaves the wind,
All earth, sky, pain passage find;
That the lover, sick to death,
Wish'd himself the heaven's breath.
Air, quoth he, thy cheeks may blow,
Air, would I might thou and I so!
But alack, my hand is amors,
Ne'er to pluck thee from thy thorn.
Vore, alack, for youth unmet;
Youth so apt to pluck a sweet.
Do not call it sin in me,
That I am forforn for thee:
Thou for whom even Jove would swear,
Jove, and Jove

Dumain. [Advancing.] thy love is far from

That in love's grief desir'd society:
Charity, you may look pale, but I should blush, I know,
To be o'erheard, and taken napping so.

King. Come, sir, [advancing.] you blush; as his your case is such;
You chide at him, offending twice as much;
You do not love Maria; Longaville
Did never sonnet for her sake compile;
Nor never lay his wreathed arms athwart
His loving bosom, to keep down his heart.
I have been closely shrouded in this bush,
And mark'd you both, and for you both did blush.
I heard your guilty rhymes, observ'd your fashion;
Saw sighs reek from you, noted well your passion:
Ah me! I says one: O Jove! the other cries;
One, her hairs were gold, crystal the other's eyes:
You would for paradise break faith and troth;—

[To Long.

And Jove, for your love, would infringe an oath.

[To Dumain.

What will Hiron say, when that he shall hear
A faith infringing, which such a zeal did swear?
How will he scorn? how will he spend his wit?
Hion and I, you both, and for you both did blush.
For all the witch that ever I did see,
I would not have him know so much by me.
As true we are, at flesh and blood can be:
The sea will ebb and flow, heaven show his face
Young blood will not obey an old decree;
We cannot cross the cause why we were born;
Therefore, of all hands must we be forsawm.

King. What, did these rent lines show some loss of thine?

Biron. Did they, quoth you? Who sees the heavenly Romanize,
That, a rude and shaggy man of Inde,
At the first opening of the gorgeous east,
Bows not his vassal he d.; and, strucken blind,
Kisses the base ground with obdient breath?
What sanguinary eye--eighty eyes--
Dar'se look upon the heaven of her brow,
That is not blinded by her majesty.

King. What seal, what fury bath inspir'd thee
My love, her mistress, is a gracious moon; [now
She, an attending star, scarce seen a light.

Biron. My eyes are then no eyes, nor I Biron;
O, but for my love, day would turn to night!
Of all compositions the wul'd sovereignty
Do meet, as at a fair, in her fair cheek;
Where several worthies make one dignity;
Where nothing wants, that want itself doth seek.

Lend not thy flourish of all gentle tongues,— Eye, painted rhetoric! O, she needs it not:
To things of sale a seller's praise belongs; [blot.
She passes praise: then praise too short doth
A woman's beauty, five-score years of beauty,
Might shake off fifty, looking in her eye:
Beauty doth vanish age, as if new-born,
And gives the crutch the cradle's infancy.

O, to the sun, that maketh all things shine!
King. What, dost thou paint my lady beautiful?
Biron. Is eybon like her? O wood divine!
A wife of such wood were felicity,
O, who can give an oath? where is a book?
This man's no eye, he knows not thy beauty;
If she that learn not of her eye to look:
No face is fair, that is not full so black.

King. O paradox! Black is the badge of hell,
The hue of dangers, and the scowl of night;
And beauty's crest becomes the heavens well.

Biron. Devils soonest tempt, resembling spirits
O, if in black my lady's brows be deckt, [light.

It mourns, that painting, and usurping hair,
Should cover and disgrace with a false face
And therefore is she born to make black fair.
Her favour turns the fashion of the days:
For native blood is counted painting now;
And where no merchandize, that would be low,
Paints itself black, to imitate her brow.

Dum. To look like her, are chimney-sweepers black.

Light. Long, since her time, are collars counted
King. And Ethiopians of their sweet complexion

Dum. Dark needs no candles now, for dark is Biron. Your mistresses dare never come in rain,
For fear their colours should be wash'd away.

King. 'Twere good, yours did; for, sir, to tell you plain,
I'll send a fair face not wash'd to-day.

Biron. I'll prove her fair, or talk till dooms-day here.
[She-

King. No devil will fright thee then so much as Dum. I never knew man hold viles stuff so dear.
Long, since there's thy love in foot, and face
He, he, and you, my liege, and I,
Are pick-purses in love, and we deserve to die

Biron. Ah, you whoreess loggerhead, [Cos-

Gull, you, I confess. I confess.

Biron. That you three fools lack'd me fool
To make up the mess;

Dum. Now the number is even.

Biron. True, true; we are four:
Will these turties be gone?

Dum. I'll not hear.
Hence, sir; away.

Biron. Sweet lords, sweet lovers, O let us embrace!
Act 4.

LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

Dum. Ay, marry, there—some flattery for this evil.

Long. O, some authority how to proceed; Some tricks, some quillots, how to cheat the devil. Dum. Some saline for physic.

O, 'tis more than need— Have at you then, affection's men at arms: Consider, what you first did swear unto:— To fast, to study,—and to see no woman:— Flat and fierce wars against the king's book: Can you still dream, and pore, and thereon look? For when would you, my lord, or you, or you, Have found the ground of study's excellence, Without the beauty of a woman's face? From women's eyes this doctrine I derive: They are the ground, the books, the academes, From whence doth spring the true Promethean fire. Why, universal priding prisons up The human spirits in the arteries; As motion, and long during action, tires The sinewy vigour of the traveller, Now, for not looking on a woman's face, You have in that forswn the use of eyes; And study too, the causer of your vow: For where is any author in the world, Teaches such beauty as a woman's eye? Learning is but an adjunct to our youth; And where we are, our learning likewise is. Then, when ourselves we see in ladies' eyes, Do we not likewise see our learning there? O, we have made a vow to study, lords; And in that vow we have forswn our books; For when would you, my liege, or you, or you, In leaden contemplation, have found out Such fiery numbers, as the prompting eye Of beauteous tutors have to do with? Other slow arts entirely keep the brain; And therefore finding barren practisers, Scarcely show a harvest of their heavy toil; But love, first learned in a lady's eyes, Lives not alone immersed in the brain; But with the motion of all elements, Courses as swift as thought in every power; And gives to every power a double power, Above their functions and their offices. It adds a precious seeing to the eye; A lover's eyes will gaze an eagle blind; A lover's ear will hear the lowest voice, When the suspicious head of theft is stopp'd; Love's feeling is more soft, and sensible, Than are the tender horns of cocked snails; Love's tongue proves dainty Bacchus gross in taste: For, when love's servitor, is not love, Still climbing trees in the Hesperides Subtle as sphinx; as sweet, and musical, As bright Apollo's lute, strung with his hair; And, when love speaks, the voice of all the gods Makes heaven drowsy with the harmony. Never durst poet touch a pen to write, Until his ink were temper'd with love's sighs; O, then his lines would ravish savage ears, And plant in tyrants mild humility. From women's eyes this doctrine I derive: They sparkle still the right Promethean fire; The books, the arts, the women, That show, contain, and nourish all the world; Else, none at all in outh proves excellent: Then fools you were these women to forsware; Or, keeping what is said, you still prove fools. For wisdom's sake, a word that all men love; Or for love's sake, a word that loves all men; Or for men's sake, the authors of these women; Or women's sake, by whom we are made men; Let us lose our oaths, to find ourselves, Or else we lose ourselves to keep our oaths: It is religion to be thus forsware: For charity itself fulfils the law; And who can sever love from charity?

King. Saint Cupid, then! and, soldiers, to the field! [lords, Biron. Advance your standards, and upon them, Pell-mell, down with them! but be first adv'd, In conflict that you get the sun of them. Long. Now, lords, to plain-dealing, lay these gloves by: Shall we resolve to woo these girls of France? King. And win them too: therefore let us devise Some entertainment for them in their tents. Biron. First, from the park let us conduct them thither;

Then, homeward, every man attach the hand Of his fair mistress: in the afternoon Hee will with his book resolve the cause, Such as the shortness of the time can shape; For revels, dances, masks, and merry hours, Fore-run fair Love, strewing her way with flowers.

King. A way, away! no time shall be omitted, That will be time, and may by us be fitted.

Biron. Alons! Alons!—sow'd cockle reap't no corn;

And justice always whirls in equal measure:
Light wenchers may prove plagues to men forsware; If so, our copper buys no better treasure. [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I. Another part of the same.

Enter Holofernes, Sir Nathaniel, and Dull.

Hol. Satis quod sufficit.

Nath. I praise God for you, sir; your reasons at dinner have been sharp and sententious; pleasant without scurrility, witty without affection, audacious without impiety, learned without opinion, and strange without heresy. I did converse this quondam day with a companion of the king's, who is intituled, nominated, or called, Don Adriano de Armado.

Hol. Novi hominem tamquam te; His humour is lofty, his discourse peremptory, his tongue filed, his eye ambitious, his gait majestic, and his general behaviour vain, ridiculous, and thronical. He is too picked, too spruce, too affected, too odd, as they were, too peregrinate, as I may call it.

Nath. A most singular and choice epithet.

[Take out his table book.

Hol. He draweth out the thread of his verbosity finer than the staple of his argument. I abhor such fanatical phantasms, such insocable and point-devoid companions; such rackers of orthography, as to speak, doubt, fine, when he should say, doubt; det, when he should pronounce debt; d, e, b, t; not d, t, e, t: he clepeth a calf, cauf; half, half; neighbour, vocation, neibour; neigh, abbreviated, ne: This is abominable, (which he would call abominable,) It insinuathem me of insanie; Ne intelligis domine? to make frantick, lunatick.

Nath. Laus Deo, bone intelligo.

Hol. Bone?—bone, for bene: Priasian a little scratch'd; 'twill serve.

Enter Armado, Moth, and Costard.

Nath. Videoque quis venit?

Hol. Videro, et gaudio.

Arm. Chirra! [To Moth.]

Hol. Quera, chirra, non sirrath?

Arm. Men of peace, well encounter'd.

Hol. Most military sir, salutation.

Moth. They have been at a great feast of languages, and stolen the scraps. [To Costard aside. Coas. O, they have lived long in the alms-basket of words! I marvel, thy master hath not eaten thee for a word; for thou art not so long by the head as honorificabilitudinum, thou art easier swallowed than a flap-dragon.

Moth. Peace; the peal begins.

Arm. Monsieur, [to Hol.] are you not letter'd?

Arm. Yes, yes: I think you see the horn-book:—

What is a, b, spelt backward with a horn on his head?
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

Act 5.

Hol. Ba, pueritia, with a horn added.
Moth. Ha, most silly sheep, with a horn:—You bear his learning.
Hol. Quelle, you, thou conceant?—Thou shalt all roundly by the five vowels, if you repeat them: or the fifth, if 1.
Hol. I will repeat them, a, e, i,—
Moth. The sheep: the other two concludes it:

Arm. Now, by the salt wave of the Mediterranean, a sweet touch, a quick venus of wit; snap, snap, quick and home! it rejoceth my intellect: true wit.
Hol. Offer'd by a child to an old man; which is wit-old.
Hol. What is the figure? what is the figure?—Moth. Horns.
Hol. Then dispence like an infant: go, whip thy gig.

Moth. Land me your horn to make one, and I will whip about your infamy circumcissa: A gig of cuckold's horn!

Coold. An I had but one penny in the world, they should have it to buy ginger bread: hold, there is the very remuneration I had of thy master, thou half-penny pursue of wit, these pigeons-egg of discretion. O, so the heavens were so pleased, thus thou wast but my bastered! what a joyful father would'st thou make me! Go to, thou hast it ad dauntful, at the fingers' ends, as they say, Hol. Writ in Latin; danc for us now.
Arm. Artists, personam; we will be singled from the barbarous. Do you not educate youth at the charge-house on the top of the mountain?
Hol. Or, menu, the hill.
Arm. At such an pleasure, for the mountain.
Hol. I do, same question.
Arm. Sir, it is the king's most sweet pleasure and affection, to congratulate the princess at her pastimes, in the posteriorities of this day; which the rude multitude call, the afternoon.
Hol. The posterior of the day, most generous sir, is liable, engraunt, and measurable for the afternoon; the word is well cult'd, choose sweet and apt, I do assure you, sir, I do assure.
Arm. Sir, the king is a noble gentleman; and my familiar, I do assure you, very good friend.—For what is inward between us, let it pass:—I do beseech thee, thou, remember thou courtesy; I beseech thee, apparel thy head:—and among other imperious and most serious designs,—and of great import indeed, too:—but let that pass:—for I must tell thee, that the present grace of his great good will sometime to lean upon my poor shoulder; and with his royal finger, thus, daily with my consent, with my mustard: but, sweet heart, let that pass. All the world, I recollect no fable; some certain special honours it pleases his greatness to impart to Armando, a soldier, a man of travel, that hath seen the world; but let that pass.—The very all of all his,—but, sweet heart, I do implore severity,—that the king would have me present the princess, sweet chuck, with some delightful ostentation, or show, or pageant, or antick, or fire-work. Now, understanding that the curious and your sweet self; your recreation and meddle. First, going out of mirth, as it were, I have acquainted you withal, to the end to crave your assistance.

Hol. Sir, ye shall present before her the nine worthies. Sir, ye shall give her some entertainment of time, some show in the posterior of this day, to be rendered by our assistance,—the king's command, and this most gallant, illustrious, and learned gentleman,—before the princess; I assure you, sir, for, Past our fair goddess of the ground, I am compar'd to twenty thousand fairs. O, he hath drawn my picture in his letter!

Pris. Any thing like?

Moth. In the letters; nothing in the praise.

Pris. Beauteous as ink; a good conclusion.

Kath. 'Ware pencils! How? let me not die your for that worthy's thumb: he is not so big as the end of his club.

Hol. Shall I have audience? he shall present Hercules in minority: his enter and exit shall be strangling a snake; and I will have an apology for so unusual a conceit.
Moth. An excellent device! so, if any of the audience his, you may cry: well done, Hercules! once more crasheth the snake! that is the way to make an audience gracious; though few have the grace to do it.

Arm. For the rest of the worthies:—
Hol. I will play three myself.
Arm. Thrice-worthye gentleman!
Arm. Shall I tell you a thing?
Hol. We attend.
Arm. We will have, if this fudge not, an antick.

I beseech you, follow.
Hol. Pst, good man Dull! thou hast spoken no word all this while.
Dull. Nor understood none neither.
Hol. Alas! we will employ thee.
Dull. I'll make one in a dance, or so; or I will play on the rabor to the worthies, and let them dance the hay.
Hol. Most dull, honest Dull, to our sport, away.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Another part of the same. Before the Princess's Pavillion.

Enter the Princess, Katherine, Rosaline, and Maria.

Pris. Sweet hearts, we shall be rich ere we depart. In fairings come thus plentifully in. A lady yield'sh arms with dancers! Look you, what I have from the loving king.
Ras. Madam, came nothing else along with that?
Pris. Nothing, but this? yes, as much love in this as any other thing. As would be cram'd up in a sheet of paper, Writ on both sides the leaf, margent and all, That he was fain to seal on Cupid's name.
Ras. That was the way to make his god head; For he hath been five thousand years a boy.
Kath. Ay, and a shrewd unhappy gallows too.
Ras. You'll never be friends with him; he kill'd your sister.
Kath. Of all her melancholy, sad, and heavy: And so she died: had she been light, like you, Of such a merry, nimble, stirring spirit, She might have been a grandam ere she died:
Ras. Thus shall the world be fill'd with want: for a sister world lives long.
Ras. What's your dark meaning, mouse, of this light word?
Kath. A light condition in a beauty dark.
Ras. We need more light to find your meaning out.
Kath. You'll mar the light, by taking it in muff; Therefore, I'll darkly end the argument.
Ras. Look, what you do, you do it still 't the dark.
Kath. So do not you; for you are a light wench.
Ras. Indeed, I weigh not you; and therefore light.
[for me.
Kath. You weigh me not;—O, that's you care not
Ras. Much you care for. Past care is still past care.
Pris. Well banded both; a set of wit well play'd.
Ras. But Rosaline, you have a favour too: Who sent it? and what is it?
Kath. Who sent it? I would, you knew?
An if my face were but as fair as yours,
My favour were as great; be witness this.
Nay, I have verses too, I thank Biron:
The numbers true; and, were the numbering too, As were the prints of the fairer goddess of the ground:
I am compar'd to twenty thousand fairs.
O, he hath drawn my picture in his letter!
Pris. Any thing like?

Moth. In the letters; nothing in the praise.
Act 5.

LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

My red dominoical, my golden letter: O, that your face was not so full of O's!

Kath. Ay, might I not as well have put them in the eye?

Prin. But what was sent to you from fair Dumain?

Kath. Madam, this glove.

Prin. And did he not send you twain?

Kath. Yes, madam; and thus.

Some thousand verses of a faithful lover;
A huge translation of hypocrisy,
Vilely compiled, profound simplicity.

Mar. This, and these pearls, to me sent Longa.

The letter was so long, by half a moon;
[Exeunt.

Prin. I think no less: Dost thou not wish in heart,
The chain were longer, and the letter short?

Mar. Ay, or I would these hands might never part.

Prin. We are wise girls, to mock our lovers so.

Ros. They are worse fools to purchase mocking so.

That same Biron I'll torture ere I go.

O, that I knew he were but in by the week!

How I would make him fawn, and beg, and seek;

And wait the season, and observe the times,
And spend his prodigal wits in baseless rhymes;

And shape his service wholly to my behests!

And make him proud to make me proud that jests!

So portent-like would I o'ersway his state,

That he should be my fool, and I his fate.

Prin. Pray, how soon, so surety caught, when they are catch'd,

As wit turn'd fool: folly, in wisdom hatch'd.

Hath wisdom's warrant, and the help of school;

And wit's own grace to grace a learned fool.

Ros. The blood of youth burns not with such excess,

As gravity's revolt to wantonness.

Mar. Folly in fools bears not so strong a note,

As foolery in the wise, when wit doth dote;

Since all the power thereof it doth apply,

To prove, by wit, worth in simplicity.

Enter Boyet.

Prin. Here comes Boyet, and mirth is in his face.

Boyet. O, I am stabb'd with laughter! Where's her grace?

Prin. Thy news, Boyet?

Boyet. Prepare, madam, prepare!—

Arm, wenches, arm! encounters mounted are Against your peace: Love doth approach disguis'd,
Armed in argu'ments; you'll be beguiled.
Muster your wits; stand in your own defence;
Or hide your heads like cowards, and fly hence.

Prin Saint Dennis to Saint Cupid! What are they, that charge their breath against us? say, scot, say.

Boyet. Under the cool shade of a sycamore, I thought to close mine eyes some half an hour:
When, lo! to interrupt my purpose'd rest,
Toward that shade I might behold beheld
The king and his companions: warily
I stole into a neighbour thicket by,
And overheard what you shall overhear;
That by and by, your purpose will be here.
Their herald is a pretty knavish page,
That well by heart hath conn'd his embassage:
Action, and accent, did they teach him there;
Thus must thou speak, and thus they body hear:
And ever and anon they made a double,
Presence majestical would put him out;
For, quoth the king, An angel shall thou see;
Yet fear not thus, he speaks audaciously.

The boy reply'd, An angel is not evil: I should have fear'd her, had she been a devil.

With that all laugh'd, and clapp'd him on the shoulder.

Making the bold wag by their praises bolder.
One rubb'd his elbow, thus; and fleer'd, and swore,
A better speech was never spoken before:
Another with his finger and his thumb,
Crying Then we will not, come we may will come:
The third he caper'd, and cried, All goes well:
The fourth turn'd on the toe, and down he fell.

With that, they all did tumble on the ground,
With such a zealous laughter, so profound,
None of their solemn appearances.
To check their folly, passion's solemn tears.

Prin. But what, but what, come they to visit us?

Boyet. They do, they do; and are apparel'd

Like Muscovites, or Russians: as I guess,
Their purpose is, to parie, to court, and dance:
And every one his love-feat will advance
Into his several mistress; which they'll know
By favours, or by words, which they did bestow.

Prin. And will they so? the gallants shall be task'd:—

For, ladies, we will every one be mask'd;

And not a mask shall man be under grace,

Despite of suit, to see a lady's face—

Hold, Rosaline, this favour thou shalt wear;
And then the king will court thee for his dear;

Hold, take thou this, my sweet, and give me thine;
So shall Biron take me for Rosaline.

For, and change your favours too; so shall your loves

Woo contrary, deceive'd by these removes.

Ros. Command then; wear the favours most in sight.

Kath. But, in this changing, what is your intent?

Prin. The effect of my intent is, to cross theirs:
They do it but in mocking merriment;

And mock for mock is only my intent.

Their several counsels they unbosom shall
To loves mistook; and so be mock'd withal,

Upon the next occasion that we meet,

With visages ridiculous, to talk and greet.

Ros. But shall we dance, if they desire us to?

Prin. No; to the death, we will not move a foot:

Nor to their pen'd speech render we no grace:

But, while 'tis spoken, each turn away her face.

Boyet. Why, that contumacy will kill the speaker's heart,

And quite divorce his memory from his part.

Prin. Therefore I do it; and, I make no doubt,
The rest will never come in, if he be out.

There's no such sport, as sport by sport o'ethrown;

To make theirs ours, and ours none but our own.

So shall we stay, mocking intended game;

And they will mock'd, depart away with shame.

[Trumpets sound within.

Boyet. The trumpet sounds; be mask'd, the maskers come.

[The ladies mask.

Enter the King, Biron, Longaville, and Dumain, in Russian sottis, and mask'd; MOTH, MUSICIANS, and ATTENDANTS.

Moth. All hail the richest boundles on the earth!

Boyet. Beauties no richer than rich taffata.

Moth. A holy parcel of the fairest damaue.

[The ladies turn their backs to him.

That ever turn'd their—backs—to mortal views!

Biron. Their eyes, villain, their eyes.

Moth. That ever turn'd their eyes to mortal views!

Out—

Boyet. True; out, indeed.

Moth. Out of your favours, heavenly spirits vouch—
Not to behold—

Biron. Once to behold, rogue.

Moth. Once to behold with your sun-beamed eyes, —with your sun-beamed eyes.

Boyet. They will not answer to that epithet,
You were best call it, daughter-beamed eyes.

Moth. They do not mark me, and that brings me out.

Biron. Is this your perfection? be gone, you rogue.

Ros. What would these strangers? know their minds, boyet?

If they do speak our language, 'tis our will

That some plain man recount their purposes:
Know what they would.

Boyet. What would you with the princess?

Biron. Nothing but peace, and gentle visitation.

Ros. What would they, say they?

Boyet. Nothing but peace, and gentle visitation.
Ros. Why, that they have; and bid them so be gone.

Bogey. She says, you have it, and you may be gone.

King. Say to her, we have measured many miles,

To find a measure with her on this grass.

Bogey. They say that they have measured many miles,

To tread a measure with you on this grass.

Ros. Tell her, we have measured by weary steps.

Bogey. She bears herself,

Of how many weary steps,

Are number’d in the travel of one mile.

Biron. We number nothing that we spend for

Our duty is so rich, so infinite;

That we may do it still without comptain.

Vouchsafe to show the sunshine of your face,

That we, like savages, may worship it.

Ros. No face is but a moon, and clouded too.

King. Messuage are clearer, to do as such clouds do:

Vouchsafe, bright moon, and these thy stars, to shine

[These clouds removed’d, upon our waitry eye.

Ros. A thousand petitioners! beg a greater matter:

Then now request’t but moonshine in the water.

King. Then, in our measure do but vouchsafe one change.

Biron. That did not make this begging be not strange.

Ros. Play, musick, then: may, you must do it soon.

MUSICK plays.

Not yet:—no dance,—thus change I like the King.

Will you not dance? How come you, thus estrang’d?

[change’d.

Ros. You took the moon at fall; but now she’s King. Yet still she is the moon, and I the man.

The musick plays; vouchsafe some motion to it.

Ros. Our ears vouchsafe it.

But your legs should do it.

Ros. Since you are strangers, and come here by force of change.

We’ll not be nice: take hands,—we will not

King. Why take we hands then?

Ros. Only to part friends.

Countess. Sweet hearts! and do the measure end.

King. More measure of this measure; be not nice.

Ros. We can afford no more at such a price.

King. Prize you yourselves; What buys your King.

Ros. Your absence only. [company?

King. That can never be.

Ros. Then cannot we be bought: and so adieu;

Twice to your visor, and half once to you!

King. If you deny to dance, let’s hold more chat.

Ros. In private then.

King. I am best pleas’d with that.

[They converse apart.

Biron. White-handed mistress, one swallow:

With them.

Priam. Honey, and milk, and sugar; there is Biron. Nay then, two treys, [an if you grow so Methelin, wort, and malmsye:—Well run, dice!

There’s half a dozen sweets.

Priam. Seventh sweet, adieu! Since you can cog, I’ll play no more with you. Biron. Cog? Cog! is in secret.

Priam. Let it not be sweet.

Biron. Thou grieve’st my gall.

Biron. Therefore meet.

[They converse apart.

Dum. Will you vouchsafe with me to change a Man. Name it.

[work]

Dum. Fair lady. Say you so? Fair lord,—Take that for your fair lady.

Dum. Please it you, As much in private, and I’ll bid adieu.

[They converse apart.

Kath. What, was your visor made without a tongue?

Long. I know the reason, lady, why you ask.

Kath. First by reason I quickly; sir; I long.

Long. You have a double tongue within your

And would afford my speechless visor half. [mask

Kath. Yea. what, the Dutchman;—la not veal

Long. A calf, fair lady?—a calf?

Kath. No, a fair lord calf.

Long. Let’s part the word.

Kath. No, I’ll not be your half;

Take all, and wear it; it may prove an ox.

Long. Look, how you but yourself in these sharp mocks!

Will you give horns, chase lady? do not so.

Kath. Then die a calf, before your horns do grow.

Long. One word in private with you, ere I die.

Kath. Bleat softly then, the butcher hears you cry.

[They converse apart.

Bogey. The tongues of mocking wenches are as

Is a the razor’s edge invisible,

[keep Cuttin’ a smaller hair than may be seen.

Above the sense of sense; so sensible [widths.

Seemeth their conference; their conceits have

Fleeter than arrows, bullets, wind, thought, swifter

In the air, than wind doth break off.

Ros. Not one word more, my maids; break off, Biron. By heaven, all dry-beaten with pure scott.

King. Farewell, mad wenches; you have simple [Exeunt King, Lords, Moth, Musket, and Attendants.

Priam. Twenty attleus, my fairen Moscovites.—Are the rest of the company of wonder’d at?

Bogey. Tapers they are, with your sweet breath puff’d out.

[Fat, fat.

Ros. We’ll like-will visors they have; gross, gross, [Proverty in wit, king’s-poor; fast.

Priam. O poverty in wit, king’s-poor; what’s this; or ever, but in visors, show their faces?

This pert Biron was out of countenance quite.

[Or, 0! they were all in lamentable cases!

The king was weeping, pite of a good word.

Biron. Did swear himself out of all suit.

Mar. Dauin was at my service, and his sword:

No point, quoth I; my servant straight was mute.

Dauin. Good sir, I would say no more, for I saw

And bow you, what be call’d me?

Priam. Quain, perhaps.

Kath. Yes, in good faith.

Priam. O! we are well, better vices have worn plain statuts.

But will you hear? the king is my love sworn.

Priam. And quick Biron hath plighted faith to me.

Kath. And Longaville was for my service born.

Mar. Dauin is mine, as sure as bark on tree.

Bogey. Madam, and pretty mistresses, give ear: immediately they will again be here

In their own shapes; for no man can ever be,

They will digest this harsh indignity.

Priam. Will they return?

Bogey. They will, they will, God knews, and make for joy, though they are low blows.

Therefore, change favours; and, when they repair, Blow like sweet roses in this summer air. [stood Bogey. Do, be, madam, for it is not rose, but Dismaisk’d, their damask sweet committishion, shown, Are angels vailing clouds, or roses blown.

Priam. Arvant, perplexity! What shall we do, If they return in their own shape? For then be a Great damask, if by me you’ll be advis’d.

Let’s mock them still, as well known, as disguised let us complain to them what fools we were here, Disguis’d like Moscovites, in shapeless gear;
And wonder, what they were; and to what end
Their yellow shows, and prologue vilely penn'd,
And their rough carriage so ridiculous,
Should presentum to us?
Boyet. Ladies, withdraw: the gallants are at hand.

Prin. Whip to our tents, as roes run over land.

[Exeunt Princess, Ros. Kath. and Maria.]

Enter the King, Biron, Longaville, and Dumain,
To show their proper habits.

King. Fair sir, God save you! Where is the princess?

Boyet. Gone to her tent: Please it your majesty,
Command me any service to her thither?

King. That she vouchsafe me audience for one word.

Boyet. I will; and so will she, I know, my lord.

[Exit.]

Biron. This fellow's stuck up wit, as pigeons peas;
And utters it again when God doth please;
He is wit's pedler; and retails his wares
At wakes, and wassells, meetings, markets, fairs;
And we that sell by gross, the Lord doth know,
Have not the grace to grace with such show.
This gallant pins the wenches on his sleeve;
Had he been Adam, he had tempted Eve;
He can carve too, and lipt: Why, this is he,
That kis'd a woman's hand in courtesy;
This is the ape of form, monsieur the nie,
That, when he plays at tables, chides the dice
In honourable terms; nay, he can sing
A mean most meely; and, in ushering,
Mend him who can: the ladies call him, sweet;
The stairs, as he treads on them, kiss his feet;
This is the flower that smiles on every one,
To show his teeth as white as whale's bone:
And consciences, that will not die in debt,
Pay him the due of honey-tongued Boyet.
King. A bluster on his sweet tongue, with my
That put Armado's page out of his part! [heart.

Enter the Princess, ushered by Boyet; Rosaline,
Maria, Katharine, and Attendants.

Biron. See where it comes!—Behaviour, what wert thou,
Till this man shew'd thee? and what art thou now?
King. All hail, sweet madam, and fair time of day!
Prin. Fair. In all, hall is, is, as I conceive.
King. Rose, to my speech, with what words you may.
Prin. Then wish me better, I will give you leave.
King. We came to visit you; and purpose now
To lead you to our court: vouchsafe it then.

Prin. This field shall hold me; and so hold your vows;
Nor God, nor I, delight in perjur'd men.
King. Rebuke me not for that which you provok;
The virtue of your eye must break my oath.

Prin. You nick-name virtue; vice you should have spoke;
For virtue's office never breaks men's truth.
Now, by my maiden honour, yet as pure
As the unsullied lily, I protest,
A world of torrents though I should endure,
I would not yield to be your house's guest:
So much I hate a breaking cause to be
Of heavenly oaths, wov'd with integrity.
King. O, you have liv'd in dosolation here,
Unseen, unvisited, much to our shame.

Prin. Not so, my lord, it is not so, I swear;
We have had pastimes here and pleasant
A mess of Russians left us but of late. [game;
King. How, madam? Russians?
Prin. Ay, in truth, my lord;
The gallants, full of courtesy, and of state.
Roiz. Madam, speak true:—It is not so, my lord;
My lady, (to the manner of the days)
In courtesy, gives undeserving praise.
We four, indeed, confronted here with four
In Russian habit; here they stood an hour,
And talk'd apace; and in that hour, my lord,
Their grace, and goodly, sweet,
Your wit makes wise things foolish; when we greet
With eyes best seeing heaven's fiery eye,
By light we lose light: Your capacity
Is of that nature, that to your huge store
Wisest things seem foolish, and most wondrous but poor.
Ros. This proves you wise and rich, for in my Biron. I am a fool, and full of poverty.
[eye,—
Ros. But that you take what doth to you belong,
It were a fault to snatch words from my tongue.
Biron. O, I am yours, and all that I possess.
Ros. All the fool mine?
Biron. O, I cannot give you less.
Ros. Which of the visors was it, that you wore?
Biron. Where? when? what visor? why demand you this?
Ros. There, then, that visor; that superfluous case,
That hid the worse, and show'd the better face.

King. We are descried: they'll mock us now downright.

Dumce. Let us confess, and turn it to a jest.

Prin. A marry, my lord? Why looks your highness sad?

Ros. Help, hold my brows! he'll swoon! Why
Sea-sick, I think, coming from Muscovy.
Biron. Thus pour the stars down plagues for perjury.
Can any face of brass hold longer out?—
Here stand I, lady; dart thy skill at me;
Biron. Bruele me with scorn, confound me with a flout;
Thrust thy sharp wit quite through my ignorance,
Cut me to pieces with thy keen conceit;
And I will wish thee never more to dance,
Nor yet no more in Russian boots walk.
O! never will I trust to speeches penn'd,
Nor to the motion of a school-boy's tongue;
Nor never come in visor to my friend;
Nor woo in rhyme, like a blind harper's song:
Taffeta phrases, silken terms precise,
Thy name my joy; and I am not a peer,
But by this white glove, (how white the hand, God knows)
Have blown me full of maggots ostentation:
I do forswear them: and I here protest,
By this white glove, (how white the hand, God knows)
Henceforth my wooing mind shall be express'd
In russe lines, and honest kersey noes;
And, to begin, wench,—so God help me, la!—
My love to thee is sound, sans crack or flaw.
Ros. Sans sans, I pray you.
Biron. Yet I have a trick
Of the old rage: bear with me, I am sick;
'I'll leave it by degrees. Soft, let us see;—
Write, Lord have mercy on us, on those three;
They are infected, in their hearts it lies;
They have the plague, and cut it of your eyes:
These lords are visited; you are not free,
For the Lord's tokens on you do I see.
[Exeunt.]

Prin. No, they are free, that gave these tokens
Biron. Our states are forfeit, seek not to undo us.
Ros. It is not so; For how can this be true,
That you stand forfeit, being those that see?
Biron. Peace; for I will not have to do with you.
Ros. Nor shall I, if I do as I intend.
Biron. Speak for yourselves, my wit is at an end.
King. Teach us, sweet madam, for our rude transgression
Some fair excuse:
Prin. The fairest is confession.

Were you not here, but even now, disguis'd?

King. Madam, I was, and were you well advis'd?

Prin. I was, fair madam.

King. When you then were here,
What did you whisper in your lady's ear?

Ros. This I may tell thee; I then did respect
When she shall challenge this, you will reject her.
King. Upon mine honour, so.

Pria. Peace, peace, forbear; your oath once broke, you force not to forswear.

King. I love you, sir; and break this oath of mine. Peace, peace, forbear, I have therefore broken it.

Pria. What did the Russian whisper in your ear?

King. Madam, he swore that he did hold me dear. As precious as my sight, and did value me

Pria. Above all worlds, astounding thee. Moreover,

King. That he would wound me, or else die my love.

Pria. Did give thee joy of him! the noble lord

King. What mean you, madam? by my life, my truth,

I never saw that lady such an oath.

Pria. My honour you did; and to confirm it plain,

You gave me this; but take it, sir; again,

King. My faith, and this, the princess I did give;

I know her by the jewel on her brow.

Pria. Pardon me, sir, this jewel did she wear;

And lord Leven, I thank him, is my dear—

What will you have me, or your part again?

Pria. Neither of either; I remit both in am.

I saw the truth out;—Here was a come-on,

Knowing aforehand of our movement,

To make it like a briskness come—

Some carry-tale, some please man, some slight story,

[Dick. Some mumble-words, some treacherous knight.

That seemed his cheek in years; and knows the

To make my lady laugh, when she's disposed—

Told our intents before: would once deposed,

These fair masques, and then them we,

Following the sense, would best the sign of her.

Now, to our perjury to add more terror,

We are again forsworn in well, and error.

Much upon this it is—And might not you,

To Boyet. Forestal our sport, to make us thus untrue?

Do you not know my lady's foot by this squire,

To speak with her as a Company, and Cell.

And stand between her lack, sir, and the air,

Here's a treacher, jesting merrily.

You put our page out, i.e. you areallow'd;

Like when you well, a smash shall be your showed.

You love upon me, do yon? there's an eye.

Wounds like a learen sword.

Boyet. Full merrily

Hath this brave manage, this career, been run.

Biron. I.e. he is taking straight! I Peace; I have done.

Enter Costard.

Welcome, pure wit; thou partest a fair fray.

Cost. O Lord, sir, they would know,

Whether the three worthies shall come in, or no.

Biron. What, are there but three Cost. No, sir; but it is rare fine.

For every one parent three.

Biron. And three times thrice is nine.

Cost. Not so, sir; under correction, sir; I hope,

It is not so.

You cannot beg us, sir, I can assure you; we,

What we know what.

I hope, sir, three times thrice, sir—

Biron. It is not nine.

Under correction, sir, we know whereuntil

It doth amount.

Biron. By Jove, I always took three threes for Cost. O Lord, sir, if you pity you should get

Your living by reckoning, sir.

Biron. How much is it?

Cost. O Lord, sir, the purities themselves, the actor, sir, will show with, until it doth amount; for my own part, I am, as they say, but to perfect

one man, o'en one poor man; Pompion the great, sir,

Biron. Art thou one of the wretches?

Cost. It pleased them, to think me worthy of Pompion the great; for mine own part, I know not the degree of the worthy; but I am to stand for him.

Biron. Go, bid them prepare.

Cost. We will turn it finely off, sir; we will take some course.

[Exit Costard.

King. Biron, they will shame us, let them not approach.

Biron. We are shame-proof, my lord: and 'tis our policy

To have one show worse than the king's and his

King. I say, they shall not come.

Pria. Nay, my good lord, let me o'er-rule you

That speak best pleasees, that doth least know how:

Where seal strives to content, and the contents

Else in the seal of them which it presents;

Their forms confounded makes most form in mirth:

When great things labouring perish in their birth.

Biron. A right description of our sport, my lord.

Enter Armado.

Arm. Amaunted, I implore so much experience of thy royal sweet breath, as will utter a brace of words.

[Armado converses with the King, and delivers him a paper.

Pria. Doth this man serve God?

Biron. Why ask you it?

Pria. He speaks not like a man of God's making.

Arm. He doth not; one, my fair, sweet, honest monarch: for, I protest, the school-master is exceeding fantastical; too, too vain; too, too vain; but we will put it, as they say, ut fortuna della guerra. Will you the peace of mind, most royal complement?

[Exit Armado.

King. Here's like to be a good presence of worthies: He presents Hector of Troy, the swain,

Pompion the great; the parish curate, Alexander;

Armado's page, Hercules; the pedant, Judas Ma-chabees.

And if these four worthies in their first show thrive,

These will be sure to change habits, and present the other five.

Biron. There is fire in the first show.

Arm. You are deceiv'd, 'tis not so.

Biron. The pedant, the bragart, the hedges.

priet, the fool, and the boy—

Abate a throw at morum; and the whole world again, [fein.

Cannot pick out five such, take each one in his

King. The ship is under sail, and here she comes again.

[Scene brought for the King, Princes, &

Pageant of the Nine Worthies.

Enter Costard arm'd, for Pompey.

Cost. I Pompey am,—

Biron. You lie, you are not he.

Cost. I Pompey am,

Biron. With ibbard's head on knee.

Pompey. Well said, old mocker; I must needs he friends with the then.

Cost. I Pompey am, Pompey survannd the big—

Dum. The great.

Cost. It is great, sir;—Pompey survannd the great

That of a field, a large and shield, did make my for to swoon.

And travelling along this coast, I here am come by chance:

And lay his handes before the legs of this sweet love of France.

[done.

If your ladyship would say, The 3r Pompey, I had Pria. (Great thanks, great Pompey.

Cost. 'Tis not so much worth; but, I hope, I was perfect: I made a little fault in it.

Biron. My hat to a halfpenny, Pompey proves the best worthy.

Enter Nathaniel arm'd, for Alexander.

Nath. When in the world I hold, I was the world's commander;

By east, west, north, and south, I spread my conquering might:
My 'cathexen pain declares, that I am Allsander.
Boyle. Your nose says, no, you are not; for it bears the stamp of thy knight.
Biron. Your nose smells, no, in this, most tender.
Prin. The conqueror is dismay'd: Proceed, good Alexander.

Nath. When in this world I liv'd, I was the world's commander:
Boyle. Most true, 'tis right; you were so, Allsander. Pompey the great,
Cott. Your servant, and Costard.
Biron. Take away the conqueror, take away Allsander.

Cost. O, sir, [to Nath.] you have overthrown Allsander the conqueror! You will be scraped out of the painted cloth for this; your lion, that holds his poll-ax sitting on a close stool, will be given to A-lax: he will he the ninth worthy. A conqueror, and dear to speak! I run away for shame, Allsander. [Nath. retires.] There, an't shall please you; a foolish mild man; an honest man, look you, and soon dash'd! He is a marvellous good neighbour, insoucious, and a very good bowler; but, for Allsander, alas, you see, 'twas a little o'parted:—but there are worthies a-coming will speak their minds in some other sort.

Prin. Stand aside, good Pompey.

Enter Holofernes, arm'd, for Judas, and MOTH, arm'd, for Hercules.

Hol. Great Hercules is presented by this imp.
Biron. I hold Cerberus, that three-headed dog.

And, when he was a babe, a child, a shrirmp, nus;
Thus did he strange serpents in his manus:
Quoniam, he seemed in minority;
Ergo, I cannot love his apology.

Keep some state in thy exit, and vanish. [Exit MOTH.] Hol. Judas, I am—

Dum. A Judas!

Hol. Not, Iscariot, sir—

Judas I am, yeilded Machabeous.

Dum. Judas. Machabeous clipt, is plain Judas.
Biron. A kissing traitor:—How art thou prov'd?

Hol. Judas, I am—

[Dum. The more shame for you, Judges.]

Hol. Begin, sir; you are my elder.

[Biron. We follow, as was hanged on an old man. I will not be put out of countenance.

Biron. Because thou hast no face.

Hol. What is this?

Dum. The head of a dogkin.

Biron. A death's face in a ring.

Long. The face of an old Roman coin, scarce seen.

Boyle. The pommel of Caesar's faulchion.

Dum. The carv'd-bone face on a finch.

Biron. St. George's half-check in a brooch.

Dum. Ay, and in a brooch of lend.

Biron. Ay, and worn in the cap of a tooth-drawer:
And now, forward; for we have put thee in countenance.

Hol. You have put me out of countenance. Biron. False: we have given thee faces. Boyle. But you have out-fac'd them all.

Biron. An thou wert a lion, we would do so.

Boyle. Therefore, as he is, an ass, let him go.

And so adieu, sweet Jude! nay, why dost thou stay? Dum. For their heads.

Biron. For the ass to the Jude, give it him!—

Judas, away.

Hol. This is not generous, not gentle; not humble.
Boyle. If it light the conqueror; it grows dark, he may stumble. [baited!] Prin. Alas, poor Machabuous, how hath he been Enter Armado, arm'd, for Hector.

Biron. Hide thy head, Achilles; here comes Hector in arms. Dumb. Though my mocks come home by me, I will now be merry.

King. Hector was but a Trojan in respect of this.

Boyle. But is this Hector? Dumb. This Hector was not so clean-tembered.

Long. His leg is too big for Hector.

Dum. More calf, certain.

Boyle. No; he is best indued in the small.

Biron. This Hector will not change.

Dum. He's a god or a painter; for he makes faces.

Arm. The armipotent Mars, of lances the almighty,

Gave Hector a gift,—

Dum. A gilt nutmeg.

Biron. A lemon.

Long. Stuck with cloves.

Dum. No, cloven.

Arm. Peace be with thee.

The armipotent Mars, of lances the almighty,

Gave Hector a gift, the hilt of Ilion;

A man so breath'd, that certain he would fight, yea

From worn till night, out of his pavilion.

I am that flower,—

That mint.

Arm. Sweet lord Longaville, rein thy tongue.

Long. I must rather give it the rein, for it runs against Hector.

Dum. Ay, and Hector's a greyhound.

Arm. The sweet war-man is dead and rotten sweet churchyard; not in that place:
when he breath'd, he was a man.—But I will forward with my device: Sweet royalty, [to the Princess.] bestow on me the sense of hearing.

[Biron whispers Costard.

Prin. Speak, brave Hector: we are much delighted.

Arm. I do adore thy sweet grace's slipper.

Boyle. Loves thee by the mouth of Pompey that is dead.

Dum. He may not by the yard.

Arm. This Hector for surmount'd Hannibal,—

Cost. The party is gone, fellow Hector, she is gone;

Arm. What meanest thou?

Cost. Faith, unless you play the honest Trojan,

The poor wench is cast away: she's quick; the child brags in her belly already; 'tis yours.

Arm. Dost thou inform me among potentates?

Thou shalt die.

Cost. Then shall Hector be whipp'd, for Jaque-netta that is quick by him; and hang'd, for Pompey that is dead.

Dumb. Most rare Pompey!

Boyle. Renowned Pompey!

Biron. Greater than great, great, great, great Pompey! Pompey the bones of the burn'd:

Dum. Hector trembles.

Biron. Pompey is mov'd:—More Ates, more Ates; stir them on! stir them on!

Dum. Hector will challenge him.

Biron. Ay, if he have no more man's blood in his belly than will sup a flea.

Arm. By the north pole, I do challenge thee.

Cost. I will not fight with a pole, like a northern man; I'll slash; I'll do it by the sword:—I pray you, let me borrow my arms again.

Dum. Room for the incensed worthies.

Cost. I'll do it in my shirt.

Dum. Most resolute Pompey!

Moth. Master, let me take you a button-hole lower. Do you not see, Pompey is uncasing for the combat? What mean you? you will lose your reputation.

Arm. Gentlemen, and soldiers, pardon me; I will not combat in my shirt.

Dum. You may not deny it; Pompey hath made the challenge.

Arm. Sweet bloods, I both may and will.

Biron. Why reason have you for't?

Arm. The naked truth of it is, I have no shirt; I go Woodward for pance.

Boyle. True, and it was enjoin'd him in Rome for want of linen: since when, I'll be sworn, he wore name, but a dish-clout of Jaquenetta's; and that 'a wear next his heart, for a favour.

Enter Mercédès.

Mrs. God save you, madam! 'Prin. Wishes grace, Mercédès;
But that these interrupt our merriment.
Mrs. I am sorry, madam; for the news I bring,
Is heavy in my tongue. The king your father—
'Prin. Mrs. Even so; my tale to tell.

Biron. Worthies, away; the scene begins to cloud.
Aria. For mine own part, I breathe free breath
I have seen the day of the return of these little hole of discretion, and I will right myself of soldier.

[Exeunt Worthies.

'Prin. How fares your majesty?

Biron. Hasty, prepare; I shall away to-might.

'Prin. Madam, not so; I do beseech you, stay,

'Prin. Prepare, I say—I thank you, gracious
For all your fair endeavours: and entreat, [lords,
Out of a new-and soul, that you vouchsafe in your rich wisdom, to excuse, or hide,
The liberal opposition of our spirits.
If over-bodily, we have borne ourselves in the converse of breath, your gentleness
Who quality of it, shall, three powers of thy lord!
A beaty heart bears not an humble tongue
Excuse me so, coming so short of thanks
For my great suit so easily obtained.

Mercédès. The extreme parts of time extremely form
All causes to the purpose of happiness:
And often, at his very loose, decides
That which long process could not arbitrate;
And though the mourning bow of progeny
Furished with the terrors of the haughty kind,
The body suit which fate it would convince;
Yet, since love's argument was first on foot,
Let not the cloud of sorrow justle it
Presuming that it proceed, since, and my friends lost,
Is not by much so wholesome, profitable,
As to rejoice at friends but newly found.

'Prin. I understand you not; my griefs are double.

Biron. If I were in plain words best please the ear of grief,
And by those badges understand the king.
For your fair sakes have we neglected time,
Play'd foul play with our oaths; your beauty,
Half much deform'd as, fashioning our humour
Even to the opposed end of our intents:
And what in us hath seem'd so ridiculous—
As if we did in specious of the dead;
All warren as a child, skipping, and talon;
Form'd by the eye, and, therefore, like the eye,
Full of strange shapes, of habits, and of forms,
Various in subjects in the eye doth roll
To every varied object in his glance;
Which party-coated presence of loose love
Put on by us, if, in your heavenly eyes,
Have misbecome our oaths and gravitas,
Those heavenly eyes, that look into these faults,
Suggested us to make. Therefore, ladies,
Our love being yours, the error that love makes
Is likewise yours; for is it not in me, in us,
By being false for ever to be true;
To those that make us both, fair ladies, you:
And even that falsehood, in itself a sin,
Thus purifies itself, and turns to grace.
Mrs. We home, Mercédès; shall much more
Long. So did our looks. [than jest

Ros. We did not quote them so.

King. Now, at the latest minute of the hour,
Grant us your loves.

Biron. A time, methinks, too short
To make a world-without-end bargain in:
No, no, my lord, your grace is perjurd much,
Full of dear guiltiness; and, therefore this,—
If for my love (as there is no such cause)
You will do such, this shall you do for me:
Your oath I will not trust, but go with speed
To some faron and naked hermitage,
Remote from all the pleasures of the world;
There will I till the twelve celestial signs
Have brought about their annual reckoning:
If this austere insensible life
Change not your offer made in heat of blood;
If fruits, and fruits, hard lodging, and thin weeds,
And this my body, full of the blossoms of
But that it bear this trial, and last love;
Then, at the expiration of the year,
Come challenge, challenge me by these deserts,
And, by this virgin palm, now kneeling thine,
I will be thine; and, till that instant, shut
My wontful self up in a mourning house;
Raining the tears of lamentation;
For the remembrance of my father's death.
If this thee do deny, let our hands part;
Neither inlaid in the other's heart:
King. If this, or more than this, I would deny,
With my heart, I wish to thee love three
The sudden hand of death close up mine eye:
Hence ever then my heart is in thy breast.

Biron. And what to me, my love? and what to

Ros. You must be purged too, your sins are rank
You are attaint with faults and perjury;
Therefore, if you my favour mean to get,
A twelvemonth shall you spend, and never rest,
But in that world of faults and passions;

Dum. But what to me, my love? but what to me?

[needy;

Kath. A wife /.—A heard, fair health, and ho-
With this, or more than this, I wish to thee love
Dum. O, shall I say, I thank you, gentle wife?
Kath. Not so, my lord—a twelvemonth and a
day
I'll may, in words that smooth face'd wooers say:
Come when the king doth to my lady come,
Then, if I have much love, I will give you some.
Dum. I preserve thee true and faithfully till then.
Kath. Yet swear not, lest you be forsworn again.

Long. What says Maria?

Mer. At the twelvemonth's end,
I'll change my black gown for a faithful friend.

Long. I'll stay with patience; but the time is long.
Maria. But is it not enough for you to be looking?
Biron. Studies my lady? mistress look on me,
Behold the window of my heart, mine eye,
What humble suit attends thy answer there;
Impose some service on me for thy love
Ros. Oft have I heard of you, my lord Biron,
Before I saw you; and the world's large tongue
Proclaims you for a man replete with mocks;
Full of comparisons and wounding words;
Which you on all estates will execute,
That lie within the mercy of your will:
To weed this wormwood from your fruitful brain;
And there withal, to work upon my love
(Without the which I am not to be won.)
You shall this twelvemonth term from day to day
Visit the speechless sick, and still converse
With groaning wretches; and your task shall be,
With the fiercest, to endow your letters, full of love.
To enforce the painsed impotent to smile.

Biron. To move wild laughter in the throat of
It cannot be; it is impossible:

[death

Biron. Of birth cannot move a soul in agony.

Ros. Why, that's the way to choke a gibe
spirit,
Whose influence is begot of that loose grace,
This, for the wenching bear you give to fools
A jest's prosperity lies in the ear
Of him that hears it, never in the tongue
Of him that makes it: then, if sickly ears,
Des'd with the clamours of their own dear groans,
Act 5.

LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

Will hear your idle scorns, continue them, And I will have you, and that fault withal; But, if they will not, throw away that spirit, And I shall find you empty of that fault, Right joyful of your reformation.

Biron. A twelvemonth? well, beati what will beai, I'll jest a twelvemonth in an hospital.

Prin. Ay, sweet my lord; and so I take my leave. [To the King.

King. No, madam: we will bring you on your way.

Biron. Our wooring doth not end like an old play; Jack hath not Jill: these ladies' courtesy Might well have made us sport a comedy.

King. Come, sir, it wants a twelvemonth and a And then 'twill end. That's too long for a play.

Enter Armado.

Arm. Sweet majesty, vouchsafe me,—

Prin. Was not that Hector?

Dum. The worthy knight of Troy.

Arm. I will kiss thy royal finger, and take leave: I am a votary; I have vowed to Jaquenetta to hold the plough for her sweet love three years. But, most esteemed greatness, will you hear the dialogue that the two learned men have compiled, in praise of the owl and the cuckoo? It should have followed in the end of our show.

King. Call them forth quickly, we will do so.

Arm. Holla; approach.

Enter Holofernes, Nathaniel, Moth, Costard, and others.

This side is Hiems, winter; this Ver, the spring; the one maintain'd by the owl, the other by the cuckoo. Ver, begin.

SONG.

I.

Spring. When daisies pied, and violets blue, And lady-smokes all silver white,

And cuckoo-buds of yellow hue, Do paint the meadows with delight, The cuckoo then, on every tree, Mocks married men, for thus sings he, Cuckoo: Cuckoo, cuckoo,—O word of fear, Unpleasing to a married ear!

II.

When shepherds pipe on oatens straws, And merry larks are ploughmen's clocks, When turtles tread, and rocks, and daws, And maidsens bleach their summer smocks, The cuckoo then, on every tree, Mocks married men, for thus sings he, Cuckoo; Cuckoo, cuckoo,—O word of fear, Unpleasing to a married ear!

III.

Winter. When violets hang by the wall, And Dick the shepherd blows his nail, And Tom bears logs into the hall, And milk comes frozen home in pail, When blood is nipp'd, and vayse be foul, Then nightly sings the starling owl, To-who: Tu-whit, to-who, a merry note, While greasy Joan doth keel the pot.

IV.

When all aloud the wind doth blow, And coughing dromes the parson's sars, And birds sit brooding in the snow, And Marian's note looks red and raw, When roasted crabs hiss in the bawl, Then nightly sings the starling owl, To-who: Tu-whit, to-who, a merry note, While greasy Joan doth keel the pot.

Arm. The words of Mercury are harsh after the songs of Apollo. You, that way; we, this way.

[Exeunt.

MERCHANT OF VENICE.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

Duke of Venice. Prince of Morocco,
Prince of Arragon.
Antonio, the Merchant of Venice. Bassanio, his friend.
Salano, Salarino,
Gratiano, Lorenzo, in love with Jessica.
Shylock, a Jew, Tubal, his friend.
Launcelot Gobbo, a clown, servant to Shylock.

SCENE,—partly at Venice, and partly at Belmont, the Seat of Portia, on the Continent.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Venice. A Street.

Enter Antonio, Salarino, and Salano.

Ant. In sooth, I know not why I am so sad, It wearies me; you say, it wearies you; But how I caught it, found it, or came by it, What stuff 'tis made of, whereof it is born, I am to learn; And such a want-wit sadness makes me, That I have much ado to know myself.

Sal. Your mind is tossing on the ocean; There, where your argosies with portly sail,— Like signiors and rich burghers of the flood, Or, as it were, the pagesant of the sea,— Do overpeer the petty traffickers, That curt'sy to them, do them reverence, As they fly by them with their woven wings.

Sali. Believe me, sir, had I such venture forth, The better part of my affections would Be with my hopes abroad. I should be still Flicking the grass, to know where sits the wind; Peering in maps, for ports, and piers, and roads; And every object, that might make me fear Misfortune to my ventures, out of doubt, Would make me sad.

Salar. My wind, cooling my broth, Would blow me to an ague, when I thought What harm a wind too great might do at sea.

[Exit.
MERCHANT OF VENICE.

Act I.

I should not see the sandy hour-glass run,
But I should think of shallows and of flats;
And see my wealthy Andrew dock'd in sand,
Valling her high top lower than her ribs,
To kiss her burial. Should I go to church,
And see the holy edifice of stone,
And not behark me straight of dangerous rocks?
Which, being avoided but my gentle vessel's side,
Would scatter all her spirits on the stream;
Enrobe the roaring waters with my silks;
And, in a word, but even now worth this,
And even now worth nothing! Shall I have the thought
To think on this; and shall I ye my thought.
That such a thing, behan'd, would make me sad?
But, tell not me; I know, Antonio
Is sad to think upon his merchandise.
Ant. Believe me, no; I thank my fortune for it,
My ventures are not in one bottom trusted,
Nor to one place; nor is my whole estate
Upon the fortune of this present year:
Therefore, my merchandise makes me not sad.
Salar. Why then you are in love.
Ant. Fye, fye!
Salar. Not in love neither? Then let's say, you are sad.
Because you are not merry; and there as easy.
For you, to laugh, and leap, and say, you are merry.
Because you are not sad. Now, by two-headed Nature both fram'd strange fellows in her time:
Some that will evermore creep through their eyes,
And laugh, like parrots, at a bag-piper:
And they cry out of such vicious aspect,
That they will make thee smile in their own way; in smile,
Though Nestor swear the jest be laughable.

Roderigo, Lorenzo, and Gratiano.
Salar. Here comes Bassanio, your most noble kinsman,
Gratiano, and Lorenzo: Fare you well;
We leave you now with better company.
Salar. We are glad to have said till I had made you merry,
If warbler friends had not prevented me.
Ant. Your worth is very dear in my regard.
I take it, your own business calls on you,
And you embrace the occasion to depart.
Salar. Good-morrow, my good lords.
Grat. (Good signors both, when shall we laugh?)
Salar. When you grow exceeding strange: Must it be so?
Salar. We'll make our pleasures to attend on yours.

[Aside Salarino and Salandim.
Lor. My lord Bassanio, since you have found Antonio,
We two will lose you: but, at dinner-time,
I pray you, have in mind where we must meet.
Grat. I will not fail you.
Salar. You look not well, signior Antonio;
You have too much respect upon the world;
They lose it, that do buy it with much care.
Believe me, you are marvellously chang'd.
Ant. I hold the world but as the world; Gratiano;
A stage, where every man must play a part,
And mine a sad one.
Salar. Let me play the Fool:
With mirth and laughter; but let sadness come;
And let me liver rather heat with wine,
Than my heart cool with mortifying groans.
Why should a man, whose blood is warm within,
Swell his high top lower than her ribs,
Sleep when he wake's, and creep into the jandscape
By being pesed? I tell thee what, Antonio,—
I love thee, and it is my love that speaks;—
Though thou art one of men, whose vigour
Do cream and mantle, like a standing poud;
And do a wilful stillness entertain,
With purpose to be dress'd in an opinion
Of gravity, profound conceit;
As who should say, I am Sir Owen;
And, when I ope my lips, let no dog bark
O, my Antonio, I do know of these,
That there fore only are reputed wise,
For saying nothing; who, I am very sure,
If they should speak, would almost damn those ears,
Which, hearing them, would call their brothers,
merry fools.
I'll tell thee more of this another time:
But fish not, with this melancholy bait,
For this fool's gudgeon, this opinion,—
Many a word's enough, and then farewell while;
I'll end my exhortation after dinner.
Lor. Well, we will leave you then till dinner;
And life.

Ant. Farewell: I'll grow a talker for this gear.
Grat. Thanks, I'faith; for silence is only commendable
In a neat's tongue dried, and a maid not vendible.

[Aside Gratiano and Lorenzo.
Ant. Is that any thing now?
Bass. Gratiano speaks an infinite deal of nothing. more than in all Venice. His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff;
you shall seek all day ere you find them; and,
when you have them, they are not worth the search.
Ant. I tell you, now, why it is this same:
To whom you swore a secret pilgrimage,
That you to-day promis'd to tell me of?
Bass. 'Tis not unknown to you, Antonio,
How I have disabled mine estate,
by something showing a more than the port
Than my faint means would grant continuance
Nor do I now make moan to be abridg'd
From such a noble rate; but my chief care
Is, that I may be fairly off from the great debts,
Wherein my time, something too prodigal,
Hath left me gaged: To you, Antonio,
I owe the most, in money, and in love;
And from your love I have a warranty
To unbar the all my plots, and purposes,
How to get clear of all the debts I owe.
Ant. I pray you, good Bassanio, let me know it;
And, if it stand, as you yourself still do,
Within the eye of honour, be assur'd.
My purse, my person, my extremest means,
I do unlock'd to your occasions.

Bass. In school-days, when I had lost one last,
I shott his fellow of the self-same flight
The self-same way, with more advised watch,
To do me other forth; and by venturing both,
I oft found both; I argue this childhood proof.
Because what follows is pure Innocence,
I owe you much; and, like a wilful youth,
That which I owe is lost: but if you please
To shoot another arrow that self way
Which you did shoot the first, I do not doubt,
As I will watch the aim, or to find both,
Or bring your latter hazard back again,
And thankfully rest debtor for the first.
Ant. You know me well; and herein spend but time,
To wind about my love with circumstances;
And should I doubt, you do me much the wrong.
In making question of my uttermost,
Than if you had made waste of all I have:
Then do but say to me what I should do,
That my knowledge may by me be done,
And I am prest unto it: therefore, speak.
Bass. In Belmont is a lady richly left,
And she is fair, and rather than that word,
Of whose virtue, of whose name, I was shorn, her eyes
I did receive fair speechless messages;
Her name is Portia; nothing undeserved
To Cato's daughter, Bruttus' Portia.
Nor have I this written ignorant of worth
For the four winds blow in from every coast
Renowned suitors: and her sunny locks
Hang on her temples like a golden fleece;
Act I. MERCHANT OF VENICE

Which makes her seat of Belmont: Colescho's strand,
And many famous come in quest of her.
O my Antonio, I had but the means
To hold a rival place with one of them,
I have a mind presages me such thrift,
That shall be racy, even to the uttermost,
To furnish thee to Belmont, to fair Portia.
Go, presently inquire, and so will I,
Where money is; and I no question make,
To have it of my trust, or for my sake. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Belmont. A Room in Portia's House.

Enter Portia and Nerissa.

Por. By my troth, Nerissa, my little body is a weary of this great world.

Ner. You would be, sweet madam, if your miseries were in the same abundance as your good fortunes are: And yet, forasmuch as they are as sick, that surfeth with too much, as they that starve with nothing: It is no mean happiness therefore, to be seated in the mean; superfluity comes sooner by white hairs, but want and poverty lives longer.

Por. Good sentences, and well pronounced.

Ner. They would be better, if well followed.

Por. If to do were as easy as to know what were good to do, chapels had been churches, and poor men rich; for who that is not idle, could have a good divine that follows his own instructions: I can easy teach twenty what were good to be done, than be one of the twenty to follow mine own teaching.
The profit of any thing, is the good from the blood; but a hot temper leaps over a cold decree: such a hare is madness the youth, to skip o'er the meshes of good counsel the cripple. But this reasoning is not in the fault of the day, nor of the age: What would choose! I may neither choose whom I would, nor refuse whom I dislike; so is the will of a living daughter curb'd by the will of a dead father:—Is it not hard, Nerissa, that I cannot choose one, nor refuse none?

Ner. Your father was ever virtuous, and holy men, at their death, have good inspirations; therefore, the lottery, that he hath devised in these three cases, is a good divine; a good divine, that chooses his meaning, chooses you; will, no doubt, ever be chosen by any rightly, but one who you shall rightly love. But what warmth is there in your rich blood, when you think of these princely suitors that are already come?

Por. I pray thee, over-name them; and as thou namest them, I will describe them; and according to my description, level at my affection.

Ner. First, there is the Neapolitan prince.

Por. Ay, that's a colt, indeed, for he doth nothings but talk of his horse; and he makes it a great approbation to his own good parts, that he can shoe himself: I am much afraid, my lady his mother played false with a smith.

Ner. Then, is there the county Palatine.

Por. He doth nothing but rown; as who should say, An if you will not, have me, choose: he hears merry tales, and smiles not: I fear, he will prove the weeping philosopher when he grows old, being so full of unmanly sadness in his youth. I had rather he married a death's head with a bone in his mouth, than to either of these. God defend me from these two!

Ner. How say you by the French lord, Monsieur
Le Bon?

Por. God made him, and therefore let him pass for a man. In truth, I know it is a sin to be a mocker; but, he! why, he hath a horse better than the county Palatine: and his thrift of rowing, is more than the count Palatine: he is every man in no man:
if its throstdising, he falls straight a capering: he will fence with his own shadow: if I should marry him,
I should marry twenty husbands: If he would despise me, I would forgive him; for if he love me madly, I shall never require him: Therefore, you and I, shall swear to forego, the young baron of England?

Por. You know, I say nothing to him; for he understands not me, nor I him: he hath neither Latin, French, nor Italian; and you will come into the court and swear, that I have a poor pennyworth in the English. He is a proper man's picture:
But, alas! I cannot converse with a dumb show.
How oddly he is rued! I think, he bought his doublet in Italy, his round hose in France, his bonnet in Germany, and his behaviour every where.

Ner. Why think you of the Scottish lord, his neighbour?

Por. That he had a neighbourhood charity in him;
for he borrowed a box of the ear of the Englishman, and swore he would pay him again, when he was able: I think, the Frenchman became his surety, and sealed under for another.

Ner. How like you the young German, the duke of Saxony's nephew?

Por. Very vilely in the morning, when he is sober; and most vilely in the afternoon, when he is drunk: when he is best, he is a little worse than a man; and when he is worst, he is little better than a beast and the rest fail: for that he fell, I hope, shall make shift to go without him.

Ner. If he should offer to choose, and choose the right casket, you should refuse to perform your father's will, if you should refuse to accept him.

Por. Therefore, for fear of the worst, I pray thee, set a deep glass of Rhenish wine on the contrary casket: for, if the devil be within, and that temptation without, I know he will choose it. I will do any thing, Nerissa, ere I will be married to a sultan.

Ner. You need not fear, lady, the having any of these lords; they have acquainted me with their determinations: which is indeed, to return to their home, and to trouble you with no more suit; unless you may be won by some other sort than your father's imposition, depending on the caskets.

Por. If I live to be as old as Sibylia, I will die as chaste as Diana, unless I be obtained by the manner of my father's will: I am glad this parcel of wooers are so reasonable; for there is not one among them but I dote on his very absence, and I pray God grant them a fair departure.

Ner. Do you not remember, madam, in your father's time, a Venetian, a scholar, and a soldier, that came hither in company of the Marquis of Montferrat?

Por. Yes, yes, it was Bassanio; as I think, so was he call'd.

Ner. True, madam; he, of all the men that ever my foolish eyes looked upon, was the best deserving a fair lady.

Por. I remember him well; and I remember him worthy of thy praise. How now! what news?

Enter a Servant.

Serv. The four strangers seek for you, madam, to take their leave; and there is a fore-runner come from a fifth, the prince of Morocco; who brings word, the prince, his master, will be here to-night.

Por. If I could bid the fifth welcome with so good heart as I can bid the other four farewell, I should be glad of his approach: If he have the condition of a saint, and the complexion of a devil, I had rather he shrowd me than woo me.

Nerissa. Sirrah, go before. Whiles we shut the gate upon one wooer, another knocks at the door.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Venice. A publick Place.

Enter Bassanio and Shylock.

Shy. Three thousand ducats.—well.

Bass. As Y. 5.

Shy. For three months.—well.

Bass. For the which, as I told you, Antonio shall be bound.

L 2
MERCHANT OF VENICE.

Act 1.

Shy. Antonio shall become bound, well.

Bass. May you stand me? Will you please me? Shall I hear your answer?

Shy. Three thousand ducats, for three months, And Antonio bound.

Bass. Shall I have answer to that.

Shy. Antonio is a good man.

Bass. Have you heard any imputation to the contrary?

Shy. No, no, no—my meaning, in saying he is a good man, is to have you understand me, that he is sufficient; yet his means are in exigency: he hath an urgent bond in Triptich, another in his house, a third stronger upon the Rialto; he hath a third at Messer, a fourth for England, and other ventures he hath, squander'd abroad; but ships are but boards, sailors but men; there be lead-rods, water-roles, water-thales, and lead-thales; there is the peril of waters, winds, and rocks: the man is, notwithstanding, sufficient.

Three thousand ducats—i think I may take his bond.

Bass. Be assured you may.

Shy. I will be assured, I may, and, that I may be assured, I will betheath my money with Antonio.

Bass. If it please you to dine with us.

Shy. Yes, to small part; to eat of the habitations which your propright, the Natives, composed the diet. You may propose to me with you, talk with you, walk with you, and so forwarding; but I will not eat with you, drink with you, nor pray with you. What news on the Rialto? Who's he here?

Enter Antonio.

Bass. This is a singular Antonio.

Shy. He is a singular Antonio. He hath for a publisher he Antonio. I hate him for he is a Christian! [looks

Shy. But more, for that, in how simplicity,

Antonio. How lends out money gratis, and brings down

Shy. The rate of assure here with us in Venice.

Antonio. If I can catch him once, I mean, pittance; and Shy. Well, I will feed fat the ancient grudge I bear him.

Antonio. He hates our sacred nation; and he rails.

Shy. Even there where merchants most do congregate,

Antonio. On me, my bargains, and my well-won thrift,

Shy. Which he cares interest: Cursed be my tribe,

Antonio. If I forgive him?

Shy. Shylock, do you bear?

Antonio. I am debauched of my peace more: And, by the near guess of my memory,

Shy. I cannot instantly raise up the cross

Antonio. Of full three thousand ducats: What of that?

Shy. Turn a wealth. How is thy trade now?

Antonio. I will furnish me; But soft, how many months

Shy. Do you desire?—Rest you fair, good signor.

Antonio. Your worship was the last man in our month.

Shy. Shylock, albeit he neither lend nor borrow,

Antonio. By taking, nor by giving of excess.

Shy. Yet, to supply the rape [rape] wants of my friend,

Antonio. He seemeth a custom:—to he yet possessed,

Shy. How much would you?

Antonio. Ay, ay, three thousand ducats.

Shy. And for three months?

Antonio. And to be paid again, three months, you told me so.

Shy. Well then, you bond; and, let me see,—But hear you:

Antonio. Methought, you said, you neither lend, nor borrow,

Shy. Unprofitable advantage.

Antonio. I do never use it.

Shy. When Jacob gran'd his uncle Laban's sheep,

Antonio. This Jacob from our holy Abraham was

Shy. To his wife mother wrought in his behalf

Antonio. The third possessor: ay, he was the third.

Antonio. And what of him? did he take interest?

Shy. No, not take interest; not, as you would Antonio. Direct interest; mark what Jacob did.

Shy. When Laban and himself were compen'd, d.

Shy. That all the maimings which were strack'd, and Antonio. Should fall, as Jacob's hire: the ewes, being rank,

Shy. In the end of autumn turned to the rams:

Antonio. And when the work of generation was

Shy. Between them were in his covenanted art.

Antonio. The astful shepherd pledged me certain wands,

Shy. And, in the doings of the deed of kind,

Antonio. He stuck them up before the first-some ewes;

Shy. Who, at the time of birth, did in the morning light;

Antonio. Vast, colour'd lamb's, and those were Jacob's.

Shy. This was a way to thrife, and he was blest;

Antonio. And thine is blessing, if men steal it not.

Shy. And the foregoing venture, sir, that Jacob serv'd

Antonio. A thing not in his power to bring the world for;

Shy. But a way, and fashion'd, by the hand of heaven

Antonio. Was this inserted to make interest good?

Shy. Or is your gold and silver ewes and rams?

Antonio. I make it breed as fast:

Shy. But note me, signior.

Antonio. Mark you this, Bassano,

Shy. This devil can cite scripture for his purpose.

Antonio. An evil soul, providence, a prowling wight,

Shy. Like a villain with a smiling cheek;

Antonio. A badly apple rotten at the heart;

Shy. O, what a goodly outside falsehood hath!

Antonio. Three thousand ducats,—tis a good round sum.

Shy. Three months from twelve, then let me see the Antonio. Well, Shylock, shall we be behelden to you?

Shy. This Antonio, and his two men, in time and off,

Antonio. In the Rialto you have rated me.

Shy. About my monies, and my usances

Antonio. Still have I borne it with a patient shrug:

Shy. For ever I keep in the hedge of the devil, or who;

Antonio. You call me—misbeliever, cut-throat dog,

Shylock. And spurt upon my Jewish gaberdine,

Antonio. And all for use of that which is mine own

Shylock. Well, in the now—I must you need my help

Antonio. Go to them; you come to me, and you say,

Shylock. And we would have monies; You say so;

Antonio. You, that did void your rheum upon my beard,

Shylock. And foot me, as you spurn a stranger

Antonio. I am not held; monies is your suit.

Antonio. What should I say to you?—Should I not say,

Shylock. Hath a dog money? is it possible

Antonio. A can lend three thousand ducats? or Shylock. Shall I lend low, and in a bondman's key,

Antonio. With 'bated breath, and whispering humpiness.

Shylock. Say this,—Fair sir, you spit on me on Wednesday last:

Antonio. You said me such a day; another time.

Shylock. You called me—dog: and for these courtesies

Antonio. I am as like to call thee so again.

Shylock. To speak, I say again, to speak,

Antonio. If thou wilt lend me this money, lend it not Shylock. As to thy friends; (for when did friendship take Antonio. A breed for barren metal of his friend?)

Shylock. I bid rather to thine enemy;

Antonio. Who, if he break, thou mayst with better face

Shylock. Exact the penalty.

Shylock. Why, look you, how you aston;

Antonio. I would be friends with you, and have your love;

Shylock. Forget the shame, that you have stain'd me with,

Antonio. Supply thy present wants, and take no doot

Shylock. Of usance for my monies, and you'll not hear me:

Antonio. This is kind I offer.

Shylock. And this were kindness.

Shylock. This kindness will I show:—

Antonio. Go with me to a notary, seal me there

Shylock. Your single bond: and, in a merry sport.

Antonio. If you give me not, in such a bond,

Shylock. In such a piece, such sum, or sums, as are Antonio. Express'd in the condition, let the forfeit

Shylock. Be nominated for an equal pound;

Antonio. Of your fair flesh, to be cut off and taken Shylock. In what part of your body pleaseth me.

Antonio. Content, in faith: I'll seal to such a bond, Shylock. And say, there is much kindness in the Jew.

Antonio. Ye shall not seal to such a bond for me,

Shylock. I'll rather dwell in my necessity.
Act 2.

MERCHANT OF VENICE.

Ant. Why, fear not, man; I will not forfeit it; Within the ten months, that's a month before This bond expires, I do expect return Of thrice three times the value of this bond.

Shy. O father Abraham, what these Christians are, Whose own hard dealings teach them suspect The thoughts of others! Fray you, tell me this: If he should break his day, what should I gain By the execution of the forfeit? A pound of man's flesh, taken from a man, Is not so estimable, profitable neither, As flesh of muttons, beets, or goats. I say, To buy his favour, I extend this friendship; If he would take it, so; if not, I die. And, for my love, I pray you, wrong me not.

Ant. Yes, Shylock, I will seal unto this bond. Shy. Then meet me forthwith at the notary's; Give him direction for this merry bond, And I will go and purchase the ducats straight; See to my house, left in the fearful guard Of an untruthy knave; and presently I will be with you. [Exit.

Ant. Hee thee, gentle Jew. This Hebrew will turn Christian; he grows kind. Bass. I like not fair terms, and a villain's mind. Ant. Come on; in this there can be no dismay, My ships come home a month before the day. [Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Belmont. A Room in Portia's House.

Flourish of Cornets. Enter the Prince of Morocco, and his Train; Portia, Nerissa, and other of her Attendants.

Mor. Mislike me not for my complexion, The shadow'd livery of the burnish'd sun, The red-whit'd rags, in which I walk, Bring me the fairest creature northward born, Whose Phæbus' fire scarce thaws the icicles, And let us make incision for your love, To prove whose blood is reddest, his, or mine. I tell thee, lady, this aspect of mine Hath fear'd the valiant; by my love, I swear, The best regarded virgins of our clime Have lov'd it too: I would not change this hne, Except to turn it in the thoughts, the will, of thee. Per. In terms of choice I am not solely led By nice direction of a maiden's eyes: Besides, the lottery of my destiny Bars me the right of voluntary choosing: But, if my father had not scattered me, And hedg'd me by his wit, to yield myself His wife, who wins me by that means I told you, Yourself, renowned prince, then stood as fair, As any complett I have look'd on yet, For my affection.

Mor. Even for that I thank you; Therefore, I pray you, lead me to the caskets, o try my fortune. By this similit, That slew the Sophy, and a Persan prince, That won three fields of Sultan Sulymam,— I would out-stare the sternest eyes that look, Out-brave the heart, most daring on the earth, Pluck the young sucking cubs from the she bear, Yea, mock the lion when he roars for prey, To win thee, lady: But, alas the while! If Herecules, and Lichas, play at the Which is the better man, the greater throw May turn by fortune from the weaker hand: So is Alcides beaten by his page, And Bellerophon by Abdon leading me, Miss that which one unworthier may attain, And die with grieving.

Per. You must take your chance; As other not attempt to choose at all; Or swear, before you choose;—if you choose wrong, Never to speak to lady afterward In way of marriage; therefore be advised.

Mor. Nor will not come, bring me unto my chance.

Por. First, forward to the temple; after dinner Your hazard shall be made.

Mor. Good fortune then! [Cornets.

To make me blest, or cursed'ut among men. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Venice. A Street.

Enter Launcelot Gobbo.

Lau. Certainly my conscience will serve me to run from this Jew, my master: The fiend is at mine elbow; and tempts me, saying to me, Gobbo, Launcelot, to steal honest Launcelot; or good Gobbo, or good Launcelot Gobbo, use your legs, take the start, run away; My conscience says,—no; take heed, honest Launcelot; take heed, honest Gobbo; or, as aforesaid, honest Launcelot Gobbo; do not run; a scorn running with thy heels: Well, the most courageous fiend bids me pack; viva! says the fiend; away! says the fiend, for the heavens; rouse up a brave mind, says the fiend, and run. Well, my conscience, hanging about the neck of my heart, says very wisely to me,—my honest friend, Laun- celot, being an honest man's son, or rather an honest woman's son;—for, indeed, my father did something and had a thing to, he had a kind of taste;—well, my conscience says, Launcelot, budge not; budge, says the fiend; budge not, says my conscience: Conscience, say I, you counsel well; fiend, say I, you counsel well: to be ruled by my conscience, I should stay with the Jew my master, who, (God bless the mark!) is a kind of devil; and, to run away from the Jew, I should be ruled by the fiend, who, saving your reverence, is the devil himself: Certainly, the Jew is the very devil incarnation: and, in my conscience, my conscience is but a kind of hard conscience, to offer to counsel me to stay with the Jew: The fiend gives the more friendly counsel, and runs; then, my heels are at your commandment, I will run.

Enter Old Gobbo, with a basket.

Gob. Master, young man, you, I pray you, which is the way to master Jew's?

Lau. [Aside.] O heavens, this is my true be- gotten father! who, being more than sand-blind, high-gravel bed, knows me not:—I will try con- spiracies with him.

Gob. Master young gentleman, I pray you, which is the way to master Jew's?

Lau. Turn up on your right hand, at the next turning; then, at the next turning of all, on your left; marry, at the very next turning, turn no hand, but turn down indirectly to the Jew's house. Gob. By God's souldes, 'twill be as hard a way to it, as can you tell me whether one Launcelot, that dwells with him, dwell with him, or no?

Lau. Talk you of young master Launcelot?— Mark me now; [aside.] now will I raise the wa- ters,—Talk you of young master Launcelot? Gob. No master, sir, but a poor man's son: his father, though I say it, is an honest exceeding poor man, and, God be thanked, well to live.

Lau. Well, let his father know what he will, we talk of young master Launcelot.

Gob. Your worship's friend, and Launcelot, sir.

Lau. But I pray you ergo, old man, ergo, I be- seech you; talk you of young master Launcelot? Gob. Talk Launcelot, an't please your master-ship.

Lau. Ergo, master Launcelot; talk not of master Launcelot, father; for the young gentleman (ac- cording to fates and destined destinies, and old and oldy say- ings, the sister three, and such branches of learning, is, indeed, deceased; or, as you would say, in plain terms, gone to heaven.

Gob. Marry, God forbid! the boy was the very staff of our house, and not my very prop.

Lau. Do I look like a cudgel, or a hovel-post, a staff, or a prop?—Do you know me, father? Gob. Alack the day, I know you not, young gen-
Shylock, thy master, spoke with me this day, And hath preferr'd thee, if it be preteriment, To leave a rich Jew's service, to become The fellow of a poor gentleman.

Lest. The old proverb is very well parted between my master Shylock and you, sir; you have the grace of God, sir, and he hath enough.

Bass. Thou speak'st it well; Go, father, with thy son.

Take leave of thy old master, and enquire My lodging out—give him a lively

More guarded than his fellows: I see it done.

Lest. Father, in so—I cannot get a service, no;

— I have never a tongue in my head.—Well! (lunking on his pedis.) If any man in Italy have a fairer table, which doth deliver to wear upon a book—I shall have good fortune; to go, here's a simple life: here's a small table of wives: Alas, fifteen wives is nothing; eleven widows, and nine maid's, is a simple coming in to one man: and then, to 'scapes drowning thrice; and to be in peril of my life with the edge of a feather-bed:—here are simple 'scapes! Well, if fortune be a woman, she's a good wench for this year.—Father, come, I'll take my leave of these Jews in the twinkling of an eye.

[Exit Launcelot and Old Gobbo. Bass. I pray thee, good Leonardo, think on this; These things being bought, and orderly bestowed,— For money, which is my trade, for fruit, I do fear, and some adventure. My best esteem'd acquaintance: blest thee, go.

Leon. My best endeavours shall be done herein. Enter Gratiano.

Gra. Where is your master?

Leon. Yonder, sir, he walks.

[Exit Leonardo.

Bass. Signior Bassanio,

Gra. I have a suit to you.

Bass. You have obtained it. Gra. You must not deny me; I must go with you to Belmont.

Bass. Why, then you must:—But hear thee, Gratiano; Thou art wild, too rude, and bold of voice:— Parts, that being happy, haply might be happy; And in such eyes as ours appear not faults; But where thou art not known, why, there they show

Somehow too liberal:—pray thee take pain To aisy with some cold drops of modesty Thy skipping spirit; lest, through thy wild bea, I be misconstrued in the place I go to, [viour, And lose my hopes.

Signior Bassanio, hear me: If I do not put on a sober habit, Talk with respect, and sue but now and then, Wear prayer-books in my pocket, look demurely Nay more, while grace is saying, hood mine eyes Thus with my hat, and sigh, and say, amen; Use all the observance of civility, Like one well studied in a sad aestas To please his grandam, never trust me more.

Bass. Well, we shall see your bearing.

Gra. Nay, but I bar to-night; you shall not page By what we do to-night. [me

Bass. No, that were pity.

I would entreat you rather to put on Your boldest suit of mirith, for we have friends That purpose merriment: But fare you well, I have some business.

Gra. I am to Lorenzo, and the rest; But we will visit you at supper-time. [Re-enter SCENE III.—The same. A Room in Shylock's House.

Enter Jessica and Launcelot.

Jes. I am sorry, thou wilt leave my father so; Our house is hell, and thou, a very devil, Didst rob it of some taste of tediousness:
Enter Jessica.

Jes. Call you? What is your will?
Shy. I am bid forth to supper, Jessica;
There are measures I would propound:
I am not bid for love; they flatter me:
But yet I'll go in, to feed upon
The prodigal Christian. Jessica, my girl,
Look to my house: I am right loath to go;
There is some ill brewing of my rest,
For I did dream of money-bags to-night.
Lau. I beseech you, sir, go; my young master doth expect your approbation.
Shy. So do I this.
Lau. And they have conspired together,—I will not say, you shall see a masque; but if you do, then it was not for nothing that my nose fell a bleeding on Black-mondays last, at six o'clock the morning, falling out that year on Ash-Wednesday was four year in the afternoon.
Shy. What; are there masques? Hear you me,
Jessica:
Lock up my doors; and when you hear the drum,
And the vile squeaking of the wyck'd fife,
Clamber not you up to the casements then,
Nor thrust your head out at the public street,
To gaze on Christian fools with varnish'd faces:
But stop my house's ears, I mean my casements;
Let not the sound of shallow foppery enter
My sober house.—By Jacob's staff, I swear,
I have no mind of feasting forth to-night:
But I will go.—Go you before me, sirrah;
Say, I will come.
Lau. I will go before, sir.—
Mistress, look out at window, for all this;
There will come a Christian by,
Will be worth a Jewess's eye.
[Exit Lau.

Shy. What says that fool of Hagard's offising, biff?
Jes. His words were, Farewell, mistress; nothing else.
Shy. The patch is kind enough; but a huge
Small-slow in profit, and he sleeps by day [feeder,
More than the wild cat; drone, and night
Therefore I part with him; and part with him
To one that I would have him help to waste
His borrowed purse.—Well, Jessica, go in;
Perhaps, I will return immediately;
Do, as I bid you,
Shut doors after you: Fast bind, fast find;
A proverb never stale in thrifty mind.
[Exit.
Jes. Farewell; and if my fortune be not cross,
I have a father, you a daughter, last.
[Exit.

SCENE VI.—The same.
Enter Gratiano and Salarino, masqued.
Grat. This is the pent-house, under which Lo-
Desid'rs'd us to make stand.
Salar. His hour is almost past.
Grat. And it is marvel he out-dwells his hour;
For lovers ever run before the clock.
Salar. O, ten times faster Venus' pigeons fly
To seal love's bonds new made, than they are wont,
To keep obliged faith unforfeited!
Grat. That ever holds: who pisseth from a feast,
With that keen appetite that he sits down?
Where is the horse that doth untread again
His tedious measures with the unkind fire
That hid us pace them first? All things that are,
Are with more spirit chased than enjoy'd.
How like a yonner, or a prodigal,
The scarfed bark puts from her native hay,
Hugg'd and embraced by the strumpet wind!
How like the prodigal doth she return;
With over-weather'd rine, and ragged sails,
Lean, rent, and beggarded by the strumpet wind!
[Enter Lorenzo.

Salar. Here comes Lorenzo;—more of this hereafter.
Lor. Sweet friends, your patience for my long abode;
Not I, but my affairs, have made you wait.
When you shall please to play the thieves for wives,
I'll watch as long for you then. Approach;
Here dwells my father Jer:—He! who's within?

Enter Jessica, above, in boy's clothes.

Jes. Who are you? Tell me, for more certainty.
Albeit I'll swear that I do know your tongue.
Law. Lorenzo, and thy love.
Jes. Lorenzo, I have discovered: is my love, indeed; For who love I so much? and now who knows,
But you, Lorenzo, whether I am yours?
Law. Heaven, and thy thoughts, are witness that
Jes. Here, catch this casket! it is worth the palme.
I am glad 'tis night, you do not look on me,
For I am much ashamed of my exchange:
But love is blind, and lovers cannot see
The pretty blots that themselves commit,
For if they could, 'twould spoil himself to blush
To see me thus transformed to a boy.
Law. Descend, for you must be my trench-beaver.
Jes. What, must I hold a candie to my shame?
They in themselves, good enough, are too too light.
Why, 'tis an office of discovery, love;
And I should be obscured.
Law. So are you, sweet,
Even in the lovely garnish of a boy.
But come at once;
For the close night doth play the run-away,
And we are stand for at Bassanio's feast.
Jes. I am determined, and will play myself
With some more decent, and be with you straight.

[Exit from above.

Law. Now, by my head, a Gentle, and no Jew.
Law. Drowst me, but I love her heartily.
For she is wise, if I can judge of her;
And fair she is, if that mine eyes be true;
And true she is, as she hath proved herself:
And therefore, like herself, wise, fair, and true,
Shall she be prais'd as my constant soul.

Enter Jessica, below.

What, art thou come?—No, gentlemen, away;
Our masquing mates by this time for us stay.

[Exit, with Jessica and Salarino.

Enter Antonio.

Ant. Who's there?
Gen. Signior Antonio?
Ant. Fye, fye, tiranions! where are all the rest?
'Tis nine o'clock; our friends all stay for you.
No masque to-night; the wind is come about,
Bassanio presently will go abroad.
I have sent twenty out to seek for you.
Gen. I am glad so't; I desire no more delight,
Than to be under sail, and gone to-night. [Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—Belmont. A Room in Portia's House.

Flourish of Cornets. Enter Portia, with the Prince of Morocco, and both their Trains.

Por. Go, draw aside the curtains, and discover
The several caskets to this noble prince.—
Now make your choice.

Mer. The first, of gold, who this inscription bears.—
Who chooseth me, shall gain what many men desire.
The second, silver, which this promise carrieth:—
Who chooseth me, shall get as much as he deserves.
The third, good lead, with burning all as bloudly:—
Who chooseth me, must give and hazard all he hath.
How shall I know if I do choose the right?
Por. The one of them contains my picture, in these words:
If you choose that, then I am yours withall.
Mer. Some god direct my judgment! Let me see,
I will survey the inscriptions back again:
Who chooseth me, must give and hazard all he hath.
Must give—for what? for lead? hazard for lead?

This casket threatens: Men, that hazard all,
Do it in hope of fair advantages:
A golden mind stoops not to shows of dress;
I'll then nor give, nor hazard, aught for lead.
What says the silver, with her virgins hue?
Who can desire her, with a mind so true?
As much as he deserves?—Pause there, Morocco,
And weigh thy value with an even hand;
If thou be'st rated by thy estimation,
Then let no man compare thee with another:
Though not extend so far as to the lady;
And yet to be afraid of my deserving,
Were but a weak dissembling of myself.
As much as she deserves.—Ah, by, that's the lady.
I do in birth deserve her, and in fortunes,
In graces, and in qualities of breeding;
But more than these, in love I do deserve.
What if I stray'd no farther, but chose here?—
Let's see once more this saying grav'd in gold:
Who chooseth one, shall gain what many men desire.
Why, that's the lady: all the world desires her:
From the four corners of the earth they come,
To kiss this shrine, this mortal breathing saint.
The Hesperian deserts, and the rasty wilds
Of wide Arabia, are as through Gates now,
For princes to come view fair Portia;
The wily king of Sewa whose ambitious head
Spits in the face of heaven, is no less
To stop the foreign spirits; but they come,
As o'er a brook, to see fair Portia.

One of these three contains her heavenly picture.
It didn't like the company of Bassanio's
Aim at her, and we will shift our estimation,
'Ta think so base a thought: it were too gross
To rib her crotchets in the obscure grave.
Or shall I think, in silver she's immurr'd,
Being ten times undervalued to try'd gold?—
O sinful thought! Never so rich a gift
Was set in worse than gold. They have in England
A coin, that bears the figure of an angel
Stamp'd in gold; but that's insipid upon;
But here an angel in a golden bed Lies all within.—Deliver me the key;
Here do I choose, and thrive I as I may!
Por. There, take it, prince, and if my form lie there,
Then I am yours. [He unlocks the golden casket.
Mer. O hell! what have we here?
A carrion death, within whose empty eye
There is a written scroll. I'll read the writing.

All that glitters is not gold,
Often have you heard that say'd:
Many a man his life hath sold,
But my outside to behold:
Gilded bonds do worms in dud.
If you been as wise as we are, sir,
Young in limbs, in judgment old,
Your answer had not been inser'd.
Fare you well; your quit to cold.

Gold, indeed: and labour lost:
Then, farewell, heat; and, welcome, frost.
Por. Signior! I have too griev'd a heart
To take a tedious leave: thus losers part. [Exeunt.
Por. A gentle riddance:—Draw the curtains, go;
Let all of his complexion choose me to. [Exeunt.

SCENE VIII.—Venice. A Street.

Enter Salarino and Salanio.

Salar. Why man, I saw Bassanio under sail;
With him is Gratiano gone along:
And in their ship, I am sure, Lorenzo is not.
Sala. The villain Jew with cutters rais'd the
Who went with him to search Bassanio's ship.
Salar. He came too late, the ship was under sail:
But there the duke was given to understand,
That in a gondola were seen together
Lorenzo and his unfortunate fortunes.
Besides, Antonio certifi'd the duke,
They were not with Bassanio in his ship.
Satan. I never heard a passion so confus'd,
So strange, outrageous, and so variable,
As the dog Jew did utter in the streets:
"My daughter!—O my daughter!—
Fled with a Christian!—O my Christian duties!—
Justice! the law! my duties, and my daughter!
A sealed bag, two sealed bags of ducats,
Of double ducats, stol'n from me by my daughter!
And jewels; two stones, two rich and precious stones,
Stol'n by my daughter!—Justice! find the girl!—
She hath the stones upon her, and the ducats!
I would the whole world were destroyed,
Crying,—his stones, his daughter, and his ducats.
Salar. Let good Antonio look he keep his day,
Or he shall pay for this.
Salar. Marry, well remember'd:
I reason'd with a Frenchman yesterday;
Who told me,—in the narrow seas, that part
The French and English, there miscarried
A vessel of our country, richly fraught:
I thought upon Antonio, when he told me;
And wish'd in silence, that it were not his.
Salar. You were best to tell Antonio what you hear;
Yet do not suddenly, for it may grieve him.
Salar. A kinder gentleman treads not the earth.
I saw Bassanio and Antonio part:
Bassanio told him, he would make some speed
To carry fresh news; he would shew me
Slubber not business for my sake, Bassanio,
But stay the very riping of the time;
And for the Jesu's bond, which he hath of me,
Let it not enter in your mind of love.
Be merry; and employ your chiefest thoughts
To courtship, and such fair ostens of love
As shall conveniently become you there:
And even there, his eye being big with tears,
Turning his face, he put his hand behind him,
And with affection wondrous sensible
He wrung Bassanio's hand, and so they parted.
Satan. I think, he only loves the world for him.
I pray thee, let us go, and find him out,
And quicken his embrazed heaviness
With some delight or other.
Salar. Do we so. [Exeunt.

SCENE IX.—Belmont. A Room in Portia's House.

Enter Nerissa, with a Servant.

Ner. Quick, quick, I pray thee, draw the curtain straight;
The prince of Arragon hath 'en his oatb,
And comes to his election presently.

Flourish of Cornets. Enter the Prince of Arragon, Portia, and their Trains.

Por. Behold, there stand the caskets, noble prince;
If you choose that whereof I am contain'd,
Straight shall our nuptial rites be solemniz'd;
But if you fail, without more speech, my lord,
You must be gone from hence immediately.

A flourish of cornets. bustling noise.

Por. To these injunctions every one doth swear, That safe returns to have his worthiness self.

Ar. And so have I address'd me: Fortune now To my heart's hope!—Gold, silver, and base lead. Who chooseth me, must give and hazard all he hath: I know you are a fairer, ere I give, or hazard. What says the golden chest? ha! let me see—
Who chooseth me, shall gain what many men desire. What many men desire.—That many may be meant For fool multitude, that choose by show,
Not learn'd more than the fond eye doth teach; Which prises not to the interior, but, like the martlet,
Builds in the weather on the outward wall,
Even in the force and road of casualty.
I will not choose what many men desire,
Because I will not jump with common spirits,
And rank me with the barbarous multitudes.
Why, then to thee, thou silver treasure-house;
Tell me once more what title thou dost bear:
Who chooseth me, shall get as much as he desires:
And well said too; For who shall go about
To cozen fortune, and be honourable
Without the stamp of merit? Let none presume To wear an undeserved ligature.
O, that estates, degrees, and offices,
Were not deriv'd corruptly! and that clear honour
Were purchas'd by the merit of the wearer!
How many then should cover, that stand bare?
How many be commanded, that command?
How much low peasantry would then be glean'd
From the true seed of honour? and how much honour
Pick'd from the chaff and ruin of the times,
To be new garnish'd? Well, but to my choice;
Who chooseth me, shall get as much as he deserves:
I will assume desert;—Give me a key for this,
And instantly unlock mine heart.

Por. Too long a pause for that which you find there.

Ar. What's here? the portrait of a blinking idiot,
Presenting me, and that I should read it.
How much unlike art thou to Portia?
How much unlike my hopes, and my deservings?
Who chooseth me, shall have as much as he deserves.
Did I deserve no more than a fool's head?
Is that my prince? are my desires no better?
Por. To offend, and judge, are distinct offices,
And of opposed natures.

Ar. What is here?

The fire seven times tried this; Seven times tried this judgement, That did never choose amiss: Some there be, that shadows kiss: Such have but a shadow's bliss: There are fools alive, I was Silver'd o'er, and so was this. Take what wish you well to bed, I will ever be your head: So begone, sir, you are sped.

Still more fool I shall appear By the time I linger'd that comes before
With one fool's head I came to woo, But I go away with two— Sweet, adieu! I'll keep my oath, Patiently to hear my wife. [Exeunt Arragon and Train.]

Por. Thus hath the candle sing'd the moth. O these deliberate fools! when they do choose, They have the wisdom by their wit to lose.

Ner. The ancient saying is no heresy— Hanging and wiving goes by destiny.

Por. Come, draw the curtain, Nerissa.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Where is my lady?

Por. Here; what would my lord?

Serv. Madam, there is alighted at your gate A young Venetian, a maid that comes before To signify the approaching of his lord: From whom he bringeth sensible regrets; To wit, besides commends, and courteous breath, Gifts of rich value; yet I have not seen So likely an ambassador of love:
A day in April never came so sweet, To show how costly summer was at hand, As this fore-noon; when comes before Quick Cupid's post, that comes so mannerly.
Ner. Bassanio, lord love, if thy will it be!

[Exeunt.]
Scene 1.-Venice. A Street.

Enter Salamano and Iachimo.

Sal. Now, what news on the stage?

Iac. Why, yet I think you should have heard, that Antonio has a ship of rich lading wreck'd on the narrow seas: the goodwives, I think they call the place, a very dangerous flat, and scarce, where the waves of many a tall ship lie buried, as they say, if my gossip report be an honest woman of her word.

Sal. I would she were as lively gossiping in that, as she is to make her neighbours believe the west for the death of a third husband last it is true, without any steps of probability, or crossing the plain highway of truth, that the good Antonio, the honest Antonio, is that I had a very good enough to keep his name company.

Ant. Come, the last stop.

Sal. Ha, what say'st thou? Why the end is, he hath lost a ship.

Ant. I would it might prove the end of his losses.

Let me say my prayers, lest the devil arniss my prayer, for here he comes in the likeness of a Jew.

Enter Shylock.

Shy. How now, Shylock? what news among the merchants?

Sal. Why, you know, none so well, none so well as you, of my daughter's flight.

Shy. That's certain; I, for my part, knew the taking that made the wings she would not. Why is not Salancco, for his own part, known the lords she fled'd from, and then it is the complexion of them all to leave the dam.

Ant. I will stand for it.

Shy. That's certain, if the devil may be her judge.

Sal. My own flesh and blood to rebuke!

Ant. But upon it, old carriose; rebuke it at these years.

Sal. I say, my daughter is my flesh and blood. Shy. There is more difference between thy flesh and hers, than between joy and joyy: more between thy bloods, than there is between red wine and rhinehul. But tell us, do you hear whether Antonio have any loss at sea or no? Shy. Why, there have another bad match, a bankrupt, a doggish, who dare scarce show his head on the fairs, a beggar, that used to come so strong upon the mart; let him look to his bond; he was to call me usurer; let him look to his bond he was to lend money for a Christian covering; let him break to his bond.

Ant. Why, I am sure, if he forfeit, he will not take his flesh: What's that good for?

Shy. To bait fish withal: if it will feed nothing else, it will feed my revenge. He hath disgraced me, and hindered me of half a million; laughed at my losses, mocked at my gowns, scorned my nation, thwarted my bargains, cooled my friends, heated my enemies; and what's his reason? I am a Jew. Hath not a Jew eyes? hath not a Jew hands, organs, dimensions, senses, affections, passions; fed with the same food, hurt with the same diseases, healed with the same medicines, warmed and cooled by the same winter and summer, as a Christian is? If you prick us, do we not bleed? If you tickle us, do we not laugh? If you poison us, do we not die? And if you oust us out of our own country, we will be as miserable as you; if you can hurt us, we will revenge. If a Jew wrong a Christian, what is his humility? revenge; If a Christian wrong a Jew, what's his你会教义? revenge. The villainy, you teach me,

I willexecute it and it shall go hard, but I will better the instruction.

I'll be a Servant.

Shy. Here comes another of the tribe; a third cannot be matchless, unless the devil himself turn Jew. Let us go, and be, as I say, and be a servant.
Act 3.

MERCHANT OF VENICE.

To render them redoubted. Look on beauty,
And you shall see 'tis purchas'd by the weight;
But I have had it, and I feel no pain.
Making them lightest that wear most of it:
So are those crisped snaky golden locks,
Which make such wanton gambols with the wind,
Upon those shoulders, left so long unknown
To be the dowry of a second head.
The scull that bred them, in the sepulchre.
Thus ornament is but the gilded shore
To a most dangerous sea; the beautiful, scar'd
Yelling an Indian beauty: in this
The seeming truth which cunning times put on
To entrap the wisest. Therefore, thou gaudy gold,
Hard food for Midas, I will none of thee:
Nor will I take any from this gold man
'Tween man and man: but thou, thou meagre lead,
Which rather threat'nest, than dost promise aught,
Thy plainness moves me more than eloquence,
And here choose I: Joy be the consequence!

Por. How all the other passions fleet to air,
As doubtful thoughts, and rash-embrac'd despair,
And shudd'ring fear and green-eyed jealousy.
O love, be moderate, alay thy ecstasy,
In measure rain thy joy, scant this excess;
I feel too much thy blessing, make it less,
For fear I surfeit!

Musick, whilst Bassanio comments on the caskets to himself.

SONG.

1. Tell me where is fancy bred,
Or in the heart, or in the head?
How begot, how nourish'd?

Reply.

2. It is engender'd in the eyes,
With gazing fzt; and fancy dies
In the erudate where it lies.
Let us all ring fancy's knell:
I'll begin it. Ding, dong, bell. Ding, dong, dong, bell.

All.

Bass. So may the outward shows be least their
The world is still deceiv'd with ornament.
I saw in law, what plea so taint'd and corrupt,
But, being season'd with a gracious voice,
Obaucres the show of evil? In religion,
What damned error, but some sober brow
Will bless it, and approve it with a text,
Hiding the grossness with fair ornament?
They have no vices desperate to hid me;
Some mark of virtue on his outward parts.
How many cowards, whose hearts are all as false
As stairs of sand, wear yet upon their chins
The beards of Hercules. How drowning Mars?
Who, inward search'd, have lives white as milk?
And these assume but valour's excrement,

You that choose not by the view,
Chance as fair, and choose as true!
Since this fortune fails to you,
Be content, and seek no more.
If you be well pleas'd with this,
And hold your fortune for your bliss,
Turn you where your lady is,
And claim her with a loving kiss.

A gentle scroll;—Fair lady, by your leave:

Kissing her.

I come by note, to give and to receive.
Like one of two contending in a prize,
That thinks he hath done well in people's eyes,
Hearing applause, and universal shout,
Giddy in spirit, still gaz'in in a doubt
Whether those peals of praise be his or no;
So, three fair lady, stand I, even so:
As doubtful whether what I see be true,
Until confirm'd, sign'd, ratified by you.

Por. You see me, lord Bassanio, where I stand,
Such as I am: thought for myself alone,
I would not be ambitious in my wish,
To wish myself much better; yet, for you,
I would be trebled twenty times myself;
A thousand times more fair, ten thousand times
More rich.

That only to stand high on your account,
I might in virtues, beauties, living, friends,
Exceed account: but the full sum of love
Is sum of something: which, to term in gross,
Is an unlesson'd girl, unschool'd, unpractis'd:
Happy in this, she is not yet so old,
But she may learn; and happier than this,
Now not to sell, but dull but she can learn;
Happiest of all, is, that her gentle spirit
Commits itself to yours to be directed,
As from her lord, her governor, her king,
Myself, and what is mine, to you, and yours.
Is my command; but now I was the lord
Of this fair mansion, master of my servants,
Queen over myself; and even now, but now,
This house, these servants, and this same myself,
Are yours, my lord; I give them with this ring,
What steel the colour from Bassanio's heart.
Some dear friend dead; else nothing in the world
Could turn so much the constitution
Of any constant man. What, worse and worse
With these his uncle's death, and this report
I must freely have the half of any thing
That this same paper brings you.

Bass. A sweet Portia.

Revere a few of the uncommon words,
That ever blotted paper (gentle lady),
When I did first impart my love to you,
I freely told you, all the wealth I had
Ran in my veins, I was a gentleman;
And then I told you true; and yet, dear lady,
Rating myself at nothing, you shall see
How much I was a braggart. When I told you
My state was nothing, I should then have told you
That I was worse than nothing; for, indeed,
I have engag'd myself to a dear friend,
Engag'd my friend to his more enemy,
To feed my means. Here is a letter, lady;
The writer as the body of my state,
And every word in it a gaging wound,
Leasing life-blood. But as it true, saliero?
Have all his ventures fail'd? What, not one hit?
From Tripoli, from Mexico, and England,
From India and Barbary, and India?
And not one vessel 'scape the dreadless touch
Of merchant-marrying rocks?

Per. Not one, my lord.

Besides, it should appear, that if he had
The present money to discharge the Jew,
He would not take

A creature, that did best the shape of man,
So keen and greedy to confound a man.
He was the duke at morning, and at night;
And doth impugn the freedom of the state,
If they deny him justice twenty merchants,
The duke himself, and the king of Venice.
Of greatest port, have all persuaded with him;
But none can drive him from the various plea
Of forfeiture, of justice, and his bond.

When I was with him, I have heard him
To Teboursuc, to Tysoe, to Chios, and I wear
That he would rather have Antonio's flesh,
Than twenty times the value of the sum
That he did owe him; and I, my lord, if I Still am thy friend, and power deny not,
It will go hard with poor Antonio.

Per. Is it your dear friend, that is in trouble

Bass. The dearest friend to me, the kindest man,
The best condition'd and unwary'd spirit
In doing courtesies; and one in whom
The ancient Roman honour more appears,
Than that draws a breath in Italy.

Per. What sum owes he the Jew?

Bass. For me, three thousand ducats.

Per. What more?

Pay me six thousand, and defece the bond;
Double six thousand, and then thatre, that
Before a friend of this description
Shall lose a hair through Bassanio's fault.
First, go to me with church, and call me wife
And I will have money to send to a friend;
For never shall you lie by Portia's side
With an unquiet soul. You shall have gold
To pay the petty debts twenty times over;
When you have paid them, bring your goods along
My mad Venosa, and myself, mean time,
Will live as maidens and widows. Come away;
For you shall hence upon your wedding day
And so become the mercy of our house.
Since you are dear bought, I will love you dear—
But let me hear the letter of your friend.
MERCHANT OF VENICE.

Act 3.

Gentlemen, my ships have all miscarried; my creditors grow cruel; my estate is very low; my bond to the Jews is forfeit; and since, in paying it, it is impossible I should live, all debts are cleared between you and I, if I might but see you at my death: notwithstanding, for your pleasure, if your love do not persuade you to come, let not my letter.

Por. O, love, dispatch all business, and be gone. Bass. I have your good leave to go away; I will make haste: but, till I come again, No bed shall ever guilty of my stay, No rest be interposer 'twixt us twain. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Venice. A Street.

Enter Shylock, Salanio, Antonio, and Gaoler.

Shy. Gaoler, look to him; Tell not me of mercy:
This is the fool that lent out money gratis;—
Gaoler, look to him.

Ant. I'll hear me yet, good Shylock.

Shy. I'll have my bond; speak not against my bond;
I have sworn an oath, that I will have my bond:
Then call'd me dog, before thou hast a cause: But, since I am a dog, beware my fangs:
The duke shall grant me justice.—I do wonder,
That naughts gaoler, that thou art so fond
To come abroad with him at his request.

Ant. I pray thee, hear me speak these words.

Shy. I'll have my bond; I will not hear thee speak;
I'll have my bond; and therefore speak no more.
I'll not be made a soft and dull-eyed fool,
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield
To Christian intercessors. Follow not;
I'll have no speaking; I will have my bond.

[Exit.]

Salan. It is the most impenetrable cur,
That ever kept with men.

Ant. Let him alone;
I'll follow him no more with bootless prayers.
He seeks my life; his reason well I know;
I oft deliver'd from his forfeitures
Many that have at times made moan to me;
Therefore he hates me.

I am sure, the duke
Will never grant this forfeit to hold.

Ant. The duke cannot deny the course of law;
For the commodity that strangers have
Will make it victual, if it be desired.
Will much impeach the justice of the state;
Since that the trade and profit of the city
Consisteth of all nations. Therefore, go:
Kinsmen and losses have so frightened me,
That I shall hardly spare a pound of flesh
To-morrow to my bloody creditor.

Well, gaoler, on.—Pray God, Bassanio come
To see me pay his debt, and then I care not! [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Belmont. A Room in Portia's House.

Lor. Madam, although I speak it in your presence,
You have a noble and a true conceit
Of godlike sanity; which appears most strongly
In bearing thus the absence of your lord.
But, if you knew to whom you show this honour,
How true a gentleman you send relief,
How dear a lover of your lord your husband,
I know you would be prouder of the work,
Than customary bounty can enforce you.

Por. I never did repent for doing good,
Nor shall not now: for in companions
That do converse and waste time together,
Whose souls do bear an equal yoke of love,
There must be needs a like proportion
Of lineaments, of manners, and of spirit;
Which makes me think, that this Antonio,

Being the bosom lover of my lord,
Must needs be like my lord: If it be so,
How little is the cost I have bestow'd,
In purchasing the semblance of my soul
From out the state of hellish cruelty
This comes too near the praising of myself;
Therefore, no more of it: hear other things.—

Lorenzo, I commit into your hands
The husbandry and manage of my house,
Until my lord's return: for mine own part,
I have toward heaven breath'd a secret vow,
To live in prayer and contemplation,
Only attended by Nerissa here,
Until her husband and my lord's return:
There is a monastery two miles off,
And there we will abide. I do desire you,
Not to deny this imposition;
The which my love, and some necessity,
Now lays upon you.

Lor. Madam, with all my heart,
I shall obey you in all fair commands.
Por. My people do already know my mind,
And will acknowledge you and Jessica
In place of lord Bassanio and myself.
So fare you well, till we shall meet again.

Lor. Fair thoughts; and happy hours, attend on you.

Jes. I wish your ladyship all heart's content.
Por. I thank you for your wish, and am well pleas'd
To wish it back on you: fare you well, Jessica. [Exeunt Jessica and Lorenzo.

Now, Balthazar,
As I have ever found thee honest, true,
So let me find thee still: Take this same letter,
And use thou all the endearments of a man,
In speed to Padua; see thou render this
Into my cousin's hand, doctor Bellario;
And, look, what notes and garments he doth give thee,
Bring them, I pray thee, with imagine'd speed
Unto the transect, to the common ferry
Which trades to Venice:—waste no time in words,
But get thee gone; I shall be there before thee.

Balth. Madam, I go with all convenient speed. [Exeunt.

Por. Come on, Nerissa; I have work in hand,
That you yet know not of: we'll see our husbands,
Before they think of us.

Ner. Shall they see us?
Por. They shall, Nerissa; but in such a habit,
That they shall think with what ease we lack.
With what skill we lack. I'll hold thee any wager,
When we are both accouter'd like young men,
I'll prove the prettier fellow of the two,
And wear my dagger with the braver grace;
And speak, between the change of man and boy,
With a reed voice; and turn two mincing steps
Into a manly stride; and speak of frays,
Like a fine bragging youth: and tell quaint lies,
How honourable ladies sought my love,
Whom I denying, they fell sick and died;
I could not do with all: then I'll repent,
And wish, for all that, that I had not kill'd them:
And twenty of these puny lies I'll tell,
That men should swear on; I have discontinued school
Above a twelvemonth:—I have within my mind
A thousand raw tricks of these bragging Jacks,
Which I will practise.

Por. Why, shall we turn to men?

Ner. Fye! what a question's that,
If thou wert near a lewd interpreter?
But come, I'll tell thee all my whole device
When I am in my worthy, which stays for us
At the park gate; and therefore haste away,
For we must measure twenty miles to-day. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The same. A Garden.

Enter Launcelot and Jessica.

Laun. Yes, truly:—for, look you, the sons of the father are to be laid upon the children: therefore,
Art that I saw with my eyes, and heard with my ears:

There was none that despised his works to the latter end; all his ways were right in his sight.

And what hope is there, that I pray thee?

Love, marry you may possibly hope that your father gave you not, that you are not the Jew's daughter, if that were a kind of bastard hope, indeed; so the son of my mother should be visited upon me.

Love, truly then I fear you are dammed both by falsehood of your mother; then when I show myself, your father, I shall espouse thee, your mother; well, you are gone both ways.

Jes. I shall be saved by my husband; he hath made me a Christian.

Love, truly the more to blame he was; we were Christians enough before as many could come, by another. This making of Christ's will raise the price of hopes; if we grow to love pot-caters, we shall not shortly have a farther on the money for memory.

Enter Lorenzo.

Jes. I'll tell my husband, Lourencolet, what you say, here he comes.

Love. I shall grow jealous of you shortly, Lourenclet, if you thus get me with base persons.

Jes. To be sure, Lourencolet and I are out to see me flate, there is no mercy for me in heaven, because I am a Jew's daughter, and he says, we are no good member of the mammal creation.

Love. In converting Jews to Christianity, you raise the price of pot.

Love. I shall answer better to the commonwealth, then you see the getting up of the negro's belly; the estate is with child by you, Lourencolet.

Jes. Sire, sir, my lord, the More should be more than reason, but if she be less than an honest woman, she is, indeed, more than I took her for.

Love. How very few can play upon the word! I think, the bond grace of wit will shortly turn into silence; and Lourencolet grew commendable in none but partakers—Go in, sirrah; bid them prepare for dinner.

Lourencolet. That is done, sir; they have all stomachs.

Love. Goodly love, what a wit snapper are you? then bid them prepare dinner.

Love. That is done too, sir; only, cover is the word.

Love. Will you cover them, sir?

Love. Not so, sir, neither; I know my duty.

Love. Yet more quarrelling with occasion! wilt thou show the whole wealth of thy wit in an instant? I pray you, understand a plain man in his plain meaning: go to the fellows; bid them cover the table, serve in the meat, and we will come in to dinner.

Lourencolet. For the table, sir, it shall be served in; for the meat, sir, it shall be covered; for your coming in to dinner, sir, why, let it be as honourable and comely shall govern.

[Exit Lourencolet.

Love. O dear discretion, how his words are suited! This was his youth, this is his memory.

An army of good words; And I do know A many fools, that stand in better place, Garinish'd like him, that for a tricksy word lepied the matter.

How cheat'st thou, Jessica? And now, good sweet, say thy opinion, How dost thou like the lord Bassanio's wife?

Jes. Past all expressing: it is very meet, The lord Bassanio should be in his memory.

For, having such a blessing in his lady, He finds the joys of heaven here on earth;

And, if on earth he do not mean it, it Is reason he should never come to heaven.

Why, if two gods should play some heavenly match, And on the wager lay two earthly women, And Fortunia one, must be something else.

Paw'd with the other; for the poor rude world Hath not her faces.

Love. Even such a husband.

Jes. And what hope is that, I pray thee?

Love, marry you may possibly hope that your father gave you not, that you are not the Jew's daughter.

Jes. Nay, let me praise you, while I have a stomach.

Love. No, pray thee, let it serve for table-talk;

Then, however thou speakest, many other things I shall digest it.

Jes. Well, I'll set you forth. [Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Venice. A Court of Justice.

Enter the Duke, the Magnificoes; Antonio, Bassanio, Gratiano, Solano, and others.

Duke. What, is Antonio here?

Act. Ready, so please your grace.

Duke. I am sorry for thee; thou art come to an slamy adversary, an inhuman wretch

Unceaspable of pity, void and empty

From any dram of mercy.

And. I have heard.

Voy grace hath tawn great parts to qualify

His rigorous course; but since he stands obdine,

And that no lawfull means can carry me

Out of his enemy's reach, I do oppose

My patience to his fury; and I am arm'd

With a right courageous spirit,

The very tyranny and rage of his.

Duke. Go one, and call the Jew into the court.

Shake. He's ready at the door, he comes, my lord.

Enter Shylock.

Duke. Make room, and let him stand before our face.

Shylock, the world thinks, and I think too,

That thou art bound to this fashion of thy malice

To the last hour of act; and then, 'ts thought,

They'll show thy mercy and remorse, more strange

Than is thy strange apparent cruelty

And where thou now exact'st the penalty,

(Which is a pound of this poor merchant's flesh.)

Thou wilt not only lose the forfeiture,

But touch'd with human gentleness and love,

Forgive a melody of the principal;

Glance an eye of pity on his losses,

That have of late so hudd'ed on his back;

Enough to press a royal merchant down,

And proc't commendation of his state

From being a bankrupt, and of all grains of flight,

From stubborn Turks, and Tartars, never tryst

To offices of tender courtesy.

We all expect a gentle answer, Jew.

Shy. I have possess'd your grace of what I purport;

And by our holy Sabbath have I sworn,

To have the due and forfeit of my bond:

If you deny it, let the danger light

Upon your charter, and your city's freedom.

You'll ask me, why I rather choose to have

A weight of carrion flesh, than to receive

Three thousand ducats: I'll not answer that.

But, say, it is my honour; Is it not so?

What if my house be troubled with a rat?

And I be pleas'd to give ten thousand ducats

To have it ban'd? What, are you answered yet?

Some men there are, love not a gapping pig;

Some, that are mad, if they beheld a cat;

And others, when the bagpipe sings it the noise,

Cannot contain their urine, for affection.

Mistress of passion, sways it to the mood

Of man and woman, and punishes the grace

For your answer.

As there is no firm reason to be render'd,

Why he cannot abide a gapping pig?

Why he, a harmless necessary cat?

Why he, a swelling bagpipe but of force

Must yield to such inevitable shame,

As to offend, himself being offended;

So can I give no reason, nor I will not,
More than a lodg'd hate, and a certain loathing, I bear Antonio, that I follow thus. A losing suit against him. Are you answer'd? Bass. There is no answer, thou stinking man, To excuse the current of thy cruelty. Shy. I am not bound to please thee with my answer. Bass. Do not think I can kill the things they do not love? Shy. Hates any man the thing he would not kill? Bass. Every offence is not a hate at first. Shy. What, would'st thou have a serpent sting thee twice? Ant. I pray you, think you question with the Jew: You may as well go stand upon the beach, And bid the main flood bathe his usual height; You may as well use question with the wolf, Why he hath made the ewe bleat for the lamb; You may as well forbid the mountain pines To wag their high tops, and to make no noise, When they are fretted with the gusts of heaven; You may as well do any thing most hard, As seek to soften that (than which what's harder?) His Jewish heart:—Therefore, I do beseech you, Make no more offers, use no further means, But, with all brief and plain committance, Let me have judgment, and the Jew his will. Bass. For thy three thousand ducats here is six. Shy. If every ducat in six thousand ducats Were but as like each other, as each part, I would not draw them, I would have my bond. Duke. How shalt thou hope for mercy, rendering none? What judgment shalt I dare, doing none? You have among you many a purchase'd slave, Which, like your asses, and your dogs, and mules, You use in abject and in slavish parts, Because you bought them:—Shall I say to you, Let them die, or be free, marry them to your daughters? Why speak they under burdens? let their beds Be made as soft as yours, and let their ablutions Be season'd with such viands? You will answer, The slaves are ours:—So do I answer you; The pound of flesh, which I demand of him, Is dearly bought, is mine, and I will have it; If you deny me, yje upon your law! There is no force in the desire of revenge: I stand for judgment: answer; shall I have it? Duke. Upon my power, I may dismiss this court, Unless Bellario, a learned doctor, Whom I have sent for to determine this, Come here to-day. Salar. My lord, here stays without A messenger with letters from the doctor, New come from Padua. Duke. Bring us the letters; Call the messenger. Bass. Good cheer, Antonio! What, man, courage yet! The Jew shall have my flesh, blood, bones, and all, Ere thou shalt lose for me one drop of blood. Ant. I am a tainted wether of the flock, Meetest for death: the weakest kind of fruit Drops earliest to the ground, and so let me: You cannot better be employ'd, Bassanio, Than to live still, and write mine epitaph. Enter Nerissa, dressed like a lawyer's clerk. Duke. Came you from I'aduna, from Bellario? Ner. From both, my lord; Bellario greeets your grace. [Presents a letter. Bass. Why dost thou whet thy knife so earnestly? Shy. To whet the forreftice from that bankrupt there. Grat. Not on thy sole, but on thy soul, harsh Thou mak'st thy knife keen: but no metal can, I, not the hangman's axe, bear half the krenness Of thy sharp edge, Shy. No, none: thou hast whet enough to make. Grat. O, be thou dam'd, inexorable dog! And for thy life let justice be accurs'd. Thou mak'st the devil's quarrel: does your faith, To hold opinion with Pythagoras, That souls of animals infuse themselves Into the trunks of men: thry currist spirit Govern'd a wolf, who, hang'd for human slaughter, Even from the gallows did his fell soul fleet, And, while thou layst in thy unhallow'd dam, Infus'd itself in thee; for thy desires Are wolfsish, bloody, starv'd, and ravenous. Shy. Till thou canst rai1 the seal from off my bond, Thou but offend'st thy lungs to speak so loud: Repair thy wit, good youth; or it will fall To cureless ruin,—I stand here for law. Duke. The letter from Bellario doth commend A young and learned doctor to our court:— Where is he? Ner. He attendeth here hard by, To know your answer, whether you'll admit him. Duke. With all my heart:—some three or four of you, Go give him courteous conduct to this place.— Meantime, the court shall hear Bellario's letter. [Clerk reads.] Your grace shall understand, that, At the receipt of your letter, I am very sick: but in the instant that the meaning of your letter, which was almost of a thousand words, did first come into my head, it furnish'd with my opinion; which, better'd with his own learning, (the greatness whereof I cannot enough commend,) comes with him, at my importunity, to fill up your grace's request in my stead. I beseech you, let his lack of yeers be no impediment to let him lack a reverend estimation; for I never knew so young a body with so old a head. I leave him to your gracious acceptence, whose tribal shall better publish his commendation. Duke. You hear the learned Bellario, what he writes: And here, I take it, is the doctor come.— Enter Portia, dressed like a doctor of laws. Give me your hand: Came you from old Bellario? Por. I did, my lord. Duke. You are welcome: take your place. Are you acquainted with the difference That holds this present question in the court? Por. I am informed throughly of the cause: Which is the merchant here, and which the Jew? Duke. Antonio and old Shylock, both stand forth. Por. Is your name Shylock? Shy. Shylock is my name. Por. Of a strange nature is the suit you follow; Yet in such rule, that the Venetian law Cannot improperly your suit do allow. You stand within his danger, do you not? [To Antonio. Ant. Ay, so he says. Por. Do you confess the bond? Ant. I do. Por. Then must the Jew be merciful. Shy. On what compulsion must I? tell me that. Por. The quality of mercy is not strain'd; It dropeth, as the gentle rain from heaven Upon the place beneath: it is twice bless'd; It blesseth him that gives, and him that takes: "His mightiest in the mightiest: it becomes The crowned monarch better than his crown; His scepter shows the force of temporal power, The attribute to awe and majesty, Wherein doth sit the dread and fear of kings; But mercy is above this sceptred sway, It is enthroned in the hearts of kings, It is an attribute to God himself; And earthly power doth then show like God's, When mercy seasons justice. Therefore, Jew, Though justice be thy plea, consider this— That in the course of justice, none of us Should see salvation: we do pray for mercy; And that same prayer doth teach us all to render The deeds of mercy. I have spoken thus much,
To mitigate the justice of thy plea:
When I said below, this suit court of Venice
Must needs give sentence 'gainst the merchant there.

Sly. My deeds upon my head; I crave the law,
The penalty and forfeit of my bond.

Por. Is it a complete discharge of the money?

Sly. Yes, here I tender it for him in the court;
Yea, twice the sum: if that will not suffice,
I will be bound to pay it ten times over,
That you may know my faith and reputation.
If this will not suffice, it must appear
That malice bears down truth. And I beseech you,
Wrest once to the law to your authority;
To do great right and justice, to discover,
And teach this cruel devil of his will.

Por. It must not be: there is no power in Venice
Can alter a decree established;
'Twill be recorded for a precedent;
And many an error, by the same example,
Will rush into the state, it cannot be.

O, a Daniel come to judgment: I see, a Daniel
Young judge, how do you honest there?

Por. I pray you, let me look upon the bond.

Sly. Here's, most reverend doctor, here it is.

Por. Strick, there's thirty thousand offer'd

Sly. An oath, an oath, I have an oath in heaven
Should I perjury upon my soul?

Por. Not for Venice

Por. Why, this bond is forfeit;
A lawfully by this the law does him
A pound of flesh, to be by him cut off
Nearest the left ventricle of his heart—He merciful;
Take these two bonds, but me tear the bond.

Sly. Where it is paid according to the tenour—
It doth not cost you money, but me tear the bond.

Por. You know the law, your exposure
Hath been most sound: I change you by the law,
Whereof you are a well-deserving pillar,
Preferred by my supreme lord,
There is no power in the tongue of man
To alter me: I stay here on my bond. And Most heartily I beseech the court
To give the judgment.

Por. Why then, thus it is:
You must prepare your house for his knife, sir.
A noble judge! O excellent young man!
Por. For the intent and purpose of the law
It is a presentation to the person
Which have appear'd due upon the bond.

Por. It is a very true: O wise and upright judge!
How much more elder art thou than thy looks?
Por. Therefore, lay by your house.

Por. Ay, his breast
So says the bond: Dost it not, noble judge?
Nearest his heart, those are the very words.
Por. It is so. Are there balance here, to weigh
The flesh?

Sly. I have them ready.
Por. Have by some surgeon, Shylock, on your charge.

To stop his wounds, lest he be drove to death.

Sly. Is it so nominated in the bond?
Por. It is not so express'd: But what of that?
'Twere good you do so much for charity.

Sly. No, nor is it there.
Por. Come, merchant, have you any thing to say.

Por. And but little; I am arm'd, and well prov'd
Of your hard, Shylock! fare you well!

Durst not that I am fallen to this for you:
For here's a fortune shows herself more kind
Than is her custom: it is still her use,
For she is rich in money, and in health,
To view with hollow eye, and wrinkled brow,
An age of poverty, from which lingering penance
Of such a misery doth she cut me off.

Por. Command me to your house to-morrow:
Tell, in the process of Antonio's end,

Sly. How, I lov'd you, speak I meant in death;
And when the tale is told, bid her be judge,
Whether Bassanio had not once a love.

Por. Your wife would give you little thanks for
If she were by, to hear you make the offer.

Sly. I have a wife, whom, I protest, I love;
And she, as she was in heaven, so she could
Entreat the judge to change this cruel Jew.

Por. 'Tis well you offer it behind her back;
The wish would make else an unequitable house.

Sly. These be the Christian husbands: I have a daughter,
Would any of the stock of Harragas
Had been her husband, rather than a Christian!

Por. We strike time; I pray thee, pursue sentence.

Por. A pound of that same merchant's flesh it shall be:
The law awards it, and the law doth give it.

Sly. And you must cut this flesh from off his breast.

Por. The law allows it, and the court awards it.

Sly. Most learned judge—A sentence; come, now.

Por. Tarry a little: there is something else.

Por. This bond doth give thee here no jot of blood;
The words expressly are, a pound of flesh:
That is thy right, take them, pay the pound of flesh:
But, in the cutting it, if thou dost shed
One drop of Christian blood, thy lands and goods
Are, by the laws of Venice, confiscate
Unto the state of Venice.

Sly. O, upright judge—Mark, Jew;—O learned
Sly. Is that the law?

Por. Thyself shall see the act:
Por. As thou waggiest justice, so shall I;

Sly. Shall I have justice, more than thou desirest,

Sly. I take this offer then,—pay the bond thrice,
And let the Christian go.

Por. Here is the money.

Por. Soft.

Por. The Jew shall have all justice—soft;—no haste;—
He shall have nothing but the penalty.

Por. An upright judge, a learned judge.

Por. Therefore, prepare thee to cut off the flesh.

Por. No blood, nor cut thou less, nor more,
But just a pound of flesh; if thou tak'st more,
Or less, than a just pound,—be it but so much
As makes it light, or heavy, in the substance,
Or division of the twentieth part.

Por. One poor scruple: nay, if the scale do turn
But in the estimation of a hair,

Por. Thou diet, and all thy goods are confiscate.

Sly. A second Daniel, a Daniel, Jew:

Por. Now, infidel, I have thee on the hip.

Por. Verily, with the Jew posses' take thy forfeitures.

Sly. Give me my principal, and let me go.

Por. Have it ready for thee; here it is.

Por. He shall have nothing but the penalty.

Por. He shall have mercy and justice, and his bond.

Por. A Daniel, still say: a second Daniel—

Por. Thou shalt have nothing but the forfeiture,
To be so taken at thy peril, Jew.

Por. Why then, the devil give him good of it!

Por. Why no longer question.

Por. Tarry, Jew;

Por. The law hath yet another held on you
It is enacted in the laws of Venice,
Take some remembrance of us, as a tribute,
Not as a fee; grant me two things, I pray you,
Not to deny me, and to pardon me.
For thrice have I stood against the doth contrive,
Shall seize one half his goods; the other half
Comes to the privy coffer of the state;
And the offender's life lies in the mercy
Of the other half. I will call them both voices.
In which predicament, I say, thou stand'st:
For it appears by manifest proceeding,
That, indirectly, and directly too,
There was contrivance against the very life
Of the defendant; and thou hast incur'd
The danger formerly by me rehearsed.
Down, therefore, and beg mercy of the duke.

Duke. Beg thou may'st have leave to hang thyself:
And yet, thy wealth being forfeit to the state,
Thou hast not left the value of a cord;
Therefore, thou must be hang'd at the state's command.

[spirit.

Duke. That thou shalt see the difference of our Pardon thee life before thou ask it:
For half thy wealth, it is Antonio's;
The other half comes to the general state,
Which humbleness may drive unto a fine.
Par. Ay, for the state; not for Antonio.
Shy. Nay, take my life and all, pardon not that;
You cannot take my house, when you do take the prop.
That doth sustain my house; you take my life,
When you do take the means whereby I live.
Par. What mercy can you render him, Antonio?
Duke. Offer gratis; nothing else; for God's sake.

Ant. So please my lord the duke, and all the
To quit the fine for one half of his goods;
I am content; so he will let me have
The other half in use, to render it,
Upon his death, unto the gentleman
That lately stole his daughter;
Two things provided more; for that this favour,
He presently become a Christian;
The other, that he do record a gift,
Here in the court, of all he dies possess'd,
Unto his son Lorenzo, and his daughter.
Duke. He shall do this; or else I do recant.
The pardon, that I late pronounced here.

Par. Art thou contented, Jew, what dost thou say?
Shy. I am content.
Par. Clerk, draw a deed of gift.
Shy. I pray you, give me leave to go from hence:
I am not well; send the deed after me,
And I will sign it.

Duke. Get thee gone, but do it.

Inchristening, thou shalt have two godfathers;
Had I been judge, thou should'st have had ten more.
To bring thee to the gallows, not the font.

[Exit Shylock.

Duke. Sir, I entreat you home with me to dinner.
Par. I humbly do desire your grace of pardon;
I must away this night toward Adria,
And it is meet, I presently set forth.

Duke. I am sorry, that your leisure serves not you.
Antonio, gratify this gentleman.
For, in my mind, you are much bound to him.
Bass. Most worthy gentleman, I am and my friend,
Have by your wisdom been this day acquitted
Of grievous penalties; in lieu whereof,
Three thousand ducats, due unto the Jew,
We freely cope your courteous pains withal.
Ant. And stand indebted, over and above,
In love and service to you evermore.
Par. He is well paid that is well satisfied:
And I, delivering you, am satisfied,
And therein do account myself well paid;
My mind was never yet more mercenary.
I pray you, kind Sir, how I should do, when we meet again;
I wish you well, and so I take my leave.

Bass. Dever sir, of force I must attempt you further.
Trollus, methinks, mounted the Trojan walls,
And sight'd his soul toward the Grecian tents,
Where Ureassaid lay that night.

Jes.

In such a night,
Did Thise fearfully o'erstrip the dew
And saw the floor's shadow o'er himself,
And ran dismay'd away.

Lor.

In such a night,
Stood Dido with a willow in her hand
Upon the wild sea-banks, and wond her love
To come again to Carthage.

Jes.

In such a night,
Medea gather'd the enchanted herbs
That did renew old Helen.

In such a night,
Did Jessica steal from the wealthy Jew:
And with an unthrift love did run from Venice,
As far as Belmont.

Jes.

And in such a night,
Did young Lorenzo swear he lov'd her well;
Stealing her soul with many vows of faith,
And ne'er a true one.

Jes.

And in such a night,
Did pretty Jessica, like a little shrew,
Slander her love, and forgo it her.
Jes. I would out-night you, did no body come:
But, hark, I hear the footing of a man.

Enter Stephano.

Lor. Who comes so fast in solitary of the night?
Steph. A friend? I know, you, friend? Steph. Stephano is my name; and I bring word,
My mistress wlll) before the break of day
Be here at Belmont, she doth stray about,
But is in her prayers and prays
For happy wedlock hours.

Lor.

Who comes with her?
Steph. None, but a holy hermit, and her maid.

Lor. Sweet soul, master yet returns?
Steph. He is not, nor we have not heard from
But go we in, I pray thee, Jessica,
And ceremoniously let us prepare
Some welcome for the mistress of our house.

Enter Launcelot.

Laun. Soda, soda, we ha, he, soda, sola !

Lor. Who calls?

Laun. Soda ! did, you see master Lorenzo, and mistress Lorenzo? sola, sola !

Lor. Leave bawling, man; here.

Laun. Soda! where be here?

Lor. Here.

Laun. Tell him, there's a post come from my master, with his born full of good news; my master will be here ere morning.

[Exit. Lor. Sweet soul, let's in, and there expect their coming.

Yet no matter : Why should we go in?
My friend Stephano, signify, I pray you,
Within the house, your mistress is at hand:
And bring your musick forth into the air.

[Exit Stephano.

How sweet the moon-light sleeps upon this bank!
How will we sit, and let the sounds of musick
Creep in our ears: soft all the night,
Become the touches of sweet harmony.
Sit, Jessica. Look how the floor of heaven
Is thickest inwitd with Pattines of bright gold;
There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st,
But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quiring to the young-ey'd cherubins:
Such harmony in immortal souls
But unable, doth make a bode of decay
Groos closely close in it, we cannot hear it.

Enter Musicians.

Come, ho, and wake Diana with a hymn;
With sweetest touches piece your mistress' ear,
And draw her home with musick.

Jes. I am not merry, when I hear sweet musick.

[Music.

Lor. The reason is your spirits are attentive
For do but note a wild and wanton herd,
Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,
Fetching mad bounds, bellowing, and neighing
Which is the hot condition of their blood; [loude,
If they but hear perchance a trumpet sound,
Or the air of musick touch their ears.
You shall perceive them make a mutual stand,
Their savage eyes turn'd to a modest gaze,
By the sweet power of musick. Therefore, the poet Did feign the Orpheus drew trees, stones, and floods;

Since nought so stockish, hard, and full of rage,
But musick for the time doth change his nature:
The great air of musick touch their ears.
Now is not more'd with concord of sweet sounds,
Is fit for treasons, staggarems, and spoils;
The musick of his spirit are dull as midnight,
And his affections dark as Erebus.

Let no such man be trusted.—Mark the musick.

Enter Portia and Nerissa, at a distance.

Por. That light we see, is burning in my hall.
How far that little candle throws his beams?
So shines a good deed in a naughty world.

Ner. When the moon shone, we did not see the candle.

Por. So doth the greater glory dim the less.
A substitute shines brightly as a king,
Until a king be by; and then his state
Empties itself, as doth an inland brook
Upon the main, of which it is itself.

Ner. It is your musick, madam, of the house.

Por. Nothing is good, I see, without respect.
Methinks, it sounds much sweeter than by day.

Ner. Silence bestraws that virtue on it, madam.

Por. The crew doth sing as sweetly as the lark,
When neither is attended; and, I think,
The nightingale, if she should sing by day,
And be not heard, he would be thought
No better a musician than the wren.

How many things by season's use are
To their right praise, and true perfection...—
Peace, how! the moon sleeps with Endymion,
And would not be awak'd !

[Music ceases.

Lor. That is the voice,
Or I am much deceiv'd, of Portia.

Por. He knows me, as the blind man knows the
By the bad voice.

[Exit. Lor. Dear lady, welcome home.

Por. We have been praying for our husbands' welfare,
Which we beg, we hope, the better for our words.
Are they return'd?

Lor. Madam, they are not yet:
But there is come a messenger before,
To signify their coming.

Por. Go in, Nerissa,
Give order to my servants, that they take
No note at all of our being absent hence;—
Nor you, Lorenzo;—Jessica, nor [Museic ceases.

Por. Your husband is at hand, I hear his trumpet
We are no tell-tales, madam; fear you not.

Por. This night, methinks, is but the daylight
It looks a little paler: 'Tis a day.

[Exit. Enter Bassando, Antonio, Gratiano, and their Fol-loms.

Bass. We should hold day with the Antipodes.
If you would walk in absence of the sun.

Por. Let me give light, but let me not be lighted
By the man, this is Antorio, [friend—
To whom I am so infinitely bound.

Por. You should in all sense be much bound to
Por, as I hear, he was much bound for you. [him,
And. No more than I was well acquitted of.
Act 3.

MERCHANDT OF VENICE.

---

Por. Sir, you are very welcome to our house: It must appear in other ways than words, Therefore desist: I want this breathing. [Gratiano and Nerissa seem to talk apart.]

Gran. By yonder moon, I swear, you do me wrong; In faith, I gave it to the judge's clerk: Would he have gelt that had in his part, Since you do take it, love, so much at heart.

Por. A quarrel, ho, already? what's the matter? Gran. About a hoop of gold, a pauly ring
That he did give my ring I have, Not, no my body, nor my husband's bed: Know him I shall, I am well sure of it: Lie not a night from home; watch me, like Argus; If you do me, if I be left alone, Now, by mine honour, which is yet my own, I'll have that doctor for my bedfellow.

Ner. And I his clerk; therefore be well advis'd, How you do leave me to mine own protection.

Por. Well, do you so: let not me take him then; For, if I do, I'll mar the young clerk's pen.

Ant. Portia, forgive me this enforced wrong: And, in hearing of these many friends, I swear to thee, even by thine own fair eyes, Wherein I see myself.

Por. Mark you but that In both my eyes he doubly sees himself: In each eye one: swear by your double self, And there's an oath of credit.

Bass. Nay, but hear me: Pardon this fault, and by my soul I swear, I never more will break an oath with thee.

Ant. I once did lend my ring to his wife; Which, but for him that had your husband's ring, [To Portia.]

Por. Had quite miscarried: I dare be bound again, My soul upon the forfeit, if it work no harm: Will never more break faith advisedly.

Por. Then you shall be his surety: Give him this; And bid him keep it better than the other.

Ant. Here, lord Bassiano; swear to keep this ring, In writing, as the rest.

Bass. By heaven, it is the same I gave the doctor! Por. I had it of him: pardon me, Bassiano; For by this ring the doctor lay with me.

Ant. And pardon me, my gentle Gratiano; For that same scrubbed boy, the doctor's clerk, In lieu of this, last night did lie with me.

Gran. Why, this is like the mending of high-ways In summer, when so very wet; What! are we cuckolds, ere we have dise'd it? Por. Speak not so grossly. You are all amaz'd. Here is a letter, read it at your leisure; It comes from Padua, from Bassanio: There you shall find, that Portia was the doctor: Nerissa there, her clerk: Lorenzo here Shall witness, I set forth as soon as you, And but even now return'd; I have not wet Enter'd my house.—Antonio, you are welcome; And I have better news in store for you, Than you expect: unsceal this letter soon; There you shall find, three of your argosies Are richly come to hasten your sudden; You shall not know by what strange accident I chanced on this letter.

Ant. I am dumb.

Bass. Were you the doctor, and I knew you not? Gran. Were you the clerk, that is to make me cuckold?

Ner. Ay; but the clerk that never means to do it, Unless he lists to be a man.

Bass. Sweet doctor, you shall be my bedfellow; When I am absent, then lie with my wife.

Ant. Sweet lady, you have given me life, and For here I read for certain, that my ships Are safely come to road.

Por. How now, Lorenzo? My clerk hath some good comforts too for you.
Act 1.

Scene I.—An Orchard, near Oliver’s House.

Enter Orlando and Adam.

Orl. As I remember, Adam, it was upon this fashion bequeathed me; By v'ly, but a poor thou- sand and a crook of an and, as thou say'st, charged my brother, on his blessing, to breed me well; and there begins my sadness. My brother Jaques he keeps at school, and report speaks goldenly of his profit: for my part, he keeps me rustically at home, or, to speak more properly, stays me here at home un- kept; For call you that keeping for a gentleman of my birth, that differs not from the stalling of an ox? His horses are bred better; for, besides that they are fair with their feeding, they are taught their manage, and to that end riders dearly hired, but I, his brother, gain nothing under him but growth: for the which his animals on his dungs-

Hi, are as much bound to him as I. Besides this nothing that he so plentifully gives me, the some- thing that nature gave me, his countenance seems to take from me: he lets me feed with his hinds, bars me the place of a brother, and, as much as in him lives, mines my gratuity with my education. This is it, Adam, that grieves me: and the spirit of my father, which I think is within me, begins to mutiny against this servitude: I will no longer endure it, though yet I know no wise remedy how to avoid it.

Enter Oliver.

Adm. Yonder comes my master, your brother.

Orl. Good mor, Adam, and thou shalt hear how he will shake me up.

Oll. Now, sir! what make you here?

Orl. Nothing: I am not taught to make any thing.

Oll. What mar you then, sir? Orl. Marry, sir, I am helping you to mar that which God made, a poor unworthy brother of yours, with idleness.

Oll. Nay, sir, be better employ’d, and taught awhile. Orl. Shall I keep your hogs, and eat hunks with them? What prodigal portion have I spent, that I should come to such penury

AND charge us there upon interogatories, And we will answer all things faithfully. That’s all the use it be; The first intelligence, That my Nerissa shall be sworn on, is, Whether till the next night she had rather stay: Or go to bed now, being: two hours to day? Humbled as I come, I should wish it dark, That I were couching with the doctor’s clerk. Well, while I live, I'll fear no other thing So sure, as keeping safe Nerissa’s ring.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

Duke, living in exile.

Frederick, brother to the Duke, and usurper of his dominions.

Jaques, a Lord attending upon the Duke in his banishment.

Le Beau, a courier attending upon Frederick.

Charles, his brother.

Oliver,

Adam, a servant to Oliver.

Touchstone, a clown.

The SCENE lies, first, near Oliver’s House; afterwards, partly in the Warden’s Court, and partly in the Forest of Arden.

Oll. (Know you where you are, sir?)

Orl. O, sir, very well here in your orchard.

Oll. Know you before whom, sir?

Orl. Ay, better than he I am before knows me. I know, you are my eldest brother; and in the gentle condition of blood, you should so know me: The courtesy of nations allows y’u my better, in that you are the first-born; but the same tradition takes not away my blood, were there twenty brothers between us. I have as much of my father in me, as you; albeit, I confess, your coming before me is nearer to his reverence.

Oll. What, boy!

Orl. Come, come, elder brother, you are too young in this.

Oll. Will thou lay hands on me, villain?

Orl. I am no villain. I am the youngest son of Sir Rowland de Boys, he was my father: and he is thrice a villain, that says, such a father begetteth villains: Wert thou not my brother, I would not take this hand from thy throat, till this other hand fill my chest with thy tongue for saying so: thou hast railed on thyself.

Adm. Sweet masters, be patient; for your father’s remembrance, be at accord.

Oll. Let me go, I say.

Orl. I will not, till I please: you shall hear me. My father charged you in his will to give me good education: you have trained me like a peasant, obscuring and hiding from me all gentleman-like qualities: the spirit of my father grows strong in me, and I will no longer endure it: therefore allow me such exercises as may become a gentleman, or give me the poor allottery my father left me, a testament; with that I will go buy my fortunes.

Oll. And what wilt thou do? beg, when that is spent? Well, sir, get you in. I will not long be troubled with you: you shall have some part of your father till I pray you, leave me.

Orl. I will no further offend you than becomes me for my good.

Oll. Yet you with him, you old dog.

Orl. What say you to my reward? Most true, I have lost my teeth in your service.—God be with my old master! he would not have spoke such a word.

[Exeunt Orlando and Adam.

Oll. Is it even so? begin you to grow upon me.
I will physick your ranknes, and yet give no thousand crowns neither. Hollas, Dennis!

Enter Dennis.

Denn. Calls your worship? Oll. Was not Charles, the Duke's wrestler, here to speak with me? Denn. So please you, he is here at the door, and importunately desires to see you. Oll. Call him in. [Exit Dennis.]—'Twill be a good way; and to morrow the wrestling is.

Enter Charles.

Cha. Good morrow to your worship. Oll. Good monsieur Charles!—what's the new news at the new court? Cha. There's nothing at the court, sir; but the old news: that is, the old duke is banished by his younger brother the new duke; and three or four loving lords have put themselves into voluntary exile with him, whose lands and revenues enrich the new duke; therefore he gives them good leave to wander.

Oll. Can you tell, if Rosalind, the duke's daughter, be banished with her father? Cha. No, sir, I can tell you; but when she is banished, if she have a daughter, her cousin, so loves her,—being ever from their cradles bred together,—that she would have followed her exile, or have died to stay behind her. She is at the court, and serves for a servant, in the household, as his own daughter; and never two ladies loved as they do.

Oll. Where will the old duke live?

Cha. They say, he is already in the forest of Arden, and a many merry men with him; and there they live like the old Robin Hood of England; they say many young gentlemen flock to him every day; and fleet the time carelessly, as they did in the golden world.

Oll. What, you wrestle to-morrow before the new duke?

Cha. Marry, do I, sir; and I came to acquaint you with a matter. I am given, sir, secretly to understand, that my younger brother, Orlando, hath a disposition to come in disguis'd against me to try a fall: To-morrow, sir, I wrestle for my credit; and he that escapes me without some broken limb, shall acquit him well. Your brother is but young and tender; and, for your love, I would be loath to foil him, as I must, for my own honour, if he come in: therefore, out of my love to you, I came hither to acquaint you withal; that either you might stay him from the attempt, or break such disgrace well as he shall run into; in that it is a thing of his own search, and altogether against my will.

Oll. Charles, I thank thee for thy love to me, which thou shalt find I will most kindly requite. I had myself notice of my brother's purpose herein, and have by underhand means labour'd to dissuade him from it; but he is resolute. I'll tell thee, Charles,—it is the stubbornest young fellow of France; full of ambition, an envious emulator of every man's good parts, a secret and villainous contriver against me his natural brother; therefore use thy discretion; I had as lief thou dost break his neck as his finger: And thou wert best look to't; for if thou dost him any slight disgrace, or if he do not mighty grace himself on thee, he will practise against thee by entrap thee by some treacherous device, and never leave thee till he hath 'ta'en thy life by some indirect means or other; for, I assure thee, and almost with tears I speak, he sends not one so young and so villainous this day living anybody. But he; but should I denominate him to thee as he is, I must blush and weep, and thou must look pale and wonder.

Cha. In heartily glad I came hither to you: If he come to-morrow, I'll give him my payment: If ever he go alone again, I'll never wrestle for prize more: And so, God keep your worship! [Exit.

Oll. Farewell, good Charles. Now will I stir this gamemaker: I hope, I shall see an end of him; for my soul, yet I know not why, hates nothing more than he. Yet he's gentle; never school'd, and yet learned to handle noble device; of all sorts enchantingly beloved; and, indeed, so much in the heart of the world, and especially of my own people, who best know him, that I am altogether misprised: but it shall not be so long; this wrestler shall clear all: nothing remains, but that I kindle the boy thither, which now I'll go about. [Exit.

SCENE II.—A Lawn before the Duke's Palace.

Enter Rosalind and Celia.

Celia. I pray thee, Rosalind, sweet my coz, be merry.

Ros. Dear Celia, I show thee more than I am mistress of; and would you yet I were merrier? Unless you could teach me to forget a banished father, you must not learn me how to remember any extraordinary pleasure.

Celia. Herein, I see, thou lovest me not with the full weight that I love thee: if my uncle, thy banished father, had banished thy uncle, the duke my father, so thou hadst been still with me, I could have taught thy love to take the father's mine; so would'st thou, if the truth of thy love to me were so righteously temper'd as mine is to thee.

Ros. Well, I will forget the condition of my estate, to take part in thy love.

Celia. You know, my father hath no child but I, nor none is like to have: and, truly, when he dies, thou shalt be his heir: for what he hath taken away from thy father perchance, I will render thee again in affection; by mine honour, I will; and when I break that oath, let me turn monster; therefore, my sweet Rose, my dear Rose, be merry.

Ros. From henceforth, I will, coz, and devise sports to let me see; What think you of falling in love?

Celia. Marry, I pray thee, do, to make sport withal; but love no man in good earnest; nor in further in sport neither, than with safety of a pure blush thou may'st in honour come off again.

Ros. What shall be our sport then?

Celia. Let us sit and mock the good housewife, Fortune, from her wheel, that her gifts may henceforth be bestowed equally.

Ros. I would, we could do so; for her benefits are mightily misplaced: and the boastful blind woman doth most mistake in her gifts to women.

Celia. Troth, when one makes fair, she scarce makes honest; and those, that she makes honest, she makes very ill-favour'd.

Ros. Nay, now thou goest from fortune's office to nature's: some gifts in gifts of the world, not in the lineaments of nature.

Enter Touchstone.

Celia. No? When nature hath made a fair creature, may she not by fortune fall into the fire?—Though nature hath given us wit to flout at fortune, hath not fortune sent in this fool to cut off the argument?

Ros. Indeed, there is fortune too hard for nature; when fortune makes nature's natural the cutter off of nature's wit.

Celia. Peradventure, this is not fortune's work neither; but nature's; and perceiving our natural wits too dull to reason of such goddesses, hath sent this natural for our whetstone: for always the dulness of the fool is the whetstone of his wits. How now, wit? whither wander you?

Wit. Mistress, you must come away to your father.

Celia. Were you made the messenger?

Touch. No, by mine honour; but I was bid to come for you.

Ros. Where learned you that oath, fool?

Touch. Of a certain knight, that swore by his honour they were good pancakes, and swore by his honour the mustard was nought: now, I'll stand to...
is, the panniers were mangled, and the mustard was good; and yet was not the knight furry.

Col. How prove you that, in the great heap of your knowledge?

Ros. Ay, master; now unrnissuate your wisdom.

Tush. Stand you both forth now stroke your chins, and swear by your beards, that I am a knave.

Col. By my beard, if we had them, those are.

Tush. Were they ever yours, if I may judge by your voice? Unless I were a knave, then I were; but if you swear by that that is not, you are not fur-

Col. It's you, who let them mean so?

Tush. One that old Frederick, your father, loves, and that your father's love is enough to honour him. Enough! speak no more of him! you'll be whipped for taxation, one of these days.

Tush. The more pity, that fools may not speak wholly, what wise men do foolishly.

Col. By my truth, thou say'st true; for since the little wit, that fools have, was slumbered; the little fancy, that wise men have, makes a great show.

Here comes Monsieur Le Beau.

Enter Le Beau.

Ros. With his mouth full of news.

Col. Which he will put on us, as pigeons feed their young.

Ros. They shall we be new-images.

Col. All the better; we shall be the more mar-

Ros. Jean, Monsieur Le Beau! What's the news?

Le Beau. Fair princess, you have lost much good sport.

Ros. Sport? of what colour?

Le Beau. What colour, madam? How shall I answer?

Ros. As wit and fortune will.

Tush. Or as the destinies decree.

Col. Well said; that was laid on with a truce.

Tush. Nay, if I keep not my true.

Ros. Then thou hast thy old smell.

Le Beau. You amaze me, ladies; I would have told you of good wrestling, which you have lost the sight of.

Ros. Yet tell us the manner of the wrestling.

Le Beau. I will tell you the beginning, and, if it please your ladyships, you may see the end; for the best is yet to do; and here, where you are, they are coming to perform it.

Le Beau. The beginning, that is dead and bu-

Le Beau. There comes an old man, and his three sons, —

Col. I could match this beginning, with an old tale.

Le Beau. Three proper young men, of excellent growth and presence; —

Ros. With bills on their necks, — Be it known to all men by three particulars, —

Le Beau. The eldest of the three wrestled with Charles, the duke's wrestler; which Charles in a moment threw him, and broke three of his ribs, that there is little hope of life in him: so he bave the second, and so the third: Yonder they lie; the poor old man, their father, making such pitiful dole over them, that all the beholders take his part with wonder.

Ros. Alas! —

Tush. But what is the sport, mondeur, that the ladies have lost?

Le Beau. Alas! this, that I speak of.

Tush. Thus men may grow wise every day! it is the first time that ever I heard, breaking of ribs was sport for ladies.

Col. By this, I promise thee.

Ros. But is there any else longs to see this broken muscle in his sides? is there yet another doth upon tib-breaking? — Shall we see this wrestling, cousin?

Le Beau. You must, if you stay here; for here is the place appointed for the wrestling, and they are ready to perform it.

Col. Wonder, sure, they are coming: I let us now stay and see it.

Flourish. Enter Duke Frederick, Lords, Orlando, Charles, and Attendants.

Duke F. Comes on; since the youth will not be entreated, let one present him for his assurance.

Ros. Is yonder the man?

Le Beau. Even he, madam.

Col. Also, he is too young: yet he looks suc-

Duke F. How now, daughter, and cousin? are you crept hither to see the wrestling?

Ros. Ay, my liege; so please you give us leave.

Duke F. You will take little delight in it, I can see you, there is much odds in the men: in pity of the challenger's youth, I would fain dissuade him, but he will not be entreated: Speak to him, ladies; too if you can move him.

Col. Call him hither, good Monsieur Le Beau.

Duke F. Do so; I'll not be by. [Duke F. goes apart.

Le Beau. Monsieur the challenger, the princesses call for you.

Col. Attend them, with all respect and duty.

Ros. Young man, have you challenged Charles the wrestler?

Col. No, fair princess; he is the general chal-

Ros. I come but in, as others do, to try with him the strength of youth.

Col. Young gentleman, your spirits are too bold for your years: You have seen cruel proof of this man's strength: if you saw yourself with your eyes, or knew your self with your judgment, the fear of your adventure would counsel you to a more equal enterprise. We pray you, for your own sake, to embrace your own safety, and give over this at-

Ros. Do, young sir; your reputation shall not therefore be misapplied: we will make it our suit to the duke, that the wrestling might not go forward.

Col. I beseech you, punish me not with your hard thoughts: wherein I confess me much guilty, to deny so fair and excellent ladies anything. But let your fair eyes, and gentle wishes, go with me to my trial: wherein if I be pulled, there is but one shame that was never gracious; if killed, but one death that is willing to be: I shall do my friends no wrong, for I have none to lament me: the world no injury, for in it I have nothing: only in the world I fill up a place, which may be better sup-

Ros. The little strength that I have, I would it were with you.

Col. And mine to oke out her's.

Ros. Fear you wait. Pray heaven, I be deceived in you!

Col. Your heart's desires be with you.

Cha. Come, where is this young gallant, that so desirous to lie with his mother earth?

Col. Ready, sir; but he will hath it in a more modest working.

Duke F. You shall try but one fall.

Cha. No, I warrant your grace; you shall not entreat him to a second, that have so mightily persuad

Col. I would I were invisible, to catch the strong fellow by the leg. [Charles and Orlando wrestle.

Ros. The excellent young man.

Col. The thunderbolt in mine eye, I can tell who should down. [Charles is thrown. Shout.

Duke F. No more, no more.

Ros. Yes, I beseech your grace; I am not yet well used.

Duke F. How dost thou, Charles?

Le Beau. He cannot speak, my lord.

Duke F. Bear him away. [Charles is borne out.

Ros. What is thy name, young man?
ACT I.

AS YOU LIKE IT.

Orel. Orlando, my liege; the youngest son of sir Rowland de Bois.

Duke F. I would, thou hadst been son to some man else.
The world is too full of thy father honourable; But I did find he still mine enemy:

Thou shouldst have better pleas'd me with this deed, Hadst thou descended from another house.

But fare thee well; 'tis a gallant youth; I would, thou hadst told me of another father. [Exeunt Duke Fred. Privy, and Le Beau

Cel. Were I my father cox, would I do this?

Orel. I am more proud to be sir Rowland's son, His youngest son; and would not change that calling,

To be adopted heir to Frederick.

Ros. My father lov'd sir Rowland as his soul,

And all the world was of my father's mind:

Had I known before this young man his son, Should I have given him tears unto entreaties,

Ere he should thus have ventur'd.

Cel. Gentle cousin,
Let us go thank him, and encourage him:

My father's rough and envious disposition

Sticks me at heart. —Sir, you have well deserv'd:

If you do keep your promises in love,

But truly, as ye have exceeded promise,

Your mistress shall be happy.

Ros. [Giving him a chain from her neck.

Wear this for me; on 'tis the value of such with fortune;

That could give more, but that her hand lacks means.

Shall we go, coz?

Cel. Ay. —Fare you well, fair gentleman.

Orel. Can I not say, I thank you? My better parts

Are all thrown down; and that which here stands Is but a quintain, a more lifeless block.

Ros. He calls us back: My pride fell with my fortunes:

I'll ask him what he would: —Did you call, sir?

Sir, you have wrestled well, and overthrown

More than your enemie.

Cel. Will you go, coz?

Ros. Have with you: —Fare you well.

[Exeunt Rosalind and Celia.

Orel. What passion hangs these weights upon my tongue

I cannot speak to her, yet she urg'd conference.

Re-enter Le Beau.

O poor Orlando! thou art overthrown:

Or Charles, or something weaker, masters thee.

Le Beau. Good sir, I do in friendship counsel you

To leave this place; you have deserv'd

High commendation, true applause, and love;

Yet such is now the duke's condition,

That he misconstrues all that you have done.

The duke is humorous; what he is, indeed,

More suits you to conceive, than me to speak of.

Orel. I thank you, sir: and, pray you, tell me this;

Which of the two was daughter of the duke

That here was at the wrestling?

Le Beau. Neither his daughter, if we judge by manners;

But yet, Indeed, the shorter is his daughter:

The other is daughter to the banish'd duke,

And here deserv'd by his usurging uncle,

To keep his daughter company; whose loves

Are dearer than the natural bond of sisters.

But I can tell you, that of late this duke

 Hath taken displeasure 'gainst his gentle niece;

Grounded upon no other argument,

But that the people praise her for her virtues,

And pity her for her good father's sake;

And, on the other life, his witless gain the lady

Will suddenly break forth. —Sir, fare you well!
Hereafter, in a better world than this,

I shall desire more love and knowledge of you.

Orel. I rest much bounden to you: —fare you well! [Exit Le Beau.

Thus must I from the smoke into the smother;

From tyrant duke, unto a tyrant brother: —

But heavenly Rosalind! —

SCENE II. —A Room in the Palace.

Enter Celia and Rosalind.

Cel. Why, cousin; why, Rosalind: —Cupid have mercy! —Not a word?

Ros. No, not once thrown at a dog.

Cel. No, thy words are too precious to be cast away upon curs, throw some of them at me; come, I'll make my promise.

Ros. Then there were two cousins laid up; when the one should be tainted with reasons, and the other mad without any.

Cel. But is all this for your father?

Ros. No, some of it for my child's father: O, how full of briers is this working-day world!

Cel. They are but burs, cousin, thrown upon thee in holiday foolery; if we walk not in the trodden paths, our very petticoats will catch them.

Ros. I could shake them off my coat; these burs are in my heart.

Cel. Hem them away.

Ros. I would try; if I could cry hem, and have him.

Cel. Come, come, wrestle with thy affections.

Ros. O, they take the part of a better wrestler than myself.

Cel. O, a good wish upon you! you will try in time, in despite of a fall. —But, turning these jests out of service, let us talk in good earnest: Is it possible, on such a sudden, you should fall into so strong a liking with old sir Rowland's youngest son?

Ros. The duke my father lov'd his father dearly.

Cel. Doth it therefore ensue, that you should love his son dearly? By this kind of chase, I should hate him, for my father hated his father dearly; yet I hate not Orlando.

Cel. No 'faith, hate him not, for my sake.

Ros. Why should I not? doth he not deserve well?

Ros. Let me love him for that; and do you love him, because I do. —Look, here comes the duke.

Cel. With his eyes full of anger.

Enter Duke Frederick, with Lords.

Duke F. Mistress, despacht you with your safest haste,

And get you from our court.

Ros. Me, uncle?

Duke. You, cousin:

Within these ten days if thou be'st found

So near our publick court as twenty miles,

Thou dost for it.

Ros. I do beseech your grace,

Let me the knowledge of my fault bear with me:

If with myself I hold intelligence,

Or have acquaintance with mine own desires;

If that I do not dream, or be not frantic,

(As I do trust I am not,) then, dear uncle,

Never so much as in a thought unborn,

Did I offend your highness.

Duke. Thus do all traitors;

If their purgation did consist in words,

They are as innocent as grace itself: —

Let it suffice thee, that I trust thee not.

Ros. Yet your mistrust cannot make me a traitor:

Tell me, whereon the likelihood depends.

Duke. F. Thou art thy father's daughter, there's enough.

Ros. So was I, when your highness took his dukedom:

So was I when your highness banish'd him;

Treason is not inherited, my lord:

Or, if we did derive it from our friends,

What's that to me? my father was no traitor:

Then, good my liege, mistake me not so much,

To think my poverty is treacherous.

Cel. Dear sovereign, hear me speak.
Duke F. Ay, Celia; we stay'd her for your sake, Else had she with her father ranc'd along.
Col. I did not then entreat to have her stay, It was your pleasure, and your own remorse; I was well meaning then to value her, But now I know her, if she be a traitor, Why so am I, we still have slept together, Rose at an instant, learn'd, play'd, eat together; And when we rose, she went, like unto swans, Still we went coupled, and inseparable.
Duke F. She is too subtle for thee; and she smoothens, Her very chance, and her patience, Speak we be smother'd shall we part, sweet girl? Yes, let my father work another heir. Therefore devise with me, how we may fly, Whither to go, and what to bear with us: And do not seek to take your change upon you, To bear your griefs yourself, and leave me out: For, by this heaven, now at our sorrows pale, Say what thou canst, I'll go along with thee.
Ros. Why, whither shall we go?
Col. To seek my uncle.
Ros. Alas, what danger will it be to us, Maids as we are, to travel far so far? Beauty provoketh thieves sooner than gold. God in yourself, and your bashful attire, And with a kind of warmth smirch my face; The like do you, so shall we pass along, And never stir impsanta.
Ros. Were it not better, Because that I am more than common tall, That I did suit me all points like a man? A gallant curtey on my thigh, A bear-spear in my hand: and in my heart Lie there what hidden woman's fear there will,) We'll have a swashing and a martial outside: As many other manly cowards have, That do offscorn it with their semblances.
Col. What shall I call thee, when thou art a man?
Ros. I'll have no worse a name than Jove's own page, And therefore, look you call me, Ganymede. But what will you be call'd?
Col. Something that hath a reference to my state: No longer Celia, but Aliena.
Ros. But, cousin, what if we assay'd to steal The envish fool out of your father's court? Would not be not a comfort to our travel?
Col. He'll go along o'er the wide world with me; Leave me alone to woo him: Let's away, And get our jewels and our wealth together; Delight in the fairest time, and our match. To hide us from pursuit that will be made After my flight: Now go we in content, To liberty, and not to banishment.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The Forest of Arden.

Enter Duke Sebastian, Amiens, and other Lords, in the dress of Foresters.

Duke S. Now, my comates, and brothers in arms, Hath not the custom made this life more sweet Than that of painted pomp? Are not these woods More free from peril than the envious court? Here feel we but the penalty of Adam, The penalty of sin, the envious world, And shrillish chiding of the winter's wind; Which when it blows and blows upon my body, I ven titl I shirk with cold, I smile, and say,— This is no lighter: these are counsellors That feelingly persuade me what I am. Sweet are the uses of adversity! Which, like the toad, ugly and venomous, Wears yet a precious jewel to his head; And this our life, exempt from publick haunts, Finds tongues in trees, books in the running brooks, Sermons in stones, and good in every thing.

Ami. I would not change it: Happy is your grace, That can translate the stubbornness of fortune Into so quiet and so sweet a style.

Duke S. Come, let us thus, as we shall go and kill us venison? And yet it trims me, the poor dappled flock, Being native burghers of this desert city,— Should, in their own confines, with forkcd heads Hang their round branches gourd.

Lord. Indeed, my lord, The melancholy Jaques greives at that; And, in that kind, swears you do more usurp Than in your brother that hath banish'd you. To-day, my lord of Amiens, and myself, Did steal behind him, as besidely along Under an oak, whose antique root peeps out Upon the brook that brawls along this wood; To the which place a poor sequester'd stag, That from the hunters' aim had taken a hurt, Did come to languish; and, indeed, my lord, The wretched animal heeds not such groans, That their discharge did stretch his leathern coat Almost to bursting; and the big round tears Cour'd one another down his innocent nose In pitious chuse: and thus the halcyon fool, Much marked of the melancholy Jaques, Stood on the extremest verge of the swift brook, Augmenting it with tears.

Duke S. But what said Jaques?

Ami. He doth not moralize this spectacle:

1 Lord. O, yes, into a thousand similes. First, for his weeping in the needless stream; Poor deer, quoth he, them maketh a testament As woodchips do, giving 'em over of more: To that which had too much: Then, being alone, Left and abandon'd of his velvet friends; The right, quoth he: this misery doth part The flux of company: Anon, a careless herd, Full of the pasture, jumps along by him, And never stays to greet him: Ay, quoth Jaques, Sweep on, you fat and greedy cowards: 'Tis just the fashion: Wherefore do you look Upon these flour and broken bones before? Thus most invectively he pierce through The body of the country, city, court, Yea, and of this our life: swearing, that we Are all a herd, father, son, brother, sister, Worse, To fright the animals, and so kill them up, In their assign'd and native dwelling place.

2 Duke S. And, if you did leave him in this contempla- tion; We did, my lord, weeping, and cried: Upon the sobbing deer.

Duke S. Show me the place; I love to come in these sullen fits, For then he's full of matter.

2 Lord. I'll bring you to him straight.

[Exeunt.]}
SCENE II.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter Duke Frederick, Lords, and Attendants.

Duke F. Can it be possible, that no man saw them? It cannot be: some villains of my court Are of consent and sufferance in this.

1 Lord. I cannot hear of any that did see her.

The Duke frowns on her attendants of his chamber, Saw her a-bed; and, in the morning early, They found the bed untreasur'd of their mistress.

2 Lord. My lord, the roysthul clown, at whom so Your grace was wont to laugh, is also missing, [off Hesperia, the princess gentlewoman Confesses, that she secretly o'erheard Your daughter and her cousin much commend The parts and graces of the wrestler That did but lately fill the slenary Charles; And she believes, wherever they are gone, That youth is surely in their company.

Duke F. Send to his brother; fetch that gallant If he be absent, bring his brother to me; [hither I'll make him find him: do this suddenly; And let not search and inquisition quail To bring again these foolish runaways. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Before Oliver's House.

Enter Orlando and Adam, meeting.

Orl. Who's there? Adam. What! my young master?—O, my gen-" tle master, O, my sweet master, O you memory Of old sir Rowland! why, what make you here? Why are you virtuous? Why do people love you? And wherefore are you gentle, strong, and valiant? Why would you be so fain to overcome The lony priser of the humorous day? Your praise is come too swiftly home before you.

Know you not, master, to some kind of men Their graces serve them but as enemies? No more do yours; your master, a true master, Are sanctified and holy traitors to you. O, what a world is this, when what is comely Envenoms him that bears it! Adam. What, why the master?—Adam. O unhappy youth, Come not within these doors; within this roof The enemy of all your graces lives; Your brother—no, no brother; yet do: Yet not the son:—I will not call him son— Of him I was about to call his father.— Hath heard your praises; and this night he means To burn the lodging where you use to lie, And you within it: if he fail of that, He will have other means to cut you off; I overheard him, and his practices. This is no place, this house is but a butchery; Adieu, fear it, do not enter it.

Orl. Why, whither, Adam, wouldst thou have me go? Adam. No matter whither, so you come not here. Orl. What, wouldst thou have me go and beg my food? Or, with a base and bolsterous sword, enforce A thievish living on the common road? This I must not, no, no brother; yet do: Yet this I will not do, do how I can; I rather will subject me to the malice Of a diverted blood, and bloody brother. Adam. Go not, go not: I have five hundred crowns The thirsty hire I say'd under your father, Which I did store, to be my foster-nurse, When service should in my old limbs lie lame, And which is more, I find it in your own; Take that: and He that doth the ravens feed, Yea, providently caters for the sparrow, Be comfort to my age! Here is the gold; All this I give you; be ye my servant: Though I look old, yet I am strong and lusty: For in my youth I never did apply Hot and rebellious liquors in my blood; Nor did not with unashamed forehead woo The means of weakness and debility; Therefore my age is as a lusty winter, Frosty, but kindly: let me go with you; I'll do the service of a younger man In all your business and necessities.

Orl. O good old man; how well in thee appears The constant service of the youthful sword! When service sweat for duty, not for meed! Thou art not for the fashion of these times, Where none will sweat, but for promotion; And having that, do choke their service. Even with the having: it is not so with thee. But, poor old man, thou prun'st a rotten tree, That cannot so much as a blossom yield, In lieu of thy leaves and branches: But come thy ways, we'll go along together; And ere we have thy youthful wages spent, We'll light upon some settled low content. Adam. Master, go on; and I will follow thee, To the last gasp, with truth and loyalty. From seventeen years till now almost fourscore Here lived I, but now live here no more. At seventeen years many their fortunes seek: But at fourscore, it is too late a week; Yet fortune cannot compensate me better, Than to die well, and not my master's debtor. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Forest of Arden.

Enter Rosalind in boys' clothes; Celia drest like a Shepherdess, and Touchstone.

Ros. O Jupiter! how weary are my spirits! Touch. I care not for my spirits, if my legs were not weary.

Ros. I could find in my heart to disgrace my man's apparel, and to cry like a woman: but I must comfort the weaker vessel, as doublet and hose ought to show itself courageous to petticoat; therefore, courage, good Aliena. Orl. I pray you, bear with me; I can go no further. Touch. For my part, I had rather bear with you, than bear you; yet I should bear no cross, if I did bear you; for, I think, you have no money in your purse.

Ros. Well, this is the forest of Arden. Touch. Ay, now am I in Arden: the more fool I; when I was so pretty, I was in a better place; but travellers must be content. Ros. Ay, be so, good Touchstone: Look you, who comes here; a young man, and an old, in solemn talk.

Enter Corin and Silvius.

Cor. That is the way to make her scorn you still. Sil. O Corin, that thou knew'st how I do love her! Cor. I partly guess; for I have lov'd ere now. Sil. No, Corin, being old, thou canst not guess; Though in thy youth thou wast as true a lover As ever sigh'd upon a midnight pillow: But if thy love were ever like to mine, (As sure I think did never man love so,) How many actions most ridiculous Hast thou been, or must do, to thy fantasy? Cor. Into a thousand that I have forgotten. Sil. O, thou didst then ne'er love so heartily: If thou remember'st not the slightest folly That ever I did make thee run into, Thou hast not lov'd: Or if thou hast not sat as I do now, Wearying thy heart in thy mistress' praise, Thou hast not lov'd: Or if thou hast not broke from company, Abruptly, as my passion now makes me, Thou hast not lov'd: O Thebe, Phoebe! [Exit Silvius.

Ros. Alas, poor shepherd! searching of my wond, I have by hard adventure found mine own. Touch. And I mine: I remember, when I was in love, I broke my sword upon a stone, and bid him take that for coming a night to Jane Smale, and I redding myself kissing her in the same, the cow’s dogs that her pretty chipp’d hands had milk’d; and I remember the woeing of a pinched instead of her; from whom I took two eods, and, giving love they’t again, said with weeping tears: Wear these for my sake. We, that are true lovers, run into strange capers; but as all is mortal in nature, so is all nature in love mortal in folly.

ros. Thou speakest wiser, than thou art ware of, Touch. Nay, I shall never be ware of mine own wit, till I break my shins against it.

ros. Job’s! Job’s!: this shepherd’s passion is much upon my fashion.

touch. And mine; but it grows something stale with me.

cel. I pray you, one of you question yond man, If he for gold will give us any food; I faint almost to death.

Touch. Helen! you, clown!

ros. Peace, peace, peace! he’s not thy kinsman.

ros. Good even to you, friend.

cor. Who calls?

touch. Your better, sir.

cor. Else are they very wretched.

ros. Peace, I say—good even to you, friend.

cor. Here’s a clown, and to you all.

ros. I pray thee, shepherd, if that love, or gold, Can in this desert place buy entertainment. Bring us where we may rest ourselves, and feed: Here’s a young maid, with travel much oppress’d, And faints for success.

cor. Fair sir, I pity her. And wish for her sake, more than for mine own; My fortunes were more able to relieve her: But I am shepherd to another man, And do not sheer the fleeces that I graze; My master is of churchly disposition, And little recks to find the way to heaven By doing deeds of hospitality. Besides, his cote, his flocks, and bounds of feed, Are now on sale, and at our sheepcote now, My reason of his absence, there is nothing That you will feed on; but what is, come see, And in my voice most welcome shall you be.

ros. What is he that shall buy his flock and pasture [proverb].

cor. That young swain that you saw here but Thee little cares for buying any thing.

ros. I pray thee, if it stand with honesty, Buy thou the cottage, pasture, and the flock, And thou shalt have to pay for it of us.

cel. And we will mend thy wages: I like this place, And willingly could waste my time in it.

cor. Assuredly, the thing is to be sold: Go with me; if you like, upon report, The cell, the provident, and this kind of life, I will your very faithful feeder be, And buy it with your gold right suddenly. [Exit.]

SCENE V.—The same.

Enter Amiens, Jaques, and others.

SONG.

Ami. Under the Greenwood tree
Who loves to lie with me?

Under the Greenwood tree, under the Greenwood tree,
My lady loves to lie with me.

Jaq. More, more, I pray thee, more.

Ami. It will make you melancholy, monsieur Jaques.

Jaq. I thank it. More, I pray thee, more. I can suck melancholy out of a song, as a weasel sucks eggs: More, I pray thee, more.

Ami. My voice is ragged; I know, I cannot please you.

Jaq. I do not desire you to please me, I do desire you to sing: Come, more; another stanza; Call me, only another stanza.

Ami. What you will, monsieur Jaques.

Jaq. Nay, I care not for their names; they owe me nothing. Will you sing?

Ami. I know not how you request it to please myself.

Jaq. Well then, if ever I think any man, I’ll thank you: but that they call compliment, is like the encounter of two dogs apes; and when a man thanks me heartily, methinks, I have given him a penny, and he rends me the beggars thanks. Come, sing; and you that will not, hold your tongues.

Jaq. Well, I’ll end the song. Sirs, cover the while; the duke will drink under this tree: he hath been all this day to look you.

Jaq. And I have been all this day to avoid him. He is too disputable for my company: I think of as many matters as he; but I give heaven thanks, and make no boast of them. Come, warble, come.

SONG.

Who shall ambition shun, [All together here.]

And love to live & the sun,

Seeking the food he eats,

And pleased with what he gets,

Come hither, come hither, come hither,

Here shall he see

No enemy,

But winter and rough weather.

Jaq. I’ll give you a verse to this note, that I made yesterday in des-pite of my invention.

Ami. And I’ll sing it.

Jaq. The same.

If it do come to pass,

That any man turns ass,

Leaving his wealth and can,

A stichborn well to please,

Distribute, distribute,

Here shall he see,

Gross fools as he,

An if he will come to Ami.

Ami. What’s that distribute?

Jaq. ‘Tis a (reck Invocation, to call fools into a circle.—I’ll go sleep if I can; if I cannot, I’ll fall against all the first-born of Egypt.

Ami. And I’ll go seek the duke; his banquet is prepar’d. [Exit severally.

SCENE VI.—The same.

Enter Orlando and Adam.

Adam. Dear master, I can go no further; O, I die for new-near! I lie I down, and measure out my grave. Farewell, kind master.

Orl. Why, how now, Adam! no greater heart in thee? Live a little; comfort a little; cheer thyself a little; this unhappiness you will not find anything; I will either be food for it, or bring it for food to thee. Thy conceit is nearer death than thy powers. For my sake, be comfortable; hold death awhile at the arm’s end: I will here be with thee presently; and if I bring thee not something to eat, I will give thee leave to die: but if thou diest before I come, thou art a mocker of my labour. Well said! thou look’d cheerily; and I will be with thee quoth Adam, with thee, and always of thee, unmovedly: thou hast not yet told me any thing to do.

Jaq. More, more, I pray thee, more.

Ami. Under the Greenwood tree
Who loves to lie with me?

Under the Greenwood tree, under the Greenwood tree,
My lady loves to lie with me.

Duke S. I wish he be transform’d into a beast; For I can no way find him like a man.

I. Lord. My lord, he is but even now gone hence; Here was he merry, hearing of a song.

Duke S. If he, compact of jats, grow musical,
We shall have shortly discoursed in the spheres—
Go, seek him; tell him I would speak with him.

Enter Jaques.

1 Lord. He saves my labour by his own approach.
Duke S. Why, how now, monsieur! what a life is this,
That your poor friends must woo your company?
What! you look merrily.
Jaq. A worthy fool! I met a fool 'tis the forest,
A motley fool;—a miserable world!—
As I do live by food, I met a fool;
Who led him down and bask'd him in the sun,
And ral'd on lady Fortune in good terms,
In good set terms,—and yet we were fools.
Good morrow, fool, quoth I: No, sir, quoth he,
Call me not fool, till heaven hath sent me fortune:
And then he drew a dial from his pocket,
And looking on it with jux'te-lustre views,
Says, very wisely, It is ten o'clock:
Thus may we see, quoth he, how the world wags:
'Tis but an hour ago, since it was nine:
And, after an hour more, 'twill be eleven;
And, so from hour to hour, we ripe and ripe,
And then, from hour to hour, we rot and rot,
And thereby hangs a tale.
When I did hear
The mob cry with mirth and mirth:
My lungs began to crowd like chanticleer,
That fools should be so deep contemplative;
And I did laugh, sans intermission,
And look upon his dial—Oh! a fool
A worthy fool! Motley's the only wear.
Duke S. What fool is this?
Jaq. O worthy fool!—One that hath been a nearer
And says, if ladies be but young, and fair,
They have the gift to know it: and in his brain,—
Which is as dry as the remainder bisket
After a voyage,—he hath strange places cram'd
With observation, there where bell's have knock'd to church.
In mangled forms:—O, that I were a fool!
I am ambitious for a motley coat.

Duke S. Thou shalt have one.
Jaq. Thus it is.
It is my only suit;
Provided, that you weed your better judgments
Of all opinion that grows rank in them,
That I am wise. I must have liberty
With a great lankness of the time,
To blow on whom I please; for so fools have:
And they that are most galled with my folly,
Most they must laugh:—And why, sir, must they so?
The wind is on the mountain, and the sun:
To that fool doth very wisely apply
Doth very foolishly, although he smart,
Not to seem senseless of the bob: if not,
The wise man's folly is anatomiz'd
Even by the sanguinary glances of the fool.
Invest me in my motley; give me leave
To speak my mind, and I will through and through Cleanse the fool body of the infected world,
If they will patiently receive my medicine.

Duke S. Fye on thee! I can tell what thou wouldst do.
Jaq. What, for a counter, would I do, but good?
Duke S. Most mischievous, fair sin, in chiding
For thou thyself hast been a libertine, [sin:
As sensual as the brutish sing itself;—
And all the embossed sores, and head'd evils,
That thou with licentiousness hast caught,
Wouldst thou disgorge into the general world.
Jaq. Why, who cries out on pride,
That can therein tax any private party?
Doth it not flow as hugely as the sea?
Till that the very very means do ebb?
What woman in the city do I name,
When that I say, The city woman bears
The title of princes on unworthy shoulders?
Who can see in, and say, that is mean her,
When such a one as she, is such her neighbour?
Or what is he of basest function,
That says, his bravery is not on my cost,
(Thinking that I mean him,) but therein suits
His folly to the measure of his speech?
There then; How, what then? Let me see wherein
My tongue hath wrong'd him: if it do him right,
Then he hath wrong'd himself; if he be free,
Wy then, my taxing like a wild goose flies,
Uncleam'd of any man,—But who comes here?

Enter Orlando, with his sword drawn.

Orl. Forbear, and eat no more.

Jaq. A worthy fool! Why, I have eat none yet.
Orl. Nor shall not, till necessity be serv'd.
Jaq. Of what kind should this cock come of?
Duke S. Art thou thus bolden'd, man, by thy distress?
Or else a rustic despiser of good manners,
That in civility thou seem'st so empty?
Orl. You touch'd my vein at first; the thorny point
Of bare distress hath taken from me the show
Of smooth civility: yet am I inland bred,
And know some nurture: But forbear, I say;
He dies that touches any of this fruit,
Till I and my affairs are answered.
Jaq. An you will not be answered with reason,
I must die.
Duke S. What would you have? Your gentleness shall
More than your force move us to gentleness.

Orl. I almost die for food, and let me have it.
Duke S. Sit down and feed, and welcome to our table.

Orl. Speak you so gently? Pardon me, I pray
I thought, that all things had been savage here;
And therefore put I on the countenance
Of stern commandment: But whate'er you are,
That in this desert inaccessible,
Under the shade of melancholy boughs,
Lost and neglect the creeping hours of time;
If ever you have look'd on better days;
If ever been where belts have knock'd to church;
If ever sat at any good man's feast;
If ever from your eye-lids wip'd a tear,
And know what 'tis to pity, and be pitied;
Orl. Then, forbear your food a little while,
Whiles, like a doe, I go to find my fawn,
And give it food. There is an old poor man,
Who after me hath many a wise child,
Limp'd in pure love: till he be first suffic'd—
Oppress'd with two weak evils, age, and hunger,
I will not touch a bit.
Duke S. Go find him out,
And we will nothing waste till you return.
Orl. I thank ye; and be bless'd for your good comfort! [exit.

Duke S. Thou seest, we are not all alone unhappy.

This wide and universal theatre
Presents more woeful pageants than the scene
Wherein we play in.
Even in the cannon's mouth: And then, the just In fair round belly with goodround limb, [stc; With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut, Full of wise saws and modern instances, And so he plays his part: The sixth age shifts Into the lean and slipper'd pantaloon; With spectacles on nose, and pouch on side; His youthful flow how well set, a world too wide For his shrunk shank; and his big manly voice, Turning again towards child-like treble, pipes. And whistles in his sound. Last scene of all, That ends this strange eventful history, Is second childishness, and mere oblivion; Sans teeth, sans eyes, sans taste, sans everything.

Enter Orlando, with Adam.

Duke S. Welcome: Set down your venerable And let him feed. [barden.]

Orl. I thank you most for him. Adam. So had you need; I scarce can speak to thank you for myself.

Duke S. Welcome, fall to: I will not trouble you As yet, to question you about your fortunes — give us some mustard: and, good counsel, sing: Amsens singa. SONG.

I. Blow, blow, thou winter wind, Thou dost not blow so nigh As man's ingratitude; Thy tooth is not so keen, Because they art not seen, Although they breathe so rude. Heigh, ho! sing, heigh, ho! unto the green holly! Most friendship is felicity, most loving more fully: Thou, heigh, heigh, the holly! This life is most jolly.

II. Present, present, thou bitter sky, That dost not blow so nigh As brother forget d THough thou the waters warp, Thy singing is not sorry.
Heigh, ho! sing, heigh, ho! are we.

Duke S. If that you were the good Sir Rowland's son,— As you have whipter'd faithfully, you were: And as mine eye doth his engiess witness Most truly limited, and living in your face,— He truly welcome bither: I am the duke, That lov'd your father: The residue of your for. Go to my cave and tell me. — (Good old man, [true. Thou art right welcome as thy master is; Support him by the arm. Give me your hand, And let me all your fortunes understand. [Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter Duke Frederick, Oliver, Lords, and Attendants.

Duke F. Not see him since? Sir, sir, that cannot be: But were I not the better part made mercy, I should not seek an absent argument Of my revenge, thou present: But look to it: First, the young boy, where is that boy's pantaloon? Seek him with candle: bring him dead or living, Within this two remon, or turn thou no more To seek a living in our territory. Thy lands, and all, and all that thou dost call thine, Worth seizure, do we seize into our hands; Till thou canst quit thee by thy brother's mouth, Of what we think against thee.

Ol. O, that thy highness knew my heart in this: I never lov'd my brother in my life.

Duke F. More villain thou. — Well, push him out And let no officers, of such a nature as of doors: Make an extent upon his house and lands: Do this expediently, and turn him going. [Exit.

SCENE II.—The Forest.

Enter Orlando, with a paper.

Orl. Hang there my verse, in witness of my love and truth, thou, thrice crowned queen of my love With the same eye, from thy pale space above, Thy huntress' name, that my full life doth sway, O Rosalind! these trees shall be my books, And in their bark's my thoughts 'I char character; That every leaf, which in this forest looks: Shall see thy virtue witnessed every where. Run, run, Orlando; carve, on every tree, The fair, the chase, and unexpressive she. [Exit.

Enter Corin and Touchstone.

Cor. And how like you this shepherd's life, master Touchstone?

Gra. Such a one is a natural philosopher. Wast ever in court, shepherd? —

Cor. Nor, truly.

Touc. Then thou art damned. —

Cor. Nay, I hope —

Touc. Truly, thou art damned; like an ill-rosed apple, Sir.

Cor. For not being at court? Your reason.

Touc. Why, if thou never wast at court, thou never saw'st good manners; if thou never saw'st good manners, thou hast not mannerly hands; and wickedness is sin, and sin is damnation; Thou art in a parlous state, shepherd. —

Cor. Not a whit, Touchstone: those, that are good manners at the court, are not so generous in the country is most mockable at the court. You told me, you salute not at the court, but you kiss your hands; that courtesy would be uncleanly, if courtiers were shepherds.

Touc. Instance, briefly; come, instance.

Cor. Why, we are still handling our eyes; and their felis, you know, are greasy.

Touc. Why do not your courtier's hands sweat? and is not the grease of a maunton as wholesome as the sweat of a man? Shallow, shallow: A better instance, I say, come. —

Cor. No, no, our hands are hard.

Touc. Your tips will feel them the sooner. Shallow, again: A more sounder instance, come.

Cor. And they are often t'ari'd over the surgery of our sheep; And would you have us kiss thay? The courtiers' hands are perfumed with civet.

Touc. Most shallow man! Thou worms-meat, in middle moist meat piece of flesh! Indeed! I learn of the wise, and perpend: Civet is of a baser birth than tar: the very uneclenly flux of a cat. Mend the instance, shepherd.

Cor. Had you not coolly a wit for me; I'll rest.

Touc. Witt thou rest damn'd? God help thee, shallow man! God make incision in thee! thou art raw.

Cor. Sir, I am a true labourer; I earn that I eat, get that I wear; owe no man hate, envy no man's happiness; glad of other men's good, content with my harm: and the greatest of all that pride is, to see my eyes graze, and my lamb suck.

Touch. That is another simple sin in you; to bring the ewes and the rams together, and to offer to get your living by the copulation of cattle: to be bawd to a bell-wether; and to betray a she-lamb of a twelvemonth, to a crooked-pated, old, cuckoldly ram, out of all reasonable match. If thou be'st not damn'd for this, the devil himself will have not shepherds; I cannot see else how thou shouldst 'scape.

Cor. Here comes young master Ganymede, my new mistress's brother.

Enter Rosalind, reading a paper.

Ros. From the east to western Ind,
No jewel is like Rosalind.
Her worth, being mounted on the mind,
Through all the world bears Rosalind.
All the pictures, fairest liv'd
Are but black Rosalind.
Let no face be kept in mind,
But the fair of Rosalind.

Touch. I'll rhyme you so, eight years together; dinner, and suppers, and sleeping hours excepted: it is the right butter-woman's rate to market.

Ros. Out, fool! Touch. For a taste:
If a hard do lack a bind,
Let him seek out Rosalind,
If the cat will after kind,
So be, sure, will Rosalind.
Without garments, liv'd,
So must slander Rosalind.
They that reap, must sheaf and bind;
Then to earn with Rosalind.
Sweetest nut hath sourset wind,
Such a nut is Rosalind.
He thatsweetest Rose will find,
Must find love's prick, and Rosalind.

This is the very gallop of verses; Why do you infect yourself with them?

Ros. Peace, you dull fool! I found them on a tree.

Touch. Truly the tree yields bad fruit.

Ros. I'll grapp' it with you, and then I shall graff' it with you. Then it will be the best tree in the country: for you'll be rotten ere you be half ripe, and that's the right virtue of the mediocr.

Touch. You have said; but whether wisely or no, let the forest judge.

Enter Celia, reading a paper.

Ros. Peace!

Here comes my sister, reading; stand aside.

Cel. Why should this desert silent be?
For it is unpunish'd? No!
 Tongues I'll hang on every tree,
That shall civil sayings show:
Some, how brief the life of man
Runs his errant pilgrimage:
That the stretching of a span
Bucket in his sum of age.
Some, of violated vows
Tend the souls of friend and friend:
But upon the fairest boughs,
Or at every sentence's end.
Will I Rosalinda write;
Teaching all that read to know
The quintessence of every sprite
Heaven would in little show.
Therefore here a nature charg'd
Terry with souls and suffering.
With all graces wide enlarg'd:
Nature present'st distill'd

Helen's cheek, but not her heart:
Cleopatra's majesty:
Atalanta's better part,
Sad Lucretia's modesty.
Thus Rosalind of many parts
By every eye popular'd
Of many faces, eyes, and hearts,
To have the toucher dearest prize'd;
Heaven would that she these gifts should have,
And I to live and die her slave.

Ros. O most gentle Jupiter!—what tedious homely of love you have wearied your parishioners with, and many a threat, how patience, good people.

Cel. How now! back friends,—Shepherd, go off a little.—Go with him, sirrah.

Touch. Come, shepherd, let us make an honourable retreat; to bed with bag and baggage, yet with scrip and scrabbage.

[Exeunt Corin and Touchstone.

Cel. Didst thou hear these verses?

Ros. Ay, yes, I heard them all, and more too: for some of them had in them more feet than the verses, would bear.

Cel. That's no matter; the feet might bear the verses.

Ros. Ay, but the feet were lame, and could not bear themselves without the verse, and therefore stood lamely in the verse.

Cel. But didst thou hear, without wondering how thy name should be hang'd and curd upon these trees?

Ros. I was seven of the nine days out of the wonder, before you came; for look here what I found on a palm-tree: I was never so be-thymed since Pythagoras' time, that I was an Irish rat, which I can hardly remember.

Cel. Trow you, who hath done this?

Ros. Is it a man?

Cel. And chain, that you once wore, about his neck: Change you colour?

Ros. I pr'ythee, who?

Cel. O lord, lord! it is a hard matter for friends to meet; but mountains may be removed with earthquakes, and so encounter.

Ros. Nay, but who is it?

Cel. Is it possible?

Ros. Nay, I pray thee now, with most petitionary vehemence, tell me who it is.

Cel. O wonderful, wonderful, and most wonderful, wonderful, and yet again wonderful, and after that out of all whooping!

Ros. Good my compulsion! dost thou think, though I am caparison'd like a man, I have a doubt and lose it with a devil? then it will be the earliest fruit in the country: for you'll be rotten ere you be half ripe, and that's the right virtue of the mediocr.

Touch. You have said; but whether wisely or no, let the forest judge.

Enter Celia, reading a paper.

Cel. What manner of man is he of God's making? What manner of man is his head worth a hat, or his chin worth a beard?

Cel. Nay, he hath but a little beard.

Ros. Why, God will send more, if the man will be thankful: let me stay the growth of his beard, if thou delay me not the knowledge of his chin.

Cel. It is young Orlando; that tripp'd up the wreather's heel, and thy heart, both in an instant.

Ros. Nay, but the devil take mocking; speak sad brow, and true maid.

Cel. I'll faith, coz, 'tis he.

Ros. Orlando.

Cel. Orlando.

Ros. Alas the day! what shall I do with my doubt and homework? What did he when thou saw'st him? What art thou? How look'd he? Wherein went he? What makes he here? Did he ask for me? Where remains he? How parted he with thee?
As You Like It

Act 3.

and when shall then see him again? Answer me in one word.

Cec. You must borrow me Garagantua's mouth first: 'Tis a word too great for any mouth of this age's size. To say, or, and, no, to these particulars, is more than to answer in a catechism.

Ros. But dost thou know that I am in this forest, and in man's apparel? Looks he as freshly as he doth now be blemished?

Cec. It is as easy to count atoms, as to resolve the propositions of a lover ... but take a taste of my finding him, and relish it with a good observance. I found him under a tree, like a dropp'd acorn.

Ros. Call'd Jove's tree, when it drops forth such fruit.

Cec. Give me audience, good madam.

Ros. Proceed.

Cec. There he lay, stretch'd along, like a wound-ed knight.

Ros. Though it be pity to see such a sight, it well becomes the ground.

Cec. Cry, obstil! to thy tongue, I pr'ythee; it curvets very unseasonably. He was furnish'd like a hunter.

Ros. O monstrous! he comes to kill my heart.

Cec. I would ung my song without a burden: thou bring'st me out of time.

Ros. Do you not know I am a woman? when I think, I must speak. Sweet, say on.

Enter Orlando and Jaques.

Cec. You bring me out — Soft! comes he not here?

Ros. Tis he: blink by, and note him.

[Ceils and Rosalind retire.

Jaq. I thank you for your company; but, good faith, I had as lief have been myself alone.

Cec. And so had I; but yet, for fashion sake, I thank you for your company; fain, fain, I did, with you.

Ros. And so desire we may be better strangers.

Cec. I pray you, mar no more trees with writing love's musty leaves in their barks.

Ros. Or pr'ythee, mar no more of my verses with reading them ill-favouredly.

Jaq. Rosalind is your love's name? She is.

Cec. I do not like her name.

Ros. There was no thought of pleasing you, when she was christened.

Cec. What statute is she of? Or, just as high as my heart.

Ros. You are full of pretty answers: Have you not been acquainted with goldsmiths' wives, and could them out of rings?

Cec. If I answer you right painted cloth, from whence you have studied your questions.

Jaq. You have a nimble wit; I think it was made of Atlanta's heels. Will you sit down with me? and we two will range against our mistress the world, and all our misery.

Cec. I will chide no breather in the world, but myself; against whom I know most faults.

Jaq. The worst fault you have, is to be in love.

Cec. 'Tis a fault I will not change for your best virtue. I am weary of you.

Jaq. For truth, I was seeking for a fool, when I found you.

Cec. He is drest in the brook; look but in, and you shall see him.

Jaq. There shall I see mine own figure.

Cec. Which I take to be either a fool, or a cypher.

Jaq. I'll tarry no longer with you; farewell, good signior love.

Cec. I am glad of your departure; adieu, good monsieur melancholy.

[Exit Jaques. — Cecils and Rosalind come forward.

Ros. I will speak to him like a saucy lacquey, and under that habit play the knave with him. Do you hear, foresters?
Act 3.

AS YOU LIKE IT. 175

garter'd, your bonnet unbound, your sleeve unbuttoned, your shoe untied, and every thing about you demonstrating a careless desolation. But you are no such man; you are rather point-device in your accomplishments; as loving yourself, than seeming the lover of others.

Orrl. Fair youth, I would I could make thee believe I love.

Ros. Me believe it? you may as soon make her that you love believe it; which, I warrant, she is apt to do, than to confound and she does: that is one of the points in the which women still give the lie to their consciences. But, in good sooth, are you he that hangs the verses on the trees, wherein Rosalind named me in that same manner.

Orrl. I swear to thee, youth, by the white hand of Rosalind, I am that he, that unfortunate he.

Ros. But are you so much in love as your rhymes speak?

Orrl. Neither rhyme nor reason can express how much.

Ros. Love is merely a madness; and, I tell you,
dear, I as well a dark house and a whip, as madmen do: and the reason why they are not so punished and cured, is, that the lunacy is so ordinary, that the whippers are in love too: Yet I profess concerning it by love.

Orrl. Did you ever cure any so?

Ros. Yes, one; and in this manner. He was to imagine me his love, his mistress; and I set him every day to woo me: At which time would I, being a most moonish youth, grieve, be effeminate, changeable, longing, and liking; proud, fantastical, apish, shallow, inconstant, full of tears, full of smiles; for every passion something, and for no passion truly any thing, as boys and women are for of the most part cattle of this colour: would now like him, now loath him; then entertain him, then for-swear him; now weep for him, then spit at him; than have his hyde and humour of love, to a living humour of madness; which was, to for-swear the full stream of the world, and to live in a nook merely monastic: And thus I cured him;
and this way will I take upon me to wash your liver as clean as a sound sheep's heart; that there shall not be one spot of love in't.

Orrl. I would not be cured, youth.

Ros. Go with me to it, and I'll show it you: and, by the way, you shall tell me where in the forest
you live: Will you go?

Orrl. With all my heart, good youth.

Ros. Nay, you must call me Rosalind:—Come, sister, will you go? [Excus'd.

SCENE III.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey; Jaques at a distance, observing them.

Touch. Come apart, good Audrey; I will fetch up your goats, Audrey. And how, Audrey? am I the man yet? Dost my simple feature content you?

And. Your features! Lord warrant us! what features?

Touch. I am here with thee and thy goats, as the most capricious poet, honest Ovid, was among the Goths.

Aud. O knowledge ill-inhabited! worse than Jove in a thatch'd house! [Aside.

Touch. When a man's verses cannot be understood, nor a man's good wit seconded with the for-feet upon his understanding, it strikes a man more dead than a cold herring in a little room:—
Truly, I would the gods had made thee poetical.

Aud. I do not know what poetical is: Is it honest indeed, and word? Is it a true thing?

Touch. No, truly; for the truest poetry is the most feigning; and lovers are given to poetry; and what they swear in poetry, may be said, as lovers, they do feign.

Aud. Do you wish then, that the gods had made me poetical?

Touch. I do, truly, for thou swear'st to me, thou art honest; and, if thou wert a poet, I might have some hope thou didst feign.

Aud. Would you not have me honest?

Touch. No, truly, unless thou weresthird-favour'd; for honesty coupled to beauty, is to have honey a sauce to sugar.

Jaq. A material fool! [Aside.

Aud. Well, I am not fair; and therefore I pray the gods make me honest.

Touch. Truly, and to cast away honesty upon a fool slut, were to put good meat into an unclean dish.

Aud. I am not a slut, though I thank the gods I am foul.

Touch. Well, praised be the gods for thy foulness! slutishness may come hereafter. But be it as it may be, I will marry thee, and to that end, I have been with Sir Oliver Mar-text, the vicar of the next village; who hath promised to meet me in this place of the forest, and to couple us.

Jaques. I would have that before getting. [Aside.

Aud. Well, the gods give us joy.

Touch. Amen. A man may, if he were of a fearful heart, stagger in this attempt; for here we have no temple but the wood, no assembly but horn-beats. But, though the gods are so odious, they are necessary. It is said,—Many a man knows no end of his goods: right: many a man has good horns, and knows no end of them.
Well, that is the dowry of his wife; 'tis none of his own getting. Horns? Even so:—Poor men alone?—No, no; the noblest deer hath them as big as the rascal. Is the single man therefore blessed? No: as a wall'd town is more worse than than a village, so is the forehead of a married man more honourable than the bare-brow of a bachelor.
and by how much defence is better than no skill,
by so much is a born more precious than to want.

Enter Sir Oliver Mar-text.

Here comes sir Oliver:—Sir Oliver Mar-text, you are well met: Will you despatch us here under this tree, or shall we go with you to your chapel?

Sir Oli. Is there none here to give the woman the news?

Touch. I will not take her in gift of any man.

Sir Oli. Then, she must be given, or the marriage is not lawful.

Jaq. [Discovering himself:] Proceed, proceed;
I'll give her.

Touch. Good even, good master What ye call?

How do you, sir? You are very well met: God'did you for your last company: I am very glad to see you:—Even a toy in hand here, sir:—Nay, pray, be covered.

Jaq. Will you be married, motley?

Touch. As the ox hath his bow, sir, the horse his curb, and the falcon her bells, so man hath his desires; and as pigeons bill, so wedlock would be nibbling.

Jaq. And will you, being a man of your breeding, be married under a bush, like a beggar? (get you to the church, and have a good priest that can tell you what marriage is: this fellow will but join you to-gather as they join walnuts: then one of you will prove a shrunk pannel, and, like green timber, warb, warb.

Touch. I am not in the mind but I were better to be married of him than of another: for he is not like to marry me well; and not being well married, it will be a good excuse for me hereafter to weep to my wife. [Aside.

Jaq. Go thou with me, and let me counsel thee.

Touch. Come, sweet Audrey;

We must be married, or we must live in bawdry.

Farewell, good master Oliver!
Not—O sweet Oliver, O brave Oliver,
Leave me not bet'wix thee;
But—Wind away,
Begone I say,
I will not to wedding with thee.

Sir Old. 'Tis no matter, so you fain fantastical know
Of them all shall flout me out of my calling. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—The same. Before a Cottage.

Enter Rosalind and Celia.

Ces. Never talk to me, I will weep.

Rosalind. Do, I pray thee; but yet have the grace to consider, that tears do not become a man.

Ces. But have I not cause to weep?

Rosalind. As good cause as one would desire; therefore weep.

Ces. His very hair is of the dissembling colour.

Ces. Something browner than Judas's; marry, his knees are Judas's own children.

Rosalind. I'faith, his hair is of a good colour.

Ces. An excellent colour: your chestnut was ever the only colour.

Rosalind. And his kissing is as full of sanctity as the touch of every bosom beared.

Ces. I have bought a pair of cast lips of Diana; a man of winter's sisterhood knows not more religiously; the very eye of constancy is in them.

Rosalind. But how shall he swear he would come this morning, and comes not?

Ces. Nay, certainly, there is no truth in him.

Rosalind. Do you think so?

Ces. He is not a pick-purse, nor a horse-stealer; but for his verity in love, I do think him as concise as a cover'd gout, or a worm eaten out.

Rosalind. Not true in love?

Ces. Yes, when he is in; but, I think he is not in.

Rosalind. You have heard him swear downright, he was.

Ces. Was is not is, besides, the oath of a lover is stronger than the word of a tapster: they are both the confessors of false reckonings: He attends here in the forest on the duke your father.

Rosalind. I met the duke yesterday, and had much question with him: He asked me, of what parentage I was; I told him, of as good a birth as he could laugh; and let me go. But what talk we of fathers, when there is such a man as Orlando?

Ces. O, that's a brave man! he writes brave verses, and the words, swears brave oaths, and breaks them bravely, quite traverse, a swab, the heart of his lover; as a puny titter, that spurs his horse but on one side, breaks his stiff like a noble pose, but all's broken, but you, youth mounts, and folly guides. —Who comes here?

Enter Corin.

Corin. Mistress, and master, you have oft enquired
After the shepherd that complain'd of love;
Who you saw sitting by me on the turf,
Praising the proud disdainful shepherd,
That was his mistress.

Ces. Well, and what of him?

Corin. If you will see a pageant truly play'd,
Between the pale complexion of true love,
And the red glow of scorn and proud disdain,
So hence a little, and I shall conduct you,
If you will mark it.

Rosalind. O, come let us remove;
The sight of lovers feedeth those in love;
He that has but this sight, and you shall say,
I'll prove a busy actor in their play. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Another part of the Forest.

Enter Silvius and Phebe.

Sil. Sweet Phebe, do not scorn me; do not,
Say that I am not; but say not so: [To Phebe: In bitterness, The common executioner, Whose heart the accustom'd sight of death makes Falls not the axe upon the humbled neck, [hard,
But first begs pardon; Will you sterner be
Than he that dies and lives by bloody drops?

Enter Rosalind, Celia, and Corin, at a distance.

Phoebe. I would not be thy executioner;
I fly thee, for I would not injure thee.

Thou tell'st me, there is murder in mine eye:
That honest men are the frailty and least things,
Who shut their coward gates on amities,—
Should be call'd tyrants, butchers, murderers!
Now I do frown on thee with all my heart; [thee;
Now I can wound, now I can kill.
Now counterfeit to swoon; why, now fall down; Or, if thou canst not, O, for shame, for shame,
Lie not, to say mine eyes are murderers.

That show the wound mine eye hath made in thee
Scratch thee but with a pin, and there remains
Some scar of it; lean but upon a rush,
The cicatrice and capable impression
Thy palm some moment keeps; but now mine eyes,
Which I have darts at thee, cause thee not to
Not, nor I am sure, there is no force in eyes
That can do hurt.

O dear Phoebe,
If ever, (as that ever may be near)
You meet in some fresh check the power of fancy,
Then shall you know the wounds invisible
That live with keen arrows mean.

Phoebe. But, till that time,
Come not thou near me: and, when that time
Afflict me with thy mock's, pity me not; [comes,
As, till that time, I shall not pity thee.

Rosalind. And pr'ythee, pray you, [Adressing:] Who might be your mother,
That you insult, exult, and all at once,
Over the wretched? What though you have more
(As, by my faith, I see no more in you
Than without candle may go dark to bed.)
Must you be therefore proud and pitiless?
That make the world full of ill-favour'd children?
To think of such, thine own bite ails thee;
And out of you she sees herself more proper,
Than any of her lineaments can show her:
But, mistress, know yourself: down on your knees
And thank heaven, failing, for a good man's love:
For I must tell you friendly in your ear,—
When I can see you; you are not for all markets;
Cry the man mercy; love him; take his offer;
For he will, being foul to be a scoffers.
So, take her to thee, shepherd;—fare you well.

Phoebe. Sweet youth, I pray you chide a year together;
I had as I were near you chide, than this man was.

Rosalind. He's fair in love with her foolishness,
And she'll fall in love with my anger: If it be so, as fast as she answers thee with frowning looks, I'll sorne her with bitter words.— Why look you so upon me?

Phoebe. I pray you, do not fall in love with me,
For I am false than vows made in wine:
Besides, I like you not: If you will know my tale at the rafles, olives, here harm not my house.
Will you go, sister? —Shepherd, ply her hard:—
Come, sister,—Shepherds, look on him better.
And be not proud, though all the world could see,
Come could not so in'sight as he.
Come, to our flock.

[Exeunt Rosalind, Celia, and Corin.]
ACT IV.

AS YOU LIKE IT.

Pho. Dead shepherd! now I find thy saw of might;
Who even in that look'd not at first sight?
Sil. Sweet Shephe,-
Pho. Ha! what say'st thou, Silvius?
Sil. Sweet Shephe, pity me.
Pho. Why, I am sorry for thee, gentle Silvius.
Sil. Wherever sorrow is, relief would be;
If you do sorrow at my grief in love,
By giving love, your sorrow and my grief
Were both exterminated.
Pho. Thou hast my love; is not that neighbourly?
Sil. I would have you.
Pho. Silvius, why was the time wasted?
That I should think it a most plentiful crop
To clean the broken ears after the man
That the main harvest rep's: loose now and then
A scatter'd smile, and that I'll live upon.
Pho. Know'st thou the youth that spoke to me ere while?
Sil. Not very well, but I have met him oft;
And he hath bought the cottage, and the bounds,
That I shall think it a most plentiful crop
To glean the broken ears after the man
That the main harvest rep's: lose now and then
A scatter'd smile, and that I'll live upon.
Pho. Think not I love him, though I ask for him;
'Tis but a peevish toy:—yet he talks well;—
But what care I for words? yet words do well,
Were both of them present, and all that hear,
It is a pretty youth:—not very pretty:—
But sure he's proud; and yet his pride becomes him;
He'll make a proper man: The best thing in him
Is his complexion; and faster than his tongue
Did make offence, his eye did heal it up.
He is not tall; yet for his years he's tall:
His leg is but so so; and yet 'tis well;
But was a pretty redness in his lip;
A little riper and more lusty red
Than that mix'd in his cheek; 'twas just the difference
Betwixt the constant red, and mingled damask.
There be some women, Silvius, had they marked him
In parces as I did, would have gone near
To make love with him: but, for my part,
I love him not, nor hate him not; and yet
I have more cause to hate him than to love him:
For what had he to do to chide at me?
He said, mine eyes were black, and mine hair black;
And, now I am remember'd, worn'd at me;
And, marvel, why I answer'd not again:
But that's all one; omittance is no quittance.
I'll write to him a very taunting letter,
And thou shalt hear it: Wilt thou, Silvius?
Sil. Pho. be with, all my heart.
Pho. I'll write it straight;
The matter's in my head, and in my heart:
I will be with him, and passing short:
Go with me, Silvius.
Exeunt.

Ros. Why then, 'tis good to be a post.
Jaq. I have neither the scholar's melancholy, which is emulation; nor the musician's, which is fantastical; nor the courtier's, which is proud; nor the soldier's, which is ambitious; nor the lawyer's, which is politic; nor the lady's, which is nice; nor the lover's, which is also; but it is a melancholy of mine own, compounded of many sim-plies, extracted from many objects: and, indeed, the sundry contemplation of my travels, in which often rumination wraps me, is a most humorous sadness.
Ros. A traveller! By my faith, you have great reason to be sad: I fear, you have sold your own lands, to see other men's; then, to have seen much, and to have nothing, is to have rich eyes and poor hands.
Jaq. Yes, I have gained my experience.

Enter Orlando.

Ros. And your experience makes you sad: I had rather have a fool to make me merry, than experience to make me sad; and to travel for it too.
Orl. Good day, and happiness, dear Rosalind!
Jaq. Nay then, God be wi' you, an you talk in blank verse.
Orl. Ros. Farewell, monsieur traveller: Look, you lisp, and wear strange suits; disable all the benefits of your own country: be out of love with your nativity, and call not chide God for making you that counterface you are, or I will scarce think you have swam in a gondola.—Why, how now, Orlando! where have you been all this while? You a lover!—An you serve me such another trick, never come in my sight more.
Orl. My fair Rosalind, I come within an hour of my promise.
Ros. Break an hour's promise in love? He that will divide a minute into a thousand parts, and break but a part of the thousandth part of a minute in the affairs of love, it may be said of him, that Cupid hath clapp'd him o' the shoulder, but I warrant him heart-whole.
Orl. Pardon me, dear Rosalind.
Ros. Nay, an you be so tardy, come no more in my sight; I had as lief be woor of a snail.
Orl. Of a snail?—
Ros. Ay, of a snail; for though he comes slowly, he carries his house on his head; a better jointure,
I think, than you can make a woman: Besides, he brings his desert with him.
Orl. What's that?
Ros. Why, horns! which such as you are fain to be beholden to your wives for: but he comes armed in his fortune, and prevents the slander of his wife.
Orl. Virtue is no horn-maker; and my Rosalind is virtuous.
Ros. And I am your Rosalind.
Orl. It pleases him to call you so; but he hath a Rosalind of a better leer than you.
Ros. Cme, woo me, woo me; for now I am in a holiday humour, and like enough to consent.—
What would you say to me now, an I were your very very Rosalind?
Orl. I would kiss before I spoke.
Ros. Nay, you were better speak first; and when you were gravelled for lack of matter, you might take occasion to kiss. Very good orators, when they are out, they will spit; and for lovers, lacking (God warn us!) matter, the cleanliest shift is to kiss.
Orl. How if the kiss be denied?
Ros. Then she puts you to entreaty, and there begins new matter.
Orl. Who could be out, being before his beloved mistress?
Ros. Marry, that should you, if I were your mistress; or I should think my honesty rainer than my wit.
Orl. What, of my suit?

N
Res. Not out of your apparel, and yet out of your unit. Am I not your Rosalind?

Ori. I take some joy to say you are, because I would be talking of her.

Res. Wait, in her person, I say—I will not have you.

Ori. Then, in mine own person, I die.

Res. No, faith, die by attorney. The poor world is almost six thousand years old, and in all this time was never man, and it died in his own person, sidetick, in a love-trouble. Titus had his brains dashed out with a Turcian club; yet he did what he could to die before; and he is one of the partial marry, and this man would have lived many a fair year, though here had turned nun, if it had not been for a hot midsummer night; for, good youth, he went forth to wash him in the Hellespont, and, being taken with the cramp, was drowned; and the familiar chroniclers of that age found it was—\( \text{...} \)

Res. But these are all lies: men have died from time to time, and worms have eaten them, but not for love.

Ori. I would not have my right Rosalind of this mind; for, I protest, her frown might kill me.

Res. By this hand, it will not kill a fly: But come, now I will be your Rosalind in a more comely position; and ask me what you will, I will grant it.

Ori. Then love me, Rosalind.

Res. Yes, faith will I, Fridays, and Saturdays, and all.

Ori. And wilt thou have me?

Res. Ay, and twenty such.

Ori. What say'st thou?

Res. Do not good?

Ori. I hope so.

Res. Why then, can one desire too much of a good thing?—Come, sister, you shall be the priest, and marry you my hand, Orlando:

What do you say, sister?

Ori. Pray thee, marry us.

Col. I cannot say the words.

Res. You must begin,—Will you, Orlando,—

Col. Go to,—Will you, Orlando, have to wife this Rosalind?

Ori. I will.

Res. Ay, but when?

Res. Then you must say,—I take thee, Rosalind, for wife.

Ori. I take thee, Rosalind, for wife.

Res. Say a day, without the ever: No, no, Or-lands; men are April when they woo, December when they wed: maids are May when they are maids, but the sky changes when they are wives. I will be more jealous of thee than a Barbary cock-pigeon over his hem; more clamorous than a parrot against rain; more new-fangled than an ape; more giddy in my desires than a monkey; I'll weep for nothing, like Diana in the fountain; and I will do, when I am disposed to be merry; I will laugh like a hyen, and that when thou art inclined to sleep.

Ori. But will my Rosalind do so?

Res. By my life, she will do as I do.

Ori. O, but she is wise.

Res. Or else she could not have the wit to do this: the wiser, the waywarder: Make the doors upon a sudden open, and it will out at the casements, shut that, and 'twill out at the key-hole; stop that, 'twill fly with the smoke out at the chimney.

Ori. A man that had a wife with such a wit, he might say,—Will, whether wilt?

Res. Nay, you might keep that check for it, till you met your wife's wit going to your neighbour's bed.

Ori. And what wilt could wit have to excuse that?

Res. Marry, to say,—she came to seek you. You hadn't take her without her answer, unless you take her without her tongue. O, that woman that cannot make her fault her husband's occasion, let her never nurse her child herself, for she is bred into a feign.

Ori. For these two hours, Rosalind, I will leave thes.

Res. Alas, dear love, I cannot lack thee two hours; I must attend the duke at dinner; by two o'clock I will be with thee again.

Res. Ay, go your ways, go your ways;—I knew what you would please; my friends told me as much, and I thought no less,—that flatterer tongue of yours won me,—lis but one cast away, and so,—come, death.—Two o'clock is your hour.

Ori. Ay, sweet Rosalind.

Res. By my troth, and in good earnest, and so God mend me, and by all pretty oaths that are not dangerous, if you break one jot of your promise, you shall find as much behind you as I am in here—I'll tell you the most pathetical break promise, and the most hollow lover, and the most unworthy of her you call Rosalind, that may be chosen out of the grosser breed of the unfaithful: therefore beware my censure, and keep your promise.

Ori. With no less religion, than if thou wert indeed my Rosalind: No, adieu.

Res. Well, time is the old justice that examines all such offenders, and let time try: Addio!

[Exit Orlando.

Col. You have simply misused our sex in your love-prate: we must have your doublet and hose in your head, and show the world what the bird hath done to her own nest.

Res. O coz, coz, coz, my pretty little coz, thou dost not know how many fathoms deep I am in love! But it e'en must be sounded; my affection hath an unknown bottom, like the bay of Portugal.

Col. Or, rather, bottomless; that as fast as you pour affection in, it runs out.

Res. No, that same wicked bastard of Venus, that was begot of thought, conceived of spleen, and born of madness: that blind rascally boy, that abuses every one's eyes, because his own are out, is the blind judge, so deep I am in love. I'll tell thee, Alisse: I cannot be out of the sight of Orlando: I'll go and a shadow, and sigh till be come.

Col. And I'll sleep.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II. Another part of the Forest.

Enter Jaques, and Lords, in the habit of Foresters.

Jaq. Which is he that killed the deer?

Lords. Sir, it was I.

Jaq. Let's present him to the duke, like a Roman conqueror; and it would do well to set the deer's horns upon his head, for a branch of victory.

H ave you no song, forester, for this purpose?

2 Lords. Yes, sir.

Jaq. Sing it:—'tis no matter how it be in tune, so it make noise enough.

SONG.

1. What shall we have, that killed the deer?

2. His leather skin, and horns to wear.

1. Then show my home;

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The same.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey.

Touch. We shall find a time, Audrey; patience, gentle Audrey.

Aud. 'Faith, the priest was good enough, for all the old gentleman's saying.

Touch. A most wicked sir Oliver, Audrey, a most vile Marthast, my beast, Audrey, there is a youth here in the forest lays claim to you.

Aud. Ay, I know who 's she; he hath no interest in me in the world; here comes the man you mean.

Enter William.

Touch. It is meat and drink to me to see a clown: By my troth, we that have good wits, have much to answer for; we shall be flouting; we cannot hold. Will. Good even, Audrey.

Aud. God ye good even, William. Will. Good even good to you, sir.

Touch. Good even, gentle friend: Cover thy head, cover thy face, nay, prythee, be covered. How oft are you, friend?

Will. Five and twenty, sir.

Touch. A ripe age! Is thy name William?

Will. William, sir.

Touch. A fair name: What born i' the forest hence?

Will. Ay, sir, I thank God.

Touch. Thank God:—a good answer: Art rich?

Will. 'Faith, sir, so, so.

Touch. So, so, is good, very good, very excellent good—and yet it is not; it is but so. Art thou

Will. Ay, sir, I have a pretty wit.

Touch. Why, thou say'st well. I do now remember a saying: 'The fruit doth think it were wise, but the wise man knows him if to be a fruit.' The heathen philosopher, when he had a desire to eat a grape, would open his lips when he cast into his mouth, meaning thereby, that grapes were made to eat, and lips to open. Do you love this maid?

Will. I do, sir.

Touch. Then learn this of me; To have, is to have; it is a figure in rhetoric, that, being poured out of a cup into a glass, by filling the one doth empty the other: For all your writers do consent, that, &c. is he; now you are not ipse, for I am he.

Will. Which lie, sir?

Touch. He, sir, that must marry this woman: Therefore, you clowns, abandon,—which is in the vulgar, leave,—the society,—which in the boorish company of this female,—which in the common is,—women, which together is, abandon the society of this female; or, clown, thou periahast; or, to thy better understanding, dist; to wit, I kill thee, make thee away, translate thy life into death, thy liberty into bondage. I will deal in poison with thee, or in bastinado, or in steel; I will bandy with thee in faction; I will over-run thee with policy; I will have thee periphrased and fifty ways; therefore tremble, and depart.

Aud. By, good William.

Will. God rest you merry, sir.

[Exit.

Enter Cotia.

Cor. Our master and mistress seek you; come, away, away.

Touch. Trip, Audrey, trip, Audrey;—I attend, I attend.

[Exit.}

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter Orlando and Oliver.

Orl. Is't possible, that on so little acquaintance you should like her? that, but seeing, you should love her? and, loving, woo you and, wooing, she should love you? or will you perchance to seek another?

Orl. Neither call the godliness of it in question, the poverty of her, the small acquaintance, my sudden wooing, nor her sudden consenting; but say with her, so and so, that she loves me, consent with both, that we may enjoy each other; it shall be to your good; for my father's house, and all the revenue that was old sir Rowland's, will I estate upon you, and here live and die a shepherd.

Enter Rosalind.

Orl. You have my comment. Let your wedding be to-morrow; this hour will I inscribe the duke, and all his consented followers: Go you, and prepare Aliena: for, look you, here comes my Rosalind. Orl. God give you, brother.

Orl. And you, fair sister.

Rosal. O, my dear triniando, how it grieves me to see thee wear thy heart in a scarf.

Orl. It is my arm.

Rosal. I thought, thy heart had been wounded with the claws of a lion.

Orl. Wounded it is, but with the eyes of a lady.

Rosal. Did your brother tell you how I counterfeited so soon, when he shew'd me your handkerchief?

Orl. Ay, and greater wonders than that.

Rosal. O, I know where you are.—Nay, 'tis true: there was never anything so sudden, but the flight of two riffs, and Cesario's threnosical brag of— I come, saw, and overcame! For your brother and my sister no sooner met, but they looked; so sooner looked, but they loved; so sooner loved, but they sighed; no sooner sighed, but they asked one another the reason; no sooner knew the reason, but Act 5. AS YOU LIKE IT.

they sought the remedy; and in these degrees have they made a pair of stairs to marriage, which they will climb incontinent, or else be incontinent before marriage; they are in the very wrath of love, and they will together; clubs cannot part them.

Ros. Why then, to-morrow I cannot serve your turn for Rosalind?

Orl. I can live no longer by thinking.

Ros. I will weary you no longer then with idle talking. Know of me then, (for now I speak to some purpose,) that I know you are a gentleman of good conceit: I speak not this, that you should bear a good opinion of my knowledge, insomuch, I say, I know you are; neither do I labour for a greater extem than may in some little measure, I thing, procure me, to you, to do yourself good, and not to grace me. Believe then, if you please, that I can do strange things: I have, since I was three years old, conversed with a magician, most profound in this art, and yet not dangerous. If you do love Rosalind so near the heart as your gesture cries it out, when your brother marries Alena, shall you marry her?—I know into what straits of fortune the heart is driven; and it is not impossible to me, if it appear not inconvenient to you, to set her before your yes to-morrow, human as she is, and without any danger.

Orl. Speakes the woman in sober meanings?

Ros. By my life, I do; which I tender dearly, though I say I am a magician: Therefore, put you in your best array, bid your friends; for if you will be married to-morrow, you shall; and to Rosalind, if you will.

Enter Silvius and Phoebe.

Phoe. Youth, you have done me much ungentleness, To shew the letter that I write to you. Ros. I care not, if I have; it is my study, To seem deep-thought and ungentile to you: You are there follow'd by a faithful shepherd; Look upon him, love him; he worships you. Phoe. Good shepherd, tell this youth what 'tis to love. Silv. It is to be all made of sighs and tears;— And so am I for Phoebe. Phoe. And I for Ganymede. Orl. And I for Rosalind. Ros. And I for no woman. Silv. It is to be all made of faith and service;— And so am I for Phoebe. Phoe. And I for Ganymede. Orl. And I for Rosalind. Ros. And I for no woman. Silv. It is to be all made of fantasy, All made of passion, and all made of wishes; All adoration, duty, and observance, All humbleness, all patience, and impatience, All purity, all trial, all observance; And so am I for Phoebe. Phoe. And so am I for Ganymede. Orl. And so am I for Rosalind. Ros. And so am I for no woman. Phoe. If this be so, why blame you me to love you? [To Rosalind. Silv. If this be so, why blame you me to love you? Phoe. If this be so, why blame you me to love you? Ros. Who do you speak to, why blame you me to love you? Phoe. To her that is not here, nor doth not hear. Ros. Pray you, no more of this: 'tis like the howling of Irish wolves against the moon.—I will help you, [to Silvius] if I can:—I would love you, [to Phoebe] if I could.—To-morrow meet me all together.—I will marry you, [to Phoebe] if ever I marry woman, and I'll be married to-morrow:—I will satisfy you, [to Orlando] if ever I satisfied man.—And you shall be married to-morrow: I will content you, [to Silvius] if what pleases you you contents you, and you shall be married to-morrow:— As you [to Orlando] love Rosalind, meet;—as you [to Phoebe] love Phoebe, meet; And as I love no woman, I'll meet.—So, fare you well; I have left you commands.

SCENE III.—The same. Enter Touchstone and Audrey.

Touch. To-morrow is the joyful day, Audrey; to-morrow will we be married.

Aud. And I do desire it with all my heart: and I hope it is no dishonest desire, to desire to be a woman of the world. Here come two of the banished duke's pages.

Enter two Pages.

2 Page. We are for you: sit the middle.

1 Page. Shall we clap into roundly, without hawking, or splitting, or saying we are hoarse; which are the only preludes to a bad voice?

2 Page. I faith, I'faith; and both in a tune, like two gypsys on a horse.

SONG.

I.

It was a lover and his lass,
With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonzero,
That o'er the green corn-field did pass
In the spring time, the only pretty rank time,
When birds do sing, hey ding! a ding,
Sweet lover love the spring.

II.

Between the acres of the rye,
With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonzero,
These pretty country folks would lie,
In spring time, &c.

III.

This earl they began that hour,
With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonzero,
How that a life was but a flower,
In spring time, &c.

IV.

And therefore take the present time,
With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonzero;
For love is crowned with the prime
In spring time, &c.

Touch. Truly, young gentlemen, though there was no greater matter in the ditty, yet the note was very untuneable.

1 Page. You are deceived, sir; we kept time, we lost not our time.

Touch. By my troth, yes; I count it but time lost to hear such a foolish song. God be with you; And God mend your voices! Come, Audrey.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Another Part of the Forest. Enter Duke Senior, Amiens, Jaques, Orlando, Oliver, and Celia.

Duke S. Dost thou believe, Orlando, that the boy Can do all this that he hath promised?
Oft. 1 sometimes do believe, and sometimes do not;
As those that fear they hope, and know they fear.

Enter Rosalind, Silvius, and Phebe.

Rosalind. Patience once more, whiles our compact is urg'd.
You say, if I bring in your Rosalind,
You will bestow her on Orlando here?

Duke. That would I, had I 1 kingdom to give
With her.

Rosalind. And you say you will have her, when I bring her?

[To Orlando.]

Orlando. That would I, were I of all kingdoms king.
Rosalind. You say, you'll marry me, if I be willing.

[Phebe.]

Phebe. That will I, I should die the hour after.
Rosalind. But, if you do refuse to marry me,
You'll give yourself to this most faithful shepherd?
Phebe. So is the bargain.
Rosalind. You say, that you'll have Phebe, if she will?

Sil. Though to have her and death were both one thing; even.
Rosalind. We promis'd to make all this matter keep your word, O duke, to give your daughter—
You yours, Orlando, to receive his daughter—
Kneele in this place, that I may swear it:—else, refusing me, to wed this shepherd—
Keep your word, Silvius, that you'll marry her, if she refuse me: and henceforth I go,
To make these doubts an event.

[Exit Rosalind and Cells.

Duke. I do remember in this shepherd boy
Some lively touches of my daughter's favour.

Rosalind. My lord, the first time that I ever saw him,
Methought he was a brother to your daughter:—
Yet, my good lord, this boy is forest-born:
And had been tutor'd in the rudiments
Of many desperate studies by his uncle,
Whom he reports to be a great magician,
Obscured in the circle of this forest.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey.

Audrey. Touchstone, I do find a rare fellow, my lord; he's as good at any thing, and yet a fool.

Duke. He uses his folly like a walking horse, and under the presentation of that, he shoots his wit.

Enter Hymen, leading Rosalind in woman's clothes; and Celia.

Still music.

Hymen. Then is there worth in heaven,
When earthly things made even Atone together.
Good Duke, receive thy daughter,
Hymen from heaven brought her.
You, brought her forth:—
That thou might'st join her hand with his,
Whose heart within her bosom is.

Rosalind. To you I give myself, for I am yours.

To you I give myself, for I am yours.

Duke. If there be truth in sight, you are my daughter.

Rosalind. If there be truth in sight, you are my Duke. If sight and shape be true,
Why then,—my love adieu!

Rosalind. I'll have no father, if you be not he—

Duke. I'll have no husband, if you be not he—

To Orlando.

Audrey. Nor ne'er wed woman, if you be not she.

Hymen. Peace, ho! I bar confusion:
'Tis I must make conclusion
Of these most strange events!
Here's eight that must take hands,
This in Hymen's bands,
If truth holds true events.
You and you cross shall part:

To Orlando and Rosalind.

You and you are heart in heart,

To Oliver and Celia.

You to Phebe to his love must accord,
Or have a woman to your lord.
Act 5.

AS YOU LIKE IT. 183

You and you are sure together,
[To Touchstone and Audrey.
As the winter to foul weather.
While a wealdlock hyrum ever sung,
Feed yourselves with questioning;
That reason wonder may diminish,
How thus we met, and these things finish.

SONG.

Wedding is great June's crown;
O blessed bond of board and bed!
'Tis hymns peoples every town;
High wealdlock then be honoured;
Honour, high honour and renown, To Hymen, god of every town!

Duke S. O my dear niece, welcome thou art to me; Even daughter, welcome in no less degree. Phe. I will not eat my word, now thou art mine; Thy faith my fancy to thee doth combine.

[To Silvius.

Enter Jaques de Bois.

Jaq. de B. Let me have audience for a word I am the second son of old sir Rowland, [for two That bring these tidings to this fair assembly: Duke Frederick, hearing how that every day Men of great worth resorted to this forest, Address'd a mighty power; which were on foot, In his own conduct, purposely to take His brother here, and put him to the sword: And to the skirts of this wild wood he came; Where, meeting with an old religious man, After some question with him, was converted Both from his enterprise, and from the world. His crown bequeathing to his banlish'd brother, And all their lands restor'd to them again That were with him exil'd: This to be true, I do engage my life.

Parl. Welcome, young man: Thou offer'st fairly to thy brothers' wedding: To one, his lands with held: and to the other, A land itself at large, a potent dukedom. First, in this for, let us do those ends That here were well begun, and well begot: And after, every of this happy number, [with us, That have endur'd shrewd days and nights Shall share the good of our returned fortune, According to the measure of their states. Meantime, forget this new-fall'n dignity, And fall into our rustic revelry:

Play, music—and you brides and bridgrooms all, With measure heasp'd in joy, to the measures fall.

Jaq. Sir, by your patience; If I heard you The duke hath put on a religious life, [rightly. And thrown into neglect the pompous court? [Jaq. de B. He hath. Jaq. To him will I; out of these convertites There is much matter to be heard and learn'd.— You to your former honour I bequeath: [To Duke. Your patience, and your virtue, well deserves it— You [to Orlando] to a love, that your true faith doth merit: — You [to Oliver] to your land, and love, and great alliance— [bed. — You [to Silvius] to a long and well deserved And you [to Touchstone] to wrangling; for thy loving voyage Is but for two months virtu'd.—So to your pleasures; I am for other than for dancing measures. Duke S. Stay, Jaques, stay. Jaq. To see no pastime, by what you would have I'll stay to know at your abandon'd cave. [Exeunt. Duke S. Proceed, proceed: we will begin these rites, And we do trust they'll end, in true delights. A dance.

EPilogue.

Ros. It is not the fashion to see the lady the epilogue: but it is no more unhandsome, than to see the lord the prologue. If it be true, that good wine needs no bush, 'tis true, that a good play needs no epilogue: Yet to good wine they do use good bushes; and good plays prove the better by the help of good epilogues. What a case am I in, then, that am neither a good epilogue, nor cannot insinuate with you in the behalf of a good play? I am not furnished like a beggar, therefore to beg will not become me: my way is, to conjure you; And I'll begin with the women. I charge you, O women, for the love you bear to men, to like as much of this play as please them: and so I charge you, O men, for the love you bear to women, (as I perceive by your simpering, none of you hate them,) that between you and the women, the play may please. If I were a woman, I would kiss as many of you as had beards that pleased me, complexions that liked me, and breaths that I defled not; and, I am sure, as many as have good beards, or good faces, or sweet breathes, will, for my kind offer, when I make curt'sy, bid me farewell. [Exeunt.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Roussillon. A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Enter Bertram, the Countess of Roussillon, Helena, and Lafuè, in mourning.

Count. In delivering my son from me, I bury a second husband.

Ber. And I, in going, madam, weep o'er my father's death anew: but I must attend his majesty's command, to whom I am now in ward, evermore in subjection.

Laf. You shall find of the king a husband, madam;—you, sir, a father: He that so generally is at all times good, none of necessity hold his virtue to you; whose worthiness would stir it up where it wanted, rather than lack it where there is such abundance.
ALL’S WELL THAT ENDS WELL

Act I.

Count. What hope is there of his majesty's amendment?

Lea. He hath abandoned his physician, madam; and, whose practice he hath persecuted time with hope; and finds no other advantage in the process but only the losing of hope by time.

Count. This young gentlewoman had a father, O, that bad! how and a passage 'tis whose skill would have been a great, a blissful remedy; had it stretch'd so far, would have made nature immortal, and death should have play for lack of work. 'Would, for the king's sake, he were living! I think it would be his interest.

Lea. How called you the man you speak of, madam?

Count. He was famous, sir, in his profession, and was his great right to be so: Gerard de Narbon.

Lea. He was excellent, indeed, madam; the king very lately spoke of him, admiringly, and, mourningly, he was thought enough to have lived still, if knowledge could be set up against mortality.

Bar. What is it, my good lord, the king language of?

Lea. A flatula, my lord.

Bar. I heard not of it before.

Lea. I would it were not notorious.—Was this gentlewoman the daughter of Gerard de Narbon?—My life, there is some interest to my looking over. I have these hopes of her good, that her education promiseth; her dispositions she inheriteth, which make fair gifts fairer; for where an understanding is, there's power. Where there are commendations go with pity, they are virtues and traits too; in her they are the better for their simplicity; she derives her honesty, and achieves her goodness.

Lea. Your commendations, madam, get from her tears.

Count. The best brine a maiden can season her harrow in. The remembrance of her father never approaches her heart, but the tyranny of her sorrow takes all livelihood from her cheek. No more of this, Helena, go to, no more! lest it be rather thought you affect a sorrow, than to have.

Hel. I do affect a sorrow, indeed, but I have it too.

Lea. Moderate lamentation is the right of the dead, excessive grief the enemy to the living.

Count. If the living be enemy to the grief, the excess is not humane.

Bar. Madam, I desire your holy wishes.

Lea. How understand we that?

Count. Bo thou bless, Bertram! and succeed thy issue! thy present virtue, Contend for empire in thee; and thy good-natured Share with thy birth-right! Love all, trust a few, Do wrong to none; be able for thine enemy Rather in power than use; and keep thy friends Under thy own life's key: be check'd for silence, But never ta'd for speech. What heaven more will, That these may furnish, and my prayers pluck down. Fail on thy head! Farewell,—my lord.

'Tis an unsundry'd courtier; good my lord,
Advise him.

Bar. He cannot want the best

That shall attend his love.

Count. Heaven bless him!—Farewell, Bertram.

End Countess.

Ber. The best wishes, that can be forg'd in your thoughts, (to Helena.) be servants to his grace: Be comfortable to your mother, your mistress, and make much of her.

Lea. Farewell, pretty lady! You must hold the credit of his other. (Exit Bertram and Lefau.

Hel. I), were that all!—I think not on my father:

And these great tears grace his remembrance more Than those I shed for him. What was he like? I have forgot him: my imagination Carries no favour in it, but Bertram's.

I am undone; there is no living, none, If Bertram be away. It were all one,

That I should love a bright particular star, And, in adoring it, he is so above me, In his bright radiance and cold splendour, light.

Must I be comforted, not in his sphere.

The ambition in my love thus plagues itself:

The hind, that would be mated by the lion.

Must I be young, as when never I was pretty, though a plague.

To see him every hour; to sit and draw

His arched brows, his hawking eye, his curls, In our heart's table; heat, too capable Of every form, and triumph of his looks

But now he's gone, and my idolatrous fancy Must sanctify his relics. Who comes here

Rater Paroles.

One that goes with him: I love him for his sake
And yet I know him a notorious liar, Think him a great way fool, solely a coward;
Yet these bad'ns 'd evil sit so fit in him,
That they take place, when virtuous neatly bones
Look bleak in the cold wind: withal, full oft we see
Cold wisdom waiting on superficial folly.

Par. Save you, fair queen.

Hel. Bless you, monarch.

Par. No.

Hel. And no.

Par. Are you meditating on virginity?

Hel. Marguerite, to be a virgin, was a stain of soldier in you; let me ask you a question: Man is enemy to virginity; how may we barracade it against him?

Par. Keep him out.

Hel. And our virginity, and our virginity, though valiant in the defence, yet is weak: unfold to us some way to resistance.

Par. There is none; man, sitting down before you, woman, and man.

Hel. Bless your own virginity from underminers, and blowers up!—Is there no military policy, how virgins might blow up men?

Par. Virginity, being blown down, man will quickl' be blown up: marry, in blowing him down again, with the breach yourselves made, you lose your city, it is not politic in the common-wealth of nature, to preserve virginity. I am of virginity is rational increase; and there was never virgin gct, till virginity was first lost. That, you were made of, is metal to make virgins. Virginity, by being once lost, may be ten times found; by being never lost, is never lost: 'tis too cold a companion; away with it.

Hel. I will stand for't a little, though therefore I die a virgin.

Par. Love's little can be said in't; 'tis against the rule of nature. To speak on the part of virginity, is to accuse your mothers; which is most infallible disobedience. He, that hangs himself, is a virgin: virginity murders itself; and should be buried in highways, out of all sanctified limit, as a desperate offendsness against nature. Virginity breeds mites, much like a cheese; consumes itself to the heath, so dies with feeding his own stomach. Besides, virginity is peevish, proud, idle, made of self-love, which is the most inhibited sin in the canon. Keep it not, you cannot choose but lose cry's: but with't within ten years it will make itself nice of the ridiculous increase; and the principal itself not much the worse: Away with't.

Hel. How might one do, sir, to lose it to her own liking?

Par. Let me see: Marry, Ill, to like him that never it likes. 'Tis a commodity will lose the gloss with lying; the longer kept, the less worth off with't, while 'tis vendible: answer the time of request, not beauty; the goose of an old courtier, wears her cap out of fashion; richly suited, but unsuitable: just like the brooch and toothpick, which wear not now: Your dare is better in your pie and your porridge, than in your cheek. Amen your virginity, your old virginity, is like one of our French withered pears; it looks ill, it eats dryly; marry, 'tis a ASS'LL WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

withered pear; it was formerly better; marry, yet, 'tis a withered pear: Will you any thing with it? Hel. Not my virginity yet. There shall your master have a thousand loves, a mother, and a mistress, and a friend, A phoenix, captain, and an enemy, A guide, a goddess, and a sovereign, A counsellor, a trairress, and a dear; His humble ambition, and his humility, His jarring concord, and his discord duet, His faith, his sweet disaster; with a world Of pretty, fond, adoptious christendoms, That blinking 'rump and mistress, and a friend shall he— God send him well! The court's a learning place;—and he is one— Par. What one, I'th faith? Hel. That I wish well.—'Tis pity. Par. So it's running away. Hel. That wishing well had not a body in't, Which might be felt: that we, the poorer born, Whose baser stars do shut us up in wishes, Might with effects of them follow our friends, And show what we alone must think; which never Returns us thanks. Enter a Page. Page. Monsieur Paroles, my lord calls for you. [Exit Page. Par. Little Helen, farewell! if I can remember the war, I will ask thee of thee at court. Hel. Monsieur Paroles, you were born under a charitable star. Par. Under Mars, I. Hel. The day of my birth, and under Mars, Par. Why under Mars? Hel. The wars have so kept you under, that you must needs be born under Mars. Par. When he was predominant. Hel. I think, rather. Par. Why think you so? Hel. You go so much backward, when you fight. Par. That's for advantage. Hel. It warms you, when fear proposes the safety: But the composition, that your valour and fear makes in you, is a virtue of a good wing, and I like the wear well. Hel. With effects of full businesses, I cannot answer thee acutely; I will return perfect courtier; in the which, my instruction shall serve to naturalize thee, so thou wilt be capable of a courtier's counsel, and understand all the tricks of the world; else thou diest in thine unthankfulness, and thine ignorance makes thee away: farewell. When thou hast leisure, say thy prayers; when thou hast none, remember thy friends; get thee a good husband, and use him as he uses thee; so farewell. Hel. Our remedies oft in ourselves do lie, Which we ascribe to heaven: the fated sky Gives us free scope; only, doth backward pull Our slow designs, when we ourselves are dull. What power is it, which mounts my love so high; That makes me see, and cannot feed mine eye? The mightiest space in fortune nature brings To join like likes, and kiss like native things. Impossible be strange attempts, to those That weigh their pains in sense; and do suppose, What hath been cannot be: Who ever strove To show her merit, that did miss her love? The king's disease—my project may deceive me, But my intents are fix'd, and will not leave me. [Exit. SCENE II.—Paris. A Room in the King's Palace. Flourish of cornets. Enter the King of France, with letters; Lords and others attending. King. The Florentines and Senoes are by the king of England, Have fought with equal fortune, and continue A braving war. 1 Lord. So 'tis reported, sir. King. Nay, 'tis most credible: we here receive it A certainty, youch'd from our cousin Austria, With caution, that the Florentine will move us For speedy aid; where either dearst friend Prejudicates the business; and would seem To have us make denial. 2 Lord. His love and wisdom, Approvd to your majesty, may plead For ampiest credence. King. He hath arm'd our answer, And Florence is denied before he comes: Yet, for our gentlemen, that mean to see The Tuscan service, freely have they leave To stand on either part. 2 Lord. It may well serve A nursery to our gentry, who are sick For breathing and explicit. King. What's he comes here? Enter Bertram, Lafeu, and Paroles. 1 Lord. It is the count Roussillon, my good lord, Young Bertram. King. Youth, thou art't thy father's face; Frank nature, rather curious than in haste, Hath well compos'd thee. Thy father's moral parts May'st thou inherit too! Welcome to Paris. Ber. My thanks and duty are your majesty's. King. I would I had that corporal soundness now, As when thy father, and myself, in friendship First try'd our soldierish! He did look far Into the service of the time, and was Disciplled of the bravest: he lasted long; But on us both did haggis age steal on, And wore us out of act. It much repairs me To talk of your godfathers: In his youth He had the wit, which I can well observe To-day in our young lords; but they may jest, Till their own scorn return to them unsnoted, Ere they can hide their levity in honour. So like a courtier, contempt nor bitterness Were in his pride or sharpness; if they were, His equal had awak'd them; and his honour, Clock to itself, knew the true minute when Exception bid him speak, and, at this time, His tongue obey'd his hand: who were below him He us'd as creatures of another place; And bow'd his eminent top to their low ranks, Making them seem'd and them, and them, in their poor praise he humbled: Such a man Might be a copy to these younger times: [now Which, follow'd well, would demonstrate them But goes backward. Ber. His good remembrance, sir, Lies richer in your thoughts, that on his tomb; So in approv'd lives not his epitaph, As in your royal speech. King. 'Would I were with him? He would al- ways say, (Methinks, I hear him now: his plausive words He scatter'd not in ears, but graven them To grow there, and, to bear.—Let me not live, Thus his good melancholy oft began, On the catastrophe and heel of pastime, When it was out,—let me not live, quoth he, After my flame lacks oil, to be the snuff Of younger spirits, whose apprehensive sense All but new things disdain; whose judgements are More fathers of their garments:—whose constancies are—This he wish'd I, after him, do after him wish too, Since I nor war, nor honey, can bring home, I quickly were dissolved from my hve, To give some labourers room. 2 Lord. You are lov'd, sir. They, that least lend it you, shall lack you first. King. I fill a place, I know.—How long ist, Since the physician at your father's died? He was much fam'd.
Scene III.—Revelation. A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Count. I will now hear what you say of this gentlewoman.

Madam, the care I have had to even your content, I wish might be found in the calendar of my past endeavours: for then would our woman's modesty, and make the seal of our deservings, when of ourselves we publish them.

Count. What does this knave here? Set you gone, sirrah. The complaints I have heard of you, I do not all believe; 'tis my sorrow, that I do not, for, I know, you lack not felly to commit them, and ought have shewn enough to make such knaves yours.

Cler. 'Tis not unknown to you, madam, I am a poor fellow.

Count. Well, sir.

Cler. 'Tis not so well, that I am poor; though many of the rich are damned. But, if I may have your ladyship's good will to go to the world, label the woman and we will so do we may.

Count. With these needs be a beggar?

Cler. I do beg your good-will in this case.

Count. In what case?

Cler. In her case, and mine own. Service is no heritage, and for my think, I shall never have the blessing of God, till I have some of my body; for, they say, boors are blessings.

Count. Tell me the reason why thou wilt marry.

Cler. My body, madam, requires it: I am driven out by the flesh; and he must needs go, that the devil drives.

Count. Is this all your worship's reason?

Cler. Faith, madam, I have other holy reasons, such as they are.

Count. May the world know them?

Cler. I have been, madam, a wicked creature, as you and all flesh and blood are; and, indeed, I do marry, that I may repent.

Count. Thy marriage, sooner than thy wickedness.

Cler. I am out of friends, madam; and I hope to have none, when I am married.

Count. Such friends are thine enemies, knave.

Cler. You are shallow, madam; 'tis great friends;

For the knaves come to do that for me, which I am a wary of. He, that ears my land, spares my team, and gives me leave to kill the crop. If I be his cuckold, he's my drudge. He that comforts my wife, is the cherisher of my flesh and blood; he, that cherishes my flesh and blood, loves my flesh and blood; he, that loves my flesh and blood, is my friend; ere, be, that knows my wife, is my friend, if men could be contented to be what they are, there were no fear in marriage: for young Harbon the puritan, and did Param the papist, know their hearts were severed in religion, their heads are both one, they may joll, steale, together, like any deer, I thee hark on.

Count. What then is your friend, and I speak the truth the next way:

For I the ballad will repeat,
Which men all true shall find;
Your cuckoo sings by kind.

Count. Get you gone, sir. I'll talk with you more anon.

Swift. May it please you, madam, that he bid Helen come to you; of her I am to speak.

Count. Sirrah, tell my gentlewoman, I would speak with her; I Helen I mean.

Cler. Was this fair face the count, quoth she, [Staging.

Why the Grecians sacked Troy,
Told done, done told,
Till this king Priam's joy.
With that she sighed as she stood,
With that she sighed as she stood,
And gave this sentence then;
Among nine bad if one be good,
Among nine bad if one be good,
There's yet one good in ten.

Count. What, one good in ten? you corrupt the song, sirrah.

Cler. One good woman in ten, madam; which is a parrying off the song: 'Would did would serve the world so all the year, we'd find no fault with the tythe-woman if I were the person (I do rest, quoth a': am I we might have a good woman born but every blazing star, or at an earthquake, I would need the lottery well; a man may draw his heart cold, he be placed as he please.

Count. You'll be gone, sir, and as do I command you?

Swift. That man should be at a woman's command, and we'll do it;—I have heard, he be no puritan, yet it will do no hurt; it will wear the surplice of humility over the black gown of a big heart—I am going, forsooth; the business is for Helen.

[Exit Clown.

Count. Well, now.

Swift. I know, madam, you love your gentlewoman entirely.

Count. Robin, do her father bequeath her to me? and she herself, without other advantage, may I freely make title to as much love as she finds: there is more owing her, than is paid; and who shall be paid her, she'll demand.

Swift. Madam, I was very late more near her than, I think, she wished me alone she was, and did communicate to herself, her own words to her own ears: she thought, I dare vow for her, they touched not any stranger now. Her matter is, she loves, your son Fortune, she said, was no goddess, that had put such difference between their two estates; I have, no god, that would not extend his might, only that he were less lovely: Diana, no queen of virgins, that would suffer her poor knight to be surprised, without rescue, in the first assault, or ransom afterwards. This she delivered in the most bitter manner; that I should not hear a virgin's claim in which I hold my duty, speedily to acquaint you with; silence, in the loss that may happen, it concerns you something to know it.

Swift. You have discharged this honestly: keep it to yourself; many likelihoods inform'd me of this before, which hung so tettering in the balance, that I could neither believe, nor misdoubt. I pray you, leave me stand this in your bosom, and I thank you for your honest care; I will speak with you further anon.

[Exit Steward.

Helen. Stew. Even so it was with me, when I was young:
We are nature's, these are ours; this thorn
Doth to our rose of youth rightly belong:
Our blood to us, this to our blood is born;
It is the show and seal of nature's truth,
Where love's strong passion is impress'd in youth;
By our own hands, in times of days for more.
Such were our faults;—or then we thought them none.
Her eye is sick on't; I observe her now.
Heaven, is it your pleasure, madam?

Count. You know, Helen, I am a mother to you.
All's that ends well.

Hel. Mine honourable mistress.

Count. Nay, a mother;

Why not a mother? When I said, a mother,
Methought you saw a serpent: What's in mother,
That you start at it? I say, I am your mother;
And put you in the number of those
That were enombwed mine: 'Tis often seen,
Adoption strives with nature; and choice breeds
A native slip to us from foreign seeds:
You never oppress'd me with a mother's groan,
Yet I express to you a mother's care: —
God's mercy, maiden! does it curr thy blood,
To say, I am thy mother? What's the matter,
That seeks not the finding that he you finds,
The many-colur'd Iris, rounds thine eye?
Why? —that you are my daughter?

Hel. I say, I am your mother

Count. That I am not.

Hel. The count Rousillon cannot be my brother:
I am from humble, he from honour'd name;
No note with my parents, his all noble;
My master, my dear lord he is: and I
His servant live, and will his vassal die:
He must not be my brother.

Count. Nor I your mother?

Hel. You are my mother, madam; Would you were (So that my lord, your son, were not my brother,)
Indeed, my mother! or were you both our mother?
I would not care for it, he would receive it. [th?]
So I were not his sister: Can't no other,
But, you are daugther, he must be my brother?

Count. Yes, Helen, you might be my daughter,

Hel. God shield you, you mean it not! daughter, and mother,
So striove upon your pulse: What, pale again?
My fear hath catch'd your fondness: Now I see
The mystery of your melanctoly; your
Salt tears' head. Now to all sense 'tis gross.
You love my son; invention is asham'd,
Against the proclametion of thy passion,
To say, thou dost not: therefore tell me true;
But tell me then, 'tis so:—for, look, thy cheeks
Confess it, one to the other; and thine eyes
See it so grossly shown in thy behauiours,
That in their kind they speak it: only sin
And hellish obstinacy tis thy tongue,
That truth should be suspected: Speak, isn't so?
If it be so, you have wound a goodly clue;
If it be not, fowarst: however, I charge thee,
And I will then shall work in me for thine avail,
To teach me truly.

Hel. Good madam, pardon me!

Count. Do you love my son?

Hel. Your pardon, noble mistress! I love my son?

Count. Do not you love him, madam?

Count. Go not about; my love hath Im't a hond,
Whereof the world takes note: come, come, disclose
The state of your affection; for your passions
Have to the full appearance.

Hel. Then, I confess,
Here on my knee, before him heaven and you,
That before you, and next unto high heaven,
I love your son: —

My friends were poor, but honest: so's my love;
Be not offended; it hurts not him,
That he is lodge'd of me, I adore him not
By any token of presumtuous suit;
Nor would I have him, till I do deserve him;
Yet never know how that desert should be.
I know I am in vain that hope
Yet, in this captious and intenable sieve,
I still pour in the waters of my love,
And yet to lose still: thus, Indian-like,
Religious in mine error, I adore him not
By any token of presumtuous suit;
Nor would I have him, till I do deserve him;
Yet never know how that desert should be.
I know I am in vain that hope

The sun, that looks upon your worshipper,
But knows of him no more. My dearest madam,
Let not your hate encounter with my love,
For loving where you do: but, if yourself,
Whose aged honour elts a virtuous youth,
Did ever, in so true a flame of loving,
Wish chastely, and love dearly, till your Dian
Was both herself and love; 0 then, give pity
To her, whose state is such, that cannot choose
But lend and give, where she is sure to lose;
That seeks not the finding that he you finds,
But, riddle-like, lives sweetly where she dies.

Count. Had you not lately an intent, speak truly,
To go to Paris?

Hel. Madam, I had.

Count. Wherefore? tell true. Hel. I will tell truth; by grace itself, I swear.
You know, my father left me some prescr:ptions
Of rare and power'd effects, such as his reading,
And manifest experience, had collected
For general soveretignty: and that he will'd me
In heedfullest reservation to bestow them,
As notes, whose faculties inclusive were,
More than they were in note; amongst the rest,
There is a remedy, approv'd, set down,
To cure the desperate languishings, whereby
The king is render'd lost.

Count. This was your motive
For Paris, was it? speak.

Hel. My lord your son made me to think of this,
Else Paris, and the medicine, and the king,
Had, from the conversation of my thoughts,
Haply, been absent then.

Count. But think you Helen,
If you should tender your supposed aid,
You might prevail: that his good receipt
Shall for my legacy, be sanctified [honour
By the luckiest stars in heaven: and, would your
But give me leave to try success, I'd venture
The well-look life of mine on his grace's cure,
By such a day, and hour.

Count. Dost thou believe it?

Hel. Ay, madam, knowingly.

Count. Why, Helen, thou shalt have my leave, and Mans, and attendants, and my loving greetings

To those of mine in court; I'll stay at home,
And pray God's blessing into thy attempt;
Be gone to-morrow: and be sure of this,
What I can help thee to, thou shalt not miss.

[Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Paris. A Room in the King's Palace.

Flourish. Enter King, with young Lords; taking leave for the Florentine war ; Bertram, Parolles, and Attendants.

King. Farewell, young lord, these warlike principles
[well—
Do not throw from you:—and you, my lord, fare-
Share the advice betwixt you; if both gain all,
The gift doth stretch itself as 'tis received,
And is enough for both:

1 Lords. It is our hope, sir,
After well-enter'd soldiers, to return
And find your grace in health.

King. No, our grace cannot be: and yet my heart
Will not confess he owes the malady
That doth my life besiege. Farewell, young lords
Whether I live or die, you own the cause
Of worthy Frenchmen: let higher stay
(Those 'bated, that inherit but the fall
Of the last monarchy,) see, that you come
Not to woo honour, but lose it on the way
The bravestuest questian shrinks, find what you seek,
That fame may cry you loud: I say, farewell.
Lord. Health, at your bidding, serve your majesty.

King. These gifts of Italy, take heed of them; They say, our French lack language to deny, If they demand, beware of being captives.
Before you served.

Bec. Our hearts receive your warnings.

King. Farewell. - Come hither to me.

[The King rises to a comch.

1 Lord. O my sweet lord, that you will stay behind.

Par. The lost his family the spark.

C Lord. What move brave wars.

Par. Most admirable; I have seen those wars.

Bar. I am commanded here, and keep a coilt with,

Two young, and the next year, and, I see early.

Par, O on the mind stand to it, boy, steal away betimes.

Bar. I shall stay here the forerun to a smoke;
Creating my shoes on the plain masonry,

Tell honour he bought up, and no sword worn.

But one to dance with! By heaven, 'twill steal away.

1 Lord. There's honour in the theft.

Par. Comment it, count.

2 Lord. I am your necessary; and so farewell.

Bar, I grow to you, and our parties is a tortured body.

1 Lord. Farewell, captain.

2 Lord. Sweet reverse Paroles!

Par. Noble heroes, my sword and yours are kin.
Good spurs and reins, a word, good metals.
You shall find to the regiment of the Spinali, one

Captains, with his cincture, an emblem of valor

Here on his minister church; it was this very sword

Entomitted it say to him, I live; and observe

His reports for me.

2 Lord. We shall, noble captain.

Par. More than one from this notice! [Read Lords.] What will you do?

Bar. Stay; the king.

[Seeing him rise.

Par. Use a more spurious ceremony to the noble lords, you the restrained yourself within the laps

Of too cold an advice; be more expressive to them

For they wear themselves in the cap of the time

There, do muster true gait, eat, speak, and move

Under the influence of the most remote speeches;

And though the devil lend the measure, such as to be Followed after them, and take a more dilated farewell.

Bar. And I will do so.

Par. Worthies fellows; and like to prove most sinewy sword-smen.

[Read Bertram and Paroles.

Enter Lafc.}

Laf. Pardon, my lord, [kneeling;] for me and for my tiddings.

King. I'll see thee to stand up.

Laf. Then here's a man

Stands, that has brought his pardon. I would, you

Had knew'd, my lord, to ask me mercy; and

That, at my bidding, you could so stand up.

King. I would I had; so I had broke thy pate, and Pak'd thee mercy for't.

Laf. Good faith, across.

But, my good lord, 'tis thus! Will you be cured

Of your infirmity?

King. No.

Laf. O, will you eat

No grapes, my royal fox? yes, but you will,

My noble grapes, an of my royal fox.

Come, I have the three in them. I have the Medicine, That's able to breathe life into a stone;

Quicken a rock, and make you dance canary,

With sprightly fire and motion; whose simple touch

Is (You) to arouse king Pepin, nay,

To give Great Charlemain a pen in his hand,

And write to her a love-letter.

King. Who's here is this?

Laf. Why, doctor she; My lord, there's one arrived,

If you will see her—now, by my faith and honour,

If seriously I may convey my thoughts

In this my light deliverance, I have spoke

With one, that, in her sex, her years, profession,

Wisdom, and cunntz, hath amazed me more

Than I dare blame my weakness. Will you see her

[For that is her demand] and know her business?

Those, laugh with me at.

King. Now, good Lafc.

Bring in the admiration; that we with thee

May spend our wonder too, or take off thine,

By wondering how thou took at't.

Laf. Nay, I'll fit you,

And not be all day neither. [Exit Lafc.]

King. Thus he his special nothing ever prologues.

Re-enter Lafc, with Liitiena.

Laf. Nay, come your ways.

King. This base hath wings indeed.

Laf. Nay, come your ways.

This is his majesty, say your mind to him.

A traitor you do look like; but such traitors

His majesty seldom fears. I am Creusa's uncle,

That dare leave two together: fare you well.

[Exit.]

King. The rather will I spare my praises towards him;

Knowing him, is enough. On his bed of death

Many receipts he gave me; chiefly one,

Which, as the dearest issue of his practice,

And of his old experience the only darling,

Had he made store up, as a tripe eye

Baffled for seven years; and two, more dear; I have to

And, hearing your high majesty is touch'd

With that main grant cause where I'm in the honour

Of my dear father's gift stands chief in power,

I come to tender it, and my appliance,

With all bound humbleness.

King. We thank you, maiden;

But may not be so credulous of cure,

When the most learned doctors leave us;

And the congregation college have concluded

That labouuring art can never ransom nature

From her inward blemish, — I say we must not

Stain our judgment, or corrupt our hope

To procure our post-cure malady

To empiricks; or to dissever

Our great self and our credit, to esteem

A senseless help, when help past same we deem.

Here's my duty then shall pay me, for my pains

I will no more enforce mine office on you;

Humbly entreating from your royal thoughts

A modest one, to bear me back again.

King. I cannot give thee less to call'd grateful.

Then thought'st to help me; and such thanks I give,

As one near death to those that wish him live;

But, what at full I know, thou know'st no part;

I knowing all my peril, thou no art.

Her. What I can do, can do no hurt to try,

Since you set up your rest against remedy.

Her. If the greatest works is barbarous,

Of these them by the weakest minister;

So holy writ in babes hath judgment shown,

When judges have been babes. Great floods have

From simple sources; and great seas have dried

When miracles have by the greatest been denied.

Of expectation fails, and most oft there

Where most it promises; and oft it hits.

Where most is collected, and despair most sits.

King. I must not hear thee; fare thee well, kind maid.

Theys paines, not w'dst, must by thyself be paid;

Profits, not took, requite thanks for their reward.

Her. Inspired merit so by breath is barr'd.

It is not so with him that all things knews, cannot make a leg, put off its cap, kiss his hand, and say nothing, has neither leg, hands, lip, nor cap; and, indeed, if they'd say precisely, were not for the court: but, for me, I have an answer will serve all men.

Count. Marry, that's a bountiful answer, that fits all questions.

Clo. It is like a barber's chair; that fits all buttocks; the pin-buttock, the quatch-buttock, the brawn-buttock, or any buttock.

Count. Whereto your answer serve fit to all questions?

Clo. As fit as ten groats is for the hand of an attorney, as your French crown for your taffeta punk, as Thib's rush for Tom's fore-finger, as a pancake for Shrove-Tuesday, as a pittance for May-day, as the trail to his hole, the cuckold to his horn, as a scolding queen to a wrangling knave, as the nun's lip to the friar's mouth; nay, as the puddin' to his skin.

Count. Have you, I say, an answer of such fitness for all questions?

Clo. From below your duke, to beneath your constable, it will fit any question.

Count. It must be an answer of most monstrous size, that must fit all demands.

Clo. But a trifle neither, in good faith, if the learned should speak truth of it: here it is, and all that belongs to it: Ask me, if I am a courtier: it shall do you no harm to learn.

Count. To be young again, if we could: I will be a fool in question, hoping to be the wiser by your answer. I pray you, sir, are you a courtier?

Clo. O Lord, sir, there's a simple putting off:—more, more, a hundred of them.

Count. Sir, I am a poor friend of yours, that loves you.

Clo. O Lord, sir,—Thick, thick, spare not me.

Count. I think, sir, you can eat none of this homely meat.

Clo. O Lord, sir,—Nay, put me to't, I warrant you.

Count. You were lately whipped, sir, as I think.

Clo. O Lord, sir,—spare not me.

Count. Do you cry, O Lord, sir, at your whipping, and spare not me? Indeed, your O Lord, sir, is very seqent to your whipping; you would answer very well to a whipping, if you were but bound to't.

Clo. I never had worse luck in my life, in my—O Lord, sir, I see, things may serve long, but not serve ever.

Count. I play the noble housewife with the time, to entertain it so merrily with a fool.

Clo. O Lord, sir, Why, there's not service well again.

Count. An end, sir, to your business: Give I Helen this,

And urge her to a present answer back:
Commend me to your kinsmen, and my son;
This is not much.

Clo. Not much commendation to them.

Count. Not much employment for you: You understand me?

Clo. Most fruitfully: I am there before my legs.

Count. Haste you again.

[Exeunt severally.

SCENE III.—Paris. A Room in the King's Palace.

Enter Bertram, Lafeu, and Parolles.

Laf. They say, miracles are past; and we have our philosophical persons, to make modern and familiar things, supernatural and causeless. Here is it, that we make trifles of terrors; enconcing ourselves into seeming knowledge, when we should submit ourselves to an unknowable.

Par. Why, tis the rarest argument of wonder, that hath shot out in our latter times.

Ber. And so 'tis.

Laf. To be relinquished of the artist—

Par. So I did; both of Galen and Paracelsus.

Laf. Of all the learned and authentick fellows—

Par. Right, so I say.
Lea. That gave him out memorable.
Par. Why, there's to say I too.
Lea. Not to be helped.
Par. Right as 'twere a man assured of an End. Life, and sure death.
Lea. Just, you say well, so would I have said.
Lea. I may truly say, it is a novelty to the world.
Par. It is, indeed; if you will have it in showing, you shall read it in. — What do you call it?
Lea. A showing of a heavenly effect in an earthy actor.
Par. That's it I would have said: the very same.
Lea. Why, your dolphin is not faster: sure me
I speak in respect.
Par. Nay, 'tis strange, 'tis very strange, that is the brief and the terrors of it; and he is of a most fascinators spirit, that will not acknowledge it to be the —
Lea. Very hand of heaven.
Par. Ay, so I say.
Lea. In a most weak
Par. And double minister, great power, great transcendence which should, indeed, give us a further use to be made, than alone the recovery of the king, as to be —
Lea. Generally thankful.

Baker King, Helena, and Attendants.

Par. I would have said it you say well. Here comes the king.
Lea. Laustic, as the Dutchman says: I'll like a maid the better, whilst I have a tooth in my hand:
Why, he's able to lend her a carnate.
Par. Merry du Fiamnger! Is not this Helena?
Lea. Fare well, I think so.
King. Go, call before me all the lords in court.
End all.

Silk, my preserver, by thy patient's side.
And with this healthful hand, whose banish'd sense
Then hast repeated, a second time receive
The confirmation of my promised gift,
Which but attends thy naming.

Baker several Lords.

Fair maid, send forth thine eye: this youthful pore.
Of noble bachelors stand at my bestowing.
For whom both sovereign power and father's voice
I have to use: thy frank election make Those had power to choose, and they none to for

Hel. To each of you one fair and virtuous mis-
Fall, when love please — marry, to each, but one!
Lea. I'd give bay Curial, and his furniture,
My brother's name were broken at those boys',
And write so little heard.

King. Forsee them well: Not one of those, but had a noble father.
Hel. Gentlemen. [Aside, to Heaven.]

Heaven hath, through me, restor'd the king to
All. We understand it, and thank heaven for you.
Hel. I am a simple maid; and therein wealthiest.
That, I protest, I simply am a maid:
Please it your majesty, I have done already:
The blushes in my cheeks, thus whisper me.
We blush, that thou should'st choose: but, he refused?
Let the white death still on thy cheek for ever:
We'll never come again there.

King. Make choice: and, see,
Who shews thy love, shews all his love in me.

Hel. Now Dian, from thy altar do I fly;
And to imperial Love, that most high,
Do I return, Sir, why bear my suit? I
Lord. And grant it.

Hel. Thanks, sir; all the rest is made.
Lea. I had rather be in this choice, than throw away;

Hæ. The honour, sir, that flames in your fair eyes,
Before I speak, too threateningly replies:
Love make your fortunes easy to see above
Her that so wishes, and her humble love!

Hel. No better, if you please.

King. My wish receive,
Which great love grant! and so I take my leave.
Lea. Do all they deny her? An they were sons of men, we should send them to the Turk, to make sumachs.
Hel. Be not afraid to a Lord that thy hand should take;
I'll now one you wrong for your own sake:
Blessing upon your vows, and in your bed
Find fairest fortune, if you ever wed!
Lea. Those boys are boys of ice, 'twill none have: ever sure, they are bastards to the English;
the Frenchmen never get them.
Hel. You are too young, too happy, and too good,
To make yourself a son out of my blood.
4 Lord. Fair one, I think not so.
Lea. There's one grace yet, — I am sure thy father drank wine; — But if thou best not an son, I am a youth of fourteen: I have known thee already.

Hel. I dare not say, I take you; [to Bertram] but I give Me and my service, ever whilst I live,
Into thy guiding power. — This is the man.
King. Why then, young Bertram, take her, she's

Ber. My wife, my legs? I shall beseech thy highness,
In such a business give me leave to use
The birth of mine own eyes.

King. Know'st thou not, Bertram,
What she has done for me?

Ber. Yes, my good lord;
But never hope to know why I should marry her.
King. Then know'st thou she has rais'd me from my sickly bed.

Ber. But follows it, my lord, to bring me down
Much of her former raising? I know her well;
She had her breeding at my father's charge.
A poor physician's daughter my wife! — Disdain
Rather corrupt me ever!

King. 'Tis only title thou disdains't in her, the which
I can build up.
Strange is it, that our bloods,
Of colour, weight, and heat, pour'd all together.
Would quite confound distinction, yet stand off
In differences so mighty: if he be
All that is virous, (save what thou dislik'st,
A poor physician's daughter) thou dislik'st
Of virtue for the name: but do not so;
That young widow, when virtue's work is proceed,
The place is dignified by the doer's deed:
Where great additions will, and virtue none,
It is a dropped honour: good alone
Is good without a name: vileness so:
The fame by what it is should go,
Not by the title. She is young, wise, fair,
In these to nature she's immediate heir;
And these breed honour: that is honour's born,
And is not like the sire: Honours best thrive,
When rather from our acts we them derive
Than our fore-gem; the mere word's a slave,
Debauch'd on every tomb; on every grave,
A lying trophy, and as oft is dumb,
Where dust, and damn'd oblivion, is the tomb
Of honour'd bones indeed. What should be said?
If thou have not like this creature as a maid,
I can create the rest: virtue, and she,
In her own dower; honour, and wealth, from me.
Ber. I cannot love her, nor will strive to do's.
King. Thou wrong'st thyself, if thou should'st

Ber. That you are well restor'd, my lord, I am
Let the rest go.

King. My honour at the stake which to defeat,
I must with such my power: Here, take her hand,
Proud scornful boy, unworthy this good gift,
That dost in vile misprision shackie up
My love, and her desert: that canst not dream.
We, posessing in her defective scale,
All's Well that Ends Well

Act 2.

191

Par. My lord, you do me most insupportable vexation, in your honour, and mine.

Laf. I would it were hell-pains for thy sake, and my poor doing eternal; for doing I am past; as I will by thee, in what motion age will give me leave:

[Exit.]

Par. Well, thou hast a son shall take this disgrace off me, scurril, old, filthy, scurril lord!—Well, I must be patient; there is no fettering of authority. I'll beat him, by my life, if I can meet him with any authority! an he were double and double a lord. I'll have no more piper to dance; I would have of—I'll beat him, an I could but meet him again.

Re-enter Lafc.

Laf. Sirrah, your lord and master's married, there's news for you; you have a new mistress.

Par. I most unfeignedly beseech your lordship to make some reservation of your wrongs: He is my good lord: whom I serve above, is my master.

Laf. Who? God?

Par. Ay, sir.

Laf. The devil it is, that's thy master. Why dost thou gather up thy arms o' this fashion? dost make hose of thy sleeves? do other servants so? Thou wert best set thy lower part where thy nose stands. By mine honours, if I were but two hours younger, I'd beat him: methinks, thou art a gentle face, and every man should beat thee. I think, thou wast created for men to breathe themselves upon thee.

Par. This is hard and undeserved measure, my lord.

Laf. Go to, sir; you were beaten in Italy for picking a kernel out of a pomegranate; you are a vagabond, and a tramp of an army: thou didst make the most offensive and contemptuous gesture of thy hand. I took him at his first assuming upon the scene, and I had a good purpose of him. So farewell! I'll to the Tuscan wars, and never bed her.

Par. France is a dog-hole, and it no more merits than your master's foot; to the wars! and I'll to the wars of his age, than I would have of—I'll beat him, an I could but meet him again.

[Exit.]

Enter Bertram.

Par. Good, very good; it is so then.—Good, very good; let it be concealed a while.

Ber. Undone, and forfeited to cares for ever!

Par. What is the matter, sweet heart?

Ber. Although before the solemn priest I have not bed her.

Par. What! what, sweet heart?—[sworn]

Ber. O my Patrois, they have married me—
I'll to the Tuscan wars, and never bed her.

Par. France is a dog-hole, and it no more merits than your master's foot; to the wars! and I'll to the wars of his age, than I would have of—I'll beat him, an I could but meet him again.

[Exit.]

Enter Bertram.

Par. You are too old, sir; let it satisfy you, you are too old.

Laf. I must tell thee, sirrah, I write man; to which title age cannot bring thee.

Par. What I dare too well do, I dare not do.

Laf. I did think thee, for two ordinaries, to be a match for my master. The tread of thy hand, and the hammers, about thee, did manifestly dissuade me from believing thee a vessel of too great a burden. I am now found thee; when I lose thee again, I care not: yet art thou good for nothing but taking up; and that thou art scarce worth.

Par. Hadst thou not the privilege of antiquity upon thee,

Laf. Do not plunge thyself too far in anger, lest thou hasten thy trial;—which if—Lord have mercy on thee for a hen! So, my good window of lattice, fare thee well; thy casement I need not open, for I see through thee. Give me thy hand.

Par. My lord, you give me most egregious indignity.

Laf. Ay, with all my heart; and thou art worthy of it.

Par. I have not, my lord, deserved it.

Laf. Yes, good sir; every dram of it: and I will not bate thee a scruple.

Par. Well, I shall bear it.

Laf. Even as soon as thou canst, for thou hast to pull at a smack o' the contrary. If ever thou beest bound in thy scarf, and beaten, thou shalt find what it's proud of thy bondage. I have a desire to hold my acquaintance with thee, or rather my knowledge; that I may sry, in the default, he is a man I know.

Par. However, my lord, you do me most insupportable vexation, in your honour, and mine.

Laf. I would it were hell-pains for thy sake, and my poor doing eternal: for doing I am past; as I will by thee, in what motion age will give me leave:
SCENE IV.—The same. Another Room in the same.

Enter Helena and Clown.

Hel. My mother greets me kindly: Is she well? Cla. She is not well; but yet she has her health; she's very merry; but yet she is not well; but she is given; she's very well, and wants nothing. (The world; but yet she is not well. Hel. If she be very well, what does she all, that she's not very well? Cla. Truly, she's very well, indeed, but for two things. Hel. What two things? (To. One, that she's not in heaven, whither God sends her quickly.)

Enter Parolles.

Par. Bless you, my fortunate lady! Hel. I hope, sir, I have your good will to have mine own good fortunes. Par. You had my prayers to lead them on; and to keep them on, have them still.—O, my knave! How goes my old lady? Cla. So that you had her wrinkles, and her money, I would she did as you say. Par. Why, I say nothing. Cla. Marry, you are the lower man; for many a man's pleasure shakes out his master's undoing. To say nothing, to do nothing, to know nothing, and to have nothing, is to be a great part of your life, which is within a very little of nothing.

Par. Away, thou'rt a knave. Cla. You should have said, sir, before a knave than a knave; that is, before me then a knave, this had been truth, sir.

Go to, thou art a witty fool, I have found thee. Cla. Did you find me in yourself, sir? or were you taught to find me? The search, sir, was profitable; and much fool may you find in you, even to the world's pleasure, and the increase of laughter.

Par. A good knave, I thank, and well fed—Madam, my lord will go away tonight. A very serious business calls on him. The great prerogative and right of love, Which, as your due, time claims, he does acknowledge: Hot pass it off by a compell'd restraint; Whose want, and whose delay, is stewed with sweets, Which they distil now in the curbed time, To make the coming hour over-flow with joy, And pleasure draw the brain. Hel. What's his will else? Par. That you will take your instant leave the king, And make this haste as your own good proceeding, Strengthen'd with what apology you think May make it probable need. Hel. What more commands be? Par. That, having this obtain'd, you presently Attend his further pleasure. Hel. In every thing I wait upon his will. Par. I shall report it so. Hel. I pray you.—Come, sirrah. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Another Room in the same.

Enter Lafau and Bertram.

Laf. But, I hope, your lordship thinks not him a soldier.

Ber. Ye, my lord, and of very valiant approbation. Laf. You have it from his own deliverance. Ber. And by other warranted testimony. Laf. Then my dial goes not true; I took this lark for a busting.

Then I assure you, my lord, he is very great in knowledge, and accordingly valiant.

Hel. I have then sinned against his experience, and transgressed against his valour: and my state: that way is dangerous, since I cannot yet find in my heart. Here he comes; I pray you, make us friends, I will pursue the amity.

Enter Parolles.

Par. These things shall be done, sir. [To Bertram.] Laf. Pray you, sir, who's his taller? Par. Sir? Ber. I know him well! Ay, sir; he, is a good workman, a very good tailor. Laf. Is he gone to the king? [Aside to Parolles.] Par. She is. Ber. Will she away to-night? Par. As you'll have her. Ber. I have writ my letters, cackled my treasure. Given order for our horses; and to-night, When I should take possession of the bride,—And, ere I do begin,—Laf. A good traveller is something at the latter end of a dinner; but one that has three-thirds, and uses a known truth to pass a thousand nothing so, may be once heard, and thrice beaten.—God save you, captain. Ber. Is there any unkindness between my lord and you, monsieur? Par. I know not how I have deserved to run into my lord's displeasure. Laf. You have made shift to run into 's boots and spurs all, like him that leaped into the castard; and out of it you'll run again, rather than suffer yourself for your residence. Ber. It may be, you have mistaken him, my lord. Laf. And shall do so ever, though I took him at his prayers. Fare you well, my lord; and believe me, the sweetest care can be no kernel in this light nut; the soul of this man is his clothes; trust him not in matter of heavy consequence: I have kept of them tame, and know their nature.—Farewell, monsieur; I have spoken better of you than you have or will deserve at my hand; but we must do good against evil.

[Exit.

Par. An idle lord, I swear.

Ber. I think so.

Par. Why, do you not know him? Ber. Yes, I do know him well; and common speech Gives him a worthy pass. Here comes my clog.

Enter Helena.

Hel. I have, sir, as I was commanded from you, Spoke with the king, and have procur'd his leave For present parting; only, he desires Some private speech with you.

Ber. I shall obey his will. You must not marvel, Helena, at my course, Which holds not colour with the time, nor does The ministration and required office On my particular prepar'd I was not For such a business; therefore am I found So much unsettled: This drives me to entreat you, That presently you take your way for home; And rather muse, than ask, why I entreat you: For my respects are better than they seem; And my appointments have in them a need, Greater than shown itself, at the first view; To you that know them not. This to my mother:—

[Giving a letter.

'Twill be two days ere I shall see you; so Let me leave you to your wisdom. Hel. Sir, I can nothing say, But that I am your most obedient servant. Ber. Come, come, more of that.

Hel. With true obsequience seek to eke out that, Wherein toward me my homely stars have fail'd To equal my great fortune.

Ber. Let that go.

Hel. My state is very great: Farewell, sir; his home Ber. Pray, sir, your pardon.
ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

ACT III.

Flourish. Enter the Duke of Florence, attended by two French Lords, and others.

Duke. So that, from point to point, now have you heard The fundamental reasons of this war, Whose great decision hath much blood let forth, And more thistles after. 1 Lord. Holy seems the quarrel Upon your grace's part; black and fearful On the opponent. Duke. Therefore we marshall much, our cousin France Would, in so just a business, shut his bosom Against our borrowing prayers. 2 Lord. Good my lord, The reasons of our state I cannot yield, But like a common and an outward man, That the great figure of a council frames By self-unable motion: therefore dare not Say what I think of it; since I have found Myself in my uncertain grounds to fail. As often as I guess'd. Duke. Be it his pleasure. 2 Lord. But I am sure, the younger of our na- ture, That surfeit on their ease, will, day by day, Come here for physic. Duke. Welcome shall they be; And all the honors, that can fly from us, Shall on them settle. You know your places well; When better fall, for your avails they fell. To-morrow to the field. [Flourish. Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Rousillon. A Room in the Coun- tess's Palace.

Enter Countess and Clown.

Count. It hath happened all as I would have had it, save, that he comes not along with her.

Clo. By my troth, I take my young lord to be a very melancholy man.

Count. By what observance, I pray you?

Clo. Why, he will look upon his boot, and sing: mend the ruff, and sing; ask questions, and sing; pick his teeth, and sing: I know a man that had this trick of melancholy, sold a goodly manor for a song.

Count. Let me see what he writes, and when he means to come. [Opening a letter.]

Clo. I have no mind to Isbel, since I was at court; our old ling and our Isbels o'the country are not like your old ling and your Isbels o'the court: the brains of my Cupid's knocked out; and I begin to love, as an old man loves money, with no stomach.

Count. What have we here? Clo. Even that you have there. [Exit.]

Count. [Reads.] I have sent you a daughter-in-law; she has recovered the king, and undone me. I have wedded her, but not bedded her; and sworn to make the not eternal. You shall hear, I am run away: know it, before the report come. If there be breath enough in the world, I will hold a long distance. My duty to you. Your unfortunate son, Bertram.

This is not well, rash and unbridled boy, To fly the favours of so good a king; To pluck his indignation on thy head, By the mistreating of a maid too virtuous For the contempt of empire.

Re-enter Clown.

Clo. O madam, yonder is heavy news within, between two soldiers and my young lady.

Count. What is the matter?

Clo. Nay, there is some comfort in the news, some comfort; your son will not be killed so soon as I thought he would.

Count. Why should he be kill'd?

Clo. So say I, madam, if he run away, as I hear he does: the danger is in standing too; that's the loss of men, though 'tis the getting of children. Here they come, will tell you more: for my part, I only hear, your son was run away. [Exit Clown.

Enter Helena and two Gentlemen.

1 Gen. Save you, good madam. Hel. Madam, my lord is gone, for ever gone. 2 Gen. Do not say so. Count. This is a true report. — Pray you, gentle- men,— I have felt so many quirks of joy, and grief, That the first face of neither, on the start, Can woman me un'to:— Where is my son, I pray you? 2 Gent. Madam, he's gone to serve the duke of Florence: We met him thitherward; from thence we came, And, after some despatch in hand at court, Thither we bend again.

Hel. Look on his letter, madam; here's my pass- port. [Reads.] When thou canst get the ring upon my finger, which never shall come off, and show me a child begotten of thy body, that I am father to, then call me husband: but in such a then I write a never.

This is a dreadful sentence. Count. Brought you this letter, gentlemen?

1 Gen. Ay, madam; And, for the contents' sake, are sorry for our pains. Count. I pr'ythee, lady, have a better cheer; If thou engrossest all the griefs are thine, Thou rob'st me of a moiety: He was my son; But I do wash his name out of my blood, And thou art all my child—Towards Florence is he?

2 Gen. Ay, madam. 3 Gen. Such is his noble purpose: and, believe't, The duke will lay upon him all the honour That good convenience claims. Count. Return you thither? 1 Gen. Ay, madam, with the swiftest wing of speed. Hel. [Reads.] Till I have no wife, I have nothing in France.

'Tis bitter. Count. Find you that there? Hel. Ay, madam. 1 Gen. 'Tis but the boldness of his hand, happily, Which his heart was not consenting to. Count. Nothing in France, until he have no wife There's nothing here, that is too good for him,
But only she, and she deserves it.
That twenty each rude boys might lend upon,
And call her honesty, mercy. Who was with
I was a servant only, and a gentleman [him].
Whom I have sometimes known.
Com. Follies, was not it?
I cas. Ay, my good lady, he.
Com. A very tainted fellow, and full of wicked
My son corrupts a well-derived nature.
With this inducement.
I cas. Indeed, good lady,
The fellow has a deal of that, too much,
Which holds him much to have.
Com. You are welcome, gentleman.
I must correct you, when you see my son,
To tell him that his sword cannot win
The honour that he loses: more I'll detain you
To write to bent along.
We serve you, madam,
In that and all your worthiest affairs.
Com. Not so, but as we change our courtesies.
When do you make

Hel. Till I have made me, I know well, in France.
Nothing in France, and he has no
Then shall have none, Recollect, none in France,
Then hast thou again. Four lords! In
Then all the game from the country place.
Those tender lands of thine to the event
Of the same bearing was: and it is it!
That drive thee from the sporting court, where thine
What shot at or in country chase, so were.
Of smoky morn. (If you meet messengers,
That ride upon the violent speed of fire,
Fly with false aim; move the still piercing air,
Sóme with passion, do not touch my lord!
Whoever shoots at him, I set him there
Whoever charges on his forward breast,
I am the earth, that do hold him to it: And,
take him not, are not the cause.
His death was so affected in war, we were,
I met the raven lest when he rear'd
With sharp constraint of hunger; better were
That all the swallows, which house o'er,
Were gone at once. No, come thou home, Ross.
Whence honour but of danger wins a scar, As oft it losses all. I will be gone.
My going here is it, their holdeth them since Shall I hang him so? no, my lord; although
The air of paradise did fan the house,
And death of all, I will be good.
That all a summer may report my sight. To
To that the summer may report my sight, To
For, with the dark, poor thief, I'll steal away. [Exit.

Flourish. Enter the Duke of Florence, Bertram, Lords, Officers, Soldiers, and others.

Duke. The general of our horse thou art; and Great in our hope; say our best love and credence,
Upon thy promising fortune.

Ber. Sir, it is
A charge too heavy for my strength; but yet
With strive to bear it for your worthy sake,
To the extreme edge of hazard.

Duke. Then go thou forth:
And fortune play upon thy prosperous helm,
As thy auspicious mistress.

Sir, this very day,
Great Mars, I put myself into thy file
Make me but like my thoughts; and I shall prove
A lover of thy drum, draper of love.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Recollon. A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Enter Countess and Steward.

Count. Alas! and would you take the tender of her?
Enter Helena, in the dress of a pilgrim.

Wid. I hope so.—Look, here comes a pilgrim: I know she will lie at my house: thither they send one another: I'll question her.—

Hel. To Saint Jaques le grand.

Where do the palmeres lodge, I do beseech you?

Wid. At the Saint Francis here, beside the port.

Hel. Is this the way?

Wid. Ay, marry, is it.—Hark you! They come this way.—If you will tarry, holy pilgrim,

But till the troopes come by,

I will conduct you where you shall be lodg'd;

The rather, for, I think, I know your hostess

As ample as myself.

Wid. Is it yourself?

Hel. If you shall please so, pilgrim.

Wid. I thank you, and will stay upon your leisure.

Wid. You came, I think, from France?

Hel. I did so.

Wid. Here you shall see a countryman of yours,

That has done worthy service.

Hel. His name, I pray you?

Dis. The count Roussillon; Know you such a one?

Hel. But by the ear, that hears most nobly of His face I know not. [him]

Whatsoever he is,

He's bravely taken here. He stole from France,

As 'tis reported, for the king had married him

Against his liking: Think you it is so?

Hel. Ay, surely, mere the truth; I know his lady.

Dis. There is a gentleman, that serves the count,

Reports but coarsely of her.

Hel. What's his name?

Dis. Monsieur Parolles.

Hel. O, I believe with him.

In argument of praise, or to the worth

Of the great count himself, she is too mean

To have her name repeated; all her deserving

Is a reserved honesty, and that

I have not heard examin'd.

Dis. A lass, poor lady!

*Tis a hard bondage, to become the wife

Of a detesting lord.

Wid. A right good creature: Wheresoe'er she is,

Her heart weighs sadly: this young maid might do

A consider'd turn, if she please'd.

(Being her)

How do you mean?

May be, the amorous count solicits her

In the unlawful purpose.

He does, indeed;

And breaks with all that can in such a suit

Corrupt the tender honour of a maid:

But she is arm'd for him, and keeps her guard

In honestest defence.

Enter, with drum and colours, a party of the Florentine army, Bertram, and Parolles.

Mar. The gods forbid else!

Wid. So, now they come—:

That is Antonio, the duke's eldest son;

That Escalus.

Hel. Which is the Frenchman?

Dis. He; That with the plume: *tis a most gallant fellow; I would he lov'd his wife: if he were honester,

He were much goodlier: *is not a handsome gentleman?

Hel. I like him well. [knav.]

Dis. *Tis pity he is not honest: Yond's that same

That leads them to these places; were I his lady,

I'd poison that vile rascal.

Hel. Which is he?

Dis. That jack-anaples with scarrs: Why is he melancholy?

Hel. Perchance he's hurt i'the battle.

Par. Lose our drum; well.

Mar. He's shrewdly vexed at something: Look, he has spied us.

Wid. Marry, hang you!

Mar. And your courtesy, for a ring-carrier! [Exeunt Bertram, Parolles, Officers, and Soldiers.

Wid. The troop is past: Come, pilgrim, I will bring you

Where you shall host: of enjoin'd penitents

There's four or five, to great Saint Jaques bound,

Already at my house.

Hel. I humbly thank you:

Please it this matron, and this gentle maid,

To eat with us to-night, the charge and thanking,

Shall be for me; and, to requite you further,

I will bestow some precepts on this virgin,

Worthy the note.

Both. We'll take your offer kindly. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—Camp before Florence.

Enter Bertram, and the two French Lords.

1 Lord. Nay, good my lord, put him to't; let him have his way.

2 Lord. If your lordship find him not a hindering,

Hold me no more in your respect.

1 Lord. On my life, my lord, a bubble.

2 Ber. Do you think, I am so far deceived in him?

1 Lord. Believe it, my lord, in mine own direct

Knowledge, and not by any malice, but to speak of him

As my kinsman, he's a most notable coward, an Infinite and endless liar, an hourly-promise-breaker,

The owner of no one good quality worthy your Lordship's entertainment.

2 Lord. It were fit you knew him: lest, reposing,

Too far in his virtue, which he hath not, he might,

At some great and trusty business, in a main danger,

Fall you.

2 Ber. I would, I knew in what particular action to try him.

2 Lord. None better than to let him fetch off his Drum, which you hear him so confidently undertake to do.

1 Lord. I, with a troop of Florentines, will suddenly surprise him; such I will have, whom I am sure, he knows not from the enemy: we will bind and hood-wink him so, that he shall suppose no other but that he is carried into the leaguery of the adversaries, when we bring him to our tents: He but your lordship present at his examination; if he be a promise of his life, and in the highest compulsion of base fear, offer to betray you, and deliver all the intelligence in his power against you, and that with the divine forfeit of his soul upon oath, never trust my judgment in any thing.

2 Lord. O, for the love of laughter, let him fetch his drum; he says, he has a stratagem for't: when your lordship sees the bottom of his success in't, and to what metal this counterfeit lump of ore will be melted, if you give him not John Drum's entertainment, your inclining cannot be removed. Here he comes.

Enter Parolles.

1 Lord. O, for the love of laughter, hinder not the humour of his design: let him fetch off his drum in any hand.

2 Ber. How now, monsieur? this drum sticks sorely in your private: I'll promis

2 Lord. A pox on't, let it go: *tis but a drum.—

Par. But a drum! *is but a drum? A drum so lost!—There was an excellent command! to charge in with our horse upon our own wings, and to rend your own soldiers.

2 Lord. That was not to be blamed in the command of the service; it was a disaster of war that Cesar himself could not have prevented, if he had been there to command.

2 Ber. Well, we cannot greatly commend our success: some dishonour we had in the loss of that drum; but it is not to be recovered.
Par. It might have been recovered.

Ber. It might, but it is not now.

Par. It is to be recovered: but that the merit of service is seldom attributed to the true and exact performer, I would have that drum or another, or his face.

Ber. Why, if you have a stomach to't, monsieur, if you think your mystery in stratagem can bring this instrument of honour again into his master, his service, his adherence, and, go on; I will grace the attempt for a worthy exploit; if you speed well in it, the duke shall both speak of it, and extend to you what further becomes his greatness, even to the utmost syllable of your worthiness.

Par. By the hand of a soldier, I will undertake it.

Ber. But you must not now slumber in it.

Par. I'll about it this evening: and I will presently pen down my dilettamente, encourage myself in my certainty, put myself into my mortal preparation, and, by midnight, look to hear further from me.

Ber. May I be bold to acquaint his grace, you are gone about it?

Par. I know not what the success will be, my lord; but the attempt I vow.

Ber. I know, then: the valiant; and to the possibility of thy soldiership, will subscribe for thee.

Farewell.

Par. I love not many words. [Exit.

1 Lord. No more than a fish loves water;—not this a strange fellow, my lord? that so confidently seems to undertake this business, which he knows is not to be done; damns himself to do, and dares better be damned than not to.

2 Lord. You do not know him, my lord, as we do certain it is, that he will steal himself into a man's favour, and, for a week, escape a great deal of discoveries; but when you find him out, you have him ever after.

Ber. Why, do you think, he will make no deed at all of this, that so seriously does address himself unto you?

1 Lord. None in the world; but return with an invention, and clap upon you two or three probable lies: but we have almost embossed him, you shall see his fall to-night: for, indeed, he is not for your lordship's respect.

2 Lord. We'll make him some sport with the fox, ere we case him. He was first smoked by the old lord I saw: when his disguise and he is parted, turn again; what a sprat you shall find him; which you shall see this very night.

1 Lord. I must go look my twigs; he shall be caught.

Ber. Your brother, he shall go along with me.

1 Lord. As't please your lordship; I'll leave me. [Exit.

Ber. Now will I lead you to the house, and show you the last I spoke of.

[To himself.] But, you say, she's honest.

Ber. That's all the fault: I spoke with her but once, and found her wondrous cold; but I sent to her, by this same coxcomb that we have the wind, that I had letters which she did re-send; and this is all I have done: She's a fair creature: Will you go see her?

2 Lord. With all my heart, my lord.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—Florence. A Room in the Widow's House.

Enter Helena and Widow.

Hel. If you misdoubt that I am not she,
I know not how I shall assure you further;
But I shall lose the grounds I work upon.

Wid. Though my estate be fallen, I was well Nothing acquainted with these business; [born, And would not put my reputation now in any staining act.

Hel. Nor would I wish you

First, give me trust, the count he is my husband And, what to your sworn counsel I have spoken Is so, from word to word; and then you cannot, by the good aid that I of you shall borrow, Erry bestowing it.

Wid. I should believe you; For you have shew'd me that, which well approves You are great in fortune.

Hel. Take this purse of gold, And let me buy your friendly help this night, Which I will over-pay, and pay again, When I have found it. The count he woos your daughter,

Lays down hisMountain siege before her beauty, Resolves to carry her; let her, in fine, consent, As we'll direct her how 'tis best to bear it, Now his important blood will nought deny That she'll demand: A ring the county wears, That downward hath succeeded in his house, From son to son, some four or five descents Since the first father wore it: this ring he holds In most rich choice; yet, in his idle fire, To buy his will, it would not seem too dear, However repeated after.

Wid. The bottom of your purpose.

Hel. You see it lawful then: It is no more, But that your daughter, ere she seems as won, Desires this ring; appoints him an encounter. In fine, delivers me to fill the time, Here's an object, I will pursue; To marry her, I'll add three thousand crowns To what is past already.

Wid. I have yielded:

Instruct my daughter how shall put his hand To that time and place, with this deceit so lawful, May prove coherent. Every night he comes With musicks of all sorts, and songs composed To her unworthiness: It nothing steads us, To chuse him from our eaves; for he persists, As if his life lay on.

Hel. Then, when to-night, Let us assay our plot; which, if it speed, Is wicked meaning in a lawful deed, And lawful meaning in a lawful act; Where both not sin, and yet a sinful fact: But let's about it. [Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Without the Florentine Camp.

Enter first Lord, with five or six Soldiers in ambush.

1 Lord. He come can no other way but, by this hedge: come, if you freely upon him, speak what terrible language you will; though you understand it not yourselves, no matter; for we must not seem to understand him; unless some one among us, whom we must produce for an interpreter.

1 Sold. Good captain, let me be the interpreter.

2 Lord. Art not acquainted with him? knows he not thy voice?

1 Sold. No, sir, I warrant you.

2 Lord. But what illness, wooley hast thou to speak to us again?

1 Sold. Even such as you speak to me.

2 Lord. He must think us some band of strangers in adversarial entertainment. Now he hath a smack of all neighbouring languages; therefore we must every one be a man of his own fable, not to know what we speak to one another; so we seem to know, is to know straight our purpose: chough's language, gabbles enough, and good enough. As for you, interpreter, you must seem very politick. But couch, ho! here he comes; to beguile two hours in a sleep, and then to return and swear the lies he forges.

Enter Parolies.

Par. Ten o'clock: within these three hours 'twill be time enough to go home. What shall I say I have done? It must be a very plausible invention that carries it: They begin to smoke me: and disgraces have of late knocked too often at my door. If any tongue is too fool-hardy: but my heart hath the fear of Mars before it, and of its creatures, not daring the reports of my tongue.

1 Lord. This is the first truth that e'er thine own tongue was guilty of. [Aside.]

Par. What the devil should move me to undertake the recovery of this drum; being not ignorant of the impossibility, and knowing I had no such purpose? I must give myself some hurts, and say, I go in exploit: Yet slight ones will not carry it: They will say, Came you off with so little? and great ones I dare not give. Wherefore? what's the instance? Tongue, I must put you into a batter-woman's mouth, and buy another of Babazet's mute, if you prattle me into these perils.

1 Lord. Is it possible, he should know what is, and be that he is? [Aside.]

Par. I would the cutting of my garments would serve the turn; or the breaking of my Spanish sword.

1 Lord. We cannot afford you so. [Aside.]

Par. Or the baring of my beard; and to say, it was in straitest.

1 Lord. 'Twould not do. [Aside.]

Par. Or to draw my clothes, and say, I was stripped.

1 Lord. Hardly serve. [Aside.]

Par. Though I swore I leaped from the window of the citadel—

1 Lord. How deep? [Aside.]

Par. Thirty fathom. 1 Lord. Three great oaths would scarce make that be believed. [Aside.]

Par. I would, I had any drum of the enemy's; I would swear, I recovered it. 1 Lord. You shall hear one anon. [Aside.]

Par. A drum now of the enemy's:

[Alarum within.

1 Lord. Thrice movens, cargo, cargo, cargo. Alt. Cargo, cargo, willenda par corbo, cargo. O! ransom, ransom:—Do not hide mine eyes. [They seize him and blindfold him.]

1 Sold. Boskos thronimo boskos.

Par. I know you are the Muakos' regiment. And I shall lose my life for want of language: If there be here German, or Dane, low Dutch, Italian, or French, let him speak to me, I will discover that which shall undo The Florentine.

1 Sold. Boskos vanwado:—

I understand thee, and can speak thy tongue: Kerdolpho. Detake thee to thy faith, for seventeen poniards Are at thy bosom. Par. Oh! 1 Sold. Myska resania dulche.

1 Lord. Oscorb diochus voltovora.

1 Sold. The general is content to spare thee yet; And, hood-wink'd as thou art, will lead thee on To gather from thee: haply, thou may'st inform Something to save thy life. Par. O, let me live, And all the secrets of our camp I'll show, Their force, their purposes: nay, I'll speak that Which you will do at last. 1 Sold. But wilt thou faithfully? Par. If I do not, damn me.

[Exit with Parolles guarded.

Come on, thou art granted space.

1 Lord. Go, tell the count Rousillon, and my brother, We have caught the woodcock, and will keep him Till we do hear from them. [muffled, 2 Sold. Captain, I will. 1 Lord. He will betray us all unto ourselves:— Inform that. 2 Sold. So I will, sir.

1 Lord. Till then, I'll keep him dark, and safely lock'd. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Florence. Room in the Widow's House.

Enter Bertram and Diana.

Ber. They told me, that your name was Fontibell.

Dia. No, my good lord, Diana. 1 Sold. Titled goddess; And worth it, with addition! But, fair soul, In your fine frame hath love no quality? If the quick fire of youth light up your mind, You are no maiden, but a monument: When you are dead, you should be such a one As you are now, for you are cold and stern; And now you should be as your mother was, When your sweet self was got. Dia. She then was honest. Ber. So should you be.

Dia. My mother did but duty; such, my lord, As you owe to your wife.

Ber. No more of that! I prythee, do not strive against my vows: I was committed to her; but I love thee By love's own sweet constraint, and will for ever Do thee all rights of service.

Dia. Ay, so you serve us, Till we serve you: but when you have our roses, You barely leave our thorns to prick ourselves, And mock us with our hareness.

Ber. How have I sworn? Dia. 'Tis not the many oaths, that make the truth; But the plain single vow, that is vow'd true.

What is not holy, that we swear not by, But take the Highest to witness: Then, pray you, If I should swear by Jove's great attributes, I lov'd you dearly, would you believe my oaths, When I did love you? this has no holding, To swear by him whom I protest to love, oaths That I will work against him: Therefore, your Are words, and poor conditions; but unseal'd At least, in my opinion.

Ber. Change it, change it; Be not so holy-cruel: love is holy; And my integrity ne'er knew the crafts, That you do charge men with: Stand no more off, But give thyself unto my sick desires, Who then recover: say, thou art mine, and ever My love, as it begins, shall so persevere.

Dia. I see, that men make hopes, in such affairs, That we'll forsake ourselves. Give me that ring. Ber. I'll lend it thee, my dear, but have no power To give it from me. Dia. Will you not, my lord? Ber. It is an honour 'longing to our house, Bequeathed down from many ancestors; Which were the greatest obloquy i'the world In me to lose.

Dia. My honour's such a ring: My chastity's the jewel of our house, Bequeathed down from many ancestors; Which were the greatest obloquy i'the world In me to lose: Thus your own proper wisdom Brings in the champion honour on my part, Against your vain assault.

Ber. Here, take my ring My house, mine honour, yea, my life be thine, And I'll be hid by thee.

Dia. When midnight comes, knock at my chamber window; I'll order take, my mother shall not hear. Nor will I charge you in the band of truth, When you have conquer'd my yet maiden bed, Remain there but an hour, nor speak to me: My reasons are most strong; and you shall know them, When back again this ring shall be deliver'd And on your finger, in the night, I'll put Another ring! that, what in time proceeds,
May taken to the future our past deeds.
Adieu, till then; then, fail not: You have won.
A wife of me, and that there my hope be done.

Act II. Scene iii.

A Heaven on earth I have won, by going love.
[Exit.]

Dich. For which live long to thank both heaven and me!
You may so in the end——

My mother told me just how he would won,
As if she sat in his heart: she says, all men
Have the like object: he had sworn to marry me,
When his wife's dead; therefore I'll be with him, When he is crowned. Since Frenchmen are no breed,
Marry that witt, I'll live and die a maid:
Only, in this disguise, I think't no sin
To come in, that would unjealously win. [Exit.]

SCENE iii.—The Florentine Camp.

Enter the two French Lords, and two or three Soldiers.

1 Lord. You have not given him his mother's letter?

2 Lord. I have deliver'd it an hour since: there is something in it that stings his nature; for, on the reading it, he changed almost into another man.

1 Lord. He has much worthy blame laid upon him, for shaking off so good a wife, and so sweet a baby.

2 Lord. Especially he hath incurred the everlasting displeasure of the king, who had even toned his beauty to sing-happiness to him. I will tell you a thing, but you shall let it dwell darkly with you.

1 Lord. When you have spoken it, 'tis dead, and I am the grave of it.

2 Lord. He hath perverted a young gentlewoman his own presence, of a most chaste renown; and this night he flatters his will in the spoit of her honour: he hath given her his moon-ball ring, and thinks himself made in the unacheate composition.

1 Lord. Now, God delay our rebellion; as we are ourselves, what things are we!

2 Lord. Merely our own traitors. And as in the common course of all treasons, we still see them reveal themselves, till they attain to their abberred ends: so be, that in this action contrives against his own nobility, in his proper stream o'erflow's himself.

Is it not mean court-martial in us, to be trumpeters of our unlawful intents? We shall thence have his company to-night?

2 Lord. Not till after midnight: for he is dicted to be here.

1 Lord. That approaches space: I would gladly have him see his company anatomized; that he so curiously might see he had set this counterfeit.

2 Lord. We will not meddle with him till he come; for his presence must be the whip of the other.

1 Lord. In the mean time, what bear you of those words?

2 Lord. I hear, there is an overture of peace.

1 Lord. Nay, I assure you, a peace concluded.

2 Lord. What will count Reussillon do then? will he travel higher, or return again into France?

1 Lord. I perceive, by this demand, you are not altogether of his council.

2 Lord. Let it be forbid sir! so should I be a great deal of his act.

1 Lord. Sir, his wife, some two months since, fled from his house; her pretence is a pilgrimage to Saint Jacques le grand; which holy undertaking, with most austere sanctimony, the accomplished and reverend, it is no wonder of her nature became as a prey to her grief; in fine, made a gown of her last breath, and now she sings in heaven.

2 Lord. How is this justifi'd?

1 Lord. The stronger part of it by her own letters; which makes her story true, even to the point of her death; her death itself, which could not be eluded, was faithful well confirmed by the rector of the place.

2 Lord. Hath the count all this intelligence?

1 Lord. Ay, and the particular confirmations, point from point, to the full arming of the verity.

2 Lord. I am beauty sorry, that he'll be glad of this.

1 Lord. How mightily, sometimes, we make us comforts of our losses!

2 Lord. And mightily, some other times, we drown our gain in tears! The great dignity, that his vassal hath here acquired for him, shall at home be encountered with a shame as ample.

1 Lord. The web of our life is of a mingled yarn, good and ill together: our virtues would be proud,
if our faults whipped them not; and our crimes would despair, if they were not cherish'd by our virtues——

Enter a Servant.

How now? where's your master?

Serv. He met the duke in the street, sir, of whom he hath taken a solemn leave; his lordship will next morning for France. The duke hath offered him letters of commendations to the king.

2 Lord. They shall be no more than needful there, if they were more than they can command.

Enter Bertram.

1 Lord. They cannot be too sweet for the king's tarniss. Here's his lordship now. How now, my lord, is it not after midnight?

Ber. I have to-night despatched sixteen business-as, a month's length; a piece, by an abstract of success: I have con'gred with the duke, done my orders with his nearest; buried a wife, mourned for her; written to my mother, I am returning; toasted my convey: and, between these main parcels of despatch, effected many nicer deeds;
the last was the greatest, but that I have not ended yet.

2 Lord. If the business be of any difficulty, and this morning your departure hence, it requires haste of your lordship.

Ber. I mean, the business is not ended, as fearing to bear of it hereafter: shall we have this dia-lologue between the fool and the soldier?——Come, bring forth this counterfeit module; he has de-crived me, I've a double-meaning module;
have in the stocks all night, poor gallant knave.

Ber. No matter; his heels have deserted it, marking his spur so long. How does he carry himself?

1 Lord. I have told your lordship already; the stocks carry him. Hut to answer you as you would be understood; he reeks like a wench that had shod her milk: he hath confessed himself to Morgan, whom he supposed to be a friar, from the time of his remembrance, to this very instant disaster of his setting in the stocks: And what think you he hath confessed?

Ber. Nothing of me, has he?

2 Lord. His confession is taken, and it shall be read to his face: if your lordship be in's, as I believe you are, you must have the patience to hear it.

Re-enter Soldiers, with Paroles.

Ber. A plague upon him! muffled; he can say nothing of me: bash! bash!

1 Lord. Hoodman comes! [Porto tortuoso.]

2 Lord. He calls for the tortures; what will you say without making answer?

Par. I will confess what I know without constraint; if ye pinch me like a paste, I can say no more.

1 Lord. Base chimures.
ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL. 199

Act 4.

1 Lord. Robilindo the malcontent.
2 Sold. You are a meritorious general: our general
3 bids you answer to what I shall ask you out
4 of other.

Par. And truly, as I hope to live.
1 Sold. First demand of him how many horse the 5 duke is strong. What say you to that?
6 Par. Five or six thousand; but too weak and 7 unserviceable: the troops are all scattered, and 8 the commanders very poor, upon my reputation
9 and credit, and as I hope to live.
1 Sold. Shall I set down your answer so?
9 Par. I'll take the sacrament o' the, how and 10 which way you will.

Ber. All's one to him. What a past-saving slave
11 is this?

1 Lord. You are deceived, my lord; this is monis-
2 Ser Par. The gallant militarist, (that was his 3 own phrase,) that had the whole theorick of war
4 in the knot of his scarf, and the practice in the chape
5 of his dagger.
6 Lord. I will never trust a man again, for keep-7 ing his sword clean; nor believe he can have every 8 thing in him, by wearing his apparel neatly.
1 Sold. Well, that's set down.
2 Par. Five or six thousand, I said, I will say true, or thereabouts, set down, for I'll speak truth.
1 Lord. He's very near the truth in this.
2 Par. But I com on him no thanks for't, in the 3 nature he delivers it.

Par. Poor rogues, I pray you, say.
1 Sold. Well, that's set down.
2 Par. I humbly thank you, sir: a truth's a truth,
3 the rogue, a precious poor.
4 Sold. Demand of him, of what strength they are 5 a-foot. What say you to that?

Par. By my troth, sir, if I were to live this pre-6 sent time, I would live true. Let me see: Spurio a 7 hundred and fifty, Sebastian so many, Coramius so
8 many, Jacques so many; Gualtair, Cosmo, Lodowick,
9 and (fartly,) two hundred fifty each: mine own com-
10 pany, Chipher, Vaumond, Bentil, two hundred and 11 fifty each: six that the muster-file, rotten and 12 sound, upon my life, amounts not to fifteen thou-
13 sand poll; half of which dare not shake the snow 14 from off their cassocks, lest they shake themselves to pieces.

Ber. What shall be done to him?
1 Lord. Nothing, but let him have thanks. De-
2 mand of him my conditions, and what credit I have 3 with the duke.
1 Sold. Well, that's set down. You shall demand
4 of him, whether one Captain Dumnain be the camp, a Frenchman; what his reputation is with the duke, 5 what his condition is in war; or whether he thinks,
it were not possible, with well-
6 weighing sums of gold, to corrupt him to a revolt. What 7 say you to this? what do you know of it?

Par. I beseech you, let me answer to the particu-
8 lar of the interrogatories: Demand them singly.
1 Sold. Do you know this captain Dumnain?
2 Par. I know him: he was a bastard's prentice
3 in Paris, whence he was whipped for getting the 4 sheriff's foot out of his child; a dumb innocent, that could not say him, nay.

[Dumnain lifts up his hand in anger.
Berr. Nay, by your leave, hold your hands; though
1 I know, his brains are forfeit to the next
2 title that falls.
1 Sold. Well, is this the captain in the duke of Flo-
3 rence's camp?
2 Par. Upon my knowledge, he is, and lousy.
1 Lord. Nay, look not so upon me; we shall hear
2 of your lordship anion.
1 Sold. What is his reputation with the duke?
2 Par. The duke knows him for no other but a
3 poor officer of mine: and write to me this other day, to turn him out o' the band: I think, I have his 4 letter in my pocket.
5 Sir. Marry, we'll search.
6 Par. In good sadness, I do not know; either it
7 is there, or it is upon a file, with the duke's other
8 letters, in my tent.
1 Sold. Here 'tis; here's a paper. Shall I read it
9 to you? 1 Par. I do not know, if it be it, or no.
2 Ber. Our interpreter does it well.
3 Lord. Excellently.
4 Sold. Dian. The count's a fool, and full of gold.
5 Par. That is not the duke's letter, sir; that is an
6 advertisement to a proper maid in Florence, one
7 Diana, to take heed of the allurement of one count
8 Roussillon, one foolish idle boy, but, for all that, very 9 rustic: I pray you, sir, put it up again.
1 Sold. Nay, I'll read it first, by your favour.

Par. My meaning in't, I protest, was very honest
1 in the behalf of the maid: for I knew the young
2 count to be a dangerous and lascivious boy: who is a
3 whale to virginity, and devours up all the fry
4 finds.

Ber. Damnable, both sides rogue!
1 Sold. When he sweats oaths, bid him drop gold,
2 and take it;
3 After he scores, he never pays the score:
4 Half won, is match well made; match, and well
5 make it.
6 He never pays after debts, take it before;
7 And say, a soldier, Dian, told thee this,
8 Men are to well with, boys are not to kiss;
9 For count of this, the count's a fool, I know it,
10 Who pays before, but not when he does owe it.
11 Thrice, as he vow'd to thee in this.

PAROLLES.

Ber. He shall be whirled through the army, with this rhyme in his forehead.
1 Lord. This is your devoted friend, sir, the
2 manifold linguist, and the armipotent soldier.

Ber. I could not make anything before but a cat,
1 and now he's a cat to me.
1 Sold. I perceive, sir, by the general's looks, we
2 shall be fain to hang you.
3 Par. My life, in any case: not that I am
4 afraid to die; but that, my offences being many,
5 I would repent out the remainder of nature: let me
6 live, sir, in a dungeon, 'the stocks, or any where,
7 so I may live.
1 Sold. We'll see what may be done, so you con-
8 fess freely; therefore, once more to this captain
9 Dumnain: You have answered to his reputation
10 with the duke, and to his valour: What is his ho-
11 nesty?

Par. He will steal, sir, an egg out of a cloister;
1 for rapes and ravishments he parallels Nessus. He
2 professes not keeping of oaths; in breaking them,
3 he is stronger to Hercules. He will lie, sir, with 4 such volubility, that you would think truth were a 5 fool: drunkenness is his best virtue; for he will be 6 swine-drunk; and in his sleep he does little harm,
7 save to his bed-clothes about him; but they know
8 his conditions, and lay him in straw. I have but 9 little more to say, sir, of his honesty: he has every 10 thing that an honest man should not have; what 11 an honest man should have, he has nothing.
1 Lord. I beg you to love him for this.

Ber. For this description of thine honesty? A
1 pox upon him for me, he is more and more a cat.
1 Sold. What say you to his expertise in war?
2 Par. Edith, sir, he has led the drum before the 3 English tragedians,—to belie him, I will not,—
4 and more of his soldiers I know not; except, in 5 that country, he had the honour to be the officer at 6 a place there; and, upon my soul, to instruct for the 7 doubling of files; I would do the man what honour
8 I can, but of this I am not certain.
1 Lord. He hath out-villainied villainy so far, that 9 the rarity recreates him a boy; but, for all that,
10 he's a cat still.
1 Sold. His qualities being at this poor price,
I need not ask you, if gold will corrupt him to revo-10 Par. Sir, for a quarter d'ecu he will sell the fee-simple of his salvation, the inheritance of it; and cut the entail from all remainders, and a perpetual succession for it perpetually.

1 Sold. What's his brother, the other captain Dum-in ?

2 Lord. Why does he ask him of me ?

3 Sold. What's he do?

Far. Even a name of the same nest; not altogether so great as the first in goodness, but greater a great deal in evil. He excels his brother for a coward, yet his brother is reputed one of the best that is upon the earth; any lackey; marily, in coming on he has the cramp.

1 Sold. If your life be saved, will you undertake to betray the Florentine?

Far. Your Highness, and the captain of his horse, count Rousillon.

1 Sold. I'll whisper with the general, and know his pleasure.

Far. I'll no more drumming; a plague of all drums! Only to seem to deserve well, and to beguile the supposition of that lascivious young boy the count, have I run into this danger: Yet, who would have suspected an ambush where I was taken?

[Aside.]

1 Sold. There is no remedy, sir, but you must die: the general says, you, that have so traitorisly discovered the secrets of your army, and made such pestiferous reports of men very nobly hold, can serve the world for no honest use: therefore you must die. Come, husskemin, off with his head.

Far. O Lord, sir; let me live, or let me see my death !

1 Sold. That shall you, and take your leave of all your friends. [Turning him.]

So, look about you; Know you any here?

Far. Good morrow, noble captain.

2 Lord. God bless you, captain Parolles.

3 Lord. Captain, what greeting will you to my lord Lucre ? I am for France.

1 Lord. Good captain, will you give me a copy of the consent you write to Diana in behalf of the count Rousillon? and if I were not a very coward, I'd compel it of you; but fare you well.

1 Sold. You are undone, captain; all but your scarf, that has a knot on't.

Far. Who cannot be crushed with a plot?

1 Sold. If you could find out a country where but a man's name had received much shame, you might begin an impudent nation. Fare you well, sir; I am for France too; we shall speak of you there. [Exit.]

1 Sold. Yet am I thankful! if my heart were great,
'Twould burst at this: Captain, I'll be no more;
But I will eat and drink, and sleep as soft
As captain shall, simply the thing I am
Shall make me live. Who knows himself a braw,
Let him fear this; for it will come to pass,
[=gray.]
That every brawgall shall be found an ass.
Rust, sword; cool, blushes! and, Parolles, live
Safe in shame! being fool'd, by folly thrive:
There's place, and means, for every man alive.
I'll after them. [Exit.]

SCENE IV.—Florence. A Room in the Widow's House.

Enter Helena, Widow, and Diana.

Hel. That you may well perceive I have not wrong'd you, I'll show you... One of the greatest in the Christian world Shall be my surety; 'tis whose throne, 'tis needful; E'er I can perfect mine intents, to kneel:
Time was, I did him a desired office.
Dead also, as his life; which gratitude Through flinty Tartar's bosom would peep forth,
And answer, thanks: I duly am inform'd
His grace is at Marseilles; to which place We must now convey. You must know,
I am supposed dead: the army breaking,

My husband lies him home; where, heaven aid—
And by the leave of my goodlord the king, [ing.]
We will go to, before our welcome. 1696.

Gentle madam,
You never had a servant, to whose trust
Your business was more welcome.

Hel. Nay you, mistress,
Ever a friend, whose thoughts more truly labour
To recompense your love; doubt not, but heaven
 Hath brought me up to be your daughter's dover,
As it hath hated her to be my motive
And helper to a husband. But 0 strange men!
That can such sweet use make of what they hate,
When saucy trusting of the cozen'd thoughts
Defiles the pitchy night! so I ast doth play
With them, for that which is this away:
But more of this hereafter: — You, Diana,
Under my poor instructions yet must suffer
Something in my behalf.

Diana. Let death and honesty
Go with your impositions, I am yours
Upon your will to suffer.

Hel. Yet, I pray you,
But with the word, the time will bring on summer,
When briars shall have leaves as well as thorns,
And be as sweet as sharp. We must away; Our waggon is prepar'd, and time revives us:
All's well that ends well: still the fate's the crown:
What'er the course, the end is the renown.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Rousillon. A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Enter Countess, Lafeu, and Clown.

Laf. No, no, no, your son was misled with a snip-taffins fellow there; whose villainous sullenness, worse than have made all the unblacked and doogy youth of a nation in his colour; your daughter-in-law had been alive at this hour; and your son here at home more advanced by the king, than by that red-tailed humble-bee I speak of.

Count. I would, I had not known him! it was the death of the most virtuous gentlewoman, that ever nature had promise for creating: if she had partaken of my flesh, and cost me the dearest grama of a mother, I could not have owed her a more rooted love.

Laf. Twas a good lady, twas a good lady: we may pick a thousand salates, ere we light on such another. More a thought of it.

Hel. Indeed, sir, she was the sweet marjoram of the salat, or, rather the herb of grace.

Laf. They are not salad-herbs, you knave, they are none-herbs.

Hel. I am no great Neubuchadnezzar, sir, I have not much skill in grass.

Laf. Whether dost thou profess thyself; a knife or a fowl?

Hel. A fool, sir, at a woman's service, and a knave at a man's.

Laf. Your distinction?

Hel. I would coven the man of his wife, and do his service.

Laf. So you were a knave at his service, indeed.

Hel. And I would give his wife my bubble, sir, to do her service.

Laf. I will subscribe for thee; thou art both knave and fool.

Hel. At your service.

Laf. No, no, no.

Hel. Why, sir, if I cannot serve you, I can serve as great a prince as you are.

Laf. Who's that? a Frenchman?

Hel. Faith, sir, he has an English name; but his prince will be better in France, than there.

Laf. What prince is that?

Hel. The black prince, sir, alias, the prince of darkness; alias, the devil.

Laf. Hold thee, there's my purse: I give thee not for to suggest thee from thy master thou art least; serve him still.
Act V.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

Enter a gentle Astringer.

This man may help me to his majesty's ear, If he would spend his power.—God save you, sir

Gent. And you, sir.

Hel. Sir, I have seen you in the court of France.

Gent. I have been sometimes there.

Hel. I do presume, sir, that you are not fallen From the report that goes upon your goodness; And therefore, goaded with most sharp occasions, Which lay nice manners by, I put you to The use of your own virtues, for the which I shall continue thankful.

Gent. What's your will?

Hel. That it will please you To give this poor petition to the king; And aid me with that store of power you have, To come into his presence.

Gent. The king's not here.

Hel. Not here, sir?

Gent. Not, indeed:

He hence removed last night, and with more haste Than is his use.

Wild. Lord, how we lose our pains!

Hel. All's well that ends well; yet; Yet, Though time seem so adverse, and means unfit,— I do beseech you, whither is he gone?

Gent. Marry, as I take it, to Roussillon;

Whither I am going. I told you.

Hel. I do beseech you, sir, Since you are like to see the king before me, Commend the paper to his gracious hand; Which I presume, shall remain upon your face, But rather make you thank your pains for it: I will come after you, with what good speed Our means will make us means.

Gent. This I'll do for you.

Hel. And you shall find yourself to be well thank'd,

Whate'er comes more.—We must to horse again;— Go, go, provide.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Rousillon. The Inner Court of the Countess's Palace.

Enter Clown and Paroles.

Par. Good monsieur Lavatch, give my lord Lafeu this letter: I have ere now, sir, been better known to you, when I have held familiarity with fresher clothes; but I am now, sir, muddied in fortune's moat, and smell somewhat strong of her strong displeasure.

Clo. Truly, fortune's displeasure is but sluttish, If it smell so strong as thou speakest of: I will henceforth eat no fish of fortune's buttering. Pr'ythee, allow the wind.

Par. Nay, you need not stop your nose, sir; I spake but by a metaphor.

Clo. Indeed, sir, if your metaphor stink, I will stop my nose; or against any man's metaphor. Pr'ythee, get thee further.

Par. Pray you, sir, deliver me this paper.

Clo. Foh, pr'ythee, stand away; A paper from fortune's close-stool to give to a nobleman! Look, here he comes himself.

[Exeunt.

Enter Lafeu.

Here is a pur of fortune's, sir, or of fortune's cat, (but not a musk-cat,) that has fallen into the unclean fish-pond of her displeasure, and, as he says, is muddied withal: Pray you, sir, use the carp as you may: for he looks like a poor, decayed, ingenuous, foolish, rascally knave. I do pity his distress in my smiles of comfort, and leave him to his lordship. [Exit Clown.

Par. My lord, I am a man whom fortune hath cruelly scratched.

Clo. And what would you have me to do? 'tis too late to put away napes now. Wherein have you played the knave with fortune, that she should scratch you, who of herself is a good lady, and would not have knaves thrive long under her?
There's a great deal for you: Let the justices make you and fortune friends, I am for other business.

Sir, I beseech your honour, to bear me one single word.

[Exit]

Laf. You beg a single penny more: come, you shall ha'it; save your word.

[Exit]

Laf. You beg more than one word then. Can't my passion: give you my hand: How does your drum?

For 0 my good lord, you were the first that found me.

Laf. Wast I, in sooth? and I was the first that lost thee.

For. It lies in you, my lord, to bring me in some grace, for you did bring me out.

Laf. That upon thee, brave! dost thou put upon me at once both the office of God and the devil? once brings thee in grace, and the other brings thee out. [Trumpets sound.] The king's coming, I know by his trumpets. Strain, inquire further after me. I had talk of you last night; though you are a fool and a knave, you shall eat; go on.

For. I praise thee for you. [Exit.]

SCENE III. — The same. A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Mincipe. Enter King, Countess, Lafau, Lords, Gentlemen, guards, &c.

King. We lost a jewel of her; and our esteem Was made much poorer by it: but your son, As mad in folly, lack'd the sense to know Her estimation home.

Count. 'Tis past, my liege: And I beseech your majesty to make it Natural rebellion, done 'tis the blaze of youth; When cold and fire, too strong for reason's force, (Persever it, and burns on.

King. My honour'd lady, I have forgiven and forgotten all: Though my revenges were high bent upon him, And watch'd the time to shew.

This I must say, — But first I beg my pardon. — The young lord Did to his majesty, his mother, and his lady, Offence of mighty note; but to himself The greatest wrong of all: he lost a wife, Whose beauty did astonish the survey Of richest eyes; whose words all ears took captive! Whose dear perfection, hearts that scorn'd to serve, Humble, could mistreat.

King. Frusing what is lost, Makes the remembrance dear. — Well, call him hither.

[Exeunt Gentleman, &c.]

We are repeat'd, and the first view shall kill All repetition. — Let him not ask our pardon: The nature of his great offence is dead, And deeper than oblivion do we bury The increasing objects of his approach, A stranger, no offender; and inform him: So 'tis our will he should.

God. I shall, my liege.

[Exit Gentleman.]

King. What says he to your daughter? have you spoke?

Laf. All that he is hath reference to your highness.

[Exit]

King. Then shall we have a match. I have letters That set him high in fame.

Enter Bertram.

Laf. He looks well on't.

King. I am not a day of season, For then may'st see a sun-shine and a hail In me at once: But to the brightest beams I owe my words give way: so stand thou forth, The time is fair again.

Ber. My high-repeated blames, Dear sovereign, pardon to me.

King. All is whole;

Not one word more of the consumed time. Let's take the instant by the forward top: For we are old, and on our quick'st decrees That fainting sense and noiseless foot of time. Steals we can effect them: You remember The daughter of this lord?

Ber. Admirably, my liege: at first I lack'd my choice upon her, eke my heart

Dare make too bold a herald of my tongue: Where the impression of mine eye infusing, Contempt his scornful perspective did lend me, Which warp'd the line of every other favour;

Save their fair colour, or express'd it stoen: Extended or contracted all proportions, To a most hideous object: Thence it came, That she, whom all men praise'd, and whom myself, Since have lost, have loved, in mine eye The dust that did offend it.

King. Well escut:'d; That thou didst love her, strikes some scores away From the great compt: But love, that comes too late.

Like a remorseful pardon slowly carried, To the great sender turns a sour offence, Crying, That's good that's gone: our rash faults Many a piece of serious thing have borne, Not knowing them, until we know their grave: Off our displeasures, to ourselves unjust, Destroy our friends, and after weep their dust: Our own love was crying to see what's done, While shameful hate sleeps out the afternoon. Be this sweet Helen's knell, and now forget her. Send forth your amorous token for fair Maidin. The main concerns are bad: and here we'll stay To see our widower's second marriage day.

Count. Which better than the first, o dear heaven, bless!

Or, 0, they meet in me, O nature, cease!

Laf. Once on, my son, in whom my house's name Must be digested, give a favour from you, To sparkle in the spirits of my daughter, That she may quickly come. — By my old beard, And every hair that's not, Helen, that's dead, Was a sweet creature; such a ring as this, The last that e'er I took her leave at court, I saw upon her finger.

Ber. Here it was not.

King. Now, pray, let me see it: for mine eye, While I was speaking, oft was fasten'd to it. — This ring was mine; and, when I gave it Helen, I told her, if her fortunes changed, Necessary to help, that by this token I would relieve her; Had you that craft, to reave her Of what should stand her most?

Ber. My gracious sovereign, However it pleases you to take it so, The ring was never hers.

Count. Son, on my life, I have seen her wear it; and she reckond't it At her life's rate.

Laf. I am sure, I saw her wear it.

Ber. You are deceiv'd, my lord, she never saw it.

Flaxman says it was from a castamen thrown me, Wrapp'd in a paper, which contain'd the name Of her that threw it: noble she was, and thought I stood ingag'd; but when I had subscrib'd To more of her fortune, and informed her, I could not answer in that course of honour, As she had made the overture, she cancell'd In heavy satisfaction, and would never Receive the ring again.

King. Pituys himself, That knows the time and multiplying medicine, Hath not in nature's mystery more science, Than I have in this ring: 'twas mine, 'twas Helen's, Whole fortune in it was. Then, if you know That you are well acquainted with yourself, Confess 'twas hers, and by what rough enforcement You got it from her: she call'd the saint to surety, That she would never put it from her finger,
Act 5.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

203

Unless she gave it to yourself in bed, (Where you have never come,) or sent it us
Upon her great disaster.

Ber. She never saw it.

King. Thou speak'st it falsely, as I love mine honour;
And mak'st conjectural fears to come into me,
Highly unseasonable: If I should prove
That thou art so inhuman,—'twill not prove so:
And yet I know not:—thou didest hate her deadly,
And she is dead; which nothing, but to close eyes myself, could win me more:
More than to see this ring.—Take him away.

[Guards seize Bertram.]

My fore-past proofs, how'er the matter fall,
Shall tax my fears of little vanity,
Having vainly fear'd too little.—Away with him;
We'll sift this matter further.

Ber. If you shall prove
This ring was ever hers, you shall as easy
Prove that I husbanded her bed in Florence,
Where yet she never was: [Exit Bertram, guarded.

Enter a Gentleman.

King. I am wrapp'd in dismal thoughts.

Gent. Gracious sovereign,
Whether I have been to blame, or no, I know not;
Here's a petition from a Florentine,
Which I would fain present to your grace;
To tender it herself. I undertook it,
Vanquish'd thereto by the fair grace and speech
Of the poor suppliant, who by this, I know,
Is here attending: her business looks in her
With an importing visage; and she told me,
In a sweet verbal brief, it did concern
Your highness with herself.

King. [Reads.] Upon his many protestations to marry me, when his wife was dead, I blush to say it, he won me. Now is the count Rousillon a widower; his vows are fix'd to me, and my honour's paid to him. He stol'd from Florence, taking no leave, and I follow him to his country for justice: Grant it me, O king; in you it best lies: otherwise a seduc-ter, flourishes, and a poor maid is undone.

Diana Capulet.

Laf. I will buy me a son-in-law in a fair, and tell him: for this, I'll none of him.

King. The heavens have thought well on thee, Lafawndah.

To bring forth this discovery.—Seek these suitors:—Go, speedily, and bring again the count.

[Exeunt Gentleman, and some Attendants.

I am afraid the life of Helen, lady, was forcibly snatch'd.

Count. Now, justice on the doers!

Enter Bertram, guarded.

King. I wonder, sir, since wives are monsters to you,
And that you fly them as you swear them lordship,
Yet you desire to marry,—What woman's that?

Re-enter Gentleman, with Widow, and Diana.

Dia. I am, my lord, a wretched Florentine,
Derived from the ancient Capulet;
My suit, as I do understand, you know,
And therefore know how far I may be pitied.

Wid. I am her mother, sir, whose age and honour
Both suffer under this complaint we bring,
And both shall cease, without your remedy.

King. Come hither, count; Do you know these women?

Ber. My lord, I neither can, nor will deny
But that I know them: Do they charge me further?
Ber. Do they think so much upon your
Ber. She's none of mine, my lord. wife?

Dia. If you shall marry,
You give away this hand, and that is mine;
You give away heaven's own vow, and those are mine;
You give away myself, which is known mine;
For I by vow am so embodied yours,

That she which marries you, must marry me,
Either both or none.

Laf. Your reputation [to Bertram.] comes too short
For my daughter, you are no bond for her.

Ber. My lord, this is a fond and desperate creature,
Whom sometime I have laugh'd with: let your Love, and more noble thoughts, prove her:
Let a nobler thought upon mine honour,
Than for to think that I would sink it here.

King. Sir, for my thoughts, you have them ill to tell me,
Till your deeds gain them: Fairer prove your ho-

Than in my thought it lies! [nour,
Dia. Good my lord,
Ask him upon his oath, if he do think
He had not my virginity.

King. What say'st thou to her?

Ber. She's impudent, my lord;
And was a common gamester to the camp.

Dia. He does me wrong, my lord; if I were so,
He might have bought me at a common price:
Do not believe him: O, behold this ring,
Whose high respect, and rich validity,
Did lack a parallel; yet for all that,
He gave it to a commoner o' the camp,
If I be one.

Count. He blushest, and 'tis it:
Of six preceding ancestors, that same ring
Conferr'd by testament to the sequent issue,
Hath it been ow'd and worn. This is his wife;
That ring's a thousand proofs.

King. Methought, you said,
You saw one here in court could witness it.

Dia. I did, my lord, but loath am to produce
So bad an instrument; his name's Parolles.

Laf. I saw the man to-day, if man he be.
King. Find him, and bring him hither.

Ber. What of him?

He's quoted for a most perfidious slave,
With all the spots o' the world tax'd and debosh'd,
Whose nature sickens, but to speak a truth:—
Am I or that, or this, for what he'll utter,
That will speak any thing?

King. She hath that ring of yours.

Ber. I think, she had; certain it is, I lik'd her,
And boarded her the wanton way of youth:
She knew her distance, and did angle for me,
Madding my eagerness with her restraint,
As all impediments in fancy's list.
Are motives of more fancy: and, in fine,
Her insult coming with her modern grace,
Subdued me to her rate: she got the ring;
And I had that which any inferior might
At market-price have bought.

Dia. I must be patient; You, that turn'd o' a first so noble wife,
May justly diet me. I pray you yet,
(Since you lack virtue, I will lose a husband,) Send for your ring, I will return it home,
And give me mine again.

Ber. I have it not.
King. What ring was yours, I pray you?
Dia. Sir, much like
The same upon your finger. [late.

King. Know you this ring? this ring was his of Dia. And this was it I gave him, being a-bed.

King. The story then goes false, you throw it him Out of a casement.

Dia. I have spoke the truth.

Enter Parolles.

Ber. My lord, I do confess, the ring was hers.

King. You boggle shrewdly, every feather starts
Is this the man you speak of? Dia. Ay, my lord.

King. Tell me, sirrah, but, tell me true, I charge you,
Not fearing the displeasure of your master,
(Which, on your just proceeding, I'll keep off,) By him, and by this woman here, what know you?
Post. So please your majesty, my master hath been a handsome gentleman: tricks he hath had in him, which gentlemen have.

King. Come, come, to the purpose. Did he love this woman?

Post. I warrant, sir, he did love her; But how?

King. How, I pray you?

Post. He did love her, sir, as a gentleman loves a woman.

King. How is that?

Post. He loved her, sir, and loved her most.

King. At these o'clock in the morning, and no more.

What an equivocal companion is this?

Post. I am a poor man, and at your majesty's command.

Laf. He's a good drum, my lord, but a naughty master.

Dio. Do you know, he promised me marriage?

Post. Faith, I know more than I'll speak.

King. But wilt thou not speak all thou knowest?

Post. Yes, so please your majesty; I did go between them, as I said; but more than that, he loved her—for, indeed, he was mad for her, and talked of matrimony, and of houses, and of fortune, and I know not what: yet I was in that company with them at that time, that I knew of their going to bed, and of other motions, as promising her marriage, and things that would deserve me ill to speak of, therefore I will not speak what I know.

King. Those have spake o'er already, unless thou canst say they are married. But these are too fine in thy evidence; therefore stand aside.

This ring, thou say, was yours?

Dio. Ay, my good lord.

King. Where did you buy it? or who gave it you?

Dio. It was not given me, nor did I not buy it.

King. Who sold it you?

Dio. None. It was not lent me neither.

King. Where did you find it them?

Dio. I found it not.

King. If it were yours by none of all these ways, How could you give it him?

Dio. I never gave it him.

Laf. This woman's an easy glove, my lord; she goes off and on at pleasure.

King. This ring was mine, I gave it his first wife.

Dio. It might be yours, or hers, for ought I know.

King. Take her away, I do not like her now; To prison with her; and with him.

I saw these two in a place where they badest this ring;

This dish within this hour. I'll never tell you.

King. Take her away.

Dio. I'll put in bail, my liege.

King. By Jove, if ever I knew man, 'twas you.

Dio. Wherefore hast thou accused him all this while?

Dio. Because he's guilty, and he is not guilty: He knows I am no maid, and he'll swear so.

I'll swear I am a maid, and he knows not.

Great king, I am so trusted, by my life; I am either maid, or else this old man's wife.

[Dio points to Lafi.]

King. She does abuse our ears, to prison with her.

Dio. Good mother, fetch my ball.—Stay, royal sir;

[Rosal Widow

The jewels, that owns the ring, is sent for, And he shall satisfy me. But for this lord, Who hath abused me, as he knows himself, Though yet he never harmed me, here I quit him He knows himself my bed he hath defiled; And at that time he got his wife with child; Dead though she be, she deceives young one faith; So there's my riddle, time, that's dead, is quick; And now behold the meaning.

Rosal Widow, with Helena.

King. Is there no exercit

Pogna together, or solve the riddles?

Hel. No, my good lord;'

'Tis but the shadow of a wish you see,

The name, and not the thing.

Post. Both, both; O, pardon!

Dio. O, my good lord, when I was like this maid, I found her wonderful kind. There is your ring, And, look you, here's your letter: This it says, When from my fingers can get this ring, And are by me well child, etc. This is done Will you be mine, now you are doubly won?

Dio. If she, my liege, can make me know this clearly,

I'll love her dearly, ever, ever dearly.

Hel. If it appear not plain, and prove untrue,

Deadly divorce step between me and you!—

O, my dear mother, do I see you living?

Laf. Mine eyes swell councillor, I shall weep soon—Good Town Councillor, I need one a handkerchief. So, I thank thee; wait on me home, I'll make sport with thee; Let thy courtesies alone, they are not true men.

King. Let us from point to point to point this story know,

To make the even truth in pleasure flow:—

If thou hast't not a fresh unrooted flower,

[Flourish

[Exit Diana.

Choose thee thy husband, and I'll pay thy dowery. For I can guess, that, by thy honest aid,

They kept't a wife herself, thyself a maid.

Of that and all the progress, more and less,

Sincerely more leisure shall express;

All yet seems well; and, if it end so sweet,

The better past, more welcome is the sweet.

[Flourish

[Advancing.]

The king's a beggar, now the play is done.

All is well ended, if this suit be made,

That you express content; which we will pay,

With herbs to please you, day crowding day:

Jure by your patience then, and yours my guest:

Your gentle hands lend us, and take our hearts.

[Exit]
INDUCTION.

SCENE I.—Before an Alcove on a Heath.

Enter Hostess and Sly.

Sly. I'll please you, in faith. Host. A pair of stocks, you rogue! Sly. Y'are a baggage; the stocks are no nooks: Look in the chronicles, we came in with Richard Conqueroor. Therefore, paucus pallabris; let the world side: Sesas.

Host. You will not pay for the glasses you have burst?

Sly. No, not a denier: Go by, says Jeronimy; Go to thy cold bed, and warm thee, Host. I know my remedy, I must go fetch the thirsdborough. [Exit.

Sly. Third, or fourth, or fifth borough, I'll answer him by law: I'll not budge an inch, boy; let him come, and kindly.

[Enter Hostess on the ground and falls asleep.

Wind hooms. Enter a Lord from hunting, with Huntsmen and Servants.

Lord. Huntsman, I charge thee, tender well my hounds: Brach Merriam,—the poor cur is embossed, And couple Clower with the deep-mouth'd brach. Saw'st thou not, boy, how Silver made it good At the hedge corner, in the coldest fault? I would not lose the dog for twenty pound.

1 Hun. Why, Belman is as good as he, my lord; He cried upon it at the merest loss, And twice to-day pick'd out the dullest scent: Trust me, I take him for the better dog.

Lord. Thou art a fool; if Echo were as fleet, I would esteem him worth a dozen such. But sup them well, and look unto them all; To-morrow I intend to hunt again.

1 Hun. I will, my lord.

Lord. What's here? one dead, or drunk? See, doth he breathe?

2 Hun. He breathes, my lord: Were he not warm'd with ale, This were a bed but cold to sleep so soundly.

Lord. O monstrous beast! how like a swine he lies! Grim death, how foul and loathsome is thine image! Sirs, I will practise on this drunken man.— What think you, if he were convey'd to bed, With a great supper, and alms and fruits For the pox's sake, sir, to the bone! A most delicious banquet by his bed, And brave attendants near him when he wakes, Would not the beggar then forget himself? 1 Hun. Believe me, lord, I think he cannot choose. [wak'd. 2 Hun. It would 'scem strange unto him when he Lord. Even as a flattering dream, or worthless fancy.

Then take him up, and manage well the jest:— Carry him gently to my fairest chamber, And hang it round with all my wanton pictures. Balm his foul head with warm distilled waters, And burn sweet wood to make the lodging sweet Procure me musick ready when he wakes, To make a dulcet and a heavenly sound, And if he chance to speak, be ready straight, And, with a low submissive reverence, Say,—What is it your honour will command? Let one attend him with a silver bason, Full of rose-water, and beastow'd with flowers; Another bear the ewer, the third a diaper, And say,—Will't please your lordship cool your hands? Some one be ready with a costly suit, And ask him what apparel he will wear; Another tell him of his hounds and horse, And that his lady mourns at his disease. Persuade him, that he hath been lunatick; And, when he says he is,—say, that he dreams, For he is nothing but a mighty lord. This do, and do it kindly, gentle sirs; It will be pastime passing excellent, If it be husbanded with modesty.

1 Hun. My lord, I warrant you, we'll play our part, As he shall think, by our true diligence, He is no less than what we say he is:

Lord. Take him up gently, and to bed with him; And each one to his office, when he wakes.—

[Some bear out Sly. A trumpet sounds. Sirrah, go see what trumpet 'tis that sounds—

[Exit Servant.

Belleke, some noble gentleman: that means, Travelling some journey, to repose him here.

Re-enter a Servant.

How now? who is it?

Srv. An it please your honour, Players that offer service to your lordship.

Lord. Bid them come near:

Enter Players.

Now, fellows, you are welcome.

1 Play. We thank your honour.

Lord. Do you intend to stay with me to-night?

2 Play. So please your lordship to accept our duty.

Lord. With all my heart.—This fellow I remember. Since once he play'd a farmer's eldest son:— 'Twas where you woo'd the gentlewoman so well: I have forgot your name; but, sure, that part Was aptly fitted, and naturally perform'd. 1 Play. I think, 'twas Soto that your honour means.

Lord. 'Tis very true,—thou didst it excellent. Well, you are come to me in happy time; The rather for I have some sport in hand,
Wherein your cunning can assist me much.

There is a lord will hear you play straight:
But I am doubtful of your modesties;
Lost, over-eying of his odd behaviour,
(For yet his honour never heard a play.)
You break into some merry passion,
And so offend him; for I tell you, sir,
If you should smile, he grows impatient.

1 Play. Fear not, my lord; we can contain our- selves.

Were he the veriest antick in the world.

Lord. Go, sirrah, take them to the buttery.
And give them friendly welcome every one;
Let them set nothing that may be afforded.

[Enter Servant and Players.

Sirrah, go you to Bartholomew my page,

And see him dress'd in all suits like a lady;
That done, conduct him to the drunkard's chamber,
And call him—madam, do him obeisance.
Tell him from me, (as he will win my love,) He bear himself with honourable action,
Such as he hath observed in noble ladies.
Unto their lords, by them accomplished:
Such duty to the drunkard let him do,
With soft low tongue, and lowly courtesy;
And will he not your honours? even his command:
Wherein your lady, and your humble wife,
May show her duty, and make known her love?
And then—with kind embracements, tempting kisses.

And with declining head into his bosom—
Bid him shed tears, as being overjoy'd
To see her noble lord restor'd to health,
Who, for twelve seven years, hath esteemed him
No better than a poor and leathern beggar:
And if the boy hath not a woman's gift,
To rain a shower of commanded tears,
An onion will do well for such a shift;
Which being cast away, shall in despite enforce a watery eye.
See this dispatch'd with all the haste thou canst;
Anon I'll give thee more instructions.

[Exit Servant.

I know, the boy will well swarf the grace,
Voice, gait, and action of a gentlewoman:
I long to hear him call the drunkard, husband;
And how my men will stay themselves from laughter
When they do homage to this simple peasant.
I'll in to counsel them: haply, my presence
May well abate their over-merry spleen,
Which otherwise would grow into extremes.

[Scene II. A Bedchamber in the Lord's House.

Sly is discovered in a rich night-gown, with Attendants; some with apparel, others with bason, ever, and other apperancees. Enter Lord, dressed like a servant.

Sly. For God's sake, a pot of small ale.

1 Serv. Will'lt please your lordship drink a cup of sack?

2 Serv. Or will'lt please your honour taste of these conserves?

[To-day.]

3 Serv. What raiment will your honour wear
Sly. I am Christopher Sly; call not me—honour, nor lordship; I never drank sack in my life; and you give me any conserves, give me conserve of beef: Ne'er ask me what raiment I'll wear: I have no more doublets than backs, no more stockings than legs, nor more shoes than feet in them; sometimes, more feet than shoes; or such shoes as my toes look through the overleather.

Lord. Heaven cleanse this idle humour in your house.

O, that a mighty man of such descent,
Of such possessions, and so high esteem,
Should be infused with so foul a spirit!

Sly. What, would you make me mad? Am not

I Christopher Sly, old Sly's son of Burton-heath, by birth a pedlar, by education a card-maker, by transmutation a bear-herd, and now by present profession a tinker? Ask Marian Hacket, the fat wife-Winiflet, if she know me not: If she say I am not fourteen pence on the score for she ale, score me up for the lyingest knave in Christendom.

What, I am not bestraffed:—Here's—

1 Serv. O, this it is that makes your lady mourn.
2 Serv. This, this it is that makes your servants dzoop.

Lord. Hence comes it that your kindred shun your house,
As befits hence to your strange lunacy.
0, noble lord, bethink thee of thy birth;
Call home thy ancient thoughts from banishment,
And banish hence these abject low dreams;
Look how thy servants do attend on thee,
Each in his office ready at thy beck,
Wilt thou have musick? hark! Apollo plays,

[Music.

And twenty caged nightingales do sing:
Or wilt thou sleep? we'll have thee to a couch,
Softer and sweeter than the lustful bed
On purpose trimm'd up for Semiramis.
Say, thou wilt walk: we'll bestrew the ground
Or wilt thou ride? we'll bear thee in a chariot,
Their harness studded all with gold and pearl.
Dost thou love hawking? thou hast hawks to soar
Above the morning lark: Or wilt thou hunt?
Thy hounds shall make the wak'rin answer them,
And fetch shrill echoes from the hollow earth,

1 Serv. Say, thou wilt course; thy greyhounds are as swift
As breasted eagles, flier, feter than the toe.

3 Serv. Dost thou lose pictures? we will fetch them straight.

Adonis, painted by a running brook,
And Cupid, naked in sedges by the main,
Which seem to move and waft with her breath,
Even as the waving sedges play with wind.

Lord. We'll show thee lo, as she was a maid,
And how she was beguiled and surrump'd,
As lively painted as the deed was done,

3 Serv. Or Daphne, roam's through a thorny wood:
Scratching with legs that one shall swear she bleeds:
And at that sight shall sad Apollo weep,
So workmanly the blood and tears are drawn.

Lord. Thou art a lord, and nothing but a lord:
Thou hast a lady fair more beautiful
Than was in love in this waming night.

1 Serv. And, till the tears that she hath shed for thee,
Like envious floods o'er ran her lovely face,
She was the fairest creature in the world;
And yet she is inferior to none.

Sly. Am I a lord? and have I such a lady?
Or do I dream, or have I dream'd till now?
I do not sleep: I see, I hear, I speak;
I smell sweet savours, and I feel soft things:
Upon my life, I am a lord, indeed;
And not a tinker, nor Christopher Sly.

Wilt'lt have our lady thither to convey,
And once again, a pot o' the smallest ale.

2 Serv. Wilt'lt please your mightiness to wait your hands?

Sly. Vestvans present an ever, bason, and napkin
O, how to joy to see your wit restor'd!
O, that one more you knew but what you are!
These fifteen years you have been in a dream,
Or, when you wak'd, so wak'd as if you slept.

Sly. The fairest years I ever in a goodly nap.
But did I never speak of all that time?

1 Serv. O, yes, my lord; but very idle words:—
For though you lay here in this goodly chamber,
Ye say, ye knew but what you were.

Sly. The fifteen years I ever in a goodly nap.
And did I never speak of all that time?

1 Serv. O, yes, my lord; but very idle words:—
For though you lay here in this goodly chamber, you knew, ye were beaten out of door; and rail upon the hostess of the house; and say, you would present her at the feet,

Because she brought some juggs and no seald quarts.

Sometimes you would call out for Cleavy Hacket.
Act 1.
TAMING OF THE SHREW.

Sly. Ay, the woman's maid of the house.
Serv. Ay, sir; but you know no house, nor no such maid.

Sly. Nor no such men, as you have reck'n'd up,—
As Stephen Sly, and old John Naps of Greece,
And Peter Turf, and Beppy Pimpornell;
And twenty more such names and men as these,
Which never were, nor no man ever saw.

Sly. Now, Lord be thanked for my good amends!

Sly. I think thee; thou shalt not lose by it.

Enter the Page, as a lady, with Attendants.

Page. How fares my noble lord?
Sly. I know it well:—What must I call her?
Lord. Madam.
Sly. Alive madam, or Joan madam?
Lord. Joan, Joan, and nothing else; so lords call ladies.

Sly. Madam wife, they say that I have dream'd and slept
Above some three or four years, and more.
Page. Ay, and the time seems thirty unto me.
Being all this time abandon'd from your bed.
Sly. 'Tis much:—Servants, leave me and her alone.

Madam, undress you, and come now to bed.
Page. Thrice noble lord, let me entreat of you,
To pardon me yet for a night or two;
Or, if not so, and the sun be set;
For your physicians have expressly charg'd,
In peril to incur your former malady,
That I should yet absent me from your bed;
I hope, this reason stands for my excuse.

Sly. Ay, it stands so, that I may hardly tarry so long.
But I would be loath to fall into my dreams again;
I will therefore tarry, in despite of the flesh and the blood.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Your honour's players, hearing your amendment,
Are come to play a pleasant comedy,
For so your doctors hold it very meet;
Seeing too much sadness hath congall'd your blood,
And melancholy is the nurse of frenzy,
Therefore, they thought it good you hear a play,
And frame your mind to mirth and merriment,
Which bars a thousand harms, and lengthens life.

Sly. Marry, I will; let them play it: Is not a commodity a Christmas gambol, or a tumbling-trick?

Page. No, my good lord: It is more pleasing stuff.
Sly. What, household stuff?
Page. It is a kind of history.
Sly. Well, we'll see't: Come, nadam wife, sit by my side, and let the world slip: we shall ne'er be younger.

[They sit down.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Padua. A publick Place.
Enter Lucentio and Tranio.

Luc. Tranio, since—for the great desire I had
To see fair Padua, nursery of arts,—
I am arriv'd for fruitful Lombardy,
The pleasant garden of great Italy:
And, by my father's love and leave, am arm'd
With his good will, and thy good company,
Most truly, to support our friends and all;
Here let us breathe, and happily institute
A course of learning, and ingenious studies.
Pisa, renowned for grave citizens,
Hath shown me, for my father first,
A merchant of great traffick through the world,
Vincentio, come of the Bentivoli.
Vincentio his son, brought up in Florence,
It shall become, to serve all hopes conceiv'd,
To deck his fortune with his virtuous deeds:
And therefore, Tranio, for the time I study
Virtue, and that part of philosophy
Will I apply, that treats of happiness
Specially to virtue: may it be achieve'd,
Tell me thy mind: for I have Pisa left,
And am to Padua come; as he that leaves
A shallow pool, to plunge him in the deep,
And with satiety seeks to quench his thirst.

Tra. Mi perdonate, gentle master mine,
I am in all affected as yourself;
Glad that you thus continue your resolve,
To suck the sweets of sweet philosophy.
Only, good master, while we do admire
This virtue, and this moral discipline,
Let's be no stoicks, nor no stocks, I pray;
Or so devote to Aristotle's checks,
As Ovid be an outcast quite abjur'd;
Talk logick with acquaintance that you have,
And practise rhetorick in your common talk:
Musick and poesy use to quicken you;
The mathematicks, and the mechanicks,
Fall to them, as you find your stomach serves you:
No profit grows, where is no pleasure ta'en;—
In brief, sir, study what you most affect.

Luc. Grampiers, Tranio, well dost thou advise.
If, Bianello, thou wert come ashore,
We could at once put us in readiness;
And take a lodging, fit to entertain
Such friends, as time in Padua beget.
But stay awhile: What company is this?

Tra. Master, some show, to welcome us to town.
Enter Baptista, Katharina, Bianca, Gremio, and Hortensio.

Bap. Gentlemen, importune me no further,
For how I firmly am resolv'd you know;
That is,—not to bestow my youngest daughter,
Before I have a husband for the elder:
If either of you both love Katharina,
Because I know you well, and love you well,
Leave shall you have to court her at your pleasure.

Gre. To part her rather: She's too rough for me.

There, there Hortensio, will you any wife?
Kath. I pray you, sir, [to Bap.] is it your will
To make a state of me amongst these mates?
Hor. Maties, mad! how mean you that? no mates for you,
Unless you were of gentler, milder mould.

Kath. I faith, sir, you shall never need to fear:
I wish, it is not half way to her heart:
But, if it were, doubt not her care should be
To comb your noodle with a three-legg'd stool,
And paint your face, and use you like a fool.

Hor. Frankly, I will do it; let it be known,
Gre. And me too, good Lord!

Tra. Hush, master! here is some good pastime towards.
That wench is stark mad, or wonderful froward.

Luc. But in the other's silence I do see Maid's mild behaviour and sobriety.

Peace, Tranio.

Tra. We said, master; mum! and gazey your fill.

Bap. Gentlemen, that I may soon make good
What I have said,—Bianca, get you in:
And let it not displease thee, good Bianca;
For I will love thee, the less, my girl.

Kath. A pretty jest! 'tis best
Putfinger in the eyé—an she knew why.

Bian. Sister, content you in my discontent.—
Sir, to your pleasure humbly I subscribe:
My books, and instruments, shall be my company;
On them to look, and practise by myself.

Luc.  [Aside.]  Hark, Tranio! I thou mayst hear Minerva speak.

Hor. Signior Baptista, will you be so strange? some such as, that our good will effect.
Blanca's grief.

Ger. Why, will you swear her up, Signior Baptista, for this kind of hell, And hang the pensive kissing tongue:

Bap. Gentlemen, content ye: I am resolved. —
Go in, Blanca.  [Exit Blanca.]

And for I know, she taketh most delight In such her losses, and her inventor. Schoolmasters will keep I within my house. Fit to instruct her youth. — If you, Hortensio, Or signior Gremio, you, know any such, Prefer them hither; for to cunning men I will be very kind, and liberal;
To mine own children in good bringing-up;
And so farewell Katharina, you may stay;
For I have more to commune with Blanca.  [Exit.]

Kath. Why, and I trust, I may go too: May not I? What, shall I be appointed hours: as though, be-like, I knew not what to take, and what to leave! Ha!

Ger. You may go to the devils' dam; your gifts are so good, here is none will hold you. Their love is very am I. The, Hortensio, though his father be very rich, any man is so very a feel to be married to hell?

Hor. Tush, Gremio, though it pass your patience and shame, to endure her loud alarms, why, man, there be and fellow in the world, an a man could light on them, would take her with all faults, and money enough.

Ger. I cannot tell: but I had as lief take her dowry as any other be; some Florentine, to be whipped at the high cross every morning.

Hor. 'Faith, as you say, there's small choice in rotten apples. But come; since this bar in law makes us friends, it shall be so far forth friendly maintained.— till by helping Baptista's eldest daughter to a husband, we set his youngest free for a husband, and then have to' a farewell, — Sweet Blanca! — Happy man be his done! He that runs fresh, gets the ring. How say you, signior Gremio?

Ger. I am agreed; and 'would I had given him the best horse in Padua (to begin his wooing, that would be) truly woo her, wed her, and bed her, and rid the house of her. Come on.

[Execunt Gremio and Hortensio.]

Trans.  [Advancing.]  I pray, sir, tell me, — Is it possible
That love should of a sudden take such hold?

Luc. O Tranio, till I found it to be true, I never thought it possible, or likely; But when I first did idly I stood looking on, I found the effect of love in idleness: And now in plainness do confess to thee, — That art to me as secret, and as dear, As Anna to the queen of Carthage was. —

Tranio, I burn, I pine, I perish, Tranio,

If I achieve not this young modest girl: Counsel me, Tranio, for I know thou canst;
Assist me, Tranio, for I know thou wilt.

Trans. Master, it is no time to chide you now, Affection is not rated from the heart: Some love thou dost! yea, thou, nought remains but so,— Redime to captam quan quam minus.

Luc. Gramercies, lad; go forward: this content;

The rest will comfort, for thy counsel's sound.

Trans. Master, you look'd so longly on the maild, Perhaps you mark'd not what's the pith of all.

Luc. O yes, I saw sweet beauty in her face, Such beauty thou hast! nought remains but so,— That made great love to humble him to her hand, When with his knees he kiss'd the Cretan strand.

Saw you no more? mark'd you not, how
Her sister
Began to scold, and raise up such a storm,
That mortal ears might hardly endure the din?

Luc. Tranio, I saw her coral lips to move, And with her breath she did perfume the air; Sacred, and sweet; and this my book! — I Trans. Nay, then, 'tis time to stir him from his trance.

I pray, take, sir; If you love the maid, Send thoughts and wits to achieve her. Thus it stands —

Her eldest sister is so curt and shrewd, That, till the father rid his hands of her, I must not have a title to so much a name as mine own. And therefore has he closely mew'd her up, Because she shall not be annoy'd with suitors.

Luc. Ah, Tranio, what a cruel father's he! But that will not be hinder'd, because I
To get her cunning schoolmasters to instruct her?

Trans. Ay, marry, am I, sir; and now 'tis plighted,
Luc. I have it, Tranio.

Trans. Master, for my hand,
Both our inventions meet and jump in one.

Luc. Tell me thine first.

Trans. You will be schoolmaster,
And undertake the teaching of the maid.

That's your device.

Luc. It is: May it be done?

Trans. Not possible: For who shall bear your part, And be in Padua here Vincentio's son?

Luc. Keep house, and keep his book; we'll be his friends: Visit his countrymen, and banquet them?

Luc. Bassa: content thee; for I have it full.
We have not yet seen in any house;
Nor can we be distinguish'd heaven and earth,
For man, or master: then it follows thus; — Thou shalt be master, Tranio, in my stead,
Keep house, and port, and servants, as I should,
And keep the state; and in this we are
Some Neapolitan, or mean man of Pisa.

Tis hatch'd, and shall be so. — Tranio, at once (incease thee: take my colour'd hat and cloak:
When Biondello comes, he waits on thee;
But I will charm him first to keep his tongue.

Trans. So had you need.

In brief then, sir, sith it your pleasure is, And I am tied to be obedient;
Port to your father charg'd me at our parting: —

Be serviceable to my son, quoth he,
Although, I think, 'twas in another sense,
I am content to be Lucentio,
Because so well I love Lucentio.

Luc. Tranio, be so, because Lucentio loves
And let me be a slave, to achieve that maid
Whose sudden sight hath thrall'd my wounded eye.

Enter Blondello.

Here comes the rogue. — Sirrah, where have you

Bion. Where have I been? Nay, how now, where are you?

Master, has my fellow Tranio stol'n your clothes? Or you steal' his? or both? pray, what's the news?
Luc. Sirrah, come hither; 'tis no time to jest, And therefore frame your manners to the time.

Your fellow Tranio here, to save my life,

Put my apparel and my countenance on,

And if I for my escape have put on his;

For in a quarrel, since I came ashore,

I kill'd a man, and fear I was assur'd;

Wait you on him, I charge you, as becomes,

While I make way from hence to save my life:

You understand me?

Bion. I, sir, 'tis a whitt.

Luc. And not a jot of Tranio in your mouth;

Tranio is chang'd into Lucentio.

Bion. The better for him; 'Would I were so too!

Tran. To faith, boy, to have the next wish after,

[daughter.]

That Lucentio indeed had Baptista's youngest

But, sirrah,—not for my sake, but your master's—

[panies:

You use your manners discreetly in all kind of corn.

When I alone, why, then I am Tranio;

But in all places else, your master Lucentio.

One thing more rests, that thyself execute;

To make one among these woosers: If thou ask me

Why,

Sufficeth, my reasons are both good and weighty.

[Exeunt.

i Serv. My lord, you nod: you do not mind the play.

Sly. Yes, yes, by saint Anne, do I. A good matter, surely:—

Come there any more of it?

Tran. What, a chess? Is but b. grim.

Sly. 'Tis a very excellent piece of work, madam lady:

Would 'tis done ere.

SCENE II. Before Hortensio's House.

Enter Petruchio and Grumio.

Pet. Verona, for a while I take my leave,

To see my friends in Padua; but, of all,

My best beloved and approved friend,

Hortensio; and, I trow, this is his house:—

Here, sirrah Grumio; knock, I say.

Gru. Knock, sir, whom should I knock if is there any man has rehoused your worship?

Pet. Villain, I say, knock me here soundly.

For in a quarrel, since I come for to shake your master's hand, and to knock me at this gate,

And rap me well, or I'll knock your knife's pate.

Gru. My master is grown quarrelsome: I should knock you first,

And then I know after who comes by the worst.

Pet. Will it not be?

'Faith, sirrah, an you'll not knock, I'll wring it;

I'll try how you can say, 'O, and how it.

He wrings Grumio by the ears.

Gru. Help, masters, help! I my master is mad.

Enter Hortensio.

Hor. How now! what's the matter?—My old friend Grumio! and my good friend Petruchio!—

How do you all at Verona?

Pet. Signior Hortensio, come you to part the fray?

Con tutto il core bene tratto, may I say.

Hor. Alla Società, bene venuto, Molto honora signor mio Petruchio.

Rise, Grumio, rise; we would compound this quarrel.

This is a lawful cause for me to leave his service.

Look you, sir,—he bid me knock him, and rap him soundly; and he that is, well, was it fit for a servant to use his master so; being, perhaps, for high and mighty, to pop out.

Whom, would to God, I had well knock'd at first, then had not Grumio come by the worst.

Pet. A senseless villain!—Good Hortensio, I made the rascal knock upon your gate, and could not get him for my heart to do it.

Gru. Knock at the gate?—Oh heavens!—Spake you not these words plain,—Sire, knock me at the gate?

Rap me here, knock me well, and knock me soundly?

And come you now with,—knocking at the gate?

Pet. Sirrah, be gone, or talk not, I advise you;

Hor. Petruchio, the fairest gentleman, I am Grumio's pledge:

Why, this is a heavy chancy 'twixt you and me.

Your ancient, trusty, pleasant servant Grumio.

And tell me now, sweet friend,—what happy gale Blows you thy viet now, from old Verona?

Pet. Such wind as scatters young men through the world,

To seek their fortunes farther than at home,

Here, a little small experience grows. But, in a few,

Signior Hortensio, thus it stands with me:—

Antonio, my father, is deceas'd;

And I have thrust myself into this maze,

Hapy to wife, and thrive, as best I may:

Crowns in my purse I have, and goods at home.

And so am come abroad to see the world.

Hor. Petruchio, shall I then come roundly to thee,

And wish thee to a shrewd ill-fav'rd wife?

Though't thank me but a little for my counsel:—

And yet I'll promise thee she shall be rich,

And very rich,—but thou't too much my friend,

And I'll not come roundly to thee.

Pet. Signior Hortensio, twixt such friends as we,

Few words suffice: and, therefore, if thou know

One rich enough to be Petruchio's wife,

(As wealth is burden of my wooing dance)

Be she as foul as was Florindo's loves and you,

As old as Sybil, and as curt and shrewd

As Socrates' Xantippe, or a worse,

She moves me not, or not removes, at least,

Affection's edge in me; were she as rough

As are the swelling Adriatic seas:

Hor. Petruchio, since we have stept thus far,

I will continue that I broach'd in jest.

[In,

I can, Petruchio, help thee to a wife

With wealth enough, and young, and beauteous:

Brought up, as best becomes a gentlewoman,

Her only fault (and that is faults enough),

Is,—that she is intolerably curt.

And shrewd, and froward: so beyond all measure,

That, were my state far worse than it Is,

I would not wed her for a mine of gold.

Pet. Hortensio, peace; thou know'st not gold's effect.

Tell me her father's name, and 'tis enough;

For I will board her, though she chide as loud

As thunder, when the clouds in autumn crack.

Hor. Her father is Baptist Minola,

An affable and courteous gentleman:

Her name is Katharina Minola,

Renow'd in Padua for her scolding tongue.

Pet. I know her father, though I know not her,

And he knew my deceased father well:—

I will not sleep, Hortensio, till I see her;

And therefore let me be thus bold with you,

To give you over at this first encounter,

Unless you will accompany me thither.

Gru. I pray you, sir, let him go while the hurm hurh makes. 'O my word, an she knew him as well

As I do, she would teach you a lawless

a lawful cause

upon him: She may, perhaps, cull him half a score knaves, or so: why, that's nothing; an he be once, he'll rail in his rope-tricks. I'll tell you what, sir,—an a man be he will throw a figure in her face, and so disfigure her with it, that she shall have no more eyes to see withal than a cat: You know him not, sir.

Hor. Tarry, Petruchio, I must go with thee;
For to Baptista's keep my treasure is:
He hath the jewel of my life in hold,
His youngest daughter, beautiful Bianca;
And her withholds from me, and other more
Suitors to her, and rivals in my love:
Supposing it a thing impossible,
(For those defects I have before rehearsed.)
That ever Katharina will be wou'd,
Think I, and not this order hath Baptista ta'en;
That none shall have access unto Bianca,
Till Katharina the curst have got a husband.

Gru. Katharine the curst:
A just cow's milk from the worst.

Her. Now shall my friend Petruchio do me grace;
And offer me, disguis'd in sober robes,
To old Baptista as a schoolmaster
Well seen in music, to instruct Bianca;
That so I may by this device, at least,
Have leave and leisure to make love to her,
And, unsuspected, court her by herself.

Kater Gremio; with him Lucentio disguised, with books under his arm.

Gru. Here's no knavery! See; to beguile the old folks, be the young folks lay their heads to gether! Master, master, look about you: Who goes there? ha!

Her. Peace, Gremio; 'tis the rival of my love;
I'll petruchio, stand by a while with you, ha.

Gru. A proper stripping, and an amorous! [They retire.

Gru. O, very well: I have perused the note.
Hark you, sir; I'll have them very fairly bound:
All books of love, see that at least;
And see you read no other lectures to her:
You understand me.—O'er and beside Baptista's liberality,
I'll mean in a little largess.—Take your papers too,
And let me have them very well perfum'd;
For she is sweeter than perfumes itself,
To whom they go. What will you read to her?
Lu. What he, sir? I read to her, I'll plead for you,
As for my patron, (stand you so assur'd)
As firmly as yourself were still in place:
Yes, and (perhaps) with more successful words
Than you, unless you were a scholar, sir.
Gru. O this learning! what a thing it is!
Gru. O this woodcock! what an ass it is!
Her. Go, sir, mam!—God save you, signior Gremio!
Gru. And you're well met, signior Hortensio.
Trow you,
Whither are you going?—To Baptista Minola.
I promis'd to enchant carefully
About a schoolmaster for fair Bianca;
And, by good fortune, I have lighted well
On this young man; for learning, and behaviour,
Fit for her turn; well read in poetry
And other books,—good ones, I warrant you.
Her. 'Tis well: and I have met a gentleman,
Hath promised me to help me to another,
A fine musician to instruct our mistress;
So shall I do wh't be behind in duty
To fair Bianca, so belov'd of me.
Gru. Belov'd of me,—and that my deeds shall
Gru. And that his bags shall prove. [Aside.
Her. Gremio, 'tis now no time to vent our love;
Listen to me, and if you speak me fair,
I'll petruchio, stand by a while with you,
Here is a gentleman, whom by chance I met,
Upon agreement from us to his liking,
Will undertake to woo curst Katharine;
Yes, and (perhaps) to marry her, if you very please.
Gru. So said, so done, is well:—
Hortensio, have you told him all her faults?
Pet. I know, she is an irksome brawling scold;
If that be masters, I hear no harm.
Gru. No, sayst me so; friend? What country-
man?

Pet. Born in Verona, old Antonio's son:
My father dead, my fortune lies for me;
And I do hope good days, and long, to see.

Gru. O, sir, such a life, with such a wife, were
But if you have a stomach, tell o'God's name:
You shall have me assisting you in all.
But, will you woo this wild cat?
Pet. Will I live?
Gru. Will he woo her? ay, or I'll hang her.

[Aside.

Pet. Why came I hither, but to that intent?
Think a man of sin can daunt mine ears;
Have I not in my time heard these cursed words?
Have I not heard the sea, past'd with winds,
Hagie like an angry bear, chained with sweat?
Have I not heard great ordinance in the field,
And heaven's artillery in the skies?
Have I not in a pitched battle heard
Loud thunders, neighing steeds, and trumpets' clang?
And do you tell me of a woman's tongue;
That gives her half so great a blow to the ear,
As will a chimney in a farmer's fire?

Tush! tush! bear boys with bugs.

Gru. For he knows none. [Aside.

Gru. Hortensio, hark! This gentleman is happily arriv'd,
My mind presumes, for his own good, and yours.
How, how, how, yon hag; we would be contributors,
And bear his charge of wooing, whatsoever.
Gru. And so we will; provided, that he win her.
Gru. I would, I were as sure of a good dinner.

Enter Tranio, bravely apparell'd; and Bianello.

Tran. Gentlemen, God save you! If I may be Tell me, I beseech you, which is the readiest way to the house of Signior Baptista Minola?
Gru. He that has the two fair daughters:—is't
[Aside to Tranio.] he you mean?
Tran. He that's the fairest, to be sure.
Gru. Hark you, sir; You mean not her to—Tran. Perhaps, him and her, sir; What have you to do?
Pet. Tell me, that chides, sir, at any hand, I pray,
Pet. I love no chiders, sir;—Biondello, let's
Luc. Well begun, Tranio.
Tran. Sir, in eight and er you go—
Are you a suitor to the maid you talk of, yea, or no?
Tran. An if I be, sir, is it any offence?
Gru. No; if without more words, you will get
To hear me.
Tran. Why, sir, I pray, are not the streets as free
For me, as for you?
Gru. But so is not she.
Tran. For what reason, I beseech you?
Gru. For this reason, if you'll know—
That she's the choice love of signior Gremio.
Her. That she's the chosen of signior Hortensio.
Tran. Softly, my masters; If you be gentlemen,
Do me this right,—hear me with patience.
Baptista is a noble gentleman,
To whom my father is not all unknown;
And, were his daughter fairer than she is,
She may more suitors have, and me for one.
Fair Leda's daughter had a thousand wooers;
Then well one more may fair Bianca have:
And so she shall; Lucentio shall make one,
Though sighing, in hope to be spared alone.
Gru. What! this gentleman will out-talk us all.
Luc. Sir, give him heed; I know, he'll prove a Jade.

Pet. Hortensio, to what end are all these words?
Her. Sir, let me be so bold as to ask you,
Did you yet ever view Baptista's daughter?
Tran. No, sir; but hear I do, that he hath two;
Two are famous for a secular lamentation,
As is the other for beauteous modesty.
Pet. Sir, sir, the first's for me; let her go by.
Act 2.

TAMING OF THE SHREW.

Gre. Yea, leave that labour to great Hercules; And let it be more than Alcides' twelve. Pet. Sir, understand you this of me, insooth— That Gentilina shall of you stand unmarried, Her father keeps from all access of suitors; And will not promise her to any man, Until the elder sister first be wed: The younger then is free, and not before. Tra. If it be so, sir, that you are the man Must steal us all, and me among the rest; An if you break the ice, and do this feat,— Achieve the elder, set the younger free. For our access,—whose hap shall be to have her, Will not so graceless be, to be ingrate. Hor. Sir, you say well, and well you do con- And since you do profess to be a suitor, You must do, as we gratify this gentleman, To whom we all rest generally beheld. Tra. Sir, I shall not be slow: in sign whereof, Please ye we may converse this afternoon, And quaff carouses to our mistress' health; And do as adversaries do in law,— Strive mightily, but eat and drink as friends. Gr. Bion. O, excellent motion! Fellows, let's be gone. Hor. The motion's good indeed, and be it so:— Petrucho, I shall be your ben venuto. [Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The same. A Room in Baptista's House.

Enter Katharina and Bianca.

Bian. Good sister, wrong me not, nor wrong yourself, To make a bondmaid and a slave of me: That I disdain; but for these other gawds, Unbind my hands, I'll pull them off myself, Yes, all my raiment, to my petticoat; Or, what you will command me, I will do, So well I know my duty to my elders. Kath. Of all thy suitors, here I charge thee, tell Whom thou lov'st best: see thou dissemble not. Bian. Believe me, sister, of all the men alive, I never yet beheld that special face Which I could fancy more than any other. Kath. Minion, thou liest; Is't not Hortensio? Bian. If you affect him, sister, here I swear, I'll plead for you myself, but you shall have him. Kath. 0 then, belike, you fancy riches more; You will have Gremio to keep you fair. Bian. Is it for him you do envy me so? Nay, then you jest; and now I well perceive, You have but jested with me all this while: I pr'ythee, sister Kate, untie my hands. Kath. If that be jest, then all the rest was so. [Strikes her.

Enter Baptista.

Bap. Why, how now, dame! whence grows this insolence? Bianca, stand aside—poor girl! she weeps: Go ply thy needle; meddle not with her. For shame, thou biding of a devilish spirit, Why dost thou wrong her that did ne'er wrong thee. When did she cross thee with a bitter word? Kath. Her silence flouts me, and I'll be reveng'd. [Flies after Bianca.

Bap. What, in my sight?—Bianca, get thee in. [Exit Bianca.

Kath. Will you not suffer me? Nay, now I see, She is your treasure, she must have a husband; I must dance bare-foot on her wedding-day, And, for your love to her, lead apes in hell. Talk not to me; I will go sit and weep, Till I can find occasion of revenge. [Exit Katharina.

Bap. Was ever gentleman thus griev'd as I? But who comes here?—Enter Gremio, with Lucentio in the habit of a mean man; Petruchio, with Hortensio as a musician, and Tranio, with Biondello bearing a lute and books. Kath. Good-morrow, neighbour Baptist. Bap. Good-morrow, neighbour Gremio: God save you, gentlemen! Pet. And you, good sir! Fray, have you not a daughter Call'd Katharina, fair, and virtuous? Bap. I have a daughter, sir, call'd Katharina. Kath. You see too brilliant, go to. Bap. You wrong me, signior Gremio; give me leave.— I am a gentleman of Verona, sir, That, hearing of her beauty, and her wit, Her affability, and bashful modesty, Her wondrous qualities, and mild behaviour,— Am bold to show myself a forward guest Within your house, to make mine eye the witness Of that report which I so oft have heard. And, for an entrance to my entertainment, I do present you with a man of mine, [Presenting Hortensio. Cunning in musick, and the mathematicks, To instruct her fully in those sciences, Whereof, I know, she is not ignorant: Accept of him, or else you do wrong; His name is Licio, born in Mantua. Bap. You're welcome, sir; and he for your good sake: But for my daughter Katharine,—this I know, Sir, is not for your turn, nor for my grief. Pet. I see you do not mean to part with her; Or else you like not of my company. Bap. Mistake me not, I speak but as I find. Whence are you, sir? what may I call your name? Pet. Petruchio is my name: Antonio's son, A man well known throughout all Italy. Bap. I know him well: you are welcome for his sake. Gre. Saving your tale, Petruchio, I pray, Let us, that are poor petitioners, speak too: Baccare! you are marvellous forward. Pet. O, pardon me, signior Gremio; I would fain be dignified. Gre. I doubt it not, sir; but you will curse your wooing. Neighbour, this is a gift very grateful, I am sure of it. To expatiate like this kindness of my heart, that have been more kindly beheld to you than any, I freely give unto you this young scholar, [Presenting Lucentio.] that hath been long studying at Rheims; as cunning in Greek, Latin, and other languages, as the other in musick and mathematicks: his name is Cambio; pray, accept his service. Bap. A thousand thanks, signior Gremio; welcome, good Cambio. —But, gentle sir, [to Tranio.] methinks, you walk like a stranger; May I be so bold to know the cause of your coming? Tra. Pardon me, sir, the boldness is mine own; That, being a stranger in this city here, Do make myself a suitor to your daughter, Unto Bianca, fair, and virtuous. Nor is your firm resolve unknown to me, In the preferment of the elder sister; This liberty is all that I request, That upon knowledge of my parentage, I may have welcome amongst the rest who, And free access and favour as the rest. And, toward the education of your daughters, I here bestow a simple instrument, And this small packet of Greek and Latin books: If you accept them, then their worth is great. Bap. Lucento, name your whences, I pray? Tra. Of Pisa, sir; son to Vincentio. Bap. A mighty man of Pisa: by report I know him well: you are very welcome, sir,—
Enter a Servant.

Sirrah, lead

These gentlemen to my daughters; and tell them both,

These are their tutors; bid them use them well.

[Enter Servant with Hortensio, Luciento, and Biondello.

We will go walk a little in the orchard,

And then to dinner: You are passing welcome,

And so I pray you all to think yourselves.

Pet. Signior Baptista, my business taketh haste,

And every day I cannot come to you.

You know my father well; and in him, me.

Left solely her to all his lands and goods,

Which I have better'd rather than decrease:

Then tell me,—If I get your daughter's love,

What dowry shall I have with her to wife?

Bap. After my death, the one half of my lands:

And, in possession, twenty thousand crowns.

Pet. And, for that dowry, I'll assure her

Of her widowerhood,—be it that she survive me,—

In all my lands and leases whatsoever:

Let no ingenious man or wise between us,

That covenants may be kept on either hand.

Bap. Ay, when the special thing is well obtain'd,

This is—her love; for that is all in all.

Pet. What is that nothing; for I tell you, father,

I am as peremptory as she prov'd-minded:

And where two raging fires meet together,

They do consume the thing that feeds their fury:

Though little fire grows great with little wind,

Yet extreme gusts will blow out fire and all:

So I to her, and so she yields to me;

For I am rough, and woo not like a babe.

Bap. Well may'st thou woo, and happy be thy gains.

But be thou arm'd for some unhappy words.

Pet. Ay, to the proof; as mountains are for winds,

That shake not, though they blow perpetually.

Re-enter Hortensio, with his head broken.

Bap. How now, my friend? why dost thou look so pale?

Hor. For fear, I promise you; if I look pale.

Bap. What, will my daughter prove a good musician?

Hor. I think she'll sooner prove a soldier;

Iron may hold with her, but never lutes.

Bap. Why, then thou canst not break her to the lute?

Hor. Why, no; for she hath broke the lute to me.

I did but tell her, she mistook her frets,

And bow'd her hand to teach her fingerling;

When with a most impatient devilish spirit,

Frets, call you these? quoth she: I'll fume with them;

And, with that word, she struck me on the head,

And through the instrument my pate made way;

And there I stood amazed for a while,

And sigh'd my poverty, looking through the rate;

While she did call me,—rascal fiddler,

And—twangling Jack; with twenty such vile terms,

As she had studi'd to muddle me so.

Pet. Now, by the world, it is a lusty wench;

I love her ten times more than o'er I did:

O, how I long to have some chat with her!

Bap. Well, go with me, and be not so discomfited.

Proceed in practice with my younger daughter;

She's apt to learn, and thankful for good words—

Signior Petruchio, will you go with me?

Or shall I send my daughter, Kate to you?

Pet. I pray you do; I will attend her here,—

And woo her with some spirit when she comes.

Say, that she shall: Why, then I'll tell her plain,

She sings as sweetly as a nightingale;

Say, that she frowns: I'll say, she looks as clear

As morning roses newly wash'd with dew:

Say, she be mute, and will not speak a word;

Then I'll compound her volubility,

And say she uttereth piercing eloquence:

If she do bid me pack, I'll give her thanks,

As though she bid me stay by her a week;

If she deny to wed, I'll crave the day

When I shall ask her banns, and when she married

But here she comes; and now, Petruchio, speak.

Enter Katharina.

Good-morrow, Kate; for that's your name, I hear.

Kate. Well have you heard, but something hard of hearing;

They call me—Katharine, that do talk of me.

Pet. You lie, in faith; for you are call'd plain Kate.

And bonny Kate, and sometimes Kate the curst;

But Kate, the prettiest Kate in Christendom,

Kate of Kate-Hall, my super-dainty Kate,

For dainties are all cases; and therefore, Kate,

Take this of me, Kate of my consolation:—

Hearing thy mildness prais'd in every town,

The world, thy portrait, and thy bawdy poetry,

(Yet not so deeply as to thee belong,)—

Myself am mov'd to woo thee for my wife.

Kate. Mov'd in good time: let him that mov'd you bither.

Remove you hence: I knew you at the first,

You were a moveable.

Pet. Why, what's a moveable?

Kate. A joint-stool.

Pet. Thou hast hit it; come, sit on me.

Kate. Asses are made to bear, and so are you.

Pet. Women are made to bear, and so are you.

Kate. No such jade, sir, as you, if you me mean.

Pet. Aye, good Kate! I will not burden thee:

For, knowing thee to be but young and light,—

Kate. Too light for such a swain as you to catch;

And yet as heavy as my weight should be.

Should be? should be but a place.

Kate. Well ta'en, and like a hussard.

Pet. O, slow-wing'd turtle! shall I buzzard take thee?

Kate. No, for a turtle; as he takes a buzzard.

Pet. Come, come, you wasp; if faith, you are too angry.

Kate. If I be waipash, best beware my sting.

Pet. You do too, then, to buzzard take thee.

Kate. Ay, if the fool could find where it lies.

Pet. Who knows not where a wasp doth wear his sting?

In his tail.

Kate. In his tongue.

Pet. Whose tongue?

Kate. Yours, if you talk of tails; and so farewell.

Kate. Good Kate; I am a gentleman.

That I'll try.

[Striking him.

Pet. I swear I'll cuff you, if you be like again.

Kate. So may you lose your arms:

If you strike me, you are no gentleman:

And if no gentleman, why, then no arms.

Kate. What is your crest? a cockcomb?

Pet. A combless cock, so Kate will be my hen.

Kate. No cock of mine, you crow too like a craven.

Pet. Nay, come, Kate, come; you must not look so sour.

Kate. It is my fashion, when I see a crab.

Pet. Why, here's no crab; and therefore look out.

Kate. There is, there is.

Pet. Then show it me.

Kate. Had a glass, I would.

Pet. What, you mean my face?
Pet. • No, not a whit; I find you passing. Twas told me, you were rough, and coy, and sullen, And now I find report a very liar; [teous; For you are pleasant, gentle, true, passing courtly. But slow in speech; yet sweet as spring-time flowers: Thou canst not frown, thou canst not look askance, Nor bite the lip, as angry wenches will: Nor thin you’re spoiling me a sparkle; But thou with mildness entertain’st thy wooers, With gentle conference, soft and affable. Why does the world report, that Kate doth limp? O slanderous world! Kate, like the hazel-twig, Is straightly, and slenderly; and brown in hue, As hazel-nuts, and sweeter than the kernels. O, let me see thee walk: thou dost not halt. Kath. • Go, fool, and whom thou keep’st com. Pet. Did ever Di(an) so become a grove, [mand. As Kate this chamber with her princely gait? O, be thou Dian, and let her be Kate; And then let Kate be chaste, and Dian sportful: Kath. • O, that was £. Pet. Did you study all this goodly speech? Pet. • It is extemperate, from my mother-wit. Kath. A witty mother! witless else her son. Pet. • Is not wise? Kath. • Yes; keep you warm. Pet. • Marty, so I mean, sweet Katharine, in thy And therefore, setting all this chat aside, [bed: This thy part, wherein thou hast consented That thou shall be my wife; thy dowry ‘greed on And, will you, ill you, I will marry you. Now, Kate, I am a husband for your turn; For thou sav’st that, whereby my beauty, [Thy beauty that doth make me like thee well,) Thou must be married to no man but me; For I am he, am born to tame you, Kate; And bring you from a wild cat to a Kate Cote. Kath. Here comes your father; never make denial, I must and will have Katharine to my wife. Re-enter Baptista, Gremio, and Tranio. Bap. Now, Signior Petruchio: How speed you with Pet. • My daughter? Bap. • How but well, sir? how but well? It were impossible, I should speed amiss. Pet. Why, how now, daughter Katharine? in thy Summers? Kath. • Canst thou, daughter? now I promise you have show’d a tender fatherly regard, [you, To wish me wed to one half lunatick; A mad-cap ruffian, and a swearing Jack, This this was with baths to face the matter out. Pet. Father, ‘tis thus, you yourself and all the world, That talk’d of her, have talk’d amiss of her; If she be curst, it is for policy: For she’s not froward, but modest as the dove; She is not hot, but temperate as the morn; For patience she will prove a second Grissel; And Roman Lucrece for her chastity: And to conclude, we have ‘greed so well together, That this Sunday is the wedding-day. Kath. • I’ll see thee hang’d on Sunday first. Gre. Hark, Petruchio! she says, she’ll see thee hang’d first. Tra. Petru, is your speeding? nay, then, good night our part! [myself; Pet. Be patient, gentlemen; I choose her for If she and I be pleas’d, what’s that to you? [you? But then I am not to be cast away, That she shall still be curst in company. I tell you, ‘tis incredible to believe How much she loves me: O, the kindest Kate! — She hung about my neck • and kiss on kiss She vied so fast, protest ing oath on oath, That in a twinkle she won me to her love. O, you are novices! ‘tis a world to see. How tame, when men and women are alone, A meacoock wratch can make the curstest shrew. — Give me thy hand, Kate; I will unto Venice, To buy apparel against the wedding-day: — Provide the feast, father, and bid the guests; I will be sure, my Katharine shall be fine. Bap. I know not what to say: but give me your daughter. God send you joy, Petruchio! ‘tis a match. Gre. Tra. Amen, say we; we will be witnesses. Pet. Father, and wife, and gentlemen, adieu; I will to Venice, judge ‘gainst thee. We will have rings, and things, and fine array; And kiss me, Kate, we will be married o’ Sunday. [Exeunt Petruchio and Katharina, severally. Gre. Was ever match clapp’d up so suddenly? Bap. Faith, gentlemen, that is how I play a merchant’s And venture madly on a desperate mart. [part, Tra. ‘Twas a commodity lay fretting by you; ‘Twill bring you gain, or perish on the seas. Bap. The gain I seek in pamphlet. Gre. No doubt, but he hath got a quiet catch. But now, Baptista, to your younger daughter: — Now is the day we long have looked for; I am your near neighbour, and was not a merchant. Tra. And I am one, that love Bianca more Than words can witness, or your thoughts can guess. Gre. Youngling! thou canst not love so dear as I. Tra. Grey-beard! I love thee more. Gre. But thine doth fray. Skipper, stand back; ’tis age, that nouriseth. Tra. But youth, with ladie’s eyes, that dothournish. Bap. Content you, gentlemen; I’ll compound this strife: ‘Tis deeds must win the prize; and he, of both, That can assure my daughter greatest dowry, Shall have Bianca’s love. Say, signior Gremio, what can you assure her? Gre. First, as you know, my house within the city Is richly furnished with plate and gild; Basins, and世界上最贵的，than this any other. My hangings all of Tyrian tapestry: In ivory cofiers I have stuff’d my crowns; In cypress chests my arras, counterpoints, Costly apparel, tents and canopies. Fine linen, Turkey cushions boss’d with pearl, Valance of Venice gold in needle-work, Pewter and brass, and all things that belong Housekeeping: the housekeeping. I, in my farm, have a hundred milch-kine to the pail, Sixscore fat oxen standing in my stalls, And all this answerable to this point. But you, in yourself I am assured, I must confess; And, if I die to-morrow, this is hers, If, whilst I live, she will be only mine. Tra. That, only, came well in — Sir, list to me, I am your father’s heir, and not a merchant. If I may have your daughter to my wife, I’ll leave her houses three or four as good, Within rich Pis’a walls, as any one Old Signior Gremio hath in Padua. Besides two thousand and ducats by the year, Of fruitful land, all which shall be her jointure. What, have I pinch’d you, signior Gremio? Gre. Two thousand ducats by the year! land! My land amends not to such in all: That she shall have; besides an argosy! That now is lying in Marseilles’ road: — What, have I chock’d you with an argosy — Tra. Gremio, ’tis known, my father hath no less Than three great argosies; besides two galliasses, And twelve tall galleys: these shall assure her, And twice as much, what’s in his coasters’ next. Gre. Nay, I t’wixt offer’d them alone, I have no more; And she can have no more than I have: — If you like me, she shall have me and mine. [world, Tra. Why, then the maid is mine from all the By your firm promise; Gremio is out-vied.
ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Room in Baptista’s House.

Enter Lucentio, Hortensio, and Bianca.

Lu. Fiddler, forbear; you grow too forward, sir.

Have you no soon forgot the entertainment
Your sister Katharina gave you withal? [Exit.

But, wrangling pedant, this is
The patience of heavenly harmony;
Then give me leave to have prevaricative;
And in two hours you have one hour: Your lecture shall have leisure for much.

Lu. Preposterosus me! that never read so far
To know the cause why music was ordain’d;
Whence it is wrought, or to what end;
After his studies, or his usual pain?
Then give me leave to read philosophy,
And, while I paus, serve in your harmony.

Lu. Sir, sir, I will not hear these braves of thine.

Bia. Why, gentlemen, you do me wrong.

To strive for that which resteth in my choice; I am no teaching scholar in the schools; I’ll not be tied to hours, nor pointed times. But learn my lessons as I please myself. And, so cut off all strife, here set we down:

Take you my instrument, play you the whiles; His lecture will be done, ere you have ta’n’d.

Lu. You shall have his lecture when I am in tune?

To Bianca.—Hortensio retire.

Bian. That will be never—tune your instrument.

Luc. Where left we last?

Bian. Here, madam—:

Bian. That semina; bic est Sigismia feminam; [Enter Petruchio, with music.]

Bian. Correct them. [Exit.

Lu. But that, as I told you before.—Semina, I am Lucentio.—he eat, you unto Vincentio of Fria;—he supped, and thus to get your love—

His discours, and that Lucentio that comes a wooing.

—Petruchio, in my man Tramio.—regia, bearing my part—colens semia, that we might beguile the old pedant.

Luc. Madam, my instrument’s in tune.

Bian. Let’s hear it:

[Enter Petruchio.

Luc. I try the treble jars.

Bian. Let’s hear it again.

[Prospero plays.

Luc. Split in the hole, man, and tune again.

Bian. Now let me see if I can contrive it; Has she as yet?—I know you not; his est Sigismia felix, I trust you not. His est Vincentio? take heed he be not usus—regia, presume not;—colens semia, despeire not.

Bian. Madam, tis now in tune.

Luc. But all the base.

Bian. The base is right; ‘tis the base knare that jars.

How soon and forward our pedant is! Now, if you love, the knave both court my love; Pedaculus, I’ll watch you better yet.

Bian. In time I may believe, yet I mistrust.

Luc. Mistrust it not; for, sure, Katharina Was as Jove calam’d so from his grandfather.

Bian. I must believe my master; else, I promise you, I should be arguing still upon that doubt; But let it rest. Now, I live, to you—

Good masters, take it not unkindly, pray, That I have been thus pleasant with you both.

Bian. You may go walk, (to Lucentio,) and give me leave a while.

Bian. My lessons make no music in three parts.

Luc. Are you so formal, sir? well, I must wait, And watch withal; for, but I be deceiv’d, Our fine musician grows wearisome. [Aside.

To learn the order of my fingering, I must begin with rudiments of art; To teach you gamut in a briefer sort, Must with distemper, and effectually, be Tham hath been taught by any of my trade: And there it is in writing, fairly drawn.

Bian. Why, I am past my gamut long ago. Have you read the gamut of Lucentio?

Bian. [Aside.] Gamut I am the ground of all accord,

A re, to pleno Hortensio’s passion.

Bian. Still, Bianca, take this for thu, and

C faust, that bears with all affection.

D sol re, our chief, two notes have I.

It is mi, above gius, or 1 do.

Let it rest. Now, I live, to you—

Old fashions please me most; I am not so nice.

To change true rules for odd inventions.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Mistress, your father prays you leave your books, And help to dress your sister’s chamber up; You know, to-morrow is the wedding-day.

Bian. Farewell, we must master, but I must be [Enters Bianca and Servant.

Bian. Faith, mistress, then I have no cause to stay.

Erie.

Ent. But I have cause to point this pedant; Methinks, he speaks as though he were in love—

Yet if thy thoughts, Bianca, be so humble, To cast thy wand’ring eyes on every state, Sense thee, that thou: If once I find thee ranging, Hortensio will be quit with thee by changing.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—The same. Before Baptista’s House.

Enter Baptista, Gremio, Tramio, Katharina, Bianca, Lucentio, and Attendants.

Bap. Sigismund Lucentio, (to Tramio,) this is the pointed day

That Katharine and Petruchio should be married, And yet we hear not of our son-in-law:—

What will be said? if he be mocking still, to wait the heerdgiome, when the priest attends To speak the cereemonial rites of marriage? What says Lucentio to this shame of ours?

Kath. No shame but mine; I must, forsooth, be

To give my hand, opposed against my heart, Unio a mad-brain ruderly, full of spleen, Who would have haste, and means to wed at leisure. I told you, I; he was a translike fool.
Hiding his bitter jests in blunt behaviour:
And, to be noted for a merry man,
He'll woo a thousand, 'point the day of marriage;
Make friends, invite, yes, and proclaim the banns;
Yet never means to wed where he hath wo'd.
Now must the world point at poor Katharine,
And say,—Lo, there is Petruchio's nest,
I'll turn him comely woman.

Tra. Patience, good Katharine, and Baptista too; Upon my life, Petruchio means but well, Whatever fortune stays him from his word: Though he be merry, yet withal he's honest.

Kath. 'Would Katharine had never seen him though:

[Enter Biondello.]

Bion. Master, master! news, old news, and such news as you never heard of.

Bap. If it be new and old too? how may that be?

Bion. Why, is it not news, to hear of Petruchio's coming?

Bap. Is he come?

Bion. Why, no, sir.

Bap. What then?

Bion. He is coming.

Bap. When will he be here?

Bion. When he stands where I am, and see you.

Tra. But, say, what?—To thine old news.

Bion. Why, Petruchio is coming in a new hat, and an old jerkin; a pair of old breeches, thrice turned; a pair of boots that have been candle-cases, one buckled, another laced; an old rusty sword taken out of the town armory, with a broken hilt, and chapeless; with two broken points: His horse hipped with an old mothy saddle, the stirrups of no kindred: besides, possessed with the gidders, and like to move in the chine; trobled with the lampass, infected with the fashions, full of wind-galls, sped with spasms, raied with the yellows, past cure of the five, stark spoiled with the staggers, begnawn with the bots; swayed in the back, and shoulder-shotten; ne'er-leggere, and with a half-checked bit, and a head-stall of sheep's leather; whilst, being restrained to keep him from stumbling, hath been often burst, and now repaired with knots: one girl six times pieced, and a woman's crupper of veinre, which hath two letters for her name, stuck in studs, and here and there pieced with packthread.

Bap. Who comes with him?

Bion. O, sir, his lackey, for all the world caparisoned like the horse; with a linen stock on one leg, and a kersey boot-hose on the other, gartered with a red and blue list; an old hat, and The humour of forty fancies pricked in't for a feather; a monster, a very monster in apparel; and not like a christian foother, or a gentleman's lackey.

Tra. 'Tis some odd humour pricks him to this fashion;— Yet oftentimes he goes but mean apparel'd.

Bion. I am glad he is quaint as he is, and sober as a sheep.

Bap. Why, sir, he comes not.

Bion. Didst thou not say, he comes?

Bap. Who? that Petruchio came?

Bion. Petruchio came.

Bap. No, sir; I say, his horse comes with him on his back.

Bap. Why, that's all one.

Bion. Why, by saint James, I hold you a penny, A horse and a man is more than one, and yet not many.

Enter Petruchio and Grumio.

Pet. Come, where be these gallants? who is at home?

Bap. You are welcome, sir.
"TAMING OF THE SHREW."

Act IV.

SCENE I.—A Hall in Petruchio's Country House.

Enter Grumio.

Grum. Fye, fye, on all tired lades! on all mad masters! and all foul ways! Was ever man so beaten? was ever man so rayed? was ever man so wayed? was ever man so rated?

Bap. Nay, let them go, a couple of quiet ones.

Grum. Went they not quietly, I should die with a hearty laughing.

Bap. Of all mad matches, never was the like! Loc. Mistress, what's your opinion of your sister? Bian. That, being mad herself, she's madly in love.

Grum. I warrant him, Petruchio is Kate.

Bap. Neighbours and friends, though bride and bridgewise wants
For to supply the places at the table,
You know there wants no junkets at the feast:—Lucentio, you shall supply the bridal place;
And let Bianca take her sister's room.

Bap. Shall sweet Bianca practice how to bride it?

Bap. She shall, Lucentio.—Come, gentlemen, let's go.

[Exeunt.]

Petruchio, Katharina, Bianca, Bapstata, Hortensio, Grumio, and Tranio.

Pet. Gentlemen and friends, I thank you for your advice; I know, you think to dine with me to-day, I pray you be not too hearty! nor yet so very glad to drink cheer; But so it is, my haste doth call me hence, And therefore here I mean to take my leave.

Bap. Is't possible, you will away to-night?

Pet. I must away to-day, before I might come:— Make it no wonder; if you knew my business, You would entreat me rather go than stay. And, honest company, I thank you all, That you have heeld me with such places, To this most patient, sweet, and virtuous wife: Dine with my father, drink a health to me; For I must hence, and farewell to you all.

Tru. Let us entreat you stay till after dinner.

Pet. It may not be.

Let me entreat you.

Pet. It cannot be.

Let me entreat you.

Kath. I am content.

Are you content to stay?

Pet. I am content you shall entreat me stay, But yet not stay, entreat me how you can.

Kath. Now, if you love me, speak your mind.

Grum. Ay, sir, they be ready; the oats have eaten the horses.

Pet. Grumio, I will away.

Do what thou canst, I will not go to-day: No, nor to-morrow, nor till I please myself.

The door is open, sir, there lies your way.

Pet. I have the feast, revel and domineer.

Kath. Gentlemen, forward to the bridal dinner:— I am a master of what is mine own:— If she had not a spirit to resist.

Pet. They shall go forward, Kate, at thy command.

Grum. Obey the bride, you that attend on her:

The feast, revel and domineer.

Carouse full measure to her maidenhead, Be mad and merry,—or go hang yourselves; But for my bonny Kate, she must with me.

She must be made a fool, if she had not a spirit to resist.

Pet. They shall go forward, Kate, at thy command.

Grum. Obey the bride, you that attend on her:

The feast, revel and domineer.

Carouse full measure to her maidenhead, Be mad and merry,—or go hang yourselves; But for my bonny Kate, she must with me.

She must be made a fool, if she had not a spirit to resist.

Kath. I am a master of what is mine own:— If she had not a spirit to resist.

She is my goods, my chattels; she is my house, My household-stuff, my field, my barn, My horse, my ox, my ass, my any thing; And above all, stands, touch her whoever dare —

I'll bring my action on the proudest he

That stops my way in the dust.— Grumio.

Draw forth thy weapon, we're best with thievs; Rescue thy mistress, if thou be a man:—

not, sweet wench, they shall not touch thee.

— Kate.

[Enter Petruchio, Katharina, and Grumio.]

Bap. Nay, let them go, a couple of quiet ones.

Grum. Went they not quietly, I should die with a hearty laughing.

Bap. Of all mad matches, never was the like! Loc. Mistress, what's your opinion of your sister? Bian. That, being mad herself, she's madly in love.

Grum. I warrant him, Petruchio is Kate.

Bap. Neighbours and friends, though bride and bridgewise wants
For to supply the places at the table,
You know there wants no junkets at the feast:—Lucentio, you shall supply the bridal place;
And let Bianca take her sister's room.

Bap. Shall sweet Bianca practice how to bride it?

Bap. She shall, Lucentio.—Come, gentlemen, let's go.

[Exeunt.]
Act 4. Taming of the Shrew.

Curt. All ready; and, therefore, I pray thee, news.

Gru. First, what news? I have my horse tied; my master and mistress fallen out.

Curt. How? of their saddles into the dirt; and thereon hangs a tale.

Curt. Let's have no more of that; 'tis good Grumio.

Gru. Lend thin ear.

Curt. Here's Grumio.

Gru. There.

Curt. This is to feel a tale, not to hear a tale.

Gru. And therefore 'tis called, a sensible tale: and this cuff'd, Walter, Sugar-sop, and the rest, let their heads be sleekly combed, their blue coats brushed, and their garters of an indifferent knit; let them curtesy with their left legs; and not presume to touch a hair of my master's horse-tail, till they kiss their hands. Are they all ready?

Curt. They are.

Gru. Call them forth.

Curt. Do you hear, ho? you must meet my master at the combing-house.

Gru. Why, she hath a face of her own.

Curt. Who knows not that?

Gru. Thou, it seems; that calles for company to combing-house.

Curt. I call them forth to credit her.

Gru. Why, she comes to borrow nothing of them.

Enter several Servants.

Nath. Welcome home, Grumio.

Phil. How now, Grumio?

Jos. What, Grumio!

Nick. Fellow Grumio!

Nath. How now, old lad?

Gru. Welcome, you;—how now, you;—what, you;—fellow, you;—and thus much for greeting. Now, my spruce companions, is all ready, and all things neat?

Nath. All things are ready: How near is our master?

Gru. Even at hand, alighted by this; and therefore be not—Cock's passion, silence!—my master.

Enter Petruchio and Katharina.

Pet. Where be these knaves? What, no man at door,

To hold my stirrup, nor to take my horse!

Where is Nathaniel, Gregory, Philip?

[Exit Serv. Here, here, sir; here, sir.

Pet. Here, sir! here, sir! here, sir! here, sir! You logger-headed and unpolish'd grooms!

What, no attendance? no regard? no duty?—

Where is the foolish knave I sent before?

Gru. Here, sir; as foolish as I was before.

Pet. You peasan' swain! you whoreson malterhorse drudge!

Did I not bid thee meet me in the park,

And bring along these rascal knaves with thee?

Gru. Nathaniel's coat, sir, was not fully made,

And Gabriel's pumps were all unplunk'd in the heel:

There was no link to colour Peter's hat,

And Walter's dagger was not come from sheathing:

There were none fine, but Adam, Ralph, and Gregory.

The rest were ragged, old, and beggarly:

Yet, as they are, here are they come to meet you.

Pet. Go, rascals, go, and fetch my supper in—[Exit some of the Servants.

Where is the life that tale I told—[Sings.

Where are those—Sit down, Kate, and welcome.

Soud, soud, soud, soud, soud!

Re-enter Servants, with supper.

Why, when, I say?—Nay, good sweet Kate, be merry.

Off with my boots, you rogues, you villains; When?

It was the friar of orders grey,

[Exeunt Servants.

As he for walks on his way—

Out, out, you rogue! you pluck my foot away:

Take that, and mend the plucking off the other.

[Strikes him.

Be merry, Kate:—Some water, here;—what, ho! Where's my spaniel Troilus?—Strab, get you hence,

And bid my cousin Ferdinand come hither:

[Exit Servant.

One, Kate, that you must kiss, and be acquainted with—

Where are my slippers?—Shall I have some water?

[As he is presented to him.

Come, Kate, and wash, and welcome heartily—

[Servant lets the water fall.

You whoreson villain! will you let it fall?

Kath. Patience, I pray you; 'twas a fault unwilling.

Pet. A whoreson, beetle-headed, flap-ear'd knave! Come, Kate, sit down; I know you have a stomach.

Will you give thanks, sweet Kate; or else shall I—

What is this? mutton?—

1 Serv. Ay.

Pet. 1 Serv.

Pet. 'Tis burnt; and so is all the meat;

What dogs are these?—Where is the rascal cook? How durst you, villains, bring it from the dresser, And serve it thus to me that love it not?

There, take it to you, trenchers, cups, and all:

[Throws the meat, &c. about the stage.

You heedless jolthead, and unmanner'd slaves! What, do you grumble? 'twill be with you straight.

Kath. I pray you, husband, be not so disquiet; The meat was well, if you were so contented.

Pet. I tell thee, Kate, 'twas burnt and dried away;

And I expressly am forbid to touch it.

For it engenders choler, planteth anger; And better 'twere that both of us did fast,—

Since, of oursealfs, ourselves are choleric.—

Than feed it with such over-roasted flesh.

Be patient; to-morrow it shall be mended,

And, for this night, we'll fast for company:—

Come, I will bring thee to thy bridal chamber.

[Nact Petruchio, Katharina, and Curtis.

Nath. [Advancing.]—Peter, didst ever see the like?

Petr. He kills her in her own humour.

Re-enter Curtis.

Gru. Where is he?

Curt. In her chamber,

Making a sermon of continency to her; And rails, and swears, and rates; that she, poor soul,
Knows not which way to stand, to look, to speak;
And sits as one new risen from a dream.
Away, away! for he is coming hither. [Exeunt.]

Re-enter Petruchio.
Tr. Thus have I politicly begun my reign,
And 'tis my hope to end successfully;
My falcon now is sharp, and passing empty;
And with a branch to my old bow's bent, he has gall'd,
For then she never looks upon her lure.
Another way I have to man my haggard,
To make her come, and know her keeper's call,
That is, to date her, to wake her, to these kites,
That date, and beat, and will not be obedient.
She eats no meat to-day, nor none shall eat;
Last night she slept not, nor to-night shall not.
As with the meat, some ungendered fault
I'll find about the making of the bed;
And here I'll fling the pillow, there the bolster,
This way the coverlet, another way the sheets—
Ay, and amid this hurly, I intend,
That all is done in reverend care of her;
And, in conclusion, she shall watch all night;
And, if she chance to nod, I'll rail and brawl,
And with the cumbrous keep her still awake.
This is a way to kill a wife with kindness;
And thus I'll curb her mad and headstrong humors.

She that knows better how to tame a shrew,
New let him speak; 'tis charity to show. [Exeunt.

Enter Tranio and Hortensio.
Tr. Isn't possible, friend Licio, that Bianca
Doth fancy any other but Lucentio?
I tell you, sir, she bears me fair in hand.
Hon. But to satisfy you in what I have said,
Stand by, and mark the manner of his teaching. [They stand aside.

Enter Blanca and Lucentio.
Bl. Now, mistress, profit you in what you read?
Lu. What, master, read you? first resolve me that.
Bl. Read that I profess, the art to love.
Lu. And may you prove, sir, master of your art!
Bl. While you, sweet dear, prove mistress of my heart.
[They retire.

Hon. How do you proceed, marry! Now, tell me, I pray,
You that dare swear that your mistress Bianca
Loved none in the world so well as Lucentio.
Tr. More. I assure you, mistress, I am at a loss,
Nor a musician, as I seem to be.
But one that seem to live in this disguise,
For such a one as leaves a gentleman,
And makes a god of such a cullion:
Kn. Sir, that I am call'd.—Lucentio.
Tr. Signior Hortensio, I have often heard
Of your entire affection to Bianca:
And since mine eyes are witness of her lightness,
I will with you,—if you be so contented,—
Forever love Bianca, and her love for ever.
Hon. See, how they kiss and court!—Signior Lucentio,
Here is my hand, and here I firmly vow—
Never will I hear more; but do forswear her,
As one unworthy all the former favours
That I have fondly flatter'd her withal.
Tr. And here I take the like unfeigned oath,
Nor ever honor or respect in her I would entertain:
Eye on her! see, how beastly the doth court him.
Hon. 'Would, all the world, but he, had quite
For me,—that I may surely keep mine oath,
I will be married to a wealthy widow
Of three days pass; which hath as long lov'd me,
As I have lov'd this proud disdainful haggard:
And so farewell, signior Lucentio.—
Kindness in women, not their beauteous looks,
Shall win my love: and so I take my leave,
In resolution as I swore before. [Exit Hortensio. Lucentio and Blanca advance.
Tr. Mistress Bianca, bless you with such grace
As 'twas my fortune to a lovest sheet, and so beseech you:
Nay, I have ta'en you napping, gentle love;
And have forsworn you with Hortensio.
Bian. Tranio, you jest; But have you both for the
Tr. Mistress, we have.
Bl. Then we are rid of Licio.
Tr. I'll faith, he'll have a lusty widow now,
That shall be wound and wedded in a day.
Bian. God give him joy!—
Tr. Ay, and he'll tame her.
Bian. He says so, Tranio.
Tr. 'Faith, he is gone unto the taming-school.
Bian. The taming-school! what, is there such a place?
Tr. Ay, mistress, and Petruchio is the master:
That teacheth tricks eleven and twenty long.——
To tame a shrewed woman, is a skilling tongue.

Enter Bianco, Blundo, running.
Bian. O, master, master, I have watch'd so long
That I'm dog-weary: but at last I espied
An angelic soul coming down the hill,
Will serve the turn.
Tr. What is he, Blundo?—
Bian. Master, a mercantile, or a pedant,
I know not what; but formal in apparel,
In gait and countenance surely like a father.
Bl. And what of him, Tranio?
Tr. Who be he that doth bestride the cart,
I'll make him glad to seem Vincentio;
And give assurance to Baptista Minola,
As if he were the right Vincentio.
Take in your love, and then let me alone.
[Exeunt Lucentio and Blanca.

Enter a Pedant.
Ped. God save you, sir!
Tr. And you, sir! you are welcome.
Travel you far on, or are you at the furthest?
Ped. Sir, at the furthest for a week or two:
But then up further; and as far as Rome;
And to Triopio, if tied lend me life.
Tr. What countryman, I pray?—
Ped. Of Mantua.
Tr. Of Mantua, sir?—marry, God forbid!
And go to Padua, careless of your life.
Tr. 'Tis death for any one in Mantua
To come to Padua; know you not the cause?
Your ships are said at Venice; and the duke
(For private quarrel 'twixt your duke and him.)
Hath publish'd and proclain'd it openly:
'Is marvel; but that you're but newly come,
You might have heard it else proclain'd about.
Ped. Alas, sir, it is worse for me than so;
For I have bills for money by exchange
Ped. Upon grace, and must hereafter suffer them.
Tr. Well, sir, to do you courtesies,
This will I do, and this will I advise you:
First, tell me, have you ever been at Pisa?
Ped. Ay, sir, in Pisa have I often been:
Pisa, renowned for grave citizens.
Tr. Among them, know you one Vincentio?
Ped. I know him not, but I have heard of him:
A merchant of incomparable wealth.
Tr. He is my father, sir; and, sooth to say,
In countenance somewhat doth resemble you.
Bian. As much as an apple doth an oyster, and all one.
Tr. To save your life in this extremity,
This favour will I do you for his sake;
And think it not the worst of all your fortunes,
Act 4. TAMING OF THE SHREW.

That you are like to sir Vincentio.
His name and credit shall you undertake,
And in my house you shall be friendly lodg’d:—
Look, that you take upon you as you should;
You understand me, sir;—so shall you stay
Till you have done your business in the city:
If this be courtesy, sir, accept of it.

Ped. O, sir, I do; and will repute you ever
The patron of my life and liberty.

Tu. Then go with me, to make the matter good.

This, by the way, I let you understand;—
My father is here look’d for every day,
To pass assurance of a dower in marriage.

Twit. and one Haphtah’s daughter here:
In all these circumstances I’ll instruct you:
Go with me, sir, to clothe you as becomes you.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. A Room in Petrucho’s House.

Enter Katharina and Grumio.

Gru. No, no; forsooth, I dare not, for my life.
Kath. The more the wrong, the more his spite appears:
What, did he marry me to famish me?
Beggar that came unto my father’s door,
Upon entreatry, have a present alms;
If not, elsewhere they meet with charity.
But I,—who never knew how to entreat—
Am starv’d for meat, giddy for lack of sleep;
With cattle kept making, and with bawling fed:
And that which spite me more than all these wants,
He does it under name of perfect love;
As ’tis should say,—if I should sleep, or eat,
’Twere deadly sickness, or else present death.
I’prythee, go, and get me some repast;
I care not what, so be it wholesome food.
Gru. What say you to a piece of beef, and mustard?
Kath. ‘Tis passing good; I’prythee let me have it.

Gru. I fear, it is too choleric a meat:—
How say you to a fat tripe, finely broil’d?
Kath. I like it well; good Grumio, fetch it me.
Gru. I cannot tell; I fear, it is choleric.
What say you to a piece of beef, and mustard?
Kath. A dish that I do love to feed upon.
Gru. Ay, but the mustard is too hot a little.
Kath. Why, then the beef, and let the mustard rest.

Gru. Nay, then I will not; you shall have the mustard,
Or else you get no beef of Grumio.
Kath. Then both, or one, or any thing thou wilt.
Gru. Why, then the mustard without the beef.
Kath. Go, get thee gone, thou false deluding slave.

[Beats him.]

That feed’st me with the very name of meat:
Sorrow on thee, and all the pack of you,
That triumph thus upon my misery!
Go, get thee gone, I say.

Enter Petruchio, with a dish of meat; and Hortensio.

Here, love; thou seest how diligent I am,
To dress thy meat myself, and bring it thee;
Here, take away this dish.

Kath. I am sure, sweet Kate, this kindness merits thanks.
What, not a word? Nay then, thou lov’st it not; And all my pains is sorted to no proof—
Here, take away this dish.

Kath. ‘Pray you, let it stand.
Pet. The poorest service is repaid with thanks:
And so shall mine, before you touch the meat.
Kath. I thank you, sir.

Hor. Signior Petrucho, fie! you are to blame! Come, mistress Kate, I’ll bear you company.

Pet. Eat it up all, Hortensio, if thou lov’st me.—

Much good do it unto thy gentle heart!
Kate, eat apace:—And now my honey love,
Will we return unto thy father’s house;
And revel it as bravely as the best,
With silken mats, and canopied beds, rings,
With ruffs, and cuffs, and farthingales, and things;
The persifling, and double change of bravery,
With amber bracelets, beads, and all this knavery.
What, hast thou din’d? ‘Tis the tailor stays thy leisure,
To deck thy body with his ruffling treasure.

Enter Tailor.

Come, tailor, let us see these ornaments;

[Aside.]

Har. That will not be in haste. [Aside.]

Pet. Why, sir, I trust, I may have leave to speak;
And speak I will: I am no child, no babe:
Your betters have endur’d me say my mind;
And, if you cannot, best you stop your ears.
My tongue will tell the anger of my heart;
Or else my heart, concealing it, will break;
And, rather than it shall, I will be free
To the uttermost, as I please, in words.

Pet. Why, thou sayst true; it is a paltry cup,
A custard-coffin, a bauble, a silken pie:
I love thee well, in that thou lik’st it not.
Kate. Love me, or love me not, I like the cap;
And it I will have, or I will have none.

O mercy, God! what masking stuff is here?
What’s this? a sleeve? ’tis like a demi-cannon:
What I up and down, care’d like an apple-tart?
Here’s snip, and nip, and cut, and slish, and slap,
Like to a censer in a barber’s shop:
Why, what, must tailor, call’st thou this? Hor. I see, she’s like to have neither cap nor gown.

[Aside.]

Tui. You bid me make it orderily and well,
According to the fashion, and the time.

Pet. Marrs, and did; but if you be remember’d,
I did not bid you mar it to the time.
Go, hop me over every kennel home,
For you shall hop without my custom, sir:
I’ll none of it; hence, make your best of it.
Kate. I never saw a better fashion’d gown,
More quaint, more pleasing, nor more commendable.
Belike, you mean to make a puppet of me.

Pet. Why, true; he means to make a puppet of thee.

Tui. She says, your worship means to make a puppet of her.

Pet. O monstrous arrogance! Thou liest, thou thread,
Thou thimble,
Thou yard, three-quarters, half-yard, quarter, nail,
Thou lea, thou nit, thou winter cricket thou —
Bрав’nd in mine own house with a skein of thread —
Away, thou rag, thou quantity, thou remnant;
I shall so be-meete thee with thy yard,
As thou shalt think on prating whilst thou liv’st:
I tell thee, I, that thou hast marr’d her gown.

Tui. Your worship is deceived; the gown is made Taming of the Shrew.

Act 4

I will not go to-day; And ere I do,
It shall be what 0'clock I say it is.

Her. Why, so I this gallant will command
the sun.

Enter Tranio, and the Pedant dressed like Vincentio

Tra. Sir, this is the house; Please it you, that I call?

Ped. Ay, what else? and, but I be deceived,
Signior Baptista may remember me,

Not forty years ago, in Genoa, where
We were lodgers at the Pegasus.

Tra. 'Tis well;
And hold your own, in any case, with such Austerity as 'longeth to a father.

Enter Blundello.

Ped. I warrant you: But, sir, here comes your 'Twre good, he were school'd,' [boy;

Tra. Fear you not him. Sirrah, Blundello,
Now do your duty thronghly, I advise you;
Imagine 'twere the right Vincentio.
Bion. Tut! fear not me.
Tra. But hast thou done thy errand to Baptista?
Bion. I told him, that your father was at Venice;
And that you look'd for him this day in Padua.
Tra. Thou'rt a tall fellow; hold thee that to Here comes Baptista:—set your countenance, sir.

Enter Baptista and Lucentio.

Signior Baptista, you are happily met:
Sir (to the Pedant.)

Baptist. I am a man, that doth not know
That this is the gentleman I told you of:
I pray you, stand good father to me now,
Give me Bianca for my patrimony.

Ped. Softly.

Sir, by your leave, having come to Padua
To gather in some debts, my son Lucentio
Made me acquainted with a weighty cause
Of love between your daughter and himself:
And,—for the good report I hear of you,
And for the love he beareth to your daughter,
And she to him,—to stay him not too long,
I am content, in a good father's care,
To have him match'd; and,—if you please to like
No worse than 1, sir,—upon some agreement,
I shall you find most ready and most willing
With one consent to have her so bestowed;
For which I cannot be with you here.

Signior Baptista, of whom I hear so well.

Bap. Sir, pardon me in what I have to say:—
Your plainness, and your shortness, please me well.
Right true this is, your son Lucentio here
Doth love my daughter, and she loveth him,
Or both dissemble deeply their affections;
And, therefore, if you say no more than this,
That like a father you will deal with him,
And pass my daughter a sufficient dowry,
The match is fully made, and all is done:
Your son shall have my daughter with consent.

Baptist. And, sir. Where then do you know
We be affliéd; and such assurance 't'en,
[best,
As shall with either parts agreement stand?

Bap. Not in my house, Lucentio; for, you know,
Flowers have ears, and I have many servants;
Besides, Signior Gremio is heark'n'ing still;
And, happily, we might be interrupted.

Tra. Then at my lodging, an it like you, sir:
Where doth my father lie; and there, this night;
We'll have the business privately and well;
Send for your daughter by your servant her.
My boy shall fetch the scrivener presently
The worst is this,—that, at so slender warning,
You'll have to have a thing and tender pittance.

Bap. It likes me well,—Cambio, hie you home,
And bid Bianca make her ready straight;
And, if you will, tell what hath happened—
Lucentio's father is arriv'd in Padua,
And bow she's like to be Lucentio's wife.
Enter Vincentio, in a travelling dress.

Good morrow, gentle mistress: Where away?—

Tell me, sweet Kate, and tell me truly too,
Hast thou beheld a fairest gentlewoman?

Such war of white and red within her cheeks!

What stars do mingle heavens with such beauty,
As those two eyes become that heavenly face?—

Fair lovely maid, once more good day to thee:—

Sweet Kate, embrace her for her beauty's sake.

Hor. 'A will make the man mad, to make a woman of him.

Kath. Young budding virgin, fair, and fresh, and sweet.

Whether away or where is thy abode?

Happy the parents of so fair a child;

Happier the man, whom favourable stars

Aliot thee for his lovely bed-fellow:

Pet. Why, how now, Kate! I hope thou art not mad.

This is a man, old, wrinkled, faded, wither'd;

And not a maiden, as thou say'st he is.

Kath. Pardon, old father, my mistaking eyes,
That have been so bedazzled with the sun,

That every thing I look on seemeth green;
Now I perceive thou art a reverend father;
Pardon, I pray thee, for my mad mistaking.

Pet. I do, good old grand sire; and, whithal, make known

Which way thou travellest: if along with us,

We shall be joyful of thy company.

Vin. Fair sir,—and you my merry mistress,—

That with your strange encounter much amazed me;

My name is call'd—Vincentio: my dwelling—

Pisa:

And bound I am to Padua; there to visit

A son of mine, which long I have not seen.

Pet. What is his name?

Vin. Lucentio, gentles.

Pet. Happily met; the happier for thy son.

And now by law, as well as reverend age,

I may entitle thee—my loving father; the sister to my wife, this gentlewoman

Thy son by this hath married: Wonder not,

Nor be not grieved: she is of good esteem,

Her dowry wealthy, and of worthy birth;

Beside, so qualified as may becom

The spouse of any noble gentleman.

Let me embrace with old Vincentio: And wander we to see thy honest son,

Who will of thy arrival be full joyous.

Vin. But is the true? or is it else your pleasure,

Like pleasant travellers, to break a jest

Upon the company you overtake?

Hor. I do assure thee, father, so it is.

Pet. Come, go along, and see the truth hereof;

For our first merciment hath made thee jealous.

[Exeunt Petrucho, Katharina, and Vincentio.

Hor. Well, Petrucho, this hath put me in heart.

Have to my widow; and if she be forward,

Then hast thou taught Hortensio to be untoward.

[Exit.

ACT V.

Enter on one side Blondello, Lucentio, and Bianca; Gremio walking on the other side.

Bion. Softly and swiftly, sir; for the priest is ready.

Luc. I fly, Blondello: but they may chance to need thee at home; therefore let them run.

Bion. Nay, faith, I'll see the church o'your back: and then come back to my master: as soon as I can.

[Exeunt Lucentio, Bianca, and Blondello.

Gre. I marvel Cambio comes not all this while.
Enter Petruchio, Katharina, Vincentio, and Attendants.

Pet. Sir, here's the door, this is Lucentio's house, my father's bears more toward the market-place; this must I, and here I leave you, sir.

Vin. You shall not choose but drink before you go; I think, I shall command your welcome here; and, by all likelihood, some cheer is toward.

[Knocks.]

Gre. They're busy within, you were best knock louder.

Enter Pedant above, at a window.

Ped. What's he, that knocks as he would beat down the gate?

Vin. Is signior Lucentio within, sir?

Ped. He's within, sir, but not to be spoken withal.

Vin. What is a man bring him a hundred pound or two, to make merry withal?

Ped. Keep your hundreds pound to yourself; he shall need none, so long as I live.

Pet. Nay, I told you, your son was beloved in Padua;—Do you hear, sir?—to leave frivolous circumstances.—I pray you, tell signior Lucentio, that his father is come from Pisa, and is here at the door to speak with him.

Ped. Thou liest; his father is come from Pisa, and here looking out at the window.

Vin. Art thou his father?

Ped. Ay, sir; so his mother says, if I may believe her.

Vin. Why, how now, gentleman! [To Vincentio] why, this is flat knavery, to take upon you another man's name.

Ped. Lay hands on the villain; I believe, 'tis meant to cause somebody in this city under my countenance.

Re-enter Biondello.

Bion. I have seen them in the church together; God send 'em good shipping!—But who is here? mine old master, Vincentio? now we are undone, and brought to nothing.

Vin. Come hither, crack-hemp. [Seeing Biondello.]

Bion. I hope, I may choose, sir.

Vin. Come hither, you rogue; what, have you forgot me?

Bion. Forgot you? no, sir; I could not forget you, for I never saw you before in all my life.

Vin. What, you notorious villain, didst thou never see thy master's father, Vincentio?—Bion. Nay, sir, I have seen the matter's old master; yes, marry, sir; see where he looks out of the window.

Vin. Is't so, indeed? [Beats Biondello.]

Bion. Heip, help, help! Here's a madman will murder me. [Exit.]

Ped. Help, son! help, signior Baptista! [Exit, from the window.]

Pet. Prynthe, Kate, let's stand aside, and see the end of this controversy. [They retire]

Re-enter Pedant below; Baptista, Tranio, and Servants.

Tran. Sir, what are you, that offer to beat my servant?

Vin. What am I, sir?—or, what am you, sir?—O immortal gods! O fine villain! A silken doublet! a velvet hose! a scarlet cloak! and a copatian hat!—O, I am undone! I am undone! while I play the good husband at home, my son and my servant spend all at the university.

Tran. How now! what's the matter?

Bap. What, is the man lunatick?

Vin. Sir, you seem a sober ancient gentleman by your habit, but your words show you a madman: Why, sir, what concerns it you, if I wear pearl and gold? I thank my good father, I am able to maintain it.

Vin. Thy father? O villain! he is a sail-maker in Padua;—Bap. You mistake, sir; you mistake, sir! Pray, what do you think is his name?

Vin. His name? as if I knew not his name! I know him better since he was three years old, and his name is—Tranio.

Ped. Away, away, mad ass! his name is Lucentio; and he is mine only son, and heir to the lands of me, signior, Vincentio.

Vin. Lucentio! O, he hath murdered his master!—Lay hold on him, I charge you, in the duke's name!—O, my son, my son!—tell me, thou villain, what is Lucentio, Lucentio?

Ped. Call forth an officer: [Enter one with an Officer.] carry this mad knave to the gaol!—Father Baptista, I charge you, see that he be forthcoming.

Vin. Carry me to the gaol!

Gre. Stay, officer; he shall not go to prison.

Bap. Talk not, signior Gremio; I say, he shall go to prison.

Vin. Take heed, signior Baptista, lest you be coney-catch'd in this business; I dare swear, this is the right Vincentio.

Ped. Sweat, if thou darest.

Gre. I, sir, I dare not swear it.

Tran. Then thou wert best say, that I am not Lucentio.

Gre. Yes, I know thee to be signior Lucentio.

Bap. Away with the dotard to the gaol with him.

Vin. Thus strangers may be haled and abus'd.—O monstrous villain!

Re-enter Biondello, with Lucentio and Bianca.

Bion. O, we are spoilt, and—Vender he is; deny him, forswear him, or else we are all undone.

Luc. Pardon, sweet father. [Kneeling.]

Vin. Lives my sweetest son? [Biondello, Tranio, and Pedant run out.]

Bian. Pardon, dear father. [Kneeling.]

Bap. How hast thou offended?

Gre. Where is Lucentio?

Luc. Here's Lucentio, sir, come unto the right Vincentio; that have by marriage made thy daughter mine, while counterfeit supposes blest thine eye.

Vin. Here's her packing, with a witness, to deceive us all:

Vin. Where is that damned villain, Tranio, that first did and brav'd me in this matter so? But, why, tell me, is not this my Cambio?

Bian. Cambio is chang'd into Lucentio.

Luc. Love wrougeth these miracles. Bianca's love.

Vin. Made me exchange my state with Tranio, while he did bear my countenance in the town: And happily I have arriv'd at last unto the wished haven of my bliss;—What Tranio did, myself enforce'd him to; then pardon him, sweet father, for my sake.

Vin. I'll slit the villain's nose, that would have sent me to the gaol.

Luc. But do you hear, sir? [To Lucentio.] Have you married my daughter without asking my good-will?

Vin. Fear not, Baptista; we will content you, go to:

But I will in, to be revenged for this villains.

[Exit.]

Luc. I look not pale, Bianca; thy father will not frown.

[Exeunt Luc. and Bian.

Gre. My cake is dough: But I'll in among the rest;

Out of hope of all,—but my share of the feast.
Petruchio and Katharina advance.

Kath. Husband, let's follow, to see the end of this ado.

Pet. First kiss me, Kate, and we will.

Kath. What, in the midst of the street?
Pet. What, art thou ashamed of me?

Kath. No, my sir; God forbid—but ashamed to kiss.

Pet. Why, then, let's home again—Come, sirrah, let's away.

Kath. Nay, I will give thee a kiss; now pray thee, love, stay.

Pet. Is not this well?—Come, my sweet Kate; better once than never, for never too late. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room in Lucentio's House.

A Banquet set out. Enter Baptista, Vincentio, Gremio, the Pedant, Lucentio, Bianca, Petruchio, Katharina, Hortensio, and Widow Tranio, Blondello, Grumio, and others, attending.

Luc. At last, though long, our jarring notes agree.

And time is it, when raging war is done,
To smile at 'scapes and perils overthrown.—
My fair Bianca, bid my father welcome,
While this soft self-playing kindness shines—
Brother Petruchio,—sister Katharina.—
And thou, Hortensio, with thy loving widow,
Feast with the best, and welcome to my house; My husband's soul is close our stomachs up,
After our great good cheer: Pray you, sit down; For now we sit to chat, as well as eat.

[They sit at table.

Pet. Nothing but sit and sit, and eat and eat!
Bap. Padua affords this kindness, son Petruchio.
Pet. Padua affords nothing but what is kind.
Hor. For both our sakes I would that word were true.
Pet. Now, for my life, Hortensio feared his widow.

Pet. Then never trust me if I be afeard.

Pet. You are sensible, and yet you miss my sense.

I mean, Hortensio, is afraid of you.

Kath. He that is giddy, thinks the world turns round.

Kath. Mistress, how mean you that? Widow. Thus I conceive by him.

Pet. Conceives by me!—How likes Hortensio that?
Hor. Or, this widow says, thus she conceives her tale.

Pet. Very well mended: Kiss him for that, good widow.

Kath. He that is giddy, thinks the world turns round.

Kath. Yes, and now you know what I meant by that.

Pet. Widow, your husband, being troubled with a shrew,

Kath. And I am mean, indeed, respecting you.

Pet. To her, Kate! Widow. To her, widow!

Pet. A hundred marks, my Kate does put her down.

Hor. That's my office.

Pet. Spoke like an officer:—Ha' to thee, lad. [Drinks to Hortensio.

Bap. How like Gremio these quick-witted folks? Grumio. Believe me, sir, they butt together well.

Bian. Head, and butt? an hasty-witted body Would say your head and butt were head and horn.

Vin. Ay, mistress bride, hath that awakened you? Bianca. Ay, but not frightened me; therefore I'll sleep again.

Pet. Nay, that you shall not; since you have begun,

Have at you for a bitter jest or two.

Bian. Am I your bird? I mean to shift my busk, And then pursue me as you draw your bow:—
You are welcome all. [Exeunt Bianca, Katharina, and Widow.

Pet. She hath prevented me.—Here, signior Tranio,

This bird you aimed at, though you hit her not;

Therefore, a health to all that shot and missed.

Tra. O, sir, Lucentio slipp'd me like his greyhound,

Which runs himself, and catches for his master.

Pet. A good swift simile, but something curious.

Tra. 'Tis well, sir, that you hunted for yourself;

'Tis thought, your deer does hold you at a bay.

Bap. O ho, Petruchio, Tranio hits you now.

Luc. I thank thee for that gird, good Tranio.

Hor. Confess, confess, hath he not hit you here?

Pet. 'A has a little gall'd me, I confess; And, as the jest did glance away from me,

'Tis ten to one it maim'd you two outright.

Bap. Now, in good sadness, son Petruchio,

I think thou hast the veriest shrew of all.

Pet. Well, I say—no: and therefore, for assurance,

Let's each one send unto his wife; And he, whose wife is most obedient To come at first when be doth send for her, Shall win the wager which we will propose.

Hor. Content:—What is the wager?

Luc. Twenty crowns.

Pet. Twenty crowns! I'll venture so much on my hawk, or hound, But twenty times so much upon my wife.

Luc. A hundred then. Hor. Content.

Pet. Hor. Who shall begin?

Luc. That will I. Go, Blondello, bid your mistress come to me.

Bion. I go. [Exit. Bap. Son, I will be your half, Bianca comes.

Luc. I'll have no halves; I'll bear it all myself.

Re-enter Blondello.

How now! what news?

Bion. Sir, my mistress sends you word That she is busy, and she cannot come.

Pet. How! she is busy, and she cannot come! Is that an answer?

Gremio. Ay, and a kind one too; Pray God, sir, your wife send you not a worse.

Pet. I hope, better. Hor. Sirrah, Blondello, go, and entreat my wife To come to me forthwith. [Exit Blondello.

Pet. O, ho! entreat her! Nay, then she must needs come.

Hor. Do what you can, yours will not be entreated.

Re-enter Blondello.

Now where's my wife?

Bion. She says, you have some goodly jest in hand;

She will not come; she bids you come to her.

Pet. Worse and worse; she will not come! O vile, Intolerable, not to be endured! Sirrah, Grumio, go to your mistress; Say I command her come to me. [Exit Grumio.

Hor. I know her answer.

Pet. Hor. What?

Pet. Hor. She will not come.

Pet. The fouler fortune mine, and there an end.

Enter Katharina.

Bap. Now, by my holidame, here comes Katharina!

Kath. What is your will sir, that you send for me?
Pet. Where is your sister, and Hortensio's wife?  Kath. They sit conferring by the parlour fire.  Pet. Go, fetch them hither; if they deny to come, Swinge me them soundly forth unto their husbands:  A way, I say, and bring them hither straight.  [Exit Katharin.a.  Luc. Here is a wonder, if you talk of a wonder.  Har. And so it is: I wonder what it bodes.  Pet. Marry, peace it bodes, and love, and quiet life.  An awful rule, and right supremacy; And, to be short, what not, that's sweet and happy.  Harp. Now fair beated thee, good Petruchio! The wager thou hast won; and I will add Unto their losses twenty thousand crowns!  Another dowry to another daughter, For she is chang'd, as she had never been.  Pet. Nay, I will win my wager better yet; And show more sign of her obedience, Her new-built virtue and obedience.  Re-enter Katharin.a, with Bianca and Widow.  See, where she comes; and brings your froward wives.  As prisoner to her womanly persuasion.—  Katharin.a, that cap of yours becomes you not;  Off with that bangle, throw it under foot.  [Katharin.a pulls off her cap, and throws it down.  Wld. Lord, let me never have a cause to sigh, Till I be brought to such a silly pass!  Bian. Fye! what a foolish duty call you this?  Luc. I would your duty were as foolish too:  The wisdom of your duty, fair Bianca, Hath cost me an hundred crowns since supper-time.  Bian. The more fool you, for laying on my duty.  Pet. Katharin.a, I charge thee, tell these headstrong women, What duty they do owe their lords and husbands.  Wld. Come, come, you're mocking; we will have telling.  Pet. Come on, I say; and first begin with her.  Wld. She shall not.  Pet. I say, she shall:—and first begin with her.  Kath. Fye, fye! unknot that threat'ning unkind brow:  And dart not scornful glances from those eyes, To wound thy lord, thy king, thy governor:  It blots thy beauty, as frosts bite the meads; Confounds thy fame, as whirlwinds shake fair buds:  And in no sense is meet or amiable.  A woman mov'd, is like a fountain troubled, Muddy, ill-seeing, thick, bereft of beauty;  And, while it is so, none so dry or thirsty  Will design to sip, or touch one drop of it.  Thy husband is thy lord, thy life, thy keeper, Thy head, thy sovereign; one that cares for thee.  And for thy maintenance: commits his body To painful labour, both by sea and land;  To watch the night in storms, the day in cold.  While thou liest warm at home, secure and safe;  And craves no other tribute at thy hands, But love, fair looks, and true obedience:—  Too little payment for so great a debt.  Such duty as the subject owes the prince, Even such, a woman sweth to her husband:  And when she's froward, peevish, sullen, sour,  And not obedient to his honest will;  What is she, but a foul contending rebel,  And graceless traitor to her loving lord?—  I am astam'd, that women are so simple  To offer war, where they should kneel for peace;  Or seek for rule, supremacy, and sway,  When they are bound to serve, love, and obey.  Why are our bodies soft, and weak, and smooth,  Ump't to toil, and trouble in the world;  But that our soft conditions, and our hearts,  Should well agree with our external parts?  Come, come, you froward and unable worms  Making meth' been as big as one of yours,  My heart as great: my reason, ha'ly, more,  To bandy word for word, and sworn for sworn;  But now, I see our lances are but straws;  Our strength as weak, our weakness past compar'.  That seeming to be most, which we least are.  Then vall your stomachs, for it is no boot;  And place your hands below your husband's foot:  In token of which duty, if he please,  My hand is ready, may it do him ease.  Pet. Why, there's a wench!—Come on, and kiss me, Kate.  Luc. Well, go thy ways, old lad: for thou shalt have.  Fen. 'Tis a good hearing, when children are toward.  Luc. 'Tis a good hearer, when women are forward.  Pet. Come, Kate, we'll to bed:——  We three are married, but you two are sped.  'Twas I won the wager, though you hit the white:  [To Lucentio.  And, being a winner, God give you good night!  [Exeunt Petruchio and Kath.  Har. Now go thy ways, thou hast tam'd a curst shrew.  Luc. 'Tis a wonder, by your leave, she will be tam'd so  [Exeunt.
WINTER'S TALE.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

Leontes, King of Sicilia.
Mamillius, his son.
Camillo,
Antigonus, Cleomenes, Dido,
Another Sicilian lord.
Rogero, a Sicilian gentleman.
An Attendant on the young Prince Mamillius.
officier of a Court of Judicature.
Polixenes, King of Bohemia.
Florizel, his son.
Archidamus, a Bohemian lord.
A Mariner.

An old Shepherd, reputed father of Perdita.

SCENE—sometimes in Sicilia, sometimes in Bohemia.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Sicilia. An Antechamber in Leontes' Palace.

Enter Camillo and Archidamus.

Arch. If you shall chance, Camillo, to visit Bohemia, on the like occasion whereon my services are now on foot, you shall see, as I have said, great difference betwixt our Bohemia, and your Sicilia.

Cam. I think, this coming summer, the king of Sicilia means to pay Bohemia the visitation which he justly owes him.

Arch. Wherein our entertainment shall shame us, we will be justified in our loves: for, indeed,—

'Cam. 'Beseach you,—

Arch. Verily, I speak it in the freedom of my knowledge: we cannot with such magnificence—in so rare—I know not what to say.—We will give you sleepy drinks; that your senses, unintelligent of our insufficiency, may, though they cannot praise us, as little accuse us.

Cam. You pay a great deal too dear, for what's given freely.

Arch. Believe me, I speak as my understanding instructs me, and as mine honor puts it to utterance.

Cam. Sicilia cannot show himself over-kind to Bohemia. They were trained together in their childhoods; and there rooted betwixt them then such an affection, which cannot choose but branch now. Since their more mature dignities, and royal necessities, made separation of their society, their encounters, though not personal, have been royally attended, with interchange of gifts, letters, loving embassies; that they have seemed to be together, though absent; shook hands, as over a vast; and embraced, as it were, from the ends of opposed winds. The heavens continue their loves!

Arch. I think, there is not in the world either malice, or matter, to alter it. You have an unspreakable comfort of your young prince Mamilius; it is a gentleman of the greatest promise, that ever came into my note.

Cam. I very well agree with you in the hopes of him: It is a gallant child; one that, indeed, physicks the subject, makes old hearts fresh; they, that went on crutches ere he was born, desire yet their life, to see him a man.

Arch. Would they else be content to die?

Cam. Yes; if there were no other excuse why they should desire to live.

Arch. If the king had no son, they would desire to live on crutches till he had one. [Exeunt.]
The borrow of a week. When at Bohemia
You took my lord, I'll give him my commission,
To let him there a month, behind the Kent
Prefix'd for his parting: yet, good deed, Leontes,
I love thee not a jar 'o the clock behind
What lady she her lord.—You'll stay?
Pol. No, madam.
Her. Nay, but you will?
I may not, verily.
Her. Verily!
You put me off with limber vows: But I,
Though you would seek to unshope the stars; with Should yet say, Sir, no going. Verily, [oaths,
You shall not go: a lady's verily is
A doctrine of a lord's. Will you go yet?
Force me to keep you as a prisoner.
Not like a guest: so you shall pay your fees,
When you depart, and save your thanks.
How is your prisoner? or my guest? by your dread verily,
One of them you shall be.
Pol. Your guest then, madam,
But your kind hostess. Come, I'll question you
Of my lord's tricks, and yours, when you were boys;
You were pretty lardlings then.
Her. Were not my lord the verier way o' the two?
Pol. We were as twin'd lambs, that did brisk' t
the sun,
And bleat the one at the other: What we chang'd
Was innocence for innocence; we knew not
The doctrine of all doing, no, nor dream'd
That any did: Had we pursued that life,
And our weak spirits never been higher rear'd
With stronger blood, we should have answer'd Hereafter.
Boldly, Not guilty: the imposition clear'd,
Hereditary ours.
Her. By this we gather,
You have tripp'd since.
Pol. O my most sacred lady,
Temptations have since then been born to us: for
In those unfledg'd days was my wife a girl;
Yet could she had then not cross'd the eyes
Of my young play-fellow.
Her. Grace to boot!
of this make no conclusion; lest you say,
Your queen and these devils: Yet I say,
The chances we have made you do, we'll answer
If you first sinn'd with us, and that with us
You did continue fault, and that you slipp'd not
With any but us.
Leon. Is he won yet?
Her. He'll stay, my lord.
Leon. At my request, he would not.
 Hermione, my dearest, thou never spokst
To better purpose.
Her. Never?
Leon. Never, but once.
Her. What? have I twice said well? when was't before?
I pr'ythee, tell me: Cram us with praise, and make us
As fat as tame things: One good deed, dying
longeless,
Slaughters a thousand, waiting upon that,
Our praises are our wages: You may ride us,
With one soft kiss, a thousand furloong, ere We'll spur our man an acre. But to the goal—
My last good was, to entreat his stay:
What was my first? It was an elder sister,
Or I mistake you: O, would her name were Grace!
But once before I spoke to the purpose: When?
Nay, let me hav'n; | I long.
Act I. WINTER'S TALE. 227

Are you so fond of your young prince, as we Do seem to be of ours? Pol. If at home, sir, He's all my exercise, my mirth, my matter: Now my sworn friend, and then mine enemy; My patience, my soldier, statesman, all. He makes a July's day short as December; And, with his varying childishness, cues in me Thoughts that would thickest my blood.

So stands this squire Offic'd with: We two will walk, my lord, And leave you to your graver steps. —Hermione, How thou lov'st us, show us in your brother's wel- lowning. Let what is dear in Sicily, be cheap! Next to thyself, and my young rover, he's Apparent to my heart. If you would seek us, We are your's i' th' garden: Shall's attend you there? Leon. To your own bents dispose you: you'll be found, Be you beneath the sky—I am angling now, Though you perceive me not how I give line. Go to, go to! [Aside. Observing Polixenes and Hermione. How she holds up the neb, the bill to him! And arms her with the boldness of a wife To her allowing husband! Gone already; Inch-thick, knee-deep, o'er head and ears a fork'd one. [Exit. O'er Hermione, and Attendants. Go, play, boy, play;—thy mother plays, and I Play too; but so disgrace'd a part, whose issue Will kiss me to my grave; contempt and clamour Will be my knell. —Go, play, boy, play;—There have been, Or I am much deceiv'd, cuckold ere now; And, my poor man there is, even at this present! Now, while I speak this, holds his wife by the arm, That little thinks she has been slue'd in his absence, And his pond fish'd by his next neighbour, by Sir Smile, his neighbour: nay, there's comfort in't, While other men gates open'd, As mine, against their will: Should all despair, That have revoluted wives, the tenth of mankind Would hang themselves. Physick fort there is none; It is a bawdy planet, that will strike When'tis in his dominion; 'tis a powerful, think It, From east, west, north, and south; Be it concluded, No barricado for a belly; know it; It will let in and out the enemy, With his hand bagger'd, massy thousand of us Have the disease, and feel not.—How now, boy? Mam. I am like you, they say. Leon. Why, that's some comfort. Cam. Any thing there? Leon. Ay, my good lord. Leon. Go play, Camillo; thou art an honest man. [Exit Camillo. Camillo, this great sir will yet stay longer. Cam. You had much ado to make his anchor hold: When you cast out, it still came home. Leon. Didst note it? Cam. He would not stay at your petitions; made His business more material. Leon. Didst perceive it? They're here with me already; whispering, round. Syc. Sicilia is so for'th: 'Tis far gone, When I shall gust it last.—How came't, Camillo, That he did stay? Cam. At the good queen's entreaty. Leon. At the queen's, be't: good, should be per- tinent? But so it is, it is not. Was this taken By any understanding pate but thine? For thy conceit is soaking, will draw in More than the common blocks:—Not noted, is't, But of the finer natures? by some several, Of head piece extraordinary? lower messes, Perchance are to this business pursu'd:—say. Cam. Business, my lord? I think, most under- stand. Bohemia stays here longer. Ha? Leon. stays here longer. Leon. Ay, but why? Cam. To satisfy your highness, and the entreaties Of our most gracious mistress. Leon. Satisfy The entreaties of your mistress? —To satisfy?— Let that suffice. I have trusted thee, Camillo, With all the nearest things to my heart, as well My chamber-councillors: wherein, priest-like, thou Hast clean'd my bosom. I from thee departed Thy penitent reform'd: but we have been Deceiv'd in thy integrity, deceiv'd in That in which seems so. Cam. Be it forbid, my lord! Leon. To hide upon't:—Thou art not honest: or If thou inclin'st that way, thou art a coward; Which hoxes honesty behind, restraining From course requir'd: or else thou must be counted A servant, sitten in my service false, And therein negligent: or else a fool, That seest a game play'd home, the rich stake drawn, And tak'st it in for jest. Cam. My gracious lord, I may be negligent, foolish, and fearful; In every one of these no man is free, But that his negligence, his folly, fee. Amongst the infinite doings of the world, Sometime puts forth: In your affairs, my lord, If ever I were wilful-negligent, It was my folly; if industriously I play'd the fool, it was my negligence, Not weighing well the end; if ever fearful To do a thing, where I the issue doubted, Whereof the execution did. Against the non-performance, 'twas a fear Which oft affects the wisest: these, my lord, Are such allow'd infinitries, that honesty Is never free of. But, beseech your grace, Be plainer with me: let me know my trespass By its own visage: if I then deny it, 'Tis none of mine. Leon. Have not you seen, Camillo, (But that's past doubt: you have it, or your eye-glass Is thicker than a cuckold's horn;) or heard, (For, to a vision so apparent, rumour Cannot be mute,) or thought, (for cogitation Besides not that man, that does not think it,) My wife is slippery? If thou wilt confess, (Or else be Impudently negative, To have nor eyes, nor ears, nor thought,) then say, My wife a hobbyhorse; deserves a name As rank as any flax-wench, that puts to Before her treth-plaint: say it, and justify it. Cam. I would not be a stander-by, to hear My sovereign mistress-clouded, so, without My present vengeance taken: 'Shrew my heart, You never spoke what did become you less Than this; which to reiterate, were sin As deep as that, though true. Leon. Is whispering nothing? Is leaning cheek to cheek? is meeting noses? Kissing with inside lip? stopping the career Of laughter with a sigh? (a note infallable Of breaking honesty;) horning foot on foot? Skulking in corners? wishing clocks more swift? Hours, minutes? noon, midnight? and all eyes blind With the plume and web, but theirs, theirs only, That would unseen be wicked? is this nothing? Why, then the world, and all that's in't, is nothing: The covering sky is nothing: Bohemia nothing: My wife is nothing; nor nothing have these nus- If this be nothing. [Things
Good my lord, be cur'd
Of this diseas'd opinion, and becomes;
For 'tis most dangerous.

Say, it be; 'tis true.

Cam. No, no, my lord.

I say, thou liest, Camillo, and I know thee;
Proauce thee a gross sout, a mindless slave;
Or else a hovering temporizer, that
With small eyes at once see good and evil,
Inclining to them both: We say my wife's lier
Infected as her life, she would not live
The running of one glass.

Who does infect her?

Why, he, that wears her like her metal
Hanging
About his neck, Bohemia: Who—if I
Had servants true about me: that bare eyes
Their own particular threats,—they would do that
Which should undo more doing: Ay, and thou,
His cup-bearer,—whom I from meager form
Have benched, and rear'd to worship, who may'st
See
Plainly, as heaven sees earth, and earth sees heaven.
How I am galled,—might it bespoise a cup,
To give mine enemy a lasting wink.
Which draught to me were cordial.

Sir, my lord,
I could do this: and that with no rash potion,
But with a linking dram, that should not work
Maliciously like poison: but I cannot Believe this crack to be in my dread mistress,
So sovereignly being honourable.

If you lov'd thee,

Make thee question, and go not:
Dost think, I am so muddy, so unsettled,
To appoint myself in this vexation? sully
The purity and whiteness of my sheets,
Which to preserve, is sleep; which being spotted,
Is goods, thorns, nettles, taint of wasps.

Give scandal to the blood of the prince my son,
Who, I do think is mine, and love as mine;
Would I could know 1 of thee?

Could I mean so baneous?

I must believe you, sir; I do; and will fetch off Bohemia forth:

Provided, that when he's removed, your highness
Will take again your queen, as yours at first:
Even for your son's sake; and, thereby, for scaling
The injury of tongues, in courts and kingdoms
Known and allied to yours.

Thou dost advise me,
Even so as I mine own course have set down:
I' ll give no blemish to her honour, none.

As my lord,
Go thence; and with a countenance as clear
As friendship wears at fees, keep with Bohemia,
And with your queen: I am his cup-bearer:
If from me he have wholesome beverage,
Account me not your servant.

This is all:
Do't, and thou hast the one half of my heart;
Do not; thou split'st thine own.

I'll do my lord.

I will seem friendly, as thou hast advis'd me.

Enter Polixenes.

This is strange! methinks,
My favour here begins to warp. Not speak?

Good-day, Camillo.

What is the news? the count?

None rare, my lord.

The king hath on him such a countenance,
As he had lost some province, and a region,
Love to himself: he cannot let him
With customary compliment: when he,
Wafting his eyes to the contrary, and falling
A tip of much contempt, speeds from me; and Sees me, to consider what he breeding,
That changes thus his manners.

I dare not know, my lord.

Do you know

Be intelligent to me? 'Tis thereabout:
For, to yourself, what you do know, you must,
And cannot say, you dare not. Good Camillo,
Your honour displeasances are to me a mirror,
Which shows me mine chang'd too: for I must
A party in this alteration, finding Myself thus alter'd with it.

There is a sickness
Which pats some of us in distemper; but,
I cannot name the disease; and it is caught
Of you that yet are well.

How! caught of me?

Make me not sighted like the basilisk!
I have look'd on thousands, who have sped the better
By my regard, but kill'd none so. Camillo,—
As you are certainly a gentleman: there the Clerk-like, experience'd, which no less adorns
The gentrity, than our parents' noble names,
In whose success we are gentle,—I beseech you,
If you know ought which does be know my nature.

Through to be inform'd, imprison it not
In ignorant conceitment.

I may not answer.

A sickness caught of me, and yet I well!
I must be answer'd. Dost thou hear, Camillo,
I conjoin thee, by all the parts of man,
Which honour does acknowledge,—whereof the least
Is not this suit of mine,—that thou declare
What incendancy thou dost guess of harm
Can creep toward me; how near? which way to be prevented, if so be;
If not, how best to bear it.

Sir, I'll tell you;
Since I am charg'd in honour, and by him
That I think honourable: Therefore, mark my counsel;
Which must be even as swiftly follow'd, as
I mean to utter it, or both yourself and me
Cry, lest, and so good-night.

On, good Camillo.

I am appointed him to murder you.

By whom, Camillo?

By the king.

For what?

He thinks, nay, with all confidence he

As he had seen't, or been an instrument
To vice you to!—that you have touch'd his queen Forbid'dly.

Hon, 0, then my best blood turn
To an infected jelly; and my name
Be yok'd with his, that did betray the best!
Turn then my freakest reputation to
A savour, that may strike the dullest nostril.
When you see; and my approach be shunn'd,
Nay, hated too, worse than the great'st infection
That ever was heard, or read!

Swear his thought over
By even particular star in heaven: and,
By all their influences, you may as well.
Act 2.

WINTER'S TALE.

Forbid the sea for to obey the moon,
As or, by oath, remove, or counsel shake
The fabric of his fellows;
This foundation
Is pil'd upon his faith, and will continue
The standing of his body.

PoL. How should this grow?
Dem. I know not: but, I am sure, 'tis safer to Avoid what's grown, than question how 'tis born.
If therefore you dare trust my honesty,—
That lies enclosed in this trunk, which you
Shall ever long润滑油—o' the moon, my lord.
Your followers I will whisper to the business:
And will, by twos, and threes, at several posterns,
Clear them o'the city: For myself, I'll put
My fortune to your service, which harebrowne
By this discovery lost. Be not uncertain;
For, by the honour of my parents, I
Have utter'd truth: which if you seek to prove,
I dare not stand by; nor shall you be safer
Than one condemning by the king's own mouth,
His execution sworn.
[thereon

PoL. I do believe thee;
I saw his heart in his face. Give me thy hand;
Be pilot to me, and thy places shall Still neighbour mine: My ships are ready, and
My people did expect my hence departure
Two days ago.—This jealousy
Is for a precious creature: that she's rare,
Must it be great; and, as his person's mighty,
Must it be violent: and as he does conceive
He is dishonour'd by a man which ever
Posed to him, why, his authors must
In that be made more bitter. Fear o'ershades me;
Good expedition be my friend, and comfort
The gracious queen, part of his theme, but nothing
Of Camillo then suppos'd: I Camillo
Then respect thee as a father; if Thou bear'st my life off hence: Let us avoid
Cam. It is in mine authority, to command
The keys of all the posterns: Please your highness
To take the urgent hour: come, sir, away.

[Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The same.

Enter Hermione, Mamillius, and Ladies.

Her. Take the hoy to you: he so troubles me,
'Tis past endur'd.

1 Lady. Come, my gracious lord.

Shall I be your play-fellow?

Mam. No, I'll none of you.

1 Lady. Why, my sweet lord?

Mam. You'll kiss me hard; and speak to me as if I were a baby still. I love you better.

2 Lady. And why so, my good lord?

Mam. Not for because
Your brows are blacker; yet black brows, they say,
Become some women best; so that there be not Too much hair there, but in a semi-circle,
Or half-moon made with a pen.

2 Lady. Who taught you this?

Mam. I learnt it out of women's faces.—Pray
What colour are your eye-brows?

1 Lady. Blue, my lord.

Mam. Nay, that's a mock: I have seen a lady's
That has been blue, but not her eye-brows. [nose

2 Lady. The queen, your mother, rounds apace: we shall Present our services to a fine prince,
Of these days; and then you'd wanton with us.
If we would have you.

1 Lady. She is spread of late
Into a goodly bulk: Good time encounter her!

Her. The wisest wond'rors stir amongst you? Come,
Sir, now
I am for you again: Pray you, sit by us,
And tell a tale.

Mam. Merry, or sad shall it be?

Her. As merry as you will.
She’s an adulteress: I have said, with whom:
Most, she’s a traitor; and Camillo is:
A seducery with her; and one that knows
What she should shame to know herself,
But with her most vile principal, that she’s
A bed-sitter, even as bad, as these
That vulgar give bold titles: ay, and privity
To this their late escape.

Her. No, by my life,
Privity to none of this: How will this griev you;
When you shall come to nearer knowledge, that
You thus have publish’d me? Gentle my lord,
You scarce can right me thoroughly then, to say
You have mistake.

Leoo. No, no; if I mistake
In those foundations which I build upon,
The centre is not big enough to bear
A school-boy’s top.—A way with her to prison:
Her hand’s grief’d here, which burns
Worse than tears drown’d: Heseech you all, my lords,
With thoughts so qualified as your charities
Shall instruct you, measure me — and so
The king’s will be perform’d!

Leoo. Shall I be heard?
Her. Who let, that goes with me? — Heseech your highness,
My women may be with me; for, you see,
My plight requires it. Do not weep, good souls; —
There is more to see: when you shall know,
Your mistress
Has deserv’d prison: then abound in tears,
As I come out: this action, I now go on,
Is for my better grace.—Add, my lord;
He, who shall speak for her, so now,
I trust, I shall.—My women, come; you have leave.

Leoo. Go, do our bidding: hence.

1 Lord. Heseech your highness, call the queen again.

And. Be certain what you do, sir; lest your Prove violence: in the which three great ones Suffer:
Yourself, your queen, your son.

1 Lord. For her, my lord,— I dare my life lay down, and will not, sir,
Please you to accept it, that the queen is spotless,
’E the eyes of heaven, and to you: — I mean,
In this which you accuse her.

And. If it prove
She’s otherwise, I’ll keep my stables where
I lodge my wife; I’ll go in couples with her;
Then when I feel, and see her, no further trust her;
For every inch of woman in the world, —
Aye, every drem of woman’s flesh, is false,
If she be.

Leoo. Hold your peace.

1 Lord. Good my lord.—
And. It is for you we speak, not for ourselves:
You are afraid, and by some putter-on.
That will be damn’d fort: ‘would I knew the
That I would land-dam him: Be the honour-flaw’d,—
I have three daughters; the eldest is eleven.
The second, and the third, nine, and some five;
If this prove true, they’ll pay fort: by mine honour,
I’ll geld them all: fourteen they shall not see,
To bring false generations: they are co-heirs;
And I had rather gib myself, than they Should not produce fair issue.

Leoo. Cease; no more
You smell this business with a sense so cold.
As is a dead man’s nose: I see’t, and feel’t,
As you feel doing thus; and see withal
The instruments that feel.

And. If it be so,
We need no grace to buoy honesty;
There’s not a grain of it, the face to sweeten
Of the whole dashing earth.

Leoo. What! lack I credit?
1 Lord. I had rather you did lack, than I, my lord,
Upon this ground: and more it would content me
To lose her honour true, than your suspicion:
Be bland’t nor how you might.

Leoo. Why, what need we Commune with you of this? but rather follow
Our forceful instigation? Our prepossession
Calls not your counsels: but our spiritual goodness
Imparts this: which — if you (or stultified,
Or seeming so in skill,) cannot, or will not,
Retain as truth, like us: inform yourselves,
We need not have your advice: the matter,
The loss, the gain, the ordering on’t, is all Properly ours.

And. And I wish, my liege,
Your son only in your silent judgment tried it,
Without more overture.

Leoo. How could that be?
Elther thou art most ignorant by age,
Or thinkst not better your soul. — Camillo’s flight,
Added to their familiarity.
(Which was as gross as ever touch’d conjecture,
That lack’d sight only, nought for approbation,
But only seeing, all other circumstances
Made up to the deed,) doth push on this proceed-
Yet, for a greater confirmation,
For, in an act of this importance, were
Most pistonous to be mild, — I have dispatch’d in post,
To sacred Delphos, to Apollo’s temple,
Cleomenes and Dion, whom you knew
Of stuff’d sufficiency: Now, from the oracle
They shall bear, whose spiritual counsel had,
Shall stop, or spur me. Have I done well?

1 Lord. Well done, my lord.

Leoo. Though I am satisfied, and need no more
That in an act of this importance, were (Tive rest to the minds of others; such as he,
Whose ignorant credulity will not Come up to the truth: So have we thought it good,
From this person she should be confin’d;
Lest that the treachery of the two, fled hence,
He left her to perform. Come, follow us;
We are to speak in publick; for this business
Will do us all.

And. (Aside.) To laughter, as I take it,
If the good truth were known. — [Exit Leoo.

SCENE II. — The same. The outer Room of a Prison.

Enter Paulina and Attendants.

Paul. The keeper of the prison — call to him.

[Exit an Attendant

Let him have knowledge who I am. — Good lady! —
No court in Europe is too good for thee,
What dost thou then in prison? Now, good sir,
Re-enter Attendant, with the Keeper.

You know me, do you not?

Keep. For a worthy lady, —
And she whom much I honour.

Paul. Pray you then,
Conduct me to the queen.

Keep. I may not, madam: to the contrary
I have express commandment. — Here’s ado,
To lock up honesty and honour from
The access of gentle visitors! — Is it lawful,
Pray you, to see her women? any of them?
Emilia?
Act 2.

WINTER'S TALE.

Keep. So please you, madam, to put Apart these your attendants, I shall bring Emilia forth.

Paul. I pray now, call her.

Withdraw yourselves. [Exeunt Attendants.

Keep. And, madam, I must be present at your conference.

Paul. Well, be it so, pr'ythee. [Exit Keeper. Here's such ado to make no stain a slave, As passes colouring.

Re-enter Keeper, with Emilia.

Dear gentlewoman, how fares our gracious lady? Emili. As well as one so great, and so forlorn, May hold together: on her frights, and griefs, (Which never tender lady hath borne greater,) She is, something before her time, deliver'd.

Paul. A boy? Emili. A daughter; and a goodly babe, Lusty, and like to live; the queen receives Much comfort in't: says, My poor prisoner, Leses innocent as you.

Paul. I dare be sworn— These dangerous unsafe junes o'the king! beshrew them He must be told on't; and he shall: The office Becomes a woman's best; I'll take'nt upon me: If I prove honey-mouth'd, let my tongue blister; And never to my red-lock'd anger be The strong tongue of Emilia, Command my best obedience to the queen; If she dare trust me with her little babe, I'll show't the king, and undertake to Her advocate to th' loudest: We do not know How he may often at the sight o'the child; The silence often of pure innocence Persuades, when speaking fails.

Emili. Most worthy madam, your honour, and your goodness, is so evident, That your free undertaking cannot miss A thriving issue; there is no lady living, So meet for this great errand: Please your ladyship To visit the next room, I'll presently Acquaint the queen of your most noble offer; Who, but to-day, hammer'd of this design; But durst not tempt a minister of honour, Your board should be denied.

Paul. Tell her, Emilia, I'll use that tongue I have: if wit flow from it, As boldness from my bosom, let it not be doubted I shall go good.

Emili. Now be you best for it! I'll to the queen: Please you, come something nearer.

Keep. Madam, if't please the queen to send the babe, I know not what I shall incur, to pass it, Having no warrant. Paul. You need not fear it, sir: The child was prisoner to the womb; and is, By law and process of great nature, thence Free'd and enfranchis'd: not a party to The anger of the king; nor guilty of, If any be, the trespass of the queen. Keep. I do believe it.

Paul. Do not you fear: upon Mine honour, I will stand 'twixt you and danger. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Leontes, Antigonus, Lords, and other Attendants.

Leon. Nor night nor day, no rest: It is but weak.

To bear the matter thus; mere weakness, if The cause were not in being;—part o' the cause, She, the adulteress; for the harlot king Is quite beyond mine arm, out of the blank And level of my brain; plot-proof: but she I can hooke to me: Say, that she were gone, Given to the fire, a moleity of my rest Might come to me again.— Who's there? 1 Attenu. My lord? 1 Attenu. Leon. How does the boy? 2 Attenu. He took good rest to-night; 'Tis hop'd, his sickness is discharg'd.

Leon. To see, His nobleness! Conceiving the dishonour of his mother, He straighten'd, droop'd, took it deepely; Fasten'd and fix'd the shame on't in himself; Threw off his spirit, his appetite, his sleep, And down right languish'd.— I leave thee solely:— go, See how he fares. [Exit Attenu.]—Eye, eye! no thought of him; The very thought of my revenges that way Recoil upon me: in himself too mighty; And in his parties, his alliance.— Let him be, Until a time may serve: for present vengeance, Take it on her. Camillo and Polixenes Laugh at me; make their pastime at my sorrow: They should not laugh, if I could reach them; nor Shall she, within my power.

Enter Paulina, with a Child.

1 Lord. You must not enter. Paul. Nay, rather, good my lords, be second to me:

Fear you his tyrannous passion more, alas, Than the son of his life? a gracious innocent soul; More free, than he is jealous.

Ant. That's enough.

1 Attenu. Madam, he hath not slept to-night; commanded None should come at him.

Paul. Not so hot, good sir; I come to bring him sleep. 'Tis such as you,— That creeps like shadows by him, and do sing At each of his needless heavings, such as you Nourish the cause of his awakening: I Do come with words as medicinal as true; Honest, as either; to purge him of that humour, That presses him from sleep.

Leon. How?— Away with that audacious lady: Antigonus, I charg'd thee, that she should not come about me, I knew, she would. Ant. I told her so, my lord, On your displeasure's peril, and on mine, She should not visit you.

Leon. Paul. From all dishonesty, he can; in this, (Unless he take the course that you have done, Commit me, for committing honour,) trust it, He shall not rule me.

Ant. Lo you now; you hear! When she will take the rein, I let her run; But she'll not stumble.

Paul. Good my liege, I come,— And, I beseech you, hear me, who proceeds Myself your loyal servant, your physician, Your most obedient counsellor; yet that dare Less appear so, in comforting your evils, Than such as most seem yours:—I say, I come From your good queen.

Leon. Good queen! Paul. Good queen, my lord, good queen: I say, good queen;

And would by combat make her good, so were I A man, the worst about you.

Leon. Paul. Let him, that makes but trifles of his eyes, First hand me: on mine own accord, I'll off; But, first, I'll do my errand.— The good queen, For she is good, hath brought you forth a daughter; Here 'tis; commends it to your blessing. [Laying down the Child. Out!
A mankind witch! Hence with her, out o' door:
A most intelligencing bawd!
Paul. Not so:
I am as ignorant in that, as you in so entitling me: and no less honest.
Than you are mad; which is enough, I'll warrant,
As this world goes, to pass for honest.
Traitors! Will you not push her out? Give her the bastard—
Thou, dotard, [to Antigonus.] thou art woman-tir'd, unrooted.
By thy name Partible here,—take up the bastard;
Take up, I say; give't to thy crone.
Paul. For ever
Unremunerable be thy hands, if thou
That play the princess, by that forced baseness
Which he has put upon't?
Leon. He dreads his wife.
Paul. So, I would you did; then were past all doubt,
You'd call your children yours.
Leon. A nest of traitors!
And. I am none, by this good light.
Paul. Not I; nor any,
But one, that's here; and that's himself: for he
The sacred honour of himself, his queen's;
His hopeful son's, his babe's, betrays to slander,
Whose sting is sharper than the sword's; and will not
[For, as the case now stands, it is a curse
He cannot be compelled to], once remove
The root of his opinion, which is rotten,
And root out, or stone, was sound.
Leon. A callist,
Of boundless tongue; who late bathed her husband.
And now bezits me!—This brat is none of mine;
It is the issue of Polixenes;
Hence with it; and, together with the dam,
Commit them to the fire.
Paul. It is yours;
And, might we lay the old proverb to your charge,
So like you, 'tis the worse.— Behold, my lords,
Although the print be little, the whole matter
And copy of the father: eye, nose, lip,
The trick of his frown, his forehead, nay, the v iley,
The pretty dimples of his chin, and cheek; his smiles;
The very mould and frame of hand, nail, finger:—
And thou, good goddess nature, which hast made it
So like to him that got it, if thou hast
The ordering of the mind too, 'mongst all colours
Not fellow'd there: lest she suspect, as he does,
Her children not her husband's!
Leon. A gross bag!
And, lozal, thou art worthy to be hang'd,
That wilt not stay her tongue.
And. Hanging all the husbands,
That cannot do that feat, you'll leave yourself
Hardly one subject.
Leon. Once more, take her hence.
Paul. A most unworthy and unnatural lord
Can do no more.
Leon. I'll have thee burn'd.
Paul. I care not;
It is an heretic, that makes the fire,
Not she, which burns in't. I'll not call you tyrant;
But this most cruel usage of your queen
Is able to produce more accusation
Than your own weak-hinging'fancy,' something savour
Of tyranny, and will ignoble make you,
Yea, scandalous to the world.
Leon. On your allegiance,
Out of the chamber with her. Were I a tyrant,
Where were her life? she durst not call me so,
If she did know me one. Away with her.
Paul. I pray you, I'll be gone.
Look to your babe, my lord; 'tis yours: Jove send her
A better guiding spirit!—What need these hands?—
You, that are thus so tender o'er his follies,
Will never do him good, not one of you.
So, so.—Farewell: we are gone.
[Exit.
Leon. This traitor, traitor, hast set on thy wife to this—
My child? away with't!—even thou, that hast
A soul so tender o'er it, take it hence,
And let him instantly consum'd with fire;
Even thou, and none but thou. Take it up straight:
Within this hour bring me word 'tis done,
And what thou hast done, and how thyself,
With what thou else call'st thine: if thou refuse,
And wilt encounter with my wrath, say so;
The bastard brains with these my proper hands
Shall be cut out. Go, take it to the fire;
For thou seest't on thy wife.
And. I did not, sir;
These lords, my noble fellows, if they please,
Cannot bear me in'.
And. Lord, We can, my royal liege,
He is not guilty of her coming hither.
Leon. You are liars all.
And. Beseech your highness, give us better
And. This horn, that thou hast given for such
We have always truly serv'd you; and beseech
So to esteem of us: And on our knees we beg,
[As recompense of our dear services,
Fast, as we come,] that you do change this purpose;
Which, being so horrible, so bloody, must
Lend on to some foul issue: We all kneel,
And, with our hands together for each other:
Shall I live on, to see this bastard kneel And call me father? Better burn it now,
Than curse it then. But, be it; let it live:
It shall not neither.—You, sir, comfort yourself,
[To Antigonus.]
You, that have been so tenderly officious
With Iry Margery, your midwife, there, To save your bastard's life: for he is a bastard,
So sure as this beard's grey—what will you adventure
To save this brat's life?
And. Anything, my lord,
That my ability may undergo,
And nobleness impose: at least, thus much;
I'll pawn the little blood which I have left,
To save the innocent: anything possible.
Leon. This shall be possible: No word by this yard,
Thou wilt perform my bidding.
And. I will, my lord.
Leon. Mark, and perform it; (seest thou?) for the fall.
Of any point in't shall not only be
Death to thyself, but to thy lewd-ling'd wife;
Whom, for this time, we pardon. We enjoin thee,
As thou art lieu tenant to us, that thou carry
This female bastard hence; and that thou bear it
To some remote and desert place, quite out
Of our dominions; and that there thou leave it,
Without more merr'y, to its own protection,
And favour of the climate. As by strange fortune
It came to us, I do in justice charge thee,—
On thy soul's peril, and thy body's torture.—
That commend it strangely to some place,
Where chance may nurse, or end it: Take it up.
And. I swear to do this, though a present death
Had been more meriti—Come on, poor babe:
Some newfangled spirit instruct the kites and ravens,
To be thy nurses! Waites, and bears, they say,
Casting their savageness aside, have done
Like offices of pity.—Sir, be prosperous
In more than this deed doth require: and blessing,
Against this cruelty, fight on thy side,
Poor thing, condemn'd to loss!
[Exit, with the Child.
Leon.
No, I'll not tear
Another's issue.
I Attends. Please your highness, posts,
From those you sent to the oracle, are come
An hour since: Cleomenes and Dion,

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The same. A Street in some Town.

Enter Cleomenes and Dion.

Cleo. The climate's delicate; the air most sweet; Fertile the isle; the temple much surpassing The common praise it bears.

Dion. I shall report, For most it taught me, the celestial habits, (Methinks, I so should term them,) and the rever-ent of the grave wearers. O, the sacrifice! [ence How ceremonious, solemn, and unearthly It was t' the offering!

Cleo. But, of all, the burst
And the ear-deafening voice o' the oracle, Kin to Jove's thunder, so surpris'd my sense, That I was nothing.

Dion. If the event o' the journey Prove as successful to the queen,—O, bet's so — As it hath been to us, rare, pleasant, speedy, The time is worth the use on't.

Cleo. Great Apollo, Turn all to the best! These proclamations, So forcing faults upon Hermione, I little like.

Dion. The violent carriage of it Will clear, or end, the business: When the oracle, (Thus by Apollo's great divine seal'd up,) Shall the contents discover, something rare, Even then will rush to knowledge.—Go, fresh and gracious be the issue! [Exit.

SCENE II.—The same. A Court of Justice.

Leon. Lords, and Officers, appear properly seated.

Cleo. This sessions (to our great grief, we pronounce.)
Even pushes 'gainst our heart: The party tried, The daughter of a king; our wife; and one Of so much belov'd.—Let us be clear'd Of being tyrannous, since we so openly Proceed in justice; which shall have due course, Even to the guilt, or the purgation.— Produce the prisoner.

Ofi. It is his highness' pleasure, that the queen Appear in person here in court.—Silence!

Hermione is brought in, guarded: Paulina and Ladies, attending.

Leon. Read the indictment.

Ofi. Hermione, queen to the worthy Leonex, king of Sicilia, thou art here accused and arraigned of high treason, in committing adultery with Polixenes, king of Bohemia; and conspiring with Camillo to take away the life of our sovereign lord the king, thy royal husband: the pretence whereof being by circumstances partly laid open, thou, Hermione, contrary to the faith and allegiance of a true subject, didst counsel and aid them, for their better safety, to fly away by night.

Hermione, I must say, must be but that Which contradicts my accusation; and The testimony on my part, no other But what comes from myself; it shall scarce boot To say, Not guilty; mine integrity,
The child-bed privilege denied, which longs
To women of all fashion.—Lastly, hurried
Here to this place, the open air, before,
I have got strength of limb. Now, my liege,
Tell me what blessings I have here alive,
That I should fear to die? Therefore, proceed.
But yet hear this; mistake me not:—No! 1 lie,
I prize it not a straw—but for mine honour,
(Which I would fain, if I shall be condemned)
Upon surmises; all proofs sleeping else.
Here to your jealous eyes are witnesses,
I tell you 'Tis rigour, and not law.—Your honours all,
I do refer me to the oracle;
Apollo be my judge.

Lords. This your request
Is altogether just: therefore, bring forth,
And to Apollo's name, his oracle.
[Exeunt certain Officers.]

Off. You here shall swear upon this sword of justice,
That you, Cleomenes and Dion, have Been both at Delphi, and from thence have brought
This seal'd-up oracle, by the hand deliver'd
Of Apollo's priest; and that since then,
You have not dare to break the holy seal,
Nor read the secrets in.'t
Cleom. Dion. All this we swear.

Lords. [Reads.] Hermione is cast, Polixenes
Blameless, Camillo a true subject, Larentes
(though his innocence be truly begotten: and the king
Shall live without an heir, if that is lost, be not Found.

Lords. Now bless'd be the great Apollo!—
Her. Praise!—

Off. As it is here set down.
Leo. There is no truth at all 't the oracle:
The sessions shall proceed; this is mere falsehood.

Enter a Servant, hastily.

Serv. My lord the king, the king!
Leo. What is the business?
Serv. O sir, I shall be hastening you:—
The prince your son, with mere conceit and fear
Of the queen's speed, is gone.
Leo. How gone?
Serv. Dead.
Leo. Apollos' angry; and the heavens themselves Do strike at my injustice. [i.e. Hermione faints.] How now there?

Paul. This news is mortal to the queen:—Look down,
And see what death is doing.
Leo. [Aside.] Her heart is but o'ercharg'd; she will recover,
—I have too much belief'd mine own suspicion:—
Beseech you, tenderly apply to her
Some remedies for life.—Apollo, pardon
You, Hermione, and Cleomenes and Ladiess, with Hermione.
My great profaneness against thine oracle!
I'll reconcile me to Polixenes;
New woo my queen; recall the good Camillo;
Whom I proclaim a man of truth, of mercy.
For, being transported by my jealousies
To bloodless thoughts and to revenge, I chose
Camillo for the minister, to poison
My friend Polixenes: which had been done,
But that the good mind of Camillo tardied
My swift command, though I with death, and with Reward, did threaten and encourage him,
Not doing it, and being done: he, most humane,
And all'd with honour, to my king's guest
Unclasp'd my practice; quit his fortunes here,
Which you knew great; and to the certain hazard
Of all incertainties himself commended,
No richer than his honour:—How he glistered
Thorough my rust; and how his piet
Does my deeds make the blacker!

Re-enter Paulina.

Paul. Woe the while! O my gentle lady; lest my heart, cracking it,
Break too;
I Lord. What fit is this, good lady?
Paul. What studied torments, tyrant, hast for
In leads, or oills? what old, or newer torture
Must I receive; whose every word deserves
To taste of thy most woe? Thy tyranny
Together working with thy jealousies,—
Fancies too weak for boys, too green and idle
For girls of nine!—O, think, what they have done,
And then run mad; indeed: stark mad! for all
Thy bygone follies were but spires of it.
That thou betray'st Polixenes, 'twas nothing;
That did but: show thee, of a fool, inconsistent,
And damnable ungrateful: not was much,
Though by gone follies have poison'd good Camillo's
honour,
To have him kill a king: poor trespasses,
More monstrous standing by: whereof I reckon
Camillo's a true sorrow, Camillo to suck,
To be or none, or little; though a devil
Would have shed water out of fire, ere don't:
Nor is't directly laid to thee, the death,
But rather a treacherous thought (Thoughts high for one so tender,) cleft the heart
That could conceive, a gross and foolish sire
Flemish'd his gracious dam: this is not, no,
Laid to thy answer: But the last,—O, lords,
When I have said, cry, woe the queen, the queen,
The sweetest, dearest, creature's dead; and vengeance for't
Not drop'd down yet.
I Lord. The higher powers forbid!—
Paul. I say, she's dead: I'll swear: if word, or oath,
Prevaileth on, go and see: if you can bring
Tincture, or instre, in her lip, her eye,
Heat outwardly, or breath within, I'll serve you
As I would do the gods,—But, O thou tyrant!
Do not, I beseech you: do not, I beseech you,
Than all thy woes can stir: therefore betake thee
To nothing but despair. A thousand knees
Ten thousand years together, naked, fasting,
Upon a barren mountain, and still winter
In storm perpetual, could not move the gods
To look that way thou wert.
Leo. Go on, go on:
Thee I trust not speak too much: I have deserv'd
All tongues to talk their bitterness.
I Lord. Say no more;
Hover the business goes, you have made fault
The boldness of your speech. I am sorry for't:
All faults I make, when I shall come to know them,
I do repent: Alas, I have show'd too much
The reigning fortune: a woman: he is touch'd
To the noble heart:—What's gone, and what's past help,
Should be past grief: Do not receive affliction
At my petition, I beseech you: rather
Let me be punish'd, that have minded you
Of what you should forget. Now, good my liege,
Sir, royal sir, forgive a foolish woman:
The love I bore your queen,—in, fool, again!—
I'll speak of her no more, nor of your children
I'll not remember you of my own lord,
Who is lost too: Take your patience to you,
And I'll say nothing.
Act 3.

WINTER'S TALE.

Leon. Thou diest speak but well,
When most the truth; which I receive much better.

Than to be pitied of thee. Pr'ythee, bring me
To the dead bodies of my queen, and son:
One grave shall be for both; upon them shall
The causes of their death appear to
Our shame perpetual: Once a day I'll visit
The chapel where they lie; and tears shed there, Shall be my recreation: So long as Nature shall bear up with this distress,
So long I daily vow to use it. Come,
And lead me to these sorrows. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. Bohemia. A desert Country near the Sea.

Enter Antigonus, with the Child; and a Mariner.

Ant. Thou art perfect then, our ship hatch'd you upon
The deserts of Bohemia?

Mar. Ay, my lord; and fear
We have landed in ill time: the sky look grimly,
And threaten present blusters, in my conscience,
The heavens with that we have in hand are angry,
And frown upon us.

Ant. Their sacred wills be done! Go, get
Look to thy bark; I'll not be long, before
I call upon thee.

Mar. Make your best haste; and go not
To the land; 'tis like to be a land of weather:
Besides, this place is famous for the creatures
Of prey, that keep upon't.

Ant. I'll follow instantly.

Mar. I am glad at heart.

Ant. To be so rid o'the business. [Exit.

I have heard, (but not believ'd,) the spirits of the dead
May walk again; if such thing be, thy mother
Appear'd to me last night; for ne'er was dream
So like a waking. To me comes a creature,
Sometimes her head on one side, some another;
I never saw a vessel of like sorrow,
So fill'd, and so becoming: in pure white robes,
Like very sanctity, she did approach
My cabin where I lay: thrice bow'd before me;
And, gasping to begin some speech, her eyes
Became two spouts: the fury spent, anon
Did this break from her: Good Antigonus,
I am a genuine supposition,
Have made thy person for the thrower-out
Of my poor babe, according to thine oath,—
Places remote enough are in Bohemia,
There weep, and leave it crying: and, for the babe
Prythee, call it: for this ungentle business,
Put on thee by my Lord; thou ne'er shall see
Thy wife Paulina more:—and so, with shrieks,
She melted into air. Affrighted much,
I did in time collect myself; and thought
This was so, and no slumber. Dreams are toys:
Yet, for this once, yea, superstitiously,
I was squar'd by this. I do believe,
Hermione hath suffer'd death; and that Apollo would, this being indeed the issue of King Polixenes, it shall be here hid.
Either for life, or death, upon the earth
Of its right father. Blossom, sped thee well!
[Laying down the Child.

There lie; and there thy character: there these;
[Laying down a bundle.

Which may, if fortune please, both breed thee pretty,
And still rest thine. The storm begins:—
That, for thy mother's fault, art thus expos'd
To loss, and what may follow!—Weep I cannot,
But my heart bleeds: and most accur'd am I,
To be by oath enjoin'd to this.—Farewell.'
I'll go see if the bear be gone from the gentleman, and how much he hath eaten: they are never curst, but when they are hungry: if there be any of him let me know it. I'll bring you word of his death.

Scr. That's a good deed: if thou may'st discern by that which is left of him, what he is, fetch me to the sight of him.

Cam. I will see to't; and you shall help to pull him from the ground.

Scr. 'Tis a lucky day, boy; and we'll do good deeds out.

[Exeunt.

ACT IV.

Enter Time, as Chorus.

Time. I.—that please some, try all; both joy and terror;
Of good and bad; that make, and unfold error,—
Now take upon me, in the name of Time,
To use my wings. Impose it not a crime,
To me, or my swift passage, that I slide
T'other sixteen years, and leave the growth untir'd
Of that wide gap; since it is in my power
To overthrow law, and in one self-born hour
To plant and overwhelm custom: Let me pass
Those sixt years, whose ancient mirth was,
Or what is now receiv'd; I witness to
The times that brought them in; so shall I do
To the freshest things now reigning; and make Stale
The glittering of this present, as my tale
Now seems to it. Your patience this allowing,
I turn my glass; and give my scene such growing,
As you had slept between. Leontes leaving
The effects of his fond jealousies; so grieving,
That he shut up himself; imagine me,
Gentle spectators, that I now may be
In half Bohemia; and remember well,
I mentioned a son unto the kings, which Florizel
I now name to you; and with speed so pace
To speak of Perdita, now grown in grace
Equal with wondering: What of her ensues,
I list not prophesy; but let Time's news
Be known, when 'tis brought forth a shepherd's daughter,
And what to her adheres, which follows after,
Is an arrangement of time: if this allow
If ever you have spent time worse are now;
If never yet, that time himself doth say,
He wishes earnestly, you never may.

[Exeunt.

SCENE I.—The same. A Room in the Palace of Polixenes.

Enter Polixenes and Camillo.

Pol. I pray thee, good Camillo, be no more importunate: 'tis a sickness, denying thee any thing: a death, to grant this.

Cam. It is fifteen years, since I saw my country; though I have, for the most part, been aired abroad, I desire to lay my bones there. Besides, the penitent king, my master, hath sent for me: to whose feeling sorrows I might be some ally, or I over-ween to think so: which is another spur to my departure.

Pol. As thou lov'st me, Camillo, wipe not out the rest of thy services, by leaving me now: the need I have of thee, thine own goodness hath made; better not to have had thee, than thus to want thee: thou, having made me businesses, which none, without thee, can sufficiently manage, must either stay to execute them thyself, or take with thee the very serviceable place that dost possess, which if I have not enough considered, (as too much I cannot,) to be more thankful to thee, shall be my study; and my profit therein, the heaping friendships. Of that fatal country Sicilia, and thee I speak no more; whose very naming punishes me with the remembrance of that penitent, as thou cal'st him, and reconciled king, my brother; whose loss of his most precious queen, and children, are even now to be a fresh lamentation. Say to me, when saw'st thou the prince Florizel my son? Kings are no less unhappy, their issue not being gracious, than they are in losing them, when they have approved their virtues.

Cam. Sir, it is three days since I saw the prince: but trouble of affairs may be to me unknown. I have, missing, noted, he is of late much retired from court; and is less frequent to his princely exercises, than formerly he hath appeared.

Pol. I have considered so much, Camillo; and with some care; so far, that I have eyes under my service, which look upon his remoteness: from whom I have this intelligence; 'tis that he is seldom from the house of a most homely shepherd; a man, they say, that from very nothing, and beyond the imagination of his neighbours, is grown into an unspeakable estate.

Cam. I have heard, sir, of such a man, who hath a daughter of most rare note: the report of her is extended more, than can be thought to begin from such a cottage.

Pol. It might be likewise part of my intelligence. But, I fear the angle that plucks our son thither. Thou shalt accompany us to the place: where we will, not appearing what we are, have some question of this shepherd; from whom, I think it not uneasy to get the cause of my son's resort thither. I pray thee, be my present partner in this business, and lay aside the thoughts of Sicilia.

Cam. I will obey your command, and do to me.

Pol. My best Camillo!—We must disguise ourselves.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. A Road near the Shepherd's Cottage.

Enter Autolycus, singing.

When daffodils begin to peer,—
With, heigh! the dewy over the dale,—
Why, then comes in the sweet o'th' year;
For the red blood reigns in the winter's pale.

The white sheet bleaching on the hedge,—
With, heigh! the sweet birds, O, how they ring!—
Doth set thy pugging tooth on edge;
For a quart of ale is a dish for a king.

The lark, that thrums-irrama chants,—
With, heigh! with, hey! thy thrush and the jug:—
Are summer songs for me and my aunts,
While we lie tambling in the hay.

I have served prince Florizel, and in my time, wore three-plie; but now I am out of service:—

But shall I go mourning for that, my dear?
The pale moon shines by night;
And when I wander here and there,
I then do most go right.

If tinkers may have leave to live,
And bear the uncommon budget;
Then my account I well may give,
And in the stocks avouch it.

My traffick is sheets: when the kite builds, look to less, my father named me Autolycus; who, being as I am, littered under Mercury, was likewise a snapper-up of unconsidered trifles: With die, and drab, I purchased this caparison; and my reverent in the silke chest: tinsels, and knock, are too powerful on the highway: beating, and hanging, are terrors to me; for the life to come, I sleep out the thought of it.—A prize! A prize!

Enter Clown.

Col. Let me see.—Every 'tren wether tod;
Every toke, every pound and odd shilling: fifteen hundred shorn.—What comes the wool to?

Asl. If the springe hold, the cock's mind.
Clo. I cannot do without counters.—Let me see; what am I to buy for our sheep-shearing feast? Three pound off sugar; five pound of currants; rise.—What will this sister of mine do with rice? But my futher hath made her mistress of the feast, and she lays it on. She hath made four and twenty nosseys for the sheersants; three-man song-nen all, and very good ones; but they are most of them means and bases: but one Puritan amongst them, and he sings psalms to hornpipes. I must not suffer them; for these are three-man sentences, dates, none; that's out of my note: nutmegs, seven; a race, or two, of ginger; but that I may beg; four pound of prunes, and as many of raisins o' the sun.

Aut. O, that sir I was born! [Gravelling on the ground.]

Clo. The name of me,——

Aut. O, help me, help me! I pluck but off these rags: and then, death, death!

Clo. Alack, poor soul! thou hast need of more rags to lay on thee, rather than have these off.

Aut. O, sir, the loathsomeness of them offends me more than the stripes I have received; which are mighty ones, and millions.

Clo. Alas, poor man! a million of beating may come to a great matter.

Aut. I am resolved, sir, and beaten; my money and apparel taven from me, and these detestable things put upon me.

Clo. What, by a horse-man, or a foot-man? Aut. Was it not rather, a foot-man?

Clo. Indeed, he should be a foot-man, by the garments he hath left with thee; if this be a horse-man's coat, it hath seen very hot service. Lend me thy hand, I'll help thee: come, lend me thy hand.

Clos. [Helping him up.]

Aut. O! good sir, tenderly, oh! Clo. Alas, poor soul!

Aut. O, sir, softly, good sir: I fear, sir, my shoulder-blade is out.

Clos. How now? canst stand?

Aut. Softly, dear sir; [picks his pocket;] good sir, softly; you have done me a charitable office.

Clo. Dost lack any money? I have a little money for thee.

Aut. No, good sweet sir; no, I beseech you, sir: I have a kinman not past three quarters of a mile hence, unto whom I was going: I shall there have money, or any thing I want: Offer me no money, I pray you; that kills my heart.

Clos. What manner of fellow was he that robbed you?

Aut. A fellow, sir, that I have known to go about with trol-ny dames: I knew him once a servant of the prince; I cannot tell, good sir, for which of his virtues it was, but he was certainly whipp'd out of the court.

His vices, you would say; there's no virtue whipp'd out of the court: they cherish it, to make it stay there; and yet it will no more but abide.

Aut. Vices I would say, sir. I know this man well; he hath been since an ape-beaster; then a prince—present servaif; then he compassed a motion of the prodigal son, and married a tinker's wife within a mile where my land and living lies; and, having flown over many knavish professions, he index'd in the rogues: some call him Autolycus.

Clo. Out upon him! Frig, for my life, prig: he haunts wakes, fairs, and bear-baitings.

Aut. Very true, sir; he, sir, he; that's the rogue, that's the rogue, that's the rogue.

Clo. Not a more cowardly rogue in all Holmehome; if you had but looked big, and spit at him, he'd have run.

Aut. I must confess to you, sir, I am no fighter; I am false of that heart; and that he knew, I warrant him.

Clo. How do you now?

Aut. Sweet sir, much better than I was; I can stand, and walk: I will even take my leave of you, and pace softly towards my kinsman.

Clo. Shall I bring thee the five crowns for my sheep-shearing?

Aut. No, good-faced sir; no, sweet sir.

Clo. Then fare thee well; I must go buy spices for our sheep-shearing.

Aut. Prosper you, sweet sir!—[Exit Clown.] Your purse is not hot enough to purchase your spice. I'll be with you at your sheep-shearing too: If I make not this cheat bring out another, and the sheersants to fancy 'em unrolled, and my name put in the book of virtue!

Jog on, jog on, the foot-path way, And merrily bent the stile-a: A merry heart goes all the day, Your sad tires in a mile-a. [Exit.]

SCENE III.—The same. A Shepherd's Cottage.

Enter Florizel and Perdita.

Flo. These your unusual needs to each part of you
Do give a life: no shepheardess; but Flora, Peering in April's front. This your sheep-shearing Is as a meeting of the petty gods, And you the queen on't.

Per. Sir, my gracious lord,
To chide at your extremes, it not becomes me; O, pardoner, that I name them: your high self, The gracious mark o' the land, you have obscur'd With a swain's wearing; and me, poor lowly maid, Of a prodigal-like prank'd up: But that our feasts In every mess have folly, and the feeders Digest it with a custom, I should blush To see you so attired; sworn, I think, To show myself a glass.

Flo. I bless the time, When my good falcon made her flight across Thy father's ground.

Per. Now Jove afford you cause! To me, the difference forges dread; your greatness Hath not been us'd to fear. Even now I tremble To think, your father, by some accident, Should pass this way, as you did: O, the fates! How would he look, to see his work, so noble, Vilely bound up? What would he say? Or how Should I, in these my borrow'd flaunts, behold The sternness of his presence?

Flo. I apprehend Nothing but jollity. The gods themselves, Humbling their deities to love, have taken The shapes of beasts upon them: Jupiter became a bull, and Mars a Ram; and Neptune A ram, and bleated; and the fire-rob'd god, Golden Apollo, a poor humble swain, As I seem now: Their transformations Were never for a piece of beautey rarer; Nor in a way so chaste: since my desires Run not before mine honour; nor my lusts Burn hotter than my faith.

Per. Your resolution cannot hold, when 'tis Oppos'd, as it must be, by the power o' the king; One of these two must be necessities, Which then will speak; that you must change this purpose, Or I my life.

Flo. Thou dearest Perdita, With these force'd thoughts, I pr'ythee, daken not The birth o' the beast. Or I'll betake me, my fair, Or not my father's: for I cannot be Mine own, nor any thing to any, if I be not thine: to this I am most constant, That you should be a shepherd's daughter.

Per. Prosper you, sweet sir!—Be merry; gentle; Strange such thoughts as these, with any thing That you behold the while. Your guests are com­ ing: Lift up your countenance; as it were the day Of celebration of that nuptial, which We two have sworn shall come.

Per. O lady fortunate, you auspicious!
Winter's Tale

For the flowers now, that, frightened, thou let's fall
From Dio's waggon! Daffodils,

That bend the swallow dares, and take
The winds of March with beauty; violets, dian,
But sweeter than the linds of Juno's eyes,

Are fairest; there's breath; pale primroses,
That die unmarried, ere they can behold
British flowers in his strength, a malady
Most incident to maid's; bold oxtails, and
The crown-imperial; lilies of all kinds,
The flower-de-luce being one! (1, there I lack,
To make you grandle; and, my sweet friend,
To strew him o'er and o'er.

What? like a cose?
Per. No, like a bank, for love to lie and play on;
Not to be chained if—to be buried but
Quick, and in mine arms. Come, take your methinks, I play as I have seen them do! flowers In Whitsunt' pastoral's: sure, this robe of mine Does change my disposition.

What you do,
Still better what is done. When you speak, sweet
I'd have you do it ever: when you sing,
I'd have you buy and sell so: so give aims;
Pray see, and if the ordering your affairs,
To sing them too: When you do dance, I wish
A wave o'the sea, that you might ever do
You nothing but that: move still, still so, and own
Your mirth: For each your doing,
So singular in each particular,
Crows what you are doing in the present deeds,
That all your acts are queens.

O Doricles,
Your praises are too large: but that your youth,
And the true blood, which fairly peeps through it,
Do plainly give you an untaught shepherd;
With whom I might fear, my Doricles,
You would me the false way.

I think, you have
As little skill to fear, as I have purpose.

But, come; our dance, I pray
Your hand, my Ferdita: so turtles pair,
That never mean to part.

Per. This is the prettiest low-born lass, that ever Ran on the green sword: nothing she does or seems,
But smacks of something greater than herself;
Too noble for this place.

Com. He tells her something.

That strakes her blood look out: Good sooth, she is
The queen of curds and cream.

Clio. Come on, strike up.

Dor. Mopsa must be your mistress: marry, gar!
To send her kissing with.

Now, in good time!

Clio. Not a word, a word; we stand upon our manners.

Come, strike up.

Here a dance of Shepherds and Shepherdesses.

Pol. Pray, good shepherd, what

[Enter] Fair swain is this, which dances with your daught-

Shrpl. They call him Doricles: and he boasts himself
To have a worthy feeding: but I hate it
Upon his own report, and I believe it;
He looks like a son: He says, he loves my daughter:
I think so too: for never gait'd the moon
Upon the water, as he'll stand, and read,
As 'twere, my daughter's eyes: and, to be plain,
I think, there is not half a kiss to choose,
Who loves another best.

Pol. She dances sleekly.
Shrpl. So she does any thing, though I report it,
There should be silent: if young Doricles
Do light upon her; she shall bring him that
Which he not dreams of.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. O master, if you did but hear the pedlar at
The door, you would never dance again after a tabor
And pipe; no, the bagpipe could not move you: he Act 4. WINTER'S TALE.

sings several tunes, faster than you'll tell money; he utters them as he had eaten balls, and all men know he longed to eat adders' heads, and toads carbonado'd.

CLO. He could never come better: he shall come in: I love a ballad but even too well; if it be doleful matter, merrily set down, or a very pleasant thing, set danc'd, and how he longed to eat adders' heads, and toads carbonado'd.

MOP. Is it true, think you?

AUT. Very true; but a month old.

DOR. Bless thee, my boy, and mind the usurer!

AUT. Here's the midwife's name to't, one mistress Taleposter; and five or six honest wives that were present: Why should I carry lies abroad?

MOP. 'Tis true, pray buy it.

AUT. Here come on, lay it by: And let's first see more ballads; we'll buy the other things anon.

AUT. Here's another ballad, Of a fish, that appeared upon the coast on Wednesday the four-score of April, forty thousand fathom above water, and sung this ballad against the hard hearts of maidens: it was thought, she was a woman, and was turned into a cold fish, for she would not exchange flesh with one that loved her: The ballad is very pitiful, and as true.

DOR. Is it true too, think you?

AUT. Five justices' hands at it; and witnesses, more than my pack will hold.

CLO. Lay it by too: Another.

AUT. This is a merry ballad; but a very pretty one.

MOP. Let's have some merry ones.

AUT. Why, this is a passing merry one; and goes to the tune of Two maids wooing a man: there's scarce a maid westward, but she sings it; 'tis in request, I can't deny you.

MOP. We can both sing it; if thou'rt bear a part, thou shalt hear; 'tis in three parts.

DOR. We had the tune on't a month ago.

AUT. I can bear my part; you must know, 'tis my occupation: have at it with you.

SONG.

A. Get you hence, you must go; Where it fits not you to know. D. Whither? M. O, whither? D. Whither?

M. It becomes thy oath full well, Thou to me thy secrets tell: D. Me too, let me go thither.

M. Or thou go'st to the grange, or mill? D. If to either, thou knowest A. Neither. D. What, neither? A. Neither.

D. Thou hast sworn my love to be; M. Thou hast sworn it more to me:

Then, whither go'st thou say, whither?

CLO. We'll have this song out anon by ourselves; My father and the gentleman are in sad talk, and we'll not trouble them: Come, bring away thy pack after me. Wench's, I'll buy for you both:—Pedler, let's have the first choice.—Follow me, girls.

AUT. And you shall pay well for 'em. [Aside.

Will you buy any tape, Or lace for your cap? My dainty duck, my dear-a? Any silk, any thread, Any toys for your head, Of the new'st, and fin'est, fin'est wear-a? Come to the pedler; Money's a medler, That doth utter all men's ware-a.

[Exit Clown, Autolycus, Dorcas, and Mopsa.

Enter a Servant.

SERV. Master, there is three carters, three shepherds, three neat-herds, three swine-herds, that have made themselves all men of hair; they call themselves shepherds and herds; and they have a dance which the wenches say is a gallimaufry of gambols, because they are not in't; but they themselves are o' the mind, (if it be not too rough for some, that know little but bowling,) it will be pleasant plenty.

Shep. Away! we'll none on't; here has been too much foolishly already.– I know, sir, we weary you.

Pol. You weary those that refresh us: Pray, let’s see these three of herdsmen.

Sera. One three of them, by their own report, sir, hath danced before the king; and not the worst of in the three, but jumps twelve foot and a half by the squire.

Shep. Leave your prating: since these good men are pleased, let them come in; but quickly now.

Re-enter Servant, with Two or Rosticks, habited like Satyrs. They dance, and then ceasun.

Pol. O, father, you’ll know more of that hereafter.–

Is it not too far gone?—”Tis time to part them.—

He’s simple and tells much. [Aside.]—How now, fair shepherd?

Your heart is full of something, that does take Your mind from feasting. Sooth, when I was young

And handed love, as you do, I was wont
To load my she with knacks: I would have ran >sack’d

The pedler’s silken treasure, and have pour’d it to his acceptance; you have not his go.

And nothing sworn with him: If your last Interpretation should abuse; and call this,
Your lack of love, or bounty; you were straited
For a reply, at least, if you make a care
Of happy holding her.

Flo. Old sir, I know
She prizeth not such trifles as these are:
The gifts, she looks from me, are pack’d and lock’d
Up in my heart; which I have given already.
But not deliver’d.—O, hear me breathe my life
Before this ancient sir, who, it should seem,
Hath sometime lov’d: I take thy hand; this hand,
As soft as dove’s down, and as white as it;
Or Ethiopian’s tooth, or th’ sann’d snow,
That’s boil’d by the northern blasts twice over.

Pol. What follows this? —

How prettily the young swain seems to wash
The hand, was fair before!—I have put you out
Hot, to your protestation; let me hear
What you profess.

Flo. Do, and be witness to’t.

Pol. And this my neighbour too?

Flo. And he, and more
Than he, and men; the earth, the heavens, and all.

That, were I crown’d the most imperial monarch,
Thereof most worthy: were I the fairest youth
That ever made eye swerve; had force, and knowledge.
More than was ever man’s;—I would not prize them,
Without her love: for her, employ them all;
Commend them, and condemn them, to her service,
Or to their own perdition.

Flo. Fairly offer’d.

Cass. This shows a sound affection.

Shep. Say you the like to him?

Per. I cannot speak
So well, nothing so well; nor mean better;
By the pattern of mine own thoughts I cut out
The purity of his.

Shep. Take hands, a bargain:—

And, friends unknown, you shall bear witness to:
I give my daughter to him, and will make
Her portion equal his.

Flo. O, that must be
The virtue of your daughter: one being dead,
I shall have more than you can dream of yet;
Enough then for your wonder: But, come on,
Contact us ’fore these witnesses.

Come, your hand:

And, daughter, yours.

Pol. Soft, swain, swain, while, beseech you;
Have you a father?

Flo. I have: But what of him?

Pol. Knows he of this?

Flo. He neither does, nor shall.

Pol. Methinks, a father
Is, at the nuptial of his son, a guest
That best becomes the table. Pray you, once more:—
It’s her new master grown incapable
Of reasonable affairs? Is he not stupid [hear]
With age, and altering themes? Can he speak?
Know man from man? dispute his own estate?
Like, or not bed rid? and again does nothing,
But what he did being childish?

Flo. No, good sir;
He has his health, and ampler strength, indeed,
Thou best have of his age.

By my white beard, you offer him, if this be so, a wrong
Something unsialful: Reason, my son
Should choose himself a wife; but as good reason
The father, (all whose joy is nothing else
But fair posterity,) should hold some counsel
In such a business.

I yield all this;
But, for some other reasons, my grave sir,
Which ’tis not fit you know, I must acquit
My father of this business.

Pol. Let him know it.

Flo. He shall not.

Per. Fytythe, let him.

Flo. No, he must not.

Shep. Let him, my son; be shall not need to
At knowing of thy choice.

Flo. Come, come, he must not:—

Mark our contract.

Pol. Mark your divorce, young sir, [Strewing himself.

Whom son I dare not call, thou art too base
To be acknowledg’d: I hon a sceptor’s heir,
That thus affect a sceptor book:—Thou old

I am sorry, that, by hanging thee, I can but Shorten thy life one week.—And thou, fresh piece
Of excellent witchcraft; who, of force, must know
A small fool thou copst with:—O, my heart!

Shep. Flo. I’ll have thy beauty scratch’d with braires, and made
More homely than thy state.—For thee, fond
If I may ever know, thou dost but sigh, [noy.

That thou no more shalt see this knack, (as never
I mean thou shall,) we’ll bar thee from succession;
Not let a hair of thy blood, no, no, come in,
Far than execulation;—Mark thou my words;—
Follow us to the court.—Thou churl, for this time,
Though full of our displeasure, yet we free thee
From the dead blow of it.—And you, enchantment,
Worthy enough a herdsman; yea, him too,
That makes himself, but for our honour therein,
I unworthy thee,—if ever, henceforth, thou
These rural rituals to his entrance open,
Or hoop his body more with thy embraces,
I will devise a death as cruel for thee,
As thou art tender to.

[Exit. Per. Even here undone!

I was not much afraid: for once, or twice,
I was about to speak: and tell him plainly,
The self same sun, that doth shine upon his court,
Hides not his visage from our cottage, but Looks on alike.—Will’t please you, sir, be gone?

[To Florizel.

I told you, what would come of this: Beseech you,
Of your own state take care: this dream of mine—
Being now awake, I’ll queen it no inch further,
But milk my eyes, and weep.

Tut. Why, how now, father?

Shep. Speak, ere thou diest.

I cannot speak, nor think,
Nor dare to know that which I know.—O, sir,
[To Florizel.

You have undone a man of fourcore three,
That thought to fill his grave in quiet; yea,
To die upon the bed of my father's dust,
To lie close by his honest bones: but now
Some hangman must put on my shroud, and lay me
Where no priest shovels-in dust.—O cursed wretch!

That knew'st this was the prince, and wouldst adventure
To mingle faith with him.—Undone! undone!
If I might die within this hour, I have liv'd
To when I desire:—[Exit.]

WINTER'S

Besides, no and why so most Hark, this and
That may call thee something more than man,
And, after that, trust to thee.

I'll blush you thanks.

WINTER'S TALE.

Act 4.

241

Com. Well, my lord,
If you may please to think I love the kind;
And, through him, what's nearest to him, which is
Your gracious self: embrace but my direction,
(If your more ponderous and settled project
May suffer aalteration on mine honour)
I'll point you where you shall have such receiving
As shall become your highness; where you may Enjoy your mistress: (from the whom, I see,
There's no disjunction to be made, but by,
As heavens forefend! your ruin:) marry her;
And (with my best endeavours, in your absence,) Your discontenting father strive to qualify,
And bring him up to liking.

How, Camillo, may this, almost a miracle, be done?
That I may call thee something more than man,
And, after that, trust to thee.

Have you thought on
A place, whereto you'll go?

Flö. Not any yet:
But as the unthought-on accident is guilty
To what we wildly do; so we profess,
Ourselves to be the slaves of chance, and

Of every wind that blows.

This follows,—if you will not change your purpose,
But undergo this flight:—Make for Sicilia;
And there present yourself and your fair princess,
(For so, I see, she must be,) fore Leontes;
She shall be habit'd, as it becomes her,
The partner of your bed. Methinks, I see
Leontes, opening his free arms, and weeping
His welcomes forth: asks thee, the son, forgiveness,
As 'twere 't the father's person; kisses the hands
Of your fresh princess; o'er and o'er divides him
'Twixt his unkindness and his kindness; the one
He chides to hell, and bids the other grow,
Faster than thought, or time.

Flö. Worthy Camillo,
What colour for my visitation shall I
Hold up before him?

Cam. Sent by the king your father
To greet him, and to give him comforts. Sir,
The manner of your bearing towards him, with
What you, as from your father, shall deliver,
Things known betwixt us three, I'll write you down:
The which the shall point you forth at every sitting,
What you must say; that he shall not perceive,
But that you have your father's bosom there,
And speak his very heart.

I am bound to you:

There is some sap in this.

A course more promising
Than a wild dedication of yourselves
To unpath'd waters, undream'd shores; most certain,
To miseries enough: no hope to help you:
But, as you shoke off, to take another
Nothing so certain as your anchors; who
Do their best office, if they can but stay you
Where you'll be loaf's to be: Besides, you know
Prosperity's the very bond of love;
Whose fresh complexion and whose heart together
Affection alters.

One of these is true: I think, affection may subdue the cheek,
But not take in the mind.

Cam. Yes, say you so?
There shall not, at your father's house, these seven
Be born another such.

Flö. My good Camillo,
She is as forward of her breeding, as
The rear of birth.

Cam. I cannot say, 'tis pity
She lacks instructions; for she seems a mistress
To most that teach.

Per. Your pardon, sir, for this—

Flö. My prettiest Perdita.—
[For I do fear eyes over you,) to shipboard Get undescribed.

Per.

I see, the play so lies,
That I must bear a part.

Cam. No remedy.

Have you done there?

Fls. Should I now meet my father,
He would not call me son.

Cam. Nay, you shall have No hat.—Come, lady, come.—Parrelow, my friend.

Aud. Adieu, sir.

Fls. O Perdita, what have we twain forgot?

Fray you a word.

[They converse apart.

Cam. What I do next, shall be, to tell the king

[Aside. Of this escape, and whither they are bound;]

Whereto, my hope is, I shall so prevail,
To force him after: in whose company

I shall review Sicilia; for whose sake

I have a woman's longing.

Fls. Fortune speed us!

Thus we set on, Camillo, to the sea-cliff.

Cam. The swifter speed, the better.

[Enter Florizel, Perdita, and Camillo.

Aud. I understand the business, I hear it: To have an open ear, a quick eye, and a nimble hand, is necessary for a company of these: such as those is requisite also, to smell out work for the other senses. I see, this is the time that the unjust man doth thrive.

What an exchange has this been, without boot? What a boot is here, what a rush exchange? Sure, the gods do this year connive at us, and we may do any thing extempore. The prince himself is about a piece of insolvency: steering away from his father, with his clog at his heels. If I thought it were not a piece of honesty to acquaint the king withal, I would do it; I hold it the more knavery to conceal it: and therein am I constant to my profession.

Enter Clown and Shepherd.

Aside, aside.—here is more matter for a hot brain: Every lane's end, every shop, church, session, hanging, yields a careful man work.

Aud. See, see; what a man you are now! there is no other way, but to tell the king she's a changing, and none of your flesh and blood.

Shep. Nay, but hear me.

Cam. Nay, hear me.

Shep. Go to them.

Aud. She be none of your flesh and blood, your flesh and blood has not offended the king; and my brother-in-law is breeding into that blood is the grace, and not by him. Show those things you found about her; those secret things, all but what she has with her. This being done, let the law go whistle; I warrant you.

Shep. I will tell the king all, every word, yea, and his son's pranks too; who, I may say, is no honest man neither to his father, nor to me, to go about to make me the king's brother-in-law.

Aud. Indeed, brother-in-law was the furthest off you could have been to him; and then your blood had been the dearer, by I know how much an ounce.

Aud. Very wisely; puppies! [Aside. Shep. Woe is me to the king; there is that in this farde, will make him scratch his beard.

Aud. I know not what impediment this complaint may be to the flight of my master.

Cam. He must really be at palace.

Aud. Though I am not naturally honest, I am so sometimes by chance:—Let me pocket up my pedler's excrement.—[Takes off his false beard.] How now, what white rump are you bound?

Shep. To the palace, an it like your worship.

Aud. Your affairs there? what with whom? the condition of that farde, the place of your dwelling, your uncertain, of what you thinking, beholding, and any thing that is fitting to be known, discover.

Aud. We are but plain fellows, sir.

Aud. A lie; you are rough and hairy: Let me have no lying; it becomes none but rascals, and they often give us soldiers the lie: but we pay them for a with ramped coin, not stabbing steel; therefore they do keep it to the life.
Act 4. WINTER'S TALE. 243

Clo. Your worship had like to have given us one, if you had not taken yourself with the manner.

Slep. Are you a courtier, an't like you, sir?

Clo. A courtier, sir, or no, I am a courtier.

Slep. See'st thou not the air of the court in these enfoldings? hath not my guilt in it the measure of the court? receiveth not thy nose court-odour from me? reflect not on thy baseness, court-contempt? That I be minute, or loose from thee thy business, I am therefore no courtier? I am courtier cap-a-pee; and one that will either push on, or pluck back thy business there: whereupon I command thee to open thy affair.

Slep. My business, sir, is to the king.

Aut. What advocate hast thou to him?

Slep. I know not, an't like you.

Clo. Advocate's the court-word for a pheasant; say, you have none.

Slep. None, sir; I have no pheasant, cock, nor hen.

Aut. How bless'd are we, that are not simple men!

Yet nature might have made us these are, Therefore I'll not disdain.

Clo. This cannot be but a great courtier.

Slep. His garments are rich, but he wears them not handsomely.

Clo. He seems to be the more noble in being fantastical: a great man, I'll warrant; I know, by the picture, there is a thousand.

Aut. The farde1 there? what's the farde1? Wherefore there that box?

Slep. Sir, there lies such secrets in this farde, and box, which none must know but the king: and which he shall know within this hour, if I may come to the speech of him.

Aut. Age, thou hast lost thy labour.

Slep. Why, sir, that?

Aut. The king is not at the palace: he is gone abroad a new ship to purge melancholy, and air himself: For, if thou be'st capable of things serious, thou must know, the king is full of grief.

Slep. So 'tis said, sir; about his son, that should have married a shepherd's daughter.

Aut. If that shepherd be not in hand-fast, let him fly; the curses he shall have, the tortures he shall feel, will break the back of man, the heart of monster.

Clo. Think you so, sir?

Aut. Not he alone shall suffer what we can make bearable, and with decency bitter: but those that are German to him, though removed fifty years, shall all come under the hangman: which though it be great pity, yet it is necessary. An old sheep-whistling rogue, a trampender, to offer to have his daughter come into grace! Some say, he shall be stoned; but that death is too soft for him, say I: Draw cur throne into a sheep-cote! all deaths are too foul, the sharpest too easy.

Clo. Has the old man e'er a son, sir, do you hear; an't like you, sir?

Aut. He has a son, who shall be flayed alive; then, 'noteled over with honey, set on the head of a harmless nest; the strand till he be three-quarters and a dram dead: then recovered again with aqua-vite, or some other hot infusion: then, raw as he is, in the hottest day prognostication proveed, shall he be again as brick wall, the sun looking with a southward eye upon him; where he is to behold him with flies blown to death. But what talk we of these traitorly rascals, whose names are not to be smiled at, their offences being so capital? Tell me, (for you seem to be honest plain men,) what you have to the king; being something gently considered, I'll bring you where he is abroad, tender you reasons to his grace, and, if he be in man, besides the king, to effect your suits, here is man shall do it.

Clo. He seems to be of great authority; close with him, give him gold; and though authority be a stouter bear, yet he is oft led by the nose with gold: show the inside of your purse to the outside of his hand, and no more ado: Remember, stoned and flayed alive.

Aut. An't please you, sir, to undertake the business for us, here is that gold I have: I'll make it as much more; and leave this young man in pawn, till I bring it you.

Aut. After I have done what I promised?

Slep. Ay, sir.

Aut. Well, give me the moieties:—Are you a party in this business?

Clo. In some sort, sir: but though my case be a pitiful one, I hope I shall not be flayed out of it.

Aut. O, that's the case of the shepherd's son:—Hang him, he'll be made an example.

Clo. Comfort, good comfort: we must to the king, and show our strange sights: he must know, 'tis none of your daughter, nor my sister; we are gone else. Sir, I will give you as much as this old man does, when the business is performed; and remain, as he says, your pawn, till it be brought you.

Aut. I will trust you. Walk before toward the sea-side: go on the right hand; I will but look upon the hedge, and follow you.

Clo. We are blessed in this man, as I may say, even blessed.

Slep. Let's before, as he bids us: he was provided to do us good.

[Exeunt Shepherd and Clown.

Aut. If I had a mind to be honest, I see, fortune would not suffer me; she drops booties in my mouth. I am courted now with a double occasion; gold, and a means to do the prince my master good; which, who knows how that may turn back to my advancement? I will bring these two moles, these blind ones, aboard him: if he think it fit to shore them again, and that the complaint they have to the king concerns him to nothing, let him call me rogue, for being so far officious; for I am proof against that title, and what shame else belongs to't: To him will I present them, there may be matter in it.

[Exit.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Sicilia. A Room in the Palace of Leontes.

Enter Leontes, Cleomenes, Dion, Paulina, and others.

Clo. Sir, you have done enough, and have performed;
A saint-like sorrow: no fault could you make, Whitch you have not redeemed: indeed, paid down More penance, than done trespass: At the last Do, as the heavens have done; forget your evil; With them, forgive yourself.

Leon. Whilst I remember her, and her virtues, I cannot forget My blishments in them; and so still think of The wrong I did myself: which was so much, That heireis it hath made my kingdom; and Destroy'd the best companion, that e'er man Bred his hopes out of.

Paul. True, too true, my lord:
If, one by one, you wedded all the world, Or, from the all that are, took something good, To make a perfect woman; she, you kill'd, Would be unparallel'd.

Leon. I think so. Kill'd?

Paul. I think so.

She I kill'd? I did so: but thou strik'st me Soely, to say I did; it is as bitter Upon thy tongue, as in my thought: Now, good Say so but seldom. [Now.

Clo. Not at all, good lady; You might have spoken a thousand things that would Have done the time more benefit, and grace'd You kindred better.

Paul. You are one of those, would have him wed again.

Dian. If you would not so,

You pity not the state, nor the remembrance
Of his most sovereign dame; consider little,
What dangers, by his highest fall of issue,
May drop on his kingdom, and devour
Uncertainties. What were more holy,
Than to rejoice, the former queen is well?
What holier, than,—for royalty's repair,
For present comfort and for future good,—
To bless the bed of majesty again.

With a sweet fellow to't.

Paul. There is none worthy, respecting her that's gone. Besides, the gods
Will have full'd their secret purposes.

For has not the divine Apollo said,
'Tis not the tenour of his oracle,
That king Leontes shall not have an heir,
Till his lost child be found? which, that it shall,
Is all as monstrous to our human reason,
As my Antigonus to break his grave,
And come again to me: who, on my life,
Did perish with the infant. 'Tis your counsel,
My lord should to the heavens be contrary.
Oppose against their wills.—Care not for issue.

The crown will find an heir: great Alexander
Left his to the worthiest; so his successor
Was like to be the best.

Paul. Good Paulina,—

Who hast the memory of Hermione,
I know, in honour,—O, that ever I
Had squared me to thy counsel!—then, even now,
I might have look'd upon my queen's full eyes;
Have taken treasure from her lips,
And left them more rich, for what they yielded.

Leon. Thou speakest truth.

No more such wives: therefore, no wife: one worse,
And better wed'd, would make her sainted spirit
Again possess her corpse, and, on this stage,
Where we offenders now appear,—soul-versed,
Begin, And why to me?

Paul. Had she such power,
She had just cause.

Leon. She had; and would incense me
To murder her I married.

Paul. I should so;

Were I the ghost that walk'd, 'told bid you mark
Her eye; and tell me, for what dull part in't
You chose her; then I'd shriek, that even your ears
Should shrift to bear me: and the words that follow'd
Should be, Remember mine!

Cleo. Sire, very strange,
And all eyes else dead souls.—fear thou no wife, I'll
Have no wife, Paulina.

Paul. Will you swear
Never to marry, but by my free leave?

Leon. Never, Paulina: so be bless'd my spirit!

Paul. Then, good my lords, bear witness to his oath.

Cleo. You tempt him over-much.

Paul. Unless another,
As like Hermione as is her picture,
Affront his eye.

Cleo. Good madam.—

Paul. I have done.

Yet, if my lord will marry,—if you will, sir,
No remedy, but you will: give me the office
To choose you a queen; she shall not be so young
As she your former; but she shall be such,
As, walk'd your first queen's ghost, it should take Joy
to see her in your arms.

Paul. My true Paulina,
We shall not marry, till thou w'dst us.

Paul. That shall be, when your first queen's again in breath;
Never till then.

Enter a Gentleman.

Gent. One that gives himself out prince Florizel, Son of Polixenes, with his princess, (she
The fairest I have yet beheld,) desires access
To your high presence.

Leon. What with him? he comes not Like to his father's greatness: his approach,
So out of circumstance, and sudden, tells us,
'Tis not a visitation fram'd, but forc'd
By interest, policy, and accident. What train?

But few.

And those but mean.

Leon. His princess, say you, with him?

Gent. Ay, the most peerless piece of earth, I think,
That e'er the sun shone bright on.

Paul. As every present time doth boast itself
Above a better, gone; so must thy guest
Give way to what's seen now. Sir, you yourself
Have said, and writ so, (but your writing now Is colder than that theme,) She had not been,
Nor was not to be equal'd—thus your verse
Flow'd with her beauty once; 'tis shrewdly ebb'd,
To say you have seen a better.

Gent. Pardon, madam; the scene I have almost forgot; (your pardon,
The other, when she has obtain'd your eye,
Will have your tongue too. This is such a creature,
Would she begin a sect, might quench the real
Of all professors else; make prosetyes
Of who she but bid follow.

Paul. How? not women?

Gent. Women will love her, that the human woman,
More worth than thy man; men, that the is
The rarest of all women.

Leon. Go, Cleomenes;

Yourself, assisted with your honour'd friends,
Bring them to our embracement.—Still 'tis strange, [Enter Cleomenes, Lords, and Gentleman.
He thus should steal upon us.

Paul. Had our prince,
(Jewel of children,) seen this hour, he had pair'd
Well with this lord; there was not full a month
Between their births.

Leon. F'rthyee, no more: thou know'st,
He doth not do me again, when thou'dst of: sure.
When I shall see this gentleman, thy speeches
Will bring me to consider that, which may Unfurnish me of reason. They are come.—

Re-enter Cleomenes, with Florizel, Perdita, and Attendants.

Your mother was most true to wedlock, prince;
For she did print my royal token upon
Thine, conceiving you: Were I but twenty-one,
Your father's image is so hit in you,
His very sly, that I should call you brother,
As I did him; and speak of something, wildly
By us perform'd before. Most dearly welcome! And your fair princes, goodness!—O, alas! I Lost a couple, that 'twixt heaven and earth
Might thus have stood, begetting wonder,
As you, gracious couple; do: and when I lost
(All mine own folly,) the society,
Amity too, of your brave father; whom,
Though bearing misery, I desire my life
Once more to look upon.

Flo. By his command
Have I here touch'd Sicilia: and from him
Give you all greetings, that a king, at friend,
Can send his brother: and, but infamy
(Which waits upon worn times,) hath something seiz'd
His wish'd ability, he had himself
The gods and waters twist the throne and his Measure'd to look upon you: whom he loves
(He bade me say so,) more than all the scepters,
And those that bear them, living.

Leon. O, my brother,
WINTER'S TALE

Act 5

(Good gentleman!) the wrongs I have done thee, Afresh within me; and these thy offices, [sir So rarely kind, are as interpreters. Of my behind-hand slackness — Welcome hither, As is the spring to the earth. And hath he too Expos'd this paragon to the fearful usage (At least, ungentle,) of the dreadful Neptune, To greet a man, on worth his pains; much less The adventure of her person?

Flo. Good, my lord, She came from Libya.

Leon. Where the warlike Simus, That noble honour'd lord, is fear'd, and lov'd!

Flo. Most royal sir, from thence; from him, whose daughter His tears proclaim'd his, p'ring with her: thence (As prosperous with kind brethren,) we have cross'd, To execute the charge my father gave me, For visiting your highness: My best train I have from your Sicilian shores dismiss'd; Who for Bohemia bend, to signify Not only my success in Libya, sir, But my arrival, and my wife's, in safety Here, where are we.

Leon. The blessed gods Purge all infection from our air, whilst you Do climate here! You have a holy father, A graceful gentleman; against whose person, So sacred as it is, I

For which the heavens, taking angry note, Have left me issueless; and your father's bless'd, (As he from heaven merits it,) with you, Worthy his goodness. What might I have been, Might I a son and daughter now have look'd on, Such goodly things as you?

Enter a Lord.

Lord. Most noble sir, That which I shall report, will bear no credit, Were not the proof so nigh. Please you, great sir, Bostom'd with a warily friendly, me: Desires you to attach his son; who has (His dignity and duty both cast off,) Fled from his father, from his hopes, and with A shepherd's daughter.

Lord. Here in the city; I now came from him: I speak amazedly; and it becomes My marvel, and my message. To your court While he was hustling, (in the chase, it seems, Of this fair couple,) meets he on the way The father of this seeming lady, and Her brother, having both their country quitted With this young prince.

Camillo has betray'd me;

Whose honour, and whose honesty, till now, Endur'd all weathers.

I say'to his charge;

He's with the king your father.

Leon. Who? Camillo?

Lord. Camillo, sir; I spake with him; who now Has many poor men in question. Never saw I Wretches so quake: they kneel, they kiss the earth; Forswear themselves as often as they speak: Bohemia stops his ears, and threatens them With divers deaths in death.

Per. The heaven sets spiles upon us, will not have Our contract celebrated.

Leon. You are married?

Flo. We are not, sir; nor are we like to be; The stars, I see, will kiss the valleys first: The odds for high and low's alike.

Leon. Is this the daughter of a king?

She is,

When once she is my wife.

Res. That once, I see, by your good father's Will come on very slowly. I am sorry, [speed Most sorry, you have broken from his liking, Where you were tied in duty: and as sorry, Your choice is not so rich in worth as beauty, That you might well enjoy her, so.

Dear, look up: Though fortune, visible an enemy, Should chase us, with my father; power no jot Hath she to change our loves. — Beseech you, sir, Remember since you ow'd no more to time Than I do now: with thought of such affections, Step forth mine advocate; at your request, My father will grant precious things, as trifles.

Leon. Would he do so, I'd beg your precious mis-Which he counts but a trifle.

[tress, Paul.

Sir, my liege, Your eye hath too much youth in't: not a month Pore your queen died, she was more worth such Than what you look on now.

Gazes Leon. I thought of her, Even in these looks I made... But your petition Is yet unanswered: I will to your father: Your honour not overthrown by your desires, I am a friend to them, and you: upon which errand I now go toward him; therefore follow me, And mark what way I make: Come, good my lord.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. Before the Palace.

Enter Autolycus and a Gentleman.

Ant. Beseech you, sir, were you present at this relation?

Gent. I was by at the opening of the fardel, heard the old shepherd deliver the manner how he found it: whereupon, after a little amazement, we were all commanded out of the chamber; only this, methought I heard the shepherd say, he found the child.

And. I would most gladly know the issue of it.

Gent. I make a broken delivery of the business: — But the changes I perceived in the king, and Camillo, were very notes of admiration: they seemed almost, with staring on one another, to fear the cases of their eyes; there was speech in their dumbness, language in their very gesture; they looked, as they had heard of a world ransomed, or one destroyed: A notable passion of wonder appeared in them: but the wisest beholder, that knew no more but seeing, could not say, if the importance were joy, or sorrow: but in the extremity of the one, it must needs be.

Enter another Gentleman.

Here comes a gentleman, that, happily, knows: The news, Roger.

Gent. Nothing but bonfires: The oracle is fulfilled; the king's daughter is found: such a deal of wonder is broken out within this hour, that bal- lad-makers cannot be able to express it.

Enter a third Gentleman.

Here comes the lady Paulina's steward; he can deliver you more. — How goes it now, sir? this news, which is so true, is so like an old tale, that the verity of it is in strong suspicion: Has the king found his heir?

Gent. Most true; if ever truth were pregnant by circumstance; that, which you hear, you'll swear you see, there is such unity in the proof. The mantle of queen Hermione — her jewel about the neck of it — the letters of Antigonus, found with it, which they know to be his character — the majesty of the creature, in resemblance of the mother — the affection of nobleness, which nature shows above her breeding — and many other evidences, proclaim her, with all certainty, to be the king's daughter. Did you see the meeting of the two kings?

Gent. No.

Gent. Then have you lost a sight, which was to be seen, you see, as I spoke. Most sorry, you have broken of this: There might you have beheld one joy crown another; so, and in such manner, that, it seemed, sorrow wept to take leave of them; for their joy waked in tears. There was casting up of eyes, holding up of hands; with countenance of such distraction, that they were to be kind unto, for their king, being ready to leap out of himself for joy of his found daughter; as if that joy were now become a loss, cries, O, thy mother, thy mother! then asks Bohemia forgiveness; then embraces his son, in love, which worries be his daughter, with clapping her; now he thanks the old shepherd, which stands by, like a weather beaten coutil of many kings' reigns. I never heard of such another encomium report to follow it, and undone description to do it.

2 Gent. What, pray you, became of Antigonus, that carried hence the child?

3 Gent. Like an old man still; which will have matter to rebeanse, though credit be worse, and not an ear open; He was torn to pieces with a bear: this avouches the shepherd's son; who has not only his innocence (which seems much), to justify his life, but a handkerchief, and rings, of his, that Paulina knows.

1 Gent. What became of his bark, and his follower?

2 Gent. Wrecked, the same instant of their master's death; and in the view of the shepherd; so that all the instruments, which aides to expose the child, were even then lost, when it was found. Because of that, that, "not joy and sorrow, was fought in Paulina! She had one eye declared for the loss of her husband; another elevated that the oracle was fulfilled; She lifted the princess from the sword and busy her in embracing, if she would pin her to her heart, that she might no more be in danger of losing.

1 Gent. The dignity of this act was worth the union of kings and princes; for by such was it acted.

3 Gent. One of the prettiest touches of all, and that which angled for mine eyes (caught the water, though it was, when at the relation of the queen's death, with the manner how she came to it, bravely confessed, and lamented by the king; how attentiveness wounded his daughter; till, from one sign of course to another; how she did, an alarum! I would fain say, bleed tears; for, I am sure, my heart was blest. Who was most marble there, changed colour; some swooned, all sorrowed: if all the world could have seen it, the world would be well.

1 Gent. Are they returned to the court?

2 Gent. No; the princess hearing of her mother's station, which is in the keeping of Paulina,--a woman, doing, and newly performed by that rare Italian master, Giulio Romano; who, had he himself eternity, and could put breath into his work, would beguilie nature of her custom, so perfectly he is her ape: he so near to Hermione, hath done Hermione, that, they say, one would speak to her, and stand in hope of answer: thither, with all greediness of affection, are they gone; and there they intend to sup.

3 Gent. I thought, she had some great matter there in hand; for she hath privately, twice or thrice a day, ever since the death of Hermione, visited that removed house. She is thither, and with our great men and his; he the prince; told him, I heard them talk of a fardeil, and I know not what: but he at that time, over-pond of the shepherd's daughter, so he then took her to be the child, that she made much such sea and himself little better, extremity of weather continuing, this mystery remained undiscovered. But 'tis all one to me; for bad I been the finder out of this secret, it would not have relished among my other discredits.

Enter Shepherd and Clown.

Here come those I have done good to against my will, and already appearing in the blossoms of their fortune.

Shep. Come, boy; I am past more children, but thy sons and daughters will be all gentlemen born. Clo. You are well met, sir; You denied to fight with me this other day, because I was no gentleman there; but now, if you see them not, and think me still no gentleman born: you were best say, these robes are not gentlemen born. Give me the lie; do; and try whether I am not now a gentleman born.

Ant. I know, you are now, sir, a gentleman born. Clo. Ay, and have been so any time these four hours.

Shep. And so have I, boy.

Clo. So you have—but I was a gentleman born before my father: for the king's son took me by the hand, and called me, brother; and then the two kings called my father, brother; and then the principal brother, and the prince my sister, called my father, father; and so we went: and there was the first gentleman-like tears that ever we shed.

Shep. We may live, son, to shed many more.

Clo. Ay; or else 'twere hard luck; being in so preposterous estate as we are.

Ant. I humbly beseech you, sir, to pardon me all the faults I have committed to your worship, and to give me your good report to the prince my master.

Shep. Pr'ythee, son, for; we must be gentle, now.

Clo. Thou wilt amend thy life?

Ant. Ay, an it like your good worship.

Clo. Give me thy hand; I will swear to thee, that art as honest a true fellow as any is in Bohemia.

Shep. You may say it, but not swear it.

Clo. Not swear it, now I am a gentleman. Let boors and franklins say it, I'll swear it.

Shep. How if it be false, son?

Clo. If it be never so false, a true gentleman may swear it, in the behalf of his friend:—And I'll swear to the prince, thou art a tall fellow of thy hands, and thou wilt be drunk; but I know, thou art no tall fellow of thy hands, and that thou wilt be drunk; but I'll swear it: and I would, thou'rt not a tall fellow of thy hands.

Ant. I will prove so, sir, to my power.

Clo. Ay, by any means prove a tall fellow; If I do not wonder, how thou dar'st venture to be drunk, not being a tall fellow, trust me not;—Hark! the kings and the princes, our kindred, are going to see the queen's picture. Come, follow us: we'll be thy good masters.

SCENE III.—The same. A Room in Paulina's House.

Enter Leonato, Polixenes, Florizel, Perdita, Camillo, Paulina, Lords, and Attendants.

Leon. O grave and good Paulina, the great comfort
That I have had of thee!

Paul. What, soregir sir, I did not well, I meant well: All my services, You have paid home; but that you have vouchsaf'd With your Crown'd brother, and these your contracted Heirs of your kingdoms, my poor house to visit; It is a surplus of your grace, which never My life may last to answer.

Paulina. We honour you with trouble: But we came To see the statue of our queen: your gallery
I have pass’d through, not without much content
In many singularities; but we saw not
That which my daughter came to look upon,
The statue of her mother.

Paul. As she liv’d peerless,
So her dead likeness, I do well believe,
Except whatever yet you look’d upon:
Or hand of man hath done; therefore I keep it
I only, apart: But here it is: prepare
To see the life as lively mock’d, as ever
Still stone mock’d death: behold; and say, ’tis well.

[Paulina undraws a curtain, and discovers a statue.
I like your silence, it the more shows off
Your wonder: But yet speak, first, you, my liege.
Comes it not something near?

Leon. Her natural posture!—
Chide me, dear stone; that I may say, indeed,
Thou art Hermione: or, rather, thou art she,
In thy not chiding; for she was as tender,
As infancy, and grace.—But yet, Paulina,
Hermione was not so much wrinkled; nothing
So aged, as this seems.

Paul. O, not by much.
Paul. So much the more our carver’s excellence;
Which lets go by some sixteen years, and makes her
As she liv’d now.

Leon. As now she might have done,
So much to my good comfort, as it is Now piercing to my soul. O, thus she stood,
Even with such life of majesty, (warm life,
As now it coldly stands,) when first I would her!
I am ash’m’d: Does not the stone rebuke me,
For being more stone than it?—O, royal piece,
There’s magick in thy majesty; which has
My evils conjur’d to rememberance; and
From thy admiring daughter took the spirits,
Standing like stone with thee!

Perd. And give me leave;
And do not say, ’tis superstitious that
I kneel, and then implore her blessing.—Lady,
Dear queen, that ended when I but began,
Give me that hand of yours, to kiss.

Paul. The statue is but newly fix’d, the colour’s
Not dry.

Cam. My lord, your sorrow was too sore laid on:
Which sixteen winters cannot blow away,
So many summers, dry: scarce a joy
Did ever so long live; no sorrow,
But kill’d it self much sooner.

Leon. Dear my brother,
Let him, that was the cause of this, have power
To take off so much grief from you, as he Will piece up in himself.

Paul. Indeed, my lord,
If I had thought, the sight of my poor image
Would thus have wrought you (for the stone is mine)
I’d not have show’d it.

Leon. Do not draw the curtain.
Paul. No longer shall you gaze on’t; lest your fancy
May think anon, it moves.

Leon. Let be, let be,
Would I were dead, but that, methinks, already—
What was he, that did make it?—See, my lord,
Would you not deem, it breath’d? and that those Did verily bear blood?

Pol. Masterly done:
The very life seems warm upon her lip.
Leon. The fixture of her eye has motion in’t,
As we are mock’d with art.

Paul. I’ll draw the curtain;
My lord’s almost so far transport’d, that
Her look mock’d, it lives.

Leon. O sweet Paulina,
Make me to think so twenty years together;
No settled pleasures of the world can match
The pleasure of that madness. Let’t alone.

Paul. I am sorry, sir, I have thus far stirr’d you: but I could afflict you further.

Leon. Do, Paulina;
For this affliction has a taste as sweet
As any cordial comfort.—Still, methinks,
There is an air comes from her: What fine chisel
Could ever cut out breath? Let no man mock me,
For I will kiss her.

Paul. Good my lord, forbear:
The Ruddiness upon her lip is wet
You’ll mar it, if you kiss it; stain your own
With oily painting: Shall I draw the curtain?

Leon. No, not these twenty years.

Paul. So long could I Stand by, a looker on.

Leon. Either forbear,
Quit presently the chapel; or resolve you
For more amazement: If you can behold it,
I’ll make the statue move indeed; descend,
And take you by the hand: but then you’ll think,
(Which I protest against,) I am assisted
By wicked powers.

Leon. What you can make her do,
I am content to look on: what to speak,
I am content to hear; for ’tis as easy
To make her speak, as move.

Paul. It is required,
You do awake your faith: Then, all stand still;
Or those, that think it is unlawful business
I am about, let them depart.

Leon. Proceed;
No foot shall stir.

Paul. Music; awake her; strike—

[Musick.

’Tis time; descend; be stone no more: approach;
Strike all that look upon with marvelous; Come;
I’ll fill your grave up: stir; nay, come away;
Bequeath to death your numbness, for from him
Dear life redeemes you.—You perceive, she stirs;
And once and for all, shew’d, from the pedestal;
Start not; her actions shall be holy, as,
You hear, my spell is lawful; do not shun her,
Until you see her die again; for then
You kill her twice: Nay, present your hand;
When she was young, you wou’d her; now, in age,
Is she become the suitor.

Leon. 0, she’s warm! [Embracing her.
If this be magic, let it be art
Lawful as eating.

Cam. She embraces him.

Cam. She hangs about his neck;
If she permit to live, let her speak too.

Pol. Ay, and make’t manifest where she has liv’d,
Or, how stol’n from the dead?

Paul. That she is living,
Were it but told you, should be possible at
Like an old tale; but it appears, she lives,
Though yet she speak not. Mark a little while.—
Please you to interpose, fair madam; kneel,
And pray your mother’s blessing.—Turn, good lady;
Our Perdita is found.

[Presenting Perdita. who kneels to Hermione. Her.
You gods, look down,
And from your sacred vials pour your graces
Upon my daughter’s head!—Tell me, mine own,
Where hast thou been preserv’d? where liv’st? how found
Thy father’s court? for thou shalt hear, that I—
Knowing by Paulina, that the oracle
Gave hope thou wast in being,—have preserv’d
Myself, to see the issue.

Paul. There’s time enough for that;
Let they desire, upon this push to trouble
Your joys with like relation.—Go together,
You precious winners all; your exultation
Partake to every one. 1, an old turtle;
Will wing his way to some wither’d bough; and there
My mate, that’s never to be found again,
Lament till I am lost.

Leon. O peace, Paulina,
Thou should’st a husband take by my consent,
As I by thine, a wife: this is a match, And made between's by vows. Thou hast found By us, a pair of kings.—Let's from this place.—
What?—Look upon my brother:—both your par-
That elder I put between your holy looks
My ill suspicion.—This your son-in-law,
And son unto the king, (whom heavens directing,) Is both plain trait to your daughter.—Good Paulina,
I lead us from hence; where we may leisurely:
Each one demand, and answer to his part
Perform'd in this wide gap of time, since first
We were discover'd: hastily lead away. [Exeunt.

COMEDY OF ERRORS.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

Selinus, Duke of Ephesus.
Alcione, a merchant of Syracuse.

Antipholus of Ephesus, (twin brothers, and sons to Alcinoe and Eupanita, but unknown to each other.

Dromio of Ephesus, (twin brothers, and Attendants Dromio of Syracuse, (on the two Antipholus's

Balthazar, a merchant.
Angelo, a goldsmith.

A merchant, friend to Antipholus of Syracuse.

SENE,—Ephesus.

ACT I.

Enter Duke, Alcione, Gaoler, Officers, and other

Attendants.

Duke. Proceed, Selinus, to procure my fall,

And, by the doom of death, end woes and all.

Duke, Merchant of Syracuse, plead no more;

I am not partial, to infringe out laws.

The emnity and discord, which of late
Sprung from the rancorous outrage of your duke
To merchants, our well-dealing countrymen,
Who, wanting gilders to redeem their lives,
Have sealed his rigorous statutes with their bloods,
Excludes all pity from our threatening looks.

For, since the mortal and intestine jars
Twist thy seditious countrymen and us,
It hath in solemn synods been decreed,
Both by the Syracusans and ourselves,

To admit no traffic to our adverse towns:

Nay, more,

If any, born at Ephesus, be seen
At any Syracusan mart or fairs;

Again, if any Syracusan born,
Come to the bay of Ephesus, he dies,
His goods confiscate to the duke's dispose;

Unless a thousand marks be levied,
To quit the penalty, and to ransom him.

Thy substance, valued at the highest rate,
Cannot amount unto a hundred marks;

Therefore, by law thou art condemn'd to die.

Duke. Yet this my comfort; when your words are done, My woes end likewise with the evening sun.

Duke. Well, Syracuse, say, in brief, the cause
Why thou depart'st from thy native home?

And for what cause thou canst not to Ephesus.

Duke. A heavier task could not have been im-

Then I to speak my griefs unspeakeable:
Yet, that the world may witness, that my end
Was wrought by nature, not by vile offence,
'ill utter what my sorrow gives me leave.

In Syracuse was I born; and wed
Unto a woman, happy but for me,
And by me too, had not our hap been bad.
With her I liv'd in joy; our wealth increas'd,
By prosperous voyages I often made

To Ephesus, till my factor's death,
And then care of goods at random left

Drew me from kind embracements of my spouse;

From whom my absence was not six months old,

Before herself (almost at fainting, under

The pleasing punishment that women bear,

Had made provision for her following me,
And soon, and safe, arrived where I was.

There she had not been long, but she became

A joyful mother of two goodly sons;

And, which was strange, the one so like the other,

As could not be distinguish'd but by names.

That very hour, and in the self same inn,

A poor mean woman was deliver'd

Of such a burden, male twins, both alike:

Those, for their parents were exceeding poor,

I bought, and brought up to attend my sons.

My wife, not meanly proud of two such boys,

Made many motions for our home return:

Unwilling I agreed; alas, too soon.

We came aboard:

A league from Ephesus had we sail'd,

Before the always-obeying deep

Gave any tragick instance of our harm:

But longer did we not retain much hope;

For what obscure light the heavens did grant

Did but convey unto our fearful minds

A doubtful warrant of immediate death;

Which, though myself would gladly have embrac'd,
Yet the incessant weepings of my wife,

Weeping before for what she saw must come,

And piteous plaintings of the pretty babies,

That mourn'd for fashion, ignorant what to fear,
Forc'd me to seek delays for them and me.

And this it was,—for other means was none.—

The sailors sought for safety by our boat,

And left the ship, then sinking ripe, to us:

My wife, more careful for the latter-born,

Had fasten'd him unto a small spar mast,

Such as seafaring men provide for storm's;

To him one of the other twins was bound,

Whilst I had been like heedful of the other.

The children thus dispos'd, my wife and I,

Fix'd eyes on whom our care was fix'd,

Fasten'd ourselves at either end the mast;

And floating straight, obedient to the stream,

Were carried towards Corinth, as we thought.

At length, the sun, gazing upon the earth,

Dispers'd those vapours that offended us;

COMEDY OF ERRORS.

And, by the benefit of his wish'd light, The seas was'd calm, and we discovered Two ships from far making amain to us, Of Corinth that, of Epipaurus this; But ere they came,—O, let me say no more! Gather the sequel by that went before.

Duke. Nay, forward, old man; do not break off For we may pit, than they shall ever know. [so For, ere the ships could meet by twice five leagues, We were encounter'd by a mighty rock; While being violently borne upon. Our helpful ship was split in the midst, So that, in this unjust divorce of us, Fortune had left to both of us alike What to delight in, what to sorrow for. Her part, poor soul! seeming as burdened With lesser weight, but not with lesser woe, Was carried with more speed before the wind; And in our sight they three were taken up By fishermen of Corinth, as we thought. At length, another ship had seiz'd on us; And, knowing whom it was their hap to save, Gave helpful welcome to their shipwreck'd guests; And would have rest the fishermen of their prey, Had not their bark been very slow of sail, And therefore homeward did they bend their course.

Thus have you heard me sever'd from my bliss; That by misfortunes was my life prolong'd, To tell sad stories of my own mishaps. Duke. And, for the sake of them thou sorrowest Since, or of favour to dilate at full, for (for, What hath befall'n of them, and thee, till now.

Ant. The youngest boy, and yet my eldest care, At eighteen years became inquisitive After his brother; and importing none, That his attendant, (for his case was like, Rest of his brother, but retain'd his name,) Might bear him company in the quest of him: What whilst I laboured in my seas, I hazarded the loss of whom I lov'd.

Five summers have I spent in furthest Greece, Roaming clean through the bounds of Asia, And, coasting homeward, came to Epipaurus; Hopeless to find, yet loath to leave unsought, Or that, or any place that harbours men. But here must end the story of my life; And happy were I in my timely death, Confounds all my travels we, that live.

Duke. Helpless Egeon, whom the fates have mark'd To bear the extremity of dire mishap! Now, true to me, were it not against our laws, Against my crown, my oath, my dignity, Which princes, would they, may not disannul, My soul should sue as advocate for thee. But, though thou art adjudged to the death, And passed sentence may not be recall'd, But to our honour's great disparagement, Yet will I favour thee in what I can: Therefore, merchant, I'll limit thee this day, To seek thy help by beneficial help: Try all the friends thou hast in Epipaurus: Beg thou, or borrow, to make up the sum, And hast thou not, then thou art doom'd to die: Gaoler, take him to thy custody.

Act II.—A publick Place.

Enter Antipholus and Dromio of Syracuse, and a Merchant.

Mer. Therefore, give out, you are of Epidamnum, Lest that your goods too soon be confiscate. This very day, a Syracusian merchant Is apprehend for arrival, and, And, not being able to bear out his life, According to the statute of the town,
In what safe place have you bestowed my money? If I shall break that merry sconce of yours, That lacoon, in which I am undisposed! Where is the thousand marks thou hast of mine?

Dro. E. I have some marks of yours upon my pate, Say—of my mistress' marks upon my shoulders, But not a thousand marks between you both— If I should pay your worship those again, Perchance, you will not bear them patiently.

And. S. Thy mistress' marks! what mistress, slave, hast thou?

Dro. E. Your worship's wife, my mistress at the Phoenix; She that doth fast, till you come home to dinner, And prays, that you will be home to dinner— If you should pay your worship those again, What thy hand shall smite me thus upon my face, Being forbid? There, take you that, sir knave.

Dro. E. What mean you, sir? for God's sake, hold your hands! Nay, an you will not, sir, I'll take your heels.

[Exeunt Dro. E.

And. S. Upon my life, by some device or other, The villain is over-raged of all my money. They say, this town is full of cormage; As, nimble jugglers, that deceive the eye; Laark, muffled men, that cover the heart, and mind, Seal, killing witches, that deform the body! Disguised thieves, prating mountebanks, And many such like liberties of sin: If it prove so, I will go home the sooner. I'll to the constant, to go seek this slave; I greatly fear, my money is not safe.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A publick Place. Enter Adriana and Luciana.

Adr. Neither my husband, nor the slave return'd, That in such haste I sent to seek his master! Sure, Luciana, it is two o'clock.

Luc. Perhaps, some merchant hath invited him, And from the mart he's somewhere gone to dinner. Good sister, let us dine, and never fret: A man is master of his liberty: Time is their master; and, when they see time, They'll go, or come: If so, be patient, sister.

Adr. Why should their liberty o'ers their be more

Luc. Because their business still lies out of door.

Adr. Look, when I serve him so, he takes it ill.

Luc. O, know, he is the bridle of your will.

Adr. There's none, but asses, will be bridled so.

Luc. Why, headstrong liberty is lash'd with woe. There's nothing, situate under heaven's eye, But with his bound, in earth, in sea, in sky: The beasts, the fishes, and the winged fowls, Are their mates' subject, and at their controls: Men, more divine, the masters of all these, Lords of the wide world, and wild wat'ry seat, Indeed with intellectual sense and soul; Of more pre-eminance than fish and fowl, Are masters to their females, and their lords: Then let your will attend on their accords.

Adr. This servitude makes you to keep unued.

Luc. Not this, but troubles of the master's bed.

Adr. But, were you wedded, you would bear some woe.

Luc. Ere I learn love, I'll practise to obey.

Adr. How can your husband start some other where?

Luc. Till he come home again, I would forbear.

Adr. Patience, unmoved, no matter though she be unwise: They can be meek, that have no other cause. A wretched soul, brutish'd with adversity, We bid wefee, when we hear it cry; But were we burden'd with like weight of pain, As much, or more, we should ourselves complain! So thou, that hast no unkind mate to grieve thee, With urging helpless patience, wouldst believe me: But, if thou live to see like right befell, This fool-beg'd patience in thee will be left.

Luc. Well, I will marry one day, but to try:— Here comes your man, now is your husband high.

Enter Dromio of Ephesus.

Adr. Say, is thy tarry master now at hand?

Dro. E. Nay, he is at two hands with me, and that my two ears can witness.

Adr. Say, didst thou speak with him? know'st thou his mind?

Dro. E. Ay, ay, he told his mind upon mine ear; Bebreshew his hand, I scarce could understand it.

Luc. Speak he so doubtfully, thou couldst not feel his meaning?

Dro. E. Nay, he struck so plainly, I could too well feel his blows: and withal so doubtfully, that I could scarce understand them.

Adr. But say, I pr'ythee, is he coming home? It seems he hath great care to please his wife.

Dro. E. Why, mistress, sure my master is horn-mad.

Adr. Horn mad, thou villain?

Dro. E. I mean not cuckold-mad; but, sure, he's

When I desir'd him to come home to dinner, He ask'd me for a thousand marks in gold; 'Tis dinner-time, quoth I: My gold, quoth he; You must do honour, quoth I; quoth 'Tis true, quoth he: Will you come home? quoth I: My gold, quoth he: Where is the thousand marks I gave thee, villain? The pig, quoth I, is burn'd: My gold, quoth he: With ununctuous patience would'st thou? Hang up thy mistress! I know not thy mistress: one on thy mistress!

Luc. Quoth who?

Dro. E. Quoth my master:

Adr. No, no home, no wife, no mistress: So that my errand, due unto my tongue, I thank him, I bare home upon my shoulders; For, in conclusion, he did beat me there.

Adr. Go back again, thou slave, and fetch him home.

Dro. E. Go back again, and be new beaten home? For God's sake send some other messenger.

Adr. Doth not the slave, praying peasan; fetch thy master home.

Dro. E. Am I so round with you, as you with me, That I shall, a football you do spur me thus? You spur me hence, and he will spur me hither: If I last in this service, you must case me in leather.

Luc. Fye, how imputation lowrath in your face!

Adr. His company must do his minions grace, Whilst I at home starrv for a merry look. Hath homely age the alluring beauty took From my poor cheek? then he hath wasted it; Are my discourses dull? barren my wit? If voubile and sharp discourse be marr'd, Unkindness blunts it, more than marble hard. Do their gay vestments his affections bait? That's not my fault, he's master of my state: What triumphs are in me, that can be found By him not rul'd? then is he the ground Of my defeatures: My decayed fair

Adr. How about slave, or I will break the pace across.

Dro. E. And he will bless that cross with other beating: Between you I shall have a holy head.

Adr. Nonsense, prating peasan; fetch thy master home.

Dro. E. Am I so round with you, as you with me, That I shall, a football you do spur me thus? You spur me hence, and he will spur me hither: If I last in this service, you must case me in leather.

COMEDY OF ERRORS.

Would that alone alone he would detain,
So he would keep fair quarter with his bed!
I see, the jewel best enamelled,
Will lose his beauty; and though gold hides still,
The crow's foot casts, yet often touching will Wear gold; and so no man that hath a name,
But falsehood and corruption doth it shame.
Since that my beauty cannot please his eye,
I'll use you for my fool, and chat with you,
Wearing a left-hand, and weeping and die.

Luc. How many fond fools serve mad jealousy!

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse.

Ant. S. The gold, I gave to Dromio, is laid up
Safe at the Centaur, and the heedful slave
Is wander'd forth, in care to seek me out.
By computation, and mine host's report,
I could not speak with Dromio, since at first
I sent him from the mart: See, here he comes.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse.

How now, sir? is your merry humour alter'd?
As you love strokes, so jest with me again.
You know no Centaur? you receive'd no gold?
Your mistress sent to have me home to dinner?
My house was at the Phoenix: Wast thou mad,
That thus a madly thou didst answer me?

Dro. S. What answer, sir? when speake I such a word?

Ant. S. Even now, even here, not half an hour since.

Dro. S. I did not see you since you sent me hence,
Home to the Centaur, with the gold you gave me.

Ant. S. Villain, thou didst deny the gold's receipt;
And told'st me of a mistress, and a dinner;
For which, I hope, thou felt'st I was displeas'd.

Dro. S. I am glad to see you in this merry vein:
What means this jest? I pray you, master, tell me.

Ant. S. Yea, dost thou jest, and flout me in the teeth?

Think'st thou, I jest? Hold, take thou that, and that.

Dro. S. Hold, sir, for God's sake: now your jest is earnest:
Upon what bargain do you give it me?

Ant. S. Because that I familiarly sometimes
Do jest for my fool, and chat with you,
Your sauciness will jest upon my love,
And make a common of my serious hours.
When the sun shines, let foolish gnat's make sport,
Both on my head and draw his beams.
If you jest with me, know my aspect,
And fashion your demeanour to my looks,
Or I will beat this method in your sconce.

Dro. S. Sconce, call you it? so you would leave battering, I had rather have it head: an you use these blows long, I must get a sconce for my head, and insconce it too; or else I shall seek my wit in my shoulders. But, I pray sir, why am I beaten?

Ant. S. Dest thou not know?

Dro. S. Nothing, sir; but that I am beaten.

Ant. S. Shall I tell you why?

Dro. S. Ay, sir, and therefore: for, they say, every why hath a wherefore.

Ant. S. Why, first,—for flouting me; and then, wherefore.—

For urging is the second time to me.

Dro. S. Was there ever any man thus beaten out of season?
When, in the why, and the wherefore, is neither rhyme nor reason?

Well, sir, I thank you.

Ant. S. Thank me, sir? for what?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, for this something that you gave me for nothing.

Ant. S. I' ll make you amends next, to give you nothing for something. But say, sir, is it dinner-time?
And that body, consecrate to thee,
By ruffian lust should be contaminat;
Would'st thou not spit at me, and spit at me,
And hurl the name of husband in my face,
And tear the stain'd skin off my hariest brow.
And from my false hand cut the wedding ring,
And break it with a deep-divorcing vow?
I know the polity of thy flesh,
But grieving strumpeted by thy contagion.
Keep then fair league and truce with thy true bed;
I live disstain'd, thou, undesounour'd.
And S. I lead thee to me, fair dame? I know
In Ephesus I am but two hours old;
you not:
As strange unto your town, as to your talk;
Who, every word by all my wit being scannd,
Want in all one word to understand.
Luc. Eye, brother! how the world is chang'd with you:
When were you went to use my sister thus?
She sent for you by 1 venious home to dinner.
And S. By Dromio?
Dro. S. By me?
Adv. By thee: and this thou didst return from
That he did buffet thee, and, in his blows, [him—
Deaf to his voice for his wife;
And S. Did you converse, sir, with this gentlewoman?
What is the course and drift of your compact?
Luc. S. I, sir? I never saw her till this time.
And S. Visions, thou liest; for even her very Didst thou deliver to me on the mart.
Dro. S. I never spake with her in all my life.
And S. I known they then call us by us
Unless it be by inspiration?
Adv. How ill agree'st with your gravity,
To counterfeit thus grossly with your slave,
Always coming to my heart in my mood?
Be it my wrong, you are from me exempt,
But wrong not that wrong with a more contempt.
Come, I will fasten on this sleeve of thine:
There an elin, my husband, 1, a saine:
Whose weakness, married to thy stronger state,
Makes me with thy strength to communicate:
If aught possess thee from me, it is dross,
Unmingled joy, brier, or idle mese;
Who, all for want of praining, with intrusion
Infect thy sap, and live on thy confusion.
And S. To me she speaks; she moves me for her
There she doth dwell.
What, was I married to her in my dream?
Or sleep I now, and think I hear all this?
What error drives our eyes and ears amiss?
Until I know this sure uncertainty,
I'll entertain the offer'd felicity.
Luc. Dromio, go bid the servants spread for dinner.
[Exit.
Dro. S. O, for my head! I cross me for a sin.
This is the fairy land:—O, spouse of spites I—
We talk with gobins, owls, and elivish sprites;
If we obey them not, this will ensue;
They'll suck our breath, or pinch us black and blue.
Luc. Why prat'st thou to thyself, and answer'st not?
Dromio, thou drone, thou snail, thou slug, thou snail!
Dro. S. I am transformed, master, am not I?
Adv. Thou think, thou art in mind, and so am I.
Dro. S. Nay, master, both in mind, and in my
And S. Thou hast thine own form. [shape.
Dro. S. No, I am an ape.
Luc. If thou art change'd to sught, 'tis to thine asc.
Dro. S. 'Tis true; she rides me, and I long for grass.
'Tis so, I am an ass; else it could never be,
But I should know her as well as she knows me.
Adv. Come, come, no longer will I be a fool,
To put the finger in the eye and weep,
Whilst man, and master, laugh my woes to scorn—

Come, sir, to dinner; Dromio, keep the gate:
Husband, I'll dine above with you to-day,
And shrieve you of a thousand idle pranks;
Sirrah, if any ask you for your master,
Say, he dines forth, and let no creature enter—
Come, sister — Dromio, play the porter well.
And S. Am I in earth, in heaven, or in hell?
Sitting on a knot? mad, or well advis'd?
Know'st unto these things, and to myself diagnose'd?
I'll say as they say, and persevere so,
And in this mist at all adventures go.
Adv. S. Master, shall I be porter at the gate?
Adv. No, I would let none enter, lest I break your pate.
Luc. Come, come, Antipholus, we dine too late.
[Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The same.

Enter Antipholus of Ephesus, Dromio of Ephesus, Angelo, and Balthazar.

Adv. E. Good signior Angelo, you must excuse us all;
My wife is shrewish, when I keep not hours:
Say, that I linger'd with you at your shop,
And that to-morrow you will bring it home.
But here's a villain, that would face me down
He met me on the mast; and that I beat him,
And charg'd him with a thousand marks in gold;
And that I did deny my wife and house:
Thou drunkard, thou, what didn't thou mean by this?
Dro. E. Say what you will, sir, but I know what
That you beat me at the mart, I have your hand to show:
If the skin were parchment, and the blows you gave were ink,
Your own hand-writing would tell you what I
Dro. E. Marry, so doth appear
By the wrongs I suffer, and the blows I bear.
I should kick, being kick'd, and, being at that pass,
You would keep from my heels, and beware of an ass.
Adv. E. You are sad, signior Balthazar: 'Pray
May answer my good will, and your good welcome here.
Bel. I hold your dainties cheap, sir, and your Your door.
Adv. E. O, signior Balthazar, either at flesh or
A table full of welcome makes scarce one dainty Bel. Good meat, sir, is common; that every Chuck affords.
Adv. E. And welcome more common; for that's Nothing but words.
Bel. Small cheer, and great welcome, makes a Merry feast.
Adv. E. Ay, to a niggardly host, and more sparing
Guest:
But though you bate not money, take them in good part;
Better cheer may you have, but not with better heat.
But, sir, if my door is lock'd; Go bid them let us in.
Dro. E. Maud, Bridget, Marlan, Cicely, Gillian,
[Enter. Jen's, our chef.
Bel. [Within.] Mume, malt-horse, capon, coxcomb, idiot, patch!
Either get thee from the door, or sit down at the hatch:
Dost thou subserve for wenches, that thou call'st for such store.
When one is one too many? Go, get thee from the door.
Dro. E. What patch is made our porter? My master stays in the street.
Dro. S. Let him walk from whence he came, lest we entertain his feet. (door.
Ant. E. Who talks within there? ho, open the Dro. S. Right, sir, I'll tell you when, an you'll tell me wherefore.
Ant. E. Wheredo you? for my dinner; I have not din'to-day.
Dro. S. Nor to-day here you must not; come again, when you may.
Ant. E. What art thou, that keep'st me out of the house I owe?
Dro. S. The porter for this time, sir, and my name is Dromio.
Dro. O villain, thou hast stolen both mine office and my name: The one ne'er got me credit, the other mickle blame.
If thou hadst done Dromio to-day in my place, Thou wouldst have chang'd thy face for a name, or thy name for an ass.
Luc. [Within.] What a coil is there! Dromio, who are those at the gate?
Dro. E. Let my master in, Luc.
Luc. Faith no; he comes too late; And so tell your master.
Dro. E. O Lord, I must laugh;—
Have all you with a proverb.—Shall I set in my staff?
Luc. Have at you with another: that's,—
When can you tell?
Dro. S. If thy name more be called Luce; Luc, thou hast answer'd him well.
Ant. E. Do you hear, you minion you'll let us in, I hope?
Luc. I thought to have ask'd you.
Dro. S. And you said, no.
Dro. E. So, come, help; well struck; there was tow for blow.
Ant. E. Thou beggarly, let me in.
Luc. Can you tell for whose sake?
Dro. E. Master, knock the door hard.
Luc. Let him knock till it ake.
Ant. E. You'll cry for this, minion, if I beat the door.
Luc. What needs all that, and a pair of stocks in the town?
Adr. [Within.] Who is that at the door, that keeps at this noise there? Cuckoo, sir, make haste; Since mine own doors refuse to entertain me, I'll knock elsewhere, to see if they'll disdain me.
Ang. I'll meet you at that place, some hour
Ant. E. Do so; This jest shall cost me some expence.

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter Luciana and Antipholus of Syracuse.
Luc. And may it be that you have quite forgot
A husband's office? shall, Antipholus, hate,
Even in the spring of love, thy love-springs rot?
Shall love, in building, grow so ruinate?
If you did wed my sister for her wealth,
Then, for her wealth's sake, use her with more kindness;
Or, if you like elsewhere, do it by stealth;
Muffle your false love with some show of blindness
Let not my sister read it in your eye;
Be not thy tongue thy own shame's orator;
Look sweet, speak fair, become disloyalty;
Apparel vice like virtue's harbingers.
Bear a fair presence, though your heart be tainted,
Teach sin the carriage of a holy saint;
Be secret false: What need she be acquainted?
What simple thief braf'd of his attain't?
'Tis double wrong, to truant with your bed,
And let her read it in thy looks at board;
Shame hath a bastard fame, well managed;
Ill deeds are doubled with an evil word.
Act 3.

A man, poor women: make us but believe, Being compact of credit, that you love us: Though, in that glorious arm, show us the sleeve; We in your motion turn, and, you may move us. Then, gentle brother, get you in again; (Conform my sister, cheer her, call her wife: 'Tis holy sport, to be a little vain, When others have the arm, and you the conquests strive. And S. Sweet mistress, (what your name is else, I know not, Nor by what wonder you do hit on mine,) Lcss, in my knowledge, and your grace, you show not, Than our earth's wonder; more than earth divine. Teach me, dear creature, how to think and speak; Lay open to my earthly gross conceit, Smoother'd in Errors, feeble, shallow, weak, The folded meaning of your words descit. Against my soul's pure truth why labour you, To make it wander in an unknown field? Are you a god? would you create me new? Transform me then, and to your power I'll yield. But if that I am, then well I know, Your weeping sister is no wife of mine, Nor to her bed no homage I owe; Far more, far more, to you I decline. O, trait in me, not, sweet mermaid, with thy note, To draw me to my sister's grave, and close my ears! Sing, ay'en, for thyself, and I will dote. Spread over the silver waves thy golden hair, And as a bed I'll take thee, and there lie; And in that glorious supposition, think He gains by doth, thisthat such means to die:— Let love, being light, be drowned if she sink! Luc. What, are you mad, that you do reason so? And S. Not mad, but mated; how, I do not know Luc. It is a fault that springeth from your eye. And S. For gazing on your beams, fair sun, In that glorious supposition, think Thou hast no husband yet, nor I no wife: Give me thy hand. LUC. O, soft, sir, hold you still; I'll fetch my sister, to get her good will. [Exit Luc.]

Ruler from the house of Antipholus of Ephesus, Dromio of Syracuse.

And S. Why, now how, Dromio? where run'st thou so fast?

Dro. S. Do you know me, sir? am I Dromio? am I your man? am I myself? And S. How art Dromio, thou art my man, thou art thyself.

Dro. S. I am an ass, I am a woman's man, and besides myself.

And S. What woman's man? and how besides thyself?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, besides myself, I am due to a woman; one that claims me, one that haunts me, one that will have me.

And S. What claim lays she to thee?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, such claim as you would lay to your horse; and she would have me as a beast: not that, I being a beast, she would have me; but that she, being a very beastly creature, lays claim to me.

And S. What is she?

Dro. S. A very reverent body; ay, such a one as a man may not speak of, without he say, sir-reverence! I have but lean luck in the match, and yet is she a wondrous fat marriage.

And S. What a fat marriage?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, she's the kitchen-wench, and all grease; and I know not what use to put her to, but to make a lamp of her, and run from her by heaps: but if you warrant, her use and all in them, will burn a Florent winter: if she lives till doomsday, she'll burn a week longer than the whole world.

And S. What complexion is she of?

Dro. S. Swart, like my shoe, but her face nothing like so clean kept? For why? she sweats, a man may go over shoes in the grime of it. And S. That's a fault that will mend.

Dro. S. No, sir, 'tis in grain; Noah's flood could not do it.

And S. What's her name?

Dro. S. Neill, sir—but her name and three quarters, that is an oil and three quarters, will not measure her from hip to hip.

And S. Then she bears some breadth?

Dro. S. She doth, from head to foot, than from hip to hip; she is the best way, like a globe; I could find out countries in her.

And S. In what part of her body stands Ireland?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, in her buttocks; I found it out by the bogs.

And S. Where Scotland?

Dro. S. I found it by the barrenness; hard, in the plains, and the part he groans and revolts.

And S. Where France?

Dro. S. In her forehead; armed and reverled, making war against her hair.

And S. Where England?

Dro. S. I looked for the choky cliffs, but I could find no whiteness in them; but I guess, it stood in her chin, by the salt rheum that ran between France and it.

And S. Where Spain?

Dro. S. Faith, I saw it not; but I felt it, hot in her breath.

And S. Where America, the Indies?

Dro. S. O, sir, upon her nose, all o'er embelished with rubies, carbuncles, sapphires, declining their rich aspect to the hot breath of Spain; who sent whole armadas of carracks to be ballast at her nose.

And S. Where stood Belgia, the Netherlands?

Dro. S. O, sir, I did not look so low. To conclude, this drudge, or diviner, laid claim to me; called me Dromio; swore, I was assured to her; told me what privy marks I had about me, as the mark of my shoulder, the moie in my neck, the great wart on my left arm, that I, amazed, ran from her as a witch: and, I think, if my breast had not been made of fat, and my heart of steel, she had transformed me to a cartail dog, and made me turn 't the wheele.

And S. Go, he thee presently, post to the road; And if the wind blow any way from shore, I will not harbour in this town to-night. If any bark put forth, come to the mart, And I will walk, till thou return to me. If every one knew us, and we know none, 'Tis time, I think, to trudge, pack, and be gone.

Dro. S. As from a bear a man would run for life, So if I had her that would be my wife. [Exit.

And S. There's none but witches do inhabit here; And therefore 'tis high time that I were hence. She shall return me, and beguile me, and persuade Both for a wife abhor; but her fair sister, Possess'd with such a gentle sovereign grace, Of such enchanting presence and discourse, Hath almost made me traitor to myself;
Act 4.

COMEDY OF ERRORS.

But, lest myself be guilty to self-wrong,
I'll stop mine ears against the mermaid's song.

Enter Angelo.

Ang. Master Antipholus?
Ant. S. Ay, that's my name.
Ang. I know it well, sir: Lo, here is the chain;
I thought to have it on you at the Porcupine;
The chain unfinished'd made me stay thus long.
Ant. S. What is your will, that I shall do with this?
Ang. What please yourself, sir; I have made it for you.
Ant. S. Made it for me, sir! I bespeak it not.
Ang. Not once, nor twice, but twenty times you go home with it, and please your wife withal;
And soon at supper-time I'll visit you,
And then receive my money for the chain.

Ang. I pray you, sir, receive the money now,
For fear you ne'er see chain, nor money more.

Ang. You are a merry man, sir; fare you well.

[Exit.

Ant. S. What I should think of this, I cannot tell;
But this I think, there's no man is so vain,
That would refuse so fair an offer'd chain.
I see, a man here needs not live by shifts,
When in the street he meets such golden gifts.
I'll to the mart, and there for Dromio stay;
If any ship put out, then straight away.

[Exit.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The same.

Enter a Merchant, Angelo, and an Officer.

Mer. You know, since Pentecost the sum is due,
And since I have not much importun'd you;
Nor now had not, but that I am bound
To Persia, and want gliders for my voyage:
Therefore make present satisfaction,
Or I'll attach you by this officer.

Ang. Even just the sum, that I do owe to you, is growing to me by Antipholus:
And, in the instant that I met with you,
He had of me a chain; at five o'clock,
I shall receive the money for the same;
Pleaseth you, wait with me down to his house,
I will discharge my bond, and thank you too.

Enter Antipholus of Ephesus, and Dromio of Ephesus.

Qff. That labour may you save; see where he comes.

Ant. E. While I go to the goldsmith's house, go have
And buy a rope's end; that will I bestow
Among my wife and her confederates,
For locking me out of my doors by day.—
But soft, I see the goldsmith — get thee gone;
Buy thou a rope, and bring it home to me.

Dro. E. I buy a thousand pound a year! I buy a rope!

[Exit Dromio.

Ant. E. A man is well holp up, that trusts to you;
I promised your presence, and the chain;
But neither chain, nor goldsmith, came to me:—
Behold, you thought our love would last too long,
If it were chained together; and therefore came not.

Ang. Saving your merry humour, here's the note,
How much your chain weighs to the utmost carat:
The fineness of the gold, and chargeful fashion;
Which doth amount to three odd ducats more
Than I stand debted to this gentleman;
I pray you, see him presently discharge'd,
For he is bound to sea, and stays but for it.

Ant. E. I am not furnish'd with the present money;
Besides, I have some business in the town:

Good signior, take the stranger to my house,
And with you take the chain, and bid my wife
Disburse the sum on the receipt thereof;
Perchance, I will be there as soon as you.

Ang. Then you will bring the chain to her yourself?

Ant. E. No, let it with you, lest I come not in time enough.

Ang. Well, sir, I will: Have you the chain about you?

Ant. E. If I have not, sir, I hope you have;
Or else you must return without your money.

Ang. Nay, come, I pray you, sir, give me the chain;
Both wind and tide stays for this gentleman,
And I, to blame, have had him too long.

Ant. E. Good lord, you use this dalliance to excuse
Your breach of promise to the Porcupine:
I should have chid you for not bringing it,
But, like a shrew, you first begin to brawl.

Mer. The hour steals on; I pray you, sir, despatch.

Ang. You hear, how he importunes me; the chain—

Ant. E. Why, give it to my wife, and fetch your money.

Ang. Come, come, you know, I gave it you even now.
Neither send the chain, or send me by some token.

Ant. E. Fye! now you run this humour out of breath.
Come, where's the chain? I pray you, let me see it.

Mer. My business cannot brook this dalliance:
Good sir, say, whe'er you'll answer me, or no;
If not, I'll leave him to the officer.

Ant. E. I answer you! What should I answer you?

Ang. The money, that you owe me for the chain.
Ant. E. I owe you none, till I receive the chain.
Ang. You cannot have it; I gave it you half an hour since.

Ant. E. You gave me none; you wrong me much to say so.

Ang. You wrong me more, sir, in denying it:
Consider, how it stands upon my credit.

Mer. Well, officer, arrest him at my suit.

Qff. I do; and charge you in the duke's name, to obey me.

Ang. This touches me in reputation:
Either consent to pay this sum for me, or I attach you by this officer.

Ant. E. Consent to pay thee that I never had!

Mer. Arrest me, foolish fellow, if thou dar'st.

Ant. E. Here is thy fee: our fraughtage, sir,
I would not spare my brother in this case,
If he should scorn me so apparently.

Qff. I do arrest you, sir; you hear the suit.

Ant. E. I do obey thee, till I give thee bail:—
But, sirrah, you shall buy this sport as dear
As all the metal in your shop will answer.

Ang. Sir, sir, I shall have law in Ephesus,
To your notorious shame, I doubt it not.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse.

Dro. S. Master, there is a bark of Epidamnum,
That stays but till her owner comes aboard,
And ther, sir, bears a way: our fraughtage, sir,
I have convey'd aboard; and I have bought
The oil, the balsamum, and aqua-vitae.
The ship is in her trim; the merry wind
Bulls far from land; they stay for nought at all,
But for their owner, master, and yourself.

Ant. E. How now? a madman? Why thou peevish sheep,
What ship of Epidamnum stays for me?

Dro. S. A ship you sent me to, to hire waftage.

Ant. E. Thou drunken slave, I sent thee for a rope;
And told thee what to purpose, and what end.

Dro. S. You sent me, sir, for a rope's-end as soon:
You sent me to the bay, sir, for a bark.
COMEDY

Act 4

And. E. I will debate this matter at more leisure, and teach you to listen with more heed. To Adriana, villain, hie thee straight- Give her this key, and tell her, in the dark That's cover'd o'er with Turkish tapestry, There is a purse of ducats; let her send it; Tell her, I am arrested in the street, And that shall bail me: hie thee, slave; be gone. On, officer, to prison till it come.- [Exit Merchants, Angelo, Officer, and And. E. Dros. S. To Adriana! that is where we din'd, Where Bowshab did claim me for her husband: She is too big, I hope, for me to compass. Thither I must, although against my will, For servants must their masters' minds fulfill. [Exit Adriana and Luciana.]

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter Adriana and Luciana.

Adr. Ah, lady Luciana, did he tempt thee so? Might' she not perceive amorously in his eye That it did plead in earnest, yes or nay? I look'd he or red, or pale; or sad, or merrily? What observation mad'm thou in this case, Of his heart's meteor's tinct in his face? Luc. First, he denied he had in him no right. Adr. He meant, he did me none; the more my spite. Luc. Then swore he, that he was a stranger here. Adr. And to true he swore, though yet forewarn'd he were. Luc. Then pleaded I for you. Adr. And what said he? Luc. That love I begg'd for you, he begg'd of me. Adr. With what persuasion did he tempt thy love? Luc. With words, that in an honest suit might move. First, he did praise my beauty; then, my speech. Adr. Did'st speak him fair? Luc. Have patience, I beseech. Adr. I cannot, nor I will not, hold me still. My tongue, though not my heart, shall have his will. He is deformed, crooked, old, and sere, Ill-fac'd, worse-bodied, shapeless every where; Vicious or gentle, a match for every man; Stigmatical in making, worse in mind. Luc. Who would be jealous then of such a one? No evil lost is wail'd when it is gone. Adr. Ah! but I think him better than I say, And yet would herein others' eyes were worse: Far from her nest the lapping cries away; My heart prays for him, though my tongue do curst. [Exit Dromio of Syracuse.]

Dros. S. Here go; the desk, the purse; sweet now, make haste. Luc. How hast thou lost thy breath? Dros. S. By running fast. Adr. Where is thy master, Dromio? Is he well? Dros. S. No, he's in Tartar limbo, worse than hell. A devil in an everlasting garment bath him, One, whose hard heart is button'd up with steel; A fiend, a fairy, pitiless and rough; A wolf, nay, worse, a fellow all in buff; A back-friend, a shoulder-clapper, one that counteracts The passages of alleys, creeks, and narrow lands; A bound that runs counter, and yet draws dry One that, before the judgment, carries poor souls to hell. Adr. Why, man, what is the matter? Dros. S. I do not know the matter; he is 'rested in the case. Adr. What is he arrested? tell me, at whose suit. Dros. S. I know not at whose suit he is arrested, well; But he's in a suit of buff, which 'rested him, that can I tell. Will you send him, mistress, redemption, the money in the desk? Adr. Go fetch it, sister.—This I wonder at, [Exit Luciana. That be, unknown to me, should be in the debt. Tell me, was he arrested on a band? Dros. S. Not on a band, but on a stronger thing: A chain, a chain! do you not hear it ring? Adr. On what did the chain? Dros. S. No, no, the bell: 'tis time, that I were gone. It was two ere I left him, and now the clock ticks. Adr. The hours come back! that did I never hear. Dros. S. O yes. If any hour meet a sergeant, Some tender mercy to my suit, some invite me; Some other give me thanks for kindnesses; Some offer me commodities to buy: Even now a tailor call'd me in his shop; And show'd me silks, that he had bought for me, And, therewithall, took measure of my body. Sure, these are but imaginary wills, And Lapland sorcerers inhabit here. [Exit Dromio of Syracuse.]

Dros. S. Master, here's the gold you sent me for: What, have you got the picture of Old Adam new apparell'd? And. S. What gold is this? What Adam dost thou mean? Dros. S. Not that Adam, that kept the paradise, but that Adam, that keeps the prison: he that goes in the calf's skin that was killed for the prodigal; he that came behind you, sir, like an evil angel, and bid you forsake your liberty. And. S. I understand thee not. Dros. S. No? why, 'tis a plain case: he that went like a base-villain, in a case of leather; the man, sir, that, when gentlemen are tired, gives them a bob, and 'rests them; he, sir, that takes pity on decayed men, and gives them suits of durance; he that sets up his rest to do more exploits with his mace, than a morris-pike. And. S. What! thou mean'st an officer? Dros. S. No, that, of the sergeants of the band: he, that brings any man to answer it, that breaks his band; one that thinks a man always going to bed, and says, God give you good rest! And. S. Well, sir, there rest in your föolery. Is there any ship puts forth to night? may we be gone? Dros. S. Why, sir, I brought you word an hour since, that the bark Expedition put forth to-night; and then were you hindered by the sergeant, to.
Enter Dromio of Ephesus, with a rope's end.

Here comes my man; I think, he brings the money.

How now, sir? have you that I sent you for?

Dro. E. Here's that, I warrant you, will pay of them all.

Ant. E. But where's the money?

Dro. E. Why, sir, I gave the money for the rope.

Ant. E. Five hundred ducats, villain, for a rope? Dro. E. Sir, by my serve you, sir, five hundred at the rate.

Ant. E. To what end did I bid thee hie thee home?

Dro. E. To the rope's end, sir; and to that end am I return'd.

Ant. E. And to that end, sir, I will welcome you.

[Beating him.]

Off. Good sir, be patient.

Dro. E. Nay, 'tis for me to be patient; I am in adversity.

Off. Good now, hold thy tongue.

Dro. E. Nay, rather persuade him to hold his hands.

Ant. E. Thou whoreson, senseless villain!

Dro. E. I would I were senseless, sir, that I might not feel your blows.

Ant. E. Thou art sensible in nothing but blows, and so is an ass.

Dro. E. I am an ass indeed; you may prove it by my long ears. I have served him from the hour of my birth, this instant, and have nothing at his hands for my service, but blows; when I am cold, he heats me with beating: when I am warm, he cools me with beating: I am waked with it, when I sleep; raised with it, when I sit; driven out of doors with it, when I go from home: welcomed home with it, when I return: nay, I bear it on my shoulders, as a beggar wont her brat: and, I think, when he hath lamed me, I shall beg with it from door to door.

Enter Adriana, Luciana, and the Courtezan, with Pinch, and others.

Ant. E. Come, go along; my wife is coming yonder.

Dro. E. Mistress, respeci franca, respect your end; or rather the prophecy, like the parrot, Beware the rope's end.

Ant. E. wilt thou still talk? [Beats him.]

Cour. How dost thou now? is not your husband mad?

Adr. His incivility confirms no less—

Good doctor Pinch, you are a conjurer; Establish him in his sense again.

And I will please you what you will demand.

Luc. Alas, how fiery and how sharp he looks! Cour. Mark, how he trembles in his ecstasy! Pinch. Give me your hand, and let me feel your pulse.

Ant. E. There is my hand, and let it feel your ear.

Pinch. I charge thee, Satan, hou'd within this man,

To yield possession to my holy prayers,

To thy state of darkness hie thee straight; I conjure thee by all the saints in heaven.

Ant. E. Peace, dozing wizard, peace; I am not mad.

Adr. 0, that thouwert not, poor distressed soul! Ant. E. You minion, you, are these your customary talents?

Did this companion with the saffron face Revel and feast it at my house to-day,

Whiles upon me the guilty doors were shut,

And I could not enter in my house?

Adr. 0 husband, God doth know, you din'd at home,

Where 'would you had remain'd until this time.

Free from these slanders, and this open shame.

Ant. E. I din'd at home! Thou villain, what say'st thou?
Act V.

SCENE I.—The same.

Enter Merchant and Angelo.

Ang. I am sorry, sir, that I have hinder'd you; but, I protest, he had the chain of me, though most dishonestly he doth deny it.

Mer. How is the man esteem'd here in the city? Ang. Of very great reputation, sir; of credit infinite, highly belov'd, second to none that lives here in the city; his word might bear my wealth at any time. Mer. Speak softly; yonder, as I think, he walks.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse and Dromo of Syracuse.

Ang. Tis so; and that self chain about his neck Which he forsook, most monstrously, to have. Good so, and fear not me, I will speak to him. Signior Antipholus, I wonder much That you would put me to this shame and trouble; and not without some scandal to yourself, With scorn and discountenance, and oath, and deny This chain, which now you wear so openly; besides the charge, the shame, imprisonment, you have done wrong to my honest friend; who, but for staying on our controversy, had hoisted sail, and put to sea to-day? This chain you had of me, can you deny it? Ant. S. I think, I had; I never did deny it. Mrs. Ang. Do, so, sir; and, forsook it too. Ant. S. Who heard me to deny it, or forswear it? Mrs. These ears of mine, thou knowest, did hear thee: Fye on the wretch! 'tis pity, that thou liv'st To walk where any honest man resort.
Enter Adriana, Luciana, Courtezian, and others.

Adr. Hold, hurt him not, for God's sake; he is mad;
Some get within him, take his sword away:
Bind him thereto, and bear them to my house.

Dro. S. Run, master, run; for God's sake, take a house.
This is some priory,—in, or we are spoil'd.

Enter the Abbess.

Abb. Be quiet, people; Wherefore throng you hither?
Atro. To fetch my poor distracted husband hence;
Let us come in, that we may bind him fast,
And bear him home for his recovery.
Ang. I knew, he was not in his perfect wits.
Mrr. I am sorry now, that I did draw on him.
Abb. How long hath this possession held the man?

Atro. This week he hath been heavy, sour, sad,
And much, much different from the man he was;
But, till this afternoon, his passion
Ne'er brake into extremity of rage.
Abb. Hath he not lost much wealth by wreck at sea?
Buried some dear friend? Hath not else his eye Stray'd his affection in unlawful love?
A sin, prevailing much in youthful men,
Who give their eyes the liberty of gazing.
While of these sorrows is he subject to?
Atro. To none of these, except it be the last; Namely, some love, that drew him oft from home.
Abb. You should for that have reprehended him.
Atro. Why, so I did.
Abb. Ay, but not rough enough.
Atro. As roughly, as my modesty would let me;
Abb. Happily, in private.
Atro. Ay, but not enough.
Abb. It was the copy of our conference:
In bed, he slept not for my urging it;
At board, he fed not for my urging it;
Alone, it was the subject of my theme;
In company, I often glanced it;
Still did I tell him it was vile and bad.

Abb. And thereof came it, that the man was
The venom clamours of a Jealous woman
Poison more deadly than a mad dog's tooth.
It seems, their senses were hinder'd by thy railing:
And therefore comes it, that his head is light.
Thou say'st, his meat was sav'd with thy upbraidings:
Unquet meals make ill digestions,
Thereof the raging fire of few brood;
And what's a fever but a fit of madness?
Thou say'st, his sports were hinder'd by thy brawl's;
Sweet refection bair'd, what doth ensue,
But moody and dull melancholy,
(against to grim and comfortless despair;) And, at her heels, a huge infectious troop
Of pale distempers, and foes to life?
In food, in sport, and life-preserving rest
To be distrest, would mad or man, or beast:
The consequence is then, thy jealous fits
Have scar'd thy husband from the use of wits.

Luc. She never reprehended him but mildly,
When he demean'd himself rough, rude, and wildly:
Why bear you these rebukes, and answer not? Atro. She did betray me to my own reproof.—
God, people, enter, and lay hold on him.
Abb. No, not a creature enters in my house.

Atro. Then, let your servants bring my husband forth.

Abb. Neither; he took this place for sanctuary,
And it shall privilege him from your hands,
Till I have brought him to his wits again,
Or lose my labour in assaying it.

Adr. I will attend my husband, be his nurse,
Diet his sickness, for it is my office.
And I have no horse, but myself;
And therefore let me have him home with me.

Abb. Be patient: for I will not let him stir,
Till I have used the approved means I have,
With wholesome baths, syrups, drugs, and holy prayers,
To make of him a formal man again.
It is a branch and parcel of mine oath,
A charitable duty of my order;
Therefore depart, and leave him here with me.

Adr. I will not hence, and leave my husband here;
And ill it doth beseein your holiness,
To separate the husband and the wife.

Abb. Be quiet, and depart, thou shalt not have [Exit Abbess.

Luc. Complain unto the duke of this indignity.

Adr. Come, go; I will fall prostrate at his feet,
And never rise until my tears and prayers
Have won his grace to come in person hither,
And take perforce my husband from the abbess.

Mer. By this, I think, the dial points at five.
Anon, I am sure, the duke himself in person
Comes this way to the melancholy vale;
The place of death and sorry execution,
Behind the ditches of the abbey here.

Ang. Upon what cause?

Mer. To see a reverend Syracusan merchant,
Who put not ill into this by his way,
Against the laws and statutes of this town,
Beheaded publickly for his offence.

Ang. See, where they come; we will behold his death.

Luc. Kneel to the duke, before he pass the abbey.

Enter Duke, attended; Egecon, have-headed; with the Headsmen and other Officers.

Duke. Yet once again proclaim it publickly,
If any friend will pay the sum for him,
He shall not die, so much we tender him.

Adr. Justice, most sacred duke, against the abbess!

Duke. She is a virtuous and a reverend lady;
It cannot be, that she hath done thee wrong.

Adr. May it please your grace, Antipholus, my—

Whom I made lord of me and all I had,
At your important letters,—this ill day
A most outrageous fit of madness took him;
That day he didst he barre him through the street,
(With him his bondman, all as mad as he,)—
Doing displeasure to the citizens
By rushing in their houses, bearing thence rings, jewels, any thing his rage did like.
Once did I get him bound, and sent him home, whilst to take order for the wrongs I went,
That here and there his fury had committed.
Anon, I wot not by what strong escape,
He broke from those that had the guard of him;
And, with his mad attendant and himself,
Each one with ireful passion, with drawn swords,
Met us again, and, madly bent on us,
Chased us away; till, raising of more aid,
We came again to bind them; they then fled into this abbey, whither we pursued them;
And here the abbess shuts the gates on us,
And were now suffer us to fetch him out.
Nor send him forth, that we may bear him hence.
Therefore, most gracious duke, with thy command,
Let him be brought forth, and done hence for help.

Duke. Since he, thy servant serv'd me in my wars,
And to thee engag'd a prince's word,
When thou didst make him master of thy bed,
To do thy will the grace and good I could,—
Go, some of you, knock at the abbey-gate,
And bid the lady abbess come to me;
I will determine this, before I stir.
Enter a Servant.

Serr. 0 mistress, mistress, shift and save yourself! My master and his man are both broke loose, Beaten the maids a-row, and bound the doctor, Whose beard they have singed off with brands of fire; And even as it bled, they threw on him Great pall's of puddled mire to quench his head: My master prays patience to him, while His man with scissars ticks him like a fool: And sure, unless you send some present help, Between them they will kill the conjurer.

Adr. Peace, fool, thy master and his man are here; And that is false, thou dost report to us.

Serr. Mistress, upon my life, I tell you true; I have not breath'd almost, since I did see it. He cries for you, and vows, if he can take you, To scour your face, and to disfigure you. [Cry within.

Hark, hark, I hear him, mistress; fly, be gone.

Duke. Come, stand by me, fear nothing: Guard with halberds.

Adr. Ah me, it is my husband! Witness you That he is borne about invisible!

Ever now we bow'd him in the abbey here; And now he's there, past thought of human reason.

Enter Antipholus and Dromio of Ephesus.

And. E. Justice, most gracious duke, oh, grant me justice!

Even for the space that long since I did thee, When he escort thee in the wars, and took Deep scars to save thy life; even for the blood That then I lost for thee, now grant me justice.

Ege. Unless the fear of death doth make me see my son Antipholus, and Dromio.

And. E. Justice, sweet prince, against that woman there,

She who with gav'st to me to be my wife; That hath abused and dishonour'd me, Even in the strength and height of injury! Beyond imagination is the wrong,

That she this day hath shameless thrown on me.

Duke. Discover how, and thou shalt find me just.

And. E. This day, great duke, she shut the doors upon me,

While she with her adicts feasted in my house.

Duke. A grievous fault: Say, woman, didst thou so?

Adv. No, my good lord; myself, he, and my sister

To-day did dine together: So befal my soul, As this is false, he burdens me withal!

Locr. Never may I look on day, nor sleep on night, But she tells to your highness simple truth.

And. E. My liege, I am advised what I say; Neither disturb'd with the effect of wine, Nor beastly rash, provok'd with raging ire, Albeit, my wrongs might make one wiser mad.

This woman lock'd me out this day from dinner; That godsmill there, were he not pack'd with her, Could was it, for he was with me then;

Who parted with me to go fetch a chain, Promising to bring it to the Porcupine, Where Balthazar and I did dine together. On the same day, and we not meeting either, I went to seek him: In the street I met him;

And in his company, that gentleman.

There did this perkjur'd godsmith swear me down, That I this day of him receiv'd the chain, Which, per he knows, I saw not: for the which, He did arrest me with an officer.

I did obey; and sent my peasant home For certain dorcats: He with none return'd.

Then fairly I bespake the officer,

To go in person with me to my house.

By the way we met

My wife, her sister, and a rabbler more

Of vile confederates: along with them

They brought one Pinch; a hungry lean furred villain.

A mere anatomy, a mountebank,

A threadbare juggler, and a fortune-teller; A needy, hollow-eyed, sharp-looking wretch A living dead man; this pernicious slave,

Forsworn, took on him as a conjurer:

And gazing in mine eyes, feeling my pulse,

And with no face, as 'twere, outfacting me,

Cries out, was possess'd: then altogether

They fell upon me, bound me, bore me thence;

And in a dark and dankish vault at home

There left me and my man, both bound together;

Till gnawing with my teeth my bonds in sunder,

I gain'd my freedom, and immediately

Ran hither to your grace: whom I beseech To give me ample satisfaction

For these deep shames, and great indignities.

Adv. My lord, in truth, thus far I witness with him;

That he did not at home, but was lock'd out.

Duke. But had he such a chain of thee, or no?

And. He sent, my lord: and when he ran in here,

These people saw the chain about his neck.

Mrs. Besides, I will be sworn, these ears of mine Heard him, as I was passing, you had the chain of him.

After you first foresaw it on the mat,

And, thereupon I drew my sword on you;

And then you fled into this abbey here,

From whence, I think, you are in my miracle.

Adv. And now never came within these abbey wall,

Nor ever didst thou draw thy sword on me;

I saw the chain, so help me! I !

And this is false, you burden me withal.

Duke. Whate'er what an intricate impeachment is this,

I think, you all have drank of Circe's cup.

If here you bow'd him, here he would have been:

If he were mad, he would not plead so coldly—

You said, he dined at home; the goldsmith here

Denies that saying: Sirrah, what say you?

Dro. E. Sir, he dined with her there, at the Porcupine.

Cour. I am told: and from my finger am atch'd that ring.

And. E. 'Tis true, my liege, this ring I had of her.

Duke. But 'st thou him enter at the abbey here?

Cour. As sure, my liege, as I do see your grace.

Duke. Why, this is strange:—Go call the abbess hither;

I think, you are all mated, or stark mad.

[Exit an Attendant.

Ege. Most mighty duke, voucheas me speak a word,

Haply, I see a friend will save my life,

And pay the sum that may deliver me.

Ege. Is not your name, sir, call'd Antipholus?

And is not that your bondman Dromio?

Dro. E. Within this hour, I was his bondman, sir,

But he, I thank him, gnaw'd in two my cords:

Now am I Dromio, and his man, unbound.

Ege. Sir, I am one, you both of you remember me.

Dro. E. Ourselves we do remember, sir, by you;

For lately we were bound, as you are now.

You are not Pinch's patient, are you, sir?

Ege. Did you ever saw one strange on you? you know me well.

And. E. I never saw you in my life, till now.

Ege. Oh I grief hath chang'd me, since you saw me now;

And careful hear's, with Time's deformed hand,

Haply to write strange deceivers in my face;

But tell me yet, dost thou not know my voice?

And. E. Neither.

Ege. Dromio, nor thou?

Dro. E. No, trust me, sir, nor I.
Duke Menanphon, your most renowned uncle.

Adr. Which of you two did dine with me to-day?

Ant. S. I, gentle mistress.

Adr. And are not you my husband?

Ant. E. No, I say nay to that.

Ant. S. And so do I, yet did she call me so.

And this fair gentlewoman, her sister here, Did call me brother, — so, keep I told you then, I hope, I shall have leisure to make good:

If this be not a dream I see and hear.

Ang. That is the chain, sir, which you had of me.

Ant. S. I think it be, sir; I deny it not.

Ant. E. And you, sir, for this chain arrested me.

Ang. I think I did, sir; I deny it not.

Ant. S. I sent you money, sir, to lie your ball,

By Dromio; but I think he brought it not.

Dro. E. No, none by me.

Ant. S. This purse of ducats I receive'd from you, And Dromio my man did bring them me:

I see, we still did meet each other's man, And I was glad to see him, and he for me,

And thereupon these Errors are arose.

Ant. E. These ducats pawn I for my father here.

Duke. It shall not need, thy father hath his life.

Cour. Sir, I must have that diamond from you.

Ant. E. There, take it; and much thanks for my good cheer.

Abb. Renowned duke, vouchsafe to take the pains To go in us into the Abbey here.

And hear at large discoursed all our fortunes:

And all that are assembled in this place, That by this sympathized one day's error

And these two Dromio's, that lay at host, sir, in the Centaur.

That kitchent'd me for you to-day at dinner:

She now shall be my sister, not my wife.

Dro. E. Methinks, you are my glass, and not my brother:

I see by you, I am a sweet-faced youth.

Will you walk in to see their gossiping?

Dro. S. Not I, sir; you are my elder.

Dro. E. That's a question: how shall we try it?

Dro. S. We will draw cuts for the senior; till then, lead thou first.

Dro. E. Nay, then thus:

We came into the world like brother and brother: And now let's go hand in hand, not one before another.
MACBETH.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

Seyton, an officer attending on Macbeth.
Son to Macduff.
An English Doctor. A Scotch Doctor.

Lady Macbeth.
Lady Macduff.
Gentlewoman attending on Lady Macbeth.
Hecate, and three Witches.

SCENE,—in the end of the Fourth Act, lies in England: through the rest of the Play, in Scotland; and, chiefly, at Macbeth's Castle.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—An open Place. Thunder and Lightning.

Enter three Witches.

Witches enowish.

1 Witch. When shall we three meet again, In thunder, lightning, or in rain ?
2 Witch. When the hurlyburly's done, When the battle's lost and won:
3 Witch. That will be ere the set of sun.
1 Witch. Where the place ?
2 Witch. Upon the heath.
3 Witch. There to meet with Macbeth.
1 Witch. I come, Graymalkin !
All. Paddock calls,—Anon.
Fair is foul, and foul is fair ;
Never through the fog and filthy air.

SCENE II.—A Camp near Forres. \[A Storm within.\]

Enter King Duncan, Malcolm, Donalbain, Lenox, with Attendants, meeting a bleeding Soldier.

Dun. What bloody man is this? He can report, As seemeth by his plight, of the revolt
The newest state.

Mal. This is the sergeant, Who, like a good and hardy soldier, fought Against my captivity:—Half, brave friend ! Say to the king the knowledge of the broil, As thou disted leave it.

Sol. Doubtful it stood;
As to spend swimmers, that do cling together, And chock their art. The merciless Macdonwald (Worthy to be a rebel ; nor to that, The multiplying villanies of nature Do swarm upon him,) from the western isles Of Kerness and Gallowglasses is supplied: And fortune, on his damned quarrel smiling, Show'd like a rebel's whore ; But all's too weak : For brave Macbeth, (well he deserves that name,) Dismaying fortune, with his brandish'd steel, Which smock'd with bloody execution, Like valor's munion, Car'd out his passage, till he face the slave ; And never shook hands, nor bade farewell to him, Till he unseam'd him from the nave to the chaps, And fix'd his head upon our battlements. Dun. O, valiant cousin! worthy gentleman !
Sold. As whence the sun 'gins his reflection Shipwrecking storms and direful thunders break : So from that spring, whence comfort seem'd to come. Discomfort swells. Mark, king of Scotland, mark : No sooner justice had, with valour arm'd, Scene III.—A Hostile Thunder.

Enter the three Witches.

1 Witch. Where hast thou been, sister?
3 Witch. Sister, where thou?
1 Witch. A sailor's wife had chestnuts in her lap,
And mouch'd, and mouch'd, and mouch'd:—

Aroint thee, witch! the rump-fed roncy cries.
Here husband's to Aleppo gone, master o'the Tiger:
But in a sleeve I'll thither sail,
And, like a rat without a tail,
I'll do, I'll do, and I'll do.
2 Witch. I'll give thee a wind.
3 Witch. Thou art kind.
2 Witch. And I another.
1 Witch. I myself have all the other;
And the very ports they blow,
All the quarters that they know
I'll the shipman's card.
I will drain him dry as hay:
Sleep shall, neither night nor day,
Hang upon his pent-house lid;
He shall live a man forbid:
Weary s'rnights, nine times nine,
Shall he dwindle, peak, and pine:
Though his bark cannot be lost,
Yet it shall be tempest-toss'd.
Look what I have.
2 Witch. Show me, show me.
1 Witch. Here I have a pilot's thumb,
Wreck'd, as homework he did come.

Enter Macbeth and Banquo.

Macb. So foul and fair a day I have not seen.
Ban. How far is 'tis call'd to Fores?—What are these things that?
So wither'd, and so wild in their attire;
That look not like the inhabitants o'the earth,
And yet are 'on? Live you? or are you aught
That man may question? You seem to understand me,
By each at once her choppy finger laying
Upon her skinny lips:—You should be women,
And yet your beards forbid me to interpret
That you are so.

Macb. Speak, if you can;—What are you?
1 Witch. All hail, Macbeth! hail to thee, thane of Glamis!
2 Witch. All hail, Macbeth! hail to thee, thane of Cawdor!
3 Witch. All hail, Macbeth! that shalt be king hereafter.

Ban. Good sir, why do you start; and seem to fear
Things that do sound so fair?—The name of truth,
Are ye fantastical, or that indeed
Which outwardly ye show? My noble partner
You greet with present grace, and great prediction
Of noble having, and of royal hope,
That he seems rapt to me; to me you speak not:
If you can look into the seeds of time,
And say, which grain will grow, and which will not;
Speak to me, who neither beg, nor fear,
Your favours, nor your hate.
1 Witch. Hail!
2 Witch. Hail!
3 Witch. Hail!
1 Witch. Lesser than Macbeth, and greater.
2 Witch. Not so happy, yet much happier.

3 Witch. Thou shalt get kingdoms, though thou be none:
So all hail, Macbeth and Banquo!

1 Witch. Banquo, and Macbeth, all hail!

Macb. Nay, you imperfect speakers, tell me more:
By Sinel's death, I know, I am thane of Glamis;
But how of Cawdor? the thane of Cawdor lives,
A prosperous gentleman; and so to king.
Stands not within the prospect of belief.
No more to thane of Cawdor. Say, from whence
You owe this strange intelligence? or why
Upon the blast how dost thou stop our way
With such prophetic greeting?—Speak, I charge you.

[Witches vanish.

Ban. The earth hath bubbles, as the water has,
And these are of them; Whither are they vanish'd?

Macb. Into the air: and what seem'd corporal, melted
As breath into the wind.—Would they had staid!

Ban. Were such things here, as we do speak out?
Or have we eaten of the insane root,
That takes the reason prisoner?

Macb. Your children shall be kings.

Ban. You shall be king.

Macb. And thane of Cawdor too; went it not so?

Ban. To the self-same tune, and words. Who's here?

Enter Rosse and Angus.

Rosse. The king hath happily receiv'd, Macbeth,
The news of thy success: and when he reads
Thy personal venture: the rebels' fight,
His wonders and his praises do contend,
Which should be thine, or his: Silenc'd with that,
In viewing o'er the rest o'the self-same day,
He finds thee in the stout Norwegan ranks,
Nothing asfear'd of what thyself didst make,
Strange images of death. As thick as tale,
Came post with post; and every one did bear
Thy praises in his kingdom's great defence,
And pour'd them down before him.

Ang. We are sent,
To give thee, from our royal master, thanks;
To herald thee into his sight, not pay thee.

Rosse. And, for an earnest of a greater honour,
He bade me, from him, call thee thane of Cawdor;
In which addition, hail, most worthy thane!

For it is thine.

Ban. What, can the devil speak true?

Macb. The thane of Cawdor lives; Why do you dress me
In borrow'd robes?

Ang. Who was the thane, lives yet;
But under heavy judgment be that life
Which he deserves to lose. Whether he was Comb'd with Norway; or did line the rebel
With hidden help and vantage; or that with both
He labour'd in his country's wreck; I know not;
But treasons capital, confess'd, and prov'd,
Have overthrown him.

Macb. Glamis, and thane of Cawdor:
The greatest is behind.—Thanks for your pains.
Do you not hope your children shall be kings,
When those that gave the thane of Cawdor to me,
Promis'd no less to them?

Ban. That, trusted home,
Might yet enkindle you unto the crown,
Besides the thane of Cawdor. But 'tis strange:
And oftentimes, to win us to our harm,
The instrument of darkness tell us truths;
Win us with honest trivial, to betray us
In deepest consequences.—

Cousins, a word, I pray you.

Macb. Two truths are told,
As happy prologues to the swelling act
Of the imperial theme.—I thank you, gentlemen.

This supernatural soliciting
Cannot be ill; cannot be good:—If ill,
Why hath it grace? if good, why dost thou
Commencing in a truth? I am thane of Cawdor
If good, why do I yield to that suggestion When horror image death on my brow, And make my seated heart knock at my ribs, Against the use of nature? Present fears Are less than horrible imaginings: My thought, whose murder yet is but fantastical, Shakes so my single state of man: that function Is smoother'd in surmise; and nothing is, But what is not.

But. Look, how our partner's rapt. Mac. If chance will have me king, why, chance may crown me, Without my stir.

Dun. New honours come upon him Like our strange garments; clean not to their mould, But with the aid of use.

Mac. Come what come may; Time and the hour runs through the roughest day.

Dun. Worthy Macbeth, we stay upon your leisure. Mac. Give me your favour:—my dull brain was wronged With things forgotten. Kind gentlemen, your pains Are register'd where every day I turn The leaf to read them.—Let us toward the king— Those whose good memories can; and, at more time, The interim having weight'd it, let us speak Our free hearts each to other.

Dun. Very gladly. Mac. Tell then, enough.—Come, friends. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Fore's. A Room in the Palace.

Flourish. Enter Duncan, Malcolm, Donalbain, Lenox, and Attendants.

Dun. Is execution done on Cawdor? Are not Those in commission yet return'd?

Mac. My liege, They are not yet come back. But I have spoke With one that saw him die: who did report, That very frankly he confess'd his treasons; I made his highness' pardon; and, at forth A deep repentance: nothing in his life Became him, like the leaving it; he died As one that had been studi'd in his death, To throw away the dearest thing he owed, As 'twere a careless trifle.

Dun. There's no art, To find the mind's construction in the face: He was a gentleman on whom I built An absolute trust. O worthless counsel! Enter Macbeth, Banquo, Rosse, and Angus.

The sin of my ingratitude even now Was heavy on me: thou art so far before, That swiftest wing of recemem'pse is slow To overtake thee. Would thou hadst less reser'd; That the proportion both of thanks and payment Might have been mine! only I have left to say, More is thy due than more than all can pay.

Mac. The service and the loyalty I owe, In doing it, pays itself. Your highness' part Is to receive our duties: and our duties Are to your throne and state, children, and servants: Which do but what they should, by doing every thing Safe toward your love and honour.

Dun. Welcome hither: I have begun to plant thee, and will labour To make thee full of growing.—Noble Banquo, That patient serving, serv'd, and is serv'd, meantime be known No less to have done so, let me insolv thee, And hold thee to my heart.

Dun. There if I grow,

Th' harvest is your own.

Mac. My plenteous joys, Wanton in fulness, seek to hide themselves In drops of sorrow.—Sons, kinsmen, thanes, And you whose places are the nearest, know, We will establish our estate upon

Our eldest, MACBETH, shall be name hereafter The prince of Cumberland: which honour must Not, unaccompanied, invest him only, But signs of nobleness, like stars, shall shine On all deserters.—From hence to Inverness, And be at home to me.

Mac. The rest is labour, which is not us'd for you: I'll be myself the harbinger, and make joyful The happy issue of your wife with your approach; So, humbly take my leave.

Dun. My worthy Cawdor!

Mac. The prince of Cumberland!—That is a title On which I must fall down, or else o'er- leap;

[Aside.

For in my way it lies, Stars, hide your fires! Let not light see my black and deep desires: The eye wink at the hand! yet let that be, Which the eye fears, when it is done, to see.

[Exit.

Dun. True, worthy Banquo; he is full so valiant And in his commendations I am fed: It is a banquet to me. Let us after him, Whose care is gone before to bid us welcome: It is a peerless kinman.

Flourish. Exit.

SCENE V.—Inverness. A Room in Macbeth's Castle.

Enter Lady Macbeth, reading a letter.

Lady M. They met me in the day of success; and I have learnt by the perfect and full report, they have more in them than mortal knowledge. When I burned in desire to question them further, they made themselves—air, into which they vanished. While I stood rapt in the wonder of it, came worthy letters from the king, who all-hail'd me, Thane of Cawdor; by which title, before, these weird sisters salut'd me, and refer'd me to the coming on of time, with, I fill, king that shall be! This have I thought good to deliver thee, my nearest partner of greatness; that thou might'st not lose the dues of rejoicing, by being ignorant of what greatness is promised thee. Lay it to thy heart, and farewell.

Glamis thou art, and Cawdor; and shalt be What thou art promis'd.—Yet do I fear thy nature; It is too full o' the milk of human kindness, To catch the nearest way; thou wouldst be great; Art notxyour thoughts too full o' thoughts? Or do thy thoughts run in these jumps And have no big houses to live in? The illnes should attend it. What thou would'st highly, That would'st thus holily; would'st not play false, And yet would'st wrongly win: thou'dst have,

That which cries, Thus thou must do, if thou have it: And that which thou hast done, lest fear to do, Than which thou shouldst be undone. If thee bith, that I may pour my spirits in thine ear; And chastise with the valour of my tongue All that impedes thee from the golden round, Which fate and metaphysical aid doth seem To have thee crown'd withal.—What is your tidings?

Enter an Attendant.

Att. The king comes here to-night.

Lady M. Thou'tr mad to say it: Is not thy master with him? who, wer't so, Would not have inform'd for preparation.

Att. So please you, is true; our thane is coming: One of my fellows had the speed of him; Who, since devise for breath, had scarcely more Than would make up his message.

Lady M. Give him tending, he brings great news. The raven himself is hoarse, [Exit Attendant.

That croaks the fatal entrance of Duncan.
Under my battlements. Come, come, you spirits
That tend on mortal deaths, unsheal me here;
And fill me, from the crown to the toe, top-full
Of direst cruelty! make thick my blood,
Stop up the access and passage to remorse;
That no compunctious visitings of nature
Shake my fell purpose, nor keep peace between
The effect, and it! Come to my woman's breasts,
And take my milk for gall, you murthering ministers.
Wherever in your sightless substances
You wait on nature's mischief! Come, thick night,
And pall thee in the dunnest smoke of hell!
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes;
Nor heaven peep through the blanket of the dark,
To cry, Hold, hold! (Enter, Great Glamis! worthy Cawdor!)

Enter Macbeth.

Greater than both, by the all-hail hereafter!
Thy letters have transported me beyond
This ignorant present, and I feel now
The future in the instant.
Macb. My dearest love,
Duncan comes here to-night.
Lady M. And when goes hence?
Macb. To-morrow,—as he purpurses.

Shall sun that morrow see!
Your face, my thame, is as a book, where men
May read strange matters;—To beguile the time,
Look like the time; bear welcome in your eye,
Your hand, your tongue: look like the innocent
flow'r,
But be the serpent under it. He's that's coming Must be provided for: and you shall put
This night's great business into my despatch;
Which shall to all our nights and days to come
Give solely sovereign sway and masterdom.
Macb. We will speak further.
Lady M. Only look up clear;
To alter favour ever is to fear:
Leave all the rest to me.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—The same. Before the Castle.

Hautboys. Servants of Macbeth attending.

Enter Duncan, Malcolm, Donalbain, Banquo, Lenox, Macduff, Rossy, Angus, and Attendants.

Dun. This castle hath a pleasant seat; the air
Nimbly and sweetly recommends itself
Unto our gentle senses.
Ban. This guest of summer,
The temple-haunting marlet, does approve,
By his loud murmuring, that the heaven's breath
Smells wooingly here: no jutty, frieze, buttress,
Nor coigne of vantage, but this bird hath made
His pendent bed, and procreant cradle: Where they Most breed and haunt, I have observe'd, the air
Is delicate.

Enter Lady Macbeth.

Dun. See, see! our honour'd hostess!
The love that follows us, sometime is our trouble,
Which still we thank as love. Herein I teach you,
And you shall bid God yield us your pains,
And thank us for your trouble.
Lady M. All our service
In every point twice done, and then done double,
Were poor and single business, to contend
Against those honours deep and broad, wherewith
Your majesty loads our house: For those of old,
And the late dignities heap'd up to them,
We rest our hermitage.
Where's the thane of Cawdor?
We cours'd him at the heels, and had a purpose
To be his purveyor: but he rides well;
And his great love, sharp as his spur, hath help
To his home before us; Fair and noble hostess,
We are your guest to-night.

Lady M. Your servants ever Have theirs, themselves, and what is theirs, in compt,
To make their audit at your highness' pleasure,
Still to return your own.
Dun. Give me your hand:
Conduct me to mine host; we love him highly,
And shall continue our graces towards him.
By your leave, hostess.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—The same. A Room in the Castle.

Hautboys a'd torches. Enter, and pass over the stage, a Servew, and divers Servants with dishes and service. Then enter Macbeth.

Macb. If it were done, when 'tis done,
'twere well
It were done quickly: If the assassination
Could tremble up the consequence, and catch,
With his surcease, success; that but this blow
Might be the be-all and the end-all here,—
But here, upon this bank and shoal of time,—
We'd jump the life to come.—But in these cases,
We still have judgment here; that we but teach
Bloody instructions, which being taught, return
To plague the inventor: This even-handed justice
Commends the ingredients of our poison'd chalice
To our own lips. He's here in double trust:
First, as I am his kinsman and his subject,
Strong both against the deed: then, as his host,
Who should against his murderer shut the door,
Not bear the knife myself. Besides, this Duncan Hath borne his faculties so meek, hath been
So clear in his great office, that his virtues
Will plead like angels, trumpet-tongued, against
The deep damnation of his taking-off;
And pity, like a naked new-born babe,
Striding the blast, or heaven's cherubim, hors'd
Upon the sightless couriers of the air,
Shall bow the hirord deed in every eye,
That tears shall drown the wind.—I have no spur
To prick the sides of my intent, but only
Vaulting ambition, which o'er-leaps itself.
And falls on the other.—How now, what news?

Enter Lady Macbeth.

Lady M. He has almost supp'd: Why have you left the chamber?
Macb. Hath he ask'd for me?
Lady M. Know you not, he has?
Macb. We will proceed no further in this business:
He hath honour'd me of late; and I have bought
Golden opinions from all sorts of people,
Which would be worn now in their newest gloss,
Not cast aside so soon.
Lady M. Was the hope drunk,
Wherein you dress'd yourself? hath it slept since?
And wakes it now, to look so green and pale
At what it did so freely? From this time,
Such I account thy love. Art thou afeard
To be the same in thine own act and valour,
As thou art in desire? Would'st thou have that
Which thou esteem'st the ornament of life,
And live a coward in thine own esteem;
Letting I dare not wait upon I would,
Like the poor cat i' the adage?

Macb. P'rythee, peace; I dare do all that may become a man;
Who dares do more, is none.

Lady M. What beast was it then,
That made you break this engagement?
When you durst do it, then you were a man;
And, to be more than what you were, you would Be so much more the man. "'Nor time, nor place,
Did then the ceremony of our action,
Have they made themselves, and that their fitness
now
Does unmake you. I have given such; and know
How tender 'tis, to love the babe that milks me:

Act I.

MACBETH.

265
I would, while it was smiling in my face,
Have pluck'd d my nipple from his home-sick gums,
And dash'd the brains out, had I so sworn, as you
Have done to this.

Mach. If we should fail,—
Lady M. We fail!
But serve your courage to the sticking place,
And we'll not fail. When Duncan is a sleep, (Where'er the rather shall his day's hard journey Soundly invite him,) his two chamberlains
Will I with wine and wassel so convince,
That no memory, the wander of the brain,
Shall be a flame, and the receipt of reason
A Ummeck only: When in twinnish sleep
Their drenched natures lie, as in a death,
What cannot you and I perform upon.
The unguarded Duncan? what not put upon
His speny officers; who shall bear the guilt
Of our great quell?

For thy undaunted mettle should compose
Nothing but males. Will it not be receiv'd,
When we have mark'd d with blood those sleepy two of his own chamber, and as'd their very daggers,
That they have done?—
Lady M.
Who dares receive it other,
As we shall make our griefs and clamour rear
Upon his death?
Mach. I am settled, and bend up
Each corporal agent to this terrible fest.
Away, and mock the time with fairest shew:
False face must hide what the false heart doth know.
[Exit.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The same. Court within the Castle.

Enter Banquo and Fleance, and a Servant with a torch before them.

Ban. How goes the night, boy?
Fle. The moon is down; I have not heard the Ban. And she goes down at twelve. [clock.
Fle. I take it, 'tis later, sir:
Ban. Hold, take my sword,—There's husbandry in heaven,
Their candles are all out.—Take thee that too.
A heavy summons lies like lead upon me,
And yet I would not sleep: Merciful powers!
Restrain in me the cursed thoughts, that nature
Gives way to in repose!—Give me my sword:

Enter Macbeth, and a Servant with a torch.

Who's there?
Mach. A friend.

Ban. What, sir, not yet at rest? The king's
He hath been in unusual pleasure, and [as bed
Sent forth great largess to your offices;
This diamond be yours wine withal,
By the name of most kind hostess; and shut up
In measureless content.

Mach. Being unprepared,
Our will became the servant to defect;
Which else should free have wrought.
Ban. All's well.
I dreamt last night of the three weird sisters:
To you they have show'd some truth.

Mach. I think not of them d
When you can entreat an hour to serve,
Would spend it in some words upon that business,
If you would grant the time.

Ban. At your kind'st leisure.
Mach. If you shall cleave to my consent,—when
It shall make honour for you. [Exit.
Ban. So I lose none,
In seeking to augment it, but still keep
My bosom franchis'd, and allegiance clear,
I shall be counsel'd.

Mach. Good repose, the while!
Ban. Thanks, sir; The like to you!
[Exit Banquo.

Macb. Go, bid thy mistress, when my drink is ready,
She strike upon the bell. Get thee to bed.
[Exit Servant.

Is this a dagger which I see before me,
The handle toward my hand? Come, let me clutch
I have thee not, and yet I see thee still.
Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible
To feeling, as to sight? or art thou but
A dagger of the mind: a false creation,
Proceeding from the heat-oppressed brain?
I see thee yet, in form as palpable
As this which now I draw.
Mor. Shall I mar'st be the way that I was going:
And such an instrument I was to use.
Mine eyes are made the fools o' the other senses,
Or else worth all the rest: I see thee still;
And on thy blade, and dudgeon, gouts of blood,
Which was not so before.—There's no such thing:
It is the bloody business, which informs
Thus to mine eyes,—Now o'er the one half world
Nature seems dead, and wicked dreams abuse
The curtain's sleep; now witchcraft celebrates Prelate of the west wind: and with her murder,
Alarum'd by his sentinels, the wolf,
Whose howls his watch, thus with his stealthy pace.

With Trevelin's ravishing strides, towards his design
Moves like a ghost:—Thou sure and firm-set earth,
Hear not my steps, which way they walk, for fear
Thy very stones prate of my where-about,
And take the present horror from the time,
Which now suits with it.—Whiles I threat, he Words to the heat of deeds too cold breath gives:
[Bell rings.

I go, and it is done; the bell invites me.
Hear not, Macbeth; for it is a knell.
That summons thee to heaven, or to hell.
[Exit.

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter Lady Macbeth.

Lady M. That which hath made them drunk hath made me bold;

What hath gench'd them, hath given me fire:
Hark!—Peace!
It was the owl that shriek'd, the fatal bellman,

Which gives the stern'st good night. He is about it:

The dogs are起来了; and the surfeited grooms
Do mock their charge with snores: I have drugg'd their possets,
That death and nature do contend about them,
Whether they live, or die.
Mach. [Within.] Who's there?—what, ho!
Lady M. Alack! I am afraid they have awak'd,
And 'tis not done:—the attempt, and not the deed,
Confounds us:—Hark!—I laid their daggers ready,
He could not miss them:—Had he not resembled
My father as he slept, I had done't.—My husband?

Enter Macbeth.

Mach. I have done the deed:—Didst thou not hear a noise?

Lady M. I heard the owl scream, and the crickets
Did not you speak?— [cry.
Mach. [Within.] Who's there?
Lady M. Now.
Mach. [Within.] Who's there?
Lady M. Ay.
Mach. [Within.] Hark!—
Who lies I' the second chamber?
Lady M. Donalbain.
Mach. This is a sorry sight.
[Looking on his hands.
Lady M. A foolish thought, to say a sorry sight.
Mach. There's one did laugh in his sleep, and one cried, murder!
Act 2.

MACBETH.

That they did wake each other; I stood and heard them:
But they did say their prayers, and address'd them
Again to sleep.

Lady M. There are two lodg'd together.

Macb. One cried, God bless us! and, Amen, the other;
As they had seen me with these hangman's hands.
Listening to their fear, I could not say, amen,
When they did say, God bless us.

Lady M. Consider it not so deeply.

Macb. But wherefore could I not pronounce,
I had most need of blessing, and amen
Stuck in my throat.

Lady M. These deeds must not be thought
After these ways; so, it will make a mad.

Macbeth methought, I heard a voice cry, Sleep no more!

Macbeth does murder sleep, the innocent sleep;
Sleep, that knits up the ravell'd sleave of care,
The death of each day's life, sore labour's bath,
Balm of hurt minds, great nature's second course,
Chief nourisher in life's feast.

Lady M. What do you mean in it?

Macb. Still it cried, Sleep no more! to all the house:

Glamis hath murdered sleep: and therefore Cawdor
Shall sleep no more, Macbeth shall sleep no more.

Lady M. That was well said: that thus cried why?
worthy thane,
You do unbend your noble strength, to think
So brain-sickly of things—Go, get some water,
And wash this filthy witness from your hand.—
Why did you bring these daggers from the place?
They must lie there: Go, carry them; and smear
The sleepy grooms with blood.

Macb. I'll go no more: I am afraid to think what I have done;

Look on't again, I dare not.

Lady M. Infirm of purpose! Give me the daggers: The sleeping, and the dead.
Are but as pictures: 'tis the eye of childhood,
That fears a painted devil. If he do bleed,
I'll gild the faces of the groans withal,
For it must seem their guilt.

[Exit. Knocking within.

Macb. Whence is that knocking? How is't with me, when every noise appalls me?

What hands are here? Ha! they pluck out mine eyes!

Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood Clean from my hand? No; this my hand will rather
The multitudinous seas incarnadine,
Making the green—one red.

Re-enter Lady Macbeth.

Lady M. My hands are of your colour; but I shame
To wear a heart so white. [Knock.] I hear a knocking

At the south entry—retire we to our chamber; A little water clears us of this deed;
How easy is it then? Your constancy
Hath left you unattended.—[Knocking.] Iark! more knocking:

Get on your nightgown, lest occasion call us,
And show us to be watchers:—Be not lost
So poorly in your thoughts.

Macb. To know my deed,—'twere best not know myself. [Knock.

Wake Duncan with thy knocking; Ay, 'would thou couldst'! [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same.

Enter a Porter. [Knocking within.

Porter. Here's a knocking, indeed! If a man were porter of hell-gate, he should have old turning the key. [Knocking.] Knock, knock, knock; Who's there? 'tis the name of Belzebub! Here's a farmer that hanged himself on the expectation of plenty.

Come in time; have napkins enough about you; here you'll sweat for't. [Knocking.] Knock, knock, Who's there? 'The other devil's name? 'Tis faith, here's an equivocator, that could swear in both the scales against either scale; who committed treason enough for God's sake, yet could not equivocate to heaven: O, come in equivocator. [Knocking.] Knock, knock, knock; Who's there? 'Tis faith, here's an English tailor come hither, for stealing out of a French hose: Come in, tailor; here you may roast your goose. [Knocking.] Knock, knock: Never at quiet! What are you?—But this place is too cold for hell. I'll devil-porter it no further: I had thought to have let in some of all professions, that go the primrose way to the everlasting bonfire. [Knocking.] Anon, anon; I pray you, remember the porter.

[Opens the gate.

Enter Macduff and Lenox.

Macb. Was it so late, friend, ere you went to bed, That you do lie so late?

Port. 'Faith, sir, we were carousing till the second cock: and drink, sir, is a great provoker of three things.

Macb. What three things does drink especially provoke?

Port. Marry, sir, nose-painting, sleep, and urine.

Lechery, sir, it provokes, and it provokes the desire, but it takes away the performance: Therefore, much drink may be said to be an equivocator with lechery: it makes him, and it mars him; it sets him on, and it takes him off; it persuades him, and dishearts him; makes him stand to, and not stand to: in conclusion, equivocates him in a sleep, and, giving him the lie, leaves him.

Macb. I believe, drink gave thee the lie last night.

Port. That it did, sir, 'tis the very throat o' me: But I required him for his lie; and, I think, being too strong for him, though he took up my legs some-time, yet I made a shift to cast him.

Macb. Is thy master stirring?—

Our knocking has awak'd him; here he comes.

[Enter Macbeth.

Len. Good-morrow, noble sir!

Macb. Good-morrow, both! Macd. Is the king stirring, worthy Thane?

Macb. Not yet.

Macb. He did command me to call timely on him; I have almost slipp'd the hour.

Macb. I'll bring you to him. Macb. I know, this is a joyful trouble to you; But yet, 'tis one.

Macb. The labour we delight in, physicks pain. This is the door.

Macb. I'll make so bold to call, For 'tis my limited service. [Exit Macduff.

Len. Goes the king From hence to day?

Macb. He does:—he did appoint so.

Len. The night has been unruly: Where we lay, Our chimneys were blown down: and, as they say, Lamentings heard i' the air; strange screams of death, And prophesying, with accents terrible, Of dire combustion, and confus'd events, New hatch'd to the woeful time. The obscure bird Clamour'd the livelong night: some say, the earth Was feverous, and did shake.

Macb. 'Was a rough night.

Len. My young remembrance cannot parallel A fellow to it.

Re-enter Macduff.

Macd. O horror! horror! horror! Tongue, nor Cannot conceive, nor name thee the novoke; [heart, What's the matter? Macb. Confusion now hath made his master Most sacrilegious murder hath broke ope [piece
The Lord's anointed temple, and stole thence
The life o'the building.

Macb. What is't you say? the life?

Lear. Mean you his majesty?

Macb. Approach the chamber, and destroy your light
With a broad deeper.—Do not bid me speak;
See, and then speak yourselves.—Awake! awake!—

[Exit Macbeth and Lenox.

King the alarm-bell!—Murder! and treason! Lenox. and Donaldbain! Macbeth! awake!

Shake off this drowsy sleep, death's counterfeit,
And look on death itself!—up, up, and see
The great doom's image.—Malcolm! Banquo! Macb. From your graves rise up, and walk like sights,
To countenance this horror!—[Bell rings.}

Enter Lady Macbeth.

Lady M. What's the business, that such a hideous trumpet calls to parley
The sleepers of the house? speak, speak,—

Macb. O, gentle lady,
'Tis not for you to hear what I can speak:
The repetition in a woman's ear,
Would murder as it fell.—O Banquo! Banquo!

Enter Banquo.

Our royal master's murder'd!

Lady M. What, in our house?
Ban. Too cruel, any where. Sir,
Dear Duff, I pr'ythee, contradict thyself,
And say, it is not so.

Re-enter Macbeth and Lenox.

Macb. Had I but died an hour before this chance,
I had liv'd a blessed time; for, from this instant,
There's nothing serious in mortality:
All is but name: renown and grace, is dead,
The wine of life is drawn, and the mere lees
Is left to frag of.

Enter Malcolm and Donaldbain.

Don. What is ams?

Macb. You are, and do not know it:
The spring, the head, the fountain of your blood
Is stopp'd; the very source of it is stopp'd:

Macb. Your royal father's murder'd.

Mal. O, by whom?

Len. Those of his chamber, as it seem'd, had done't;
Their hands and faces were all blood'd with blood,
So were their daggers, which, unwip'd, we found
Upon their pillows:
They mad'd, and were distracted; no man's life
Was to be trusted with them.

Macb. O, yet I do repent me of my fury,
That I did kill them.

Macb. Wherefore did you so?

Macb. Who can be wise, amaz'd, temper'd, and furious,
Loyal and neutral, in a moment? No man:
The expedition of my violent love
Out-ran the reasoner. —Here lay Duncan,
His silver skin lac'd with his golden blood;
And his gash'd stab look'd like a breach in nature
For ruin's wasteful entrance: there, the murder'd
Steep'd in the colours of their trade, their daggers
Unmannerly breach'd with gore: Who could retrain,
That had a heart to love, and in that heart
Touarge, to make his love known?

Lady M. Help me hence, ho! Macb. Look to the lady.

Mal. Why do we hold our tongues,
That most may claim this argument for ours?
Don. What should be spoken here,
Where our fate, hid within an augre-hole,
May rash, and seize us? Let's away; our tears
Are not yet brew'd.

Macb. Not our strong sorrow on
The foot of motion.

Ban. Look to the lady.—

[Exit Macbeth is carried out.

And when we have our naked frailties hid,
That suffer in exposure, let us meet,
And question this most bloody piece of work,
To know it further. Fears and scruples shake us:
In the great hand of God I stand; and, thence,
Against the undivuld' pretence I fight
Of treasonous malice.

Macb. And so do I. All.

Lady, let's briefly put on many readiness;
And meet the hall together.

All. Well contented.

[Exit all but Mal. and Don.

Mal. What will you do? Let's not consort with them:
To show an unfelt sorrow, is an office
Which the false man does easy; I'll to England.
Don. To Ireland, I; our separated fortune
Shall keep us both the safer: where we are,
There's daggers in men's smiles: the near is blood,
The nearer bloody.

Mal. This murderous shaft's that shot.

Ban. Hath not ye lighted; and our safest way
Is, to bend the aim. Therefore, to horse; And let us not be dainty of leave-taking,
But shift away: There's warrant in that theft
Which steals itself, when there's no mercy left.

[Exit.

SCENE IV.—Without the Castle.

Enter Rosse and an old Man.

Old M. Threescore and ten I can remember well:
Within the volume of which time, I have seen
Hours dreadful, and things strange; but this sore
Hath trisled former knowings.

Ros. Ah, good father,
Thou seest, the heavens, as troubled with man's acts,
Threaten his bloody stage: by the clock, 'tis day,
And yet dark night strangles the travailing lamp; —It is night's predominance, or the day's shame,
That darkness does the face of earth intomb,
When living light should kiss it?

Old M. 'Tis unnatural,
Even like the deed that's done. On Tuesday last,
A falcon, bowing in her pride of grace,
Was by a mousing owl hawk'd at, and kill'd.

Ros. And Duncan's horses, (a thing most strange and certain,) Beaslevant, and Ettrick, the mornions of their race,
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out,
Contending 'gainst obedience, as they would make War with mankind.

Old M. 'Tis said, they eat each other.

Ros. They did so; to the amazement of mine eyes,
That look'd upon't. Here comes the good Macduff.—

Enter Macdouff.

How goes the world, sir, now?

Mac. Why, see you not?
Ros. Is't known, who did this more than bloody deed?

Macb. Those that Macbeth hath slain.

Ros. Most bloody. Ails, the day!
What good could they pretend?

Macb. They were soborn'd:
Malcolm and Donaldbain, the king's two sons,
Are stol'n away and fled; which puts upon them
Suspicion of the deed.

Ros. 'Gainst nature still:
Thriftless ambition, that will ravin up
Thine own life's means:—Then 'tis most like,
The sovereignty will fall upon Macbeth.
ACT III.

SCENE I.—Forests. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Banquo.

Ban. Thou hast it now, King, Cowdor, Glamis,
As the weird women promis'd; and, I fear,
Thou play'st most foully fort: yet it was said,
It should not stand in thy posterity;
But that myself should be the root, and father
Of many kings. If there come some truth from them,
(As upon thee, Macbeth, their speeches shine,) Why, by the verities on thee made good,
May they not be my oracles as well,
And set me up in hope? But, hush; no more.

Sever scouted. Enter Macbeth, as King; Lady Macbeth, as Queen; Lenox, Rossie, Lords, Ladies, and Attendants.

Macb. Here's our chief guest.

Lady M. if he had been forgotten,
It had been as a gap in our great feast,
And all things unbecoming.

Macb. To-night we hold a solemn supper, sir,
And'll request your presence.

Ban. Let your highness
Command upon me; to the which, my duties
Are with a most indissoluble tie.
For ever kneel.

Macb. Ride you this afternoon?

Ban. Ay, my good lord.

Macb. We should have else desir'd your good advice
(Which still hath been both grave and prosperous,) in this day's council; but we'll take to-morrow.
1st Far. Let's.

Ban. As far, my lord, as will fill up the time
Twixt this and supper: go not my horse the better,
I must become a borrower of the night,
For a dark hour, or twain.

Macb. Fail not our feast.

Macb. My lord, I will not.

Macb. We hear, our bloody cousins are bestow'd in England, and in Ireland; not confessing
Their cruel parricide, filling their hearers
With strange invention; But of that to-morrow;
When, therewithal, we shall have cause of state,
Craving us jointly. Hie you to horse: Adieu,
Till you return at night. Goes Pleasure with you?

Ban. Ay, my good lord: our time does call upon us.

Macb. I wish your horses swift, and sure of foot;
And I'll do commend you to their backs.

Farwell.

[Exit Banquo.

Enter every man be master of his time
Till seven at night; to make society
The sweeter welcome, we will keep onself
Till supper-time alone: while then, God be with you.

[Exeunt Lady Macbeth, Lords, Ladies, &c.

Sirrah, a word; Attend those men our pleasure?
Attend. They are, my lord, without the palace gate.

Macb. Bring them before us.—[Exit Attent.] To be thus, is nothing;
But to be safely thus:—Our fears in Banquo
Stick deep; and in his royalty of nature Reigns that, which would be feared: 'Tis much he dares;
And, to that dauntless temper of his mind,
He hath a wisdom that doth guide his valour
To act in safety. To act in safety,
Whose being I do fear; and, under him,
My genius is rebuk'd; as, it is said, Mark Antony's was by Caesar. He chid the sister.

When first they put the name of king upon me,
And bade them speak to him; then, prophet-like,
They hal'd him father to a line of kings:
Upon our head they plac'd a fruitless crown,
And put a barren sceptre in my gripe,
Thence to be wrench'd with an unlineal hand,
No son of mine succeeding. If it be so,
For Banquo's issue have I fill'd my mind;
For them the gracious Duncan have I murder'd;
Put rancours in the vessel of my peace
Only for them; and mine eternal jewel
Given to the common enemy of man,
To make the king, the used of Banquo kings
Rather than so, come, fate, into the list,
And champion me to the utterance!—Who's there?

Re-enter Attendant, with two Murderers.

Now to the door, and stay there till we call.

[Exit Attendant.

Was it not yesterday we spoke together?

1 Mur. It was, so please your highness.

Macb. Well then, now
Have you consider'd of my speeches? Know,
That it was true, in the time past, what hold you
So under fortune; which, you thought, had been
Our innocent self: this I made good to you
In our last conference; pass'd in probation with you,
How you were borne in hand; how cross'd; the Instruments;
Who wrought with them; and all things else, that might
To half a soul, and to a notion craz'd, Say, Thus did Banquo.

1 Mur. You made it known to us.

Macb. Much, I did so; and had the fortune, which is now
Our point of second meeting. Do you find
Your patience so predominant in your nature,
That you can let this go? Are you so gospel'd,
To pray for this good man, and for his issue,
Whose heavy hand bow'd you to the grave,
And beggar'd yours for ever?

1 Mur. We are men, my liege.

Macb. Ay, in the catalogue ye go for men;
As hounds, and greyhounds, mongrels, spaniels, curs,
Shoughs, water-rugs, and demi-wolves, are cleft
All by the name of dogs: the valued file
Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle,
The house-keeper, the hunter, every one
According to the gift which bounteous nature
Hath in him clos'd; whereby he does receive Particular additions, from the hill
That writes them all alike: and so of men.
Now, if you have a station in the file,
And not in the worst rank of mankind, say it;
And I will put that business in your bosoms,
Whose execution takes your enemy off;
Grapples you to the heart and love of us,
Who wear our health but sickly in his life,
Which in his death were perfect.

2 Mur. I am one, my liege,
Whom the vile blows and buffetings of the world
Have so incens'd, that I am reckless what
I do, to spite the world.

1 Mur. And I another,
So weary with disasters, tugg'd with fortune,
That I would set my life on any chance,
To mend it, or be rid on't.

Macb. Both of you
Know, Banquo was your enemy.

Mack. True, my lord.

Macb. So is he mine; and in such bloody distance,
That every minute of his being thrusts
Against my heart of life: And though I could
With bare-fac'd power sweep him from my sight,
And bid my will avouch it; yet I must not,
For certain friends that are both his and mine,
Who's loves I may not drop, but wish his fall:
When I myself struck down: and thence it is,
That I to your assistance do make love;
Making the business from the common eye,
For sundry weighty reasons.

1 Mac. We shall, my lord,
Perform what you command us.

Macb. Your spirits shine through you. Within this hour, at most,
I will advise you where to plant yourselves.
Acquaint you with the perfect spy 'tis the time,
The moment on't; for't must be done to-night.
Aye, was't not from the palace? always thought,
That I require a clearness: And with him.
(Teo leave no rubs, nor botchees, in the work.)
Fleance his son, that keeps him company,
Whose absence is no less material to me,
Than is his father's, must embrace the fate
Of that dark hour. Resolve yourselves apart;
I'll come to you anon.

2 Mac. We are resolved, my lord.

Macb. 'Till call upon you straight: abide within.
It is concluded — Banquo, thy soul's flight,
If it finds heaven, must find it out to-night.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. Another Room.

Enter Lady Macbeth and a Servant.

Lady M. Is Banquo gone from court?
Serv. Ay, madam, but returns again to-night.
Lady M. Say to the king, I would attend his leisure.
For a few words.
Serv. Madam, I will.

[Exit.

Lady M. Nought's had, all's spent,
Where our desire is got without content:
'Tis safer to be that which we destroy,
Than, by destruction, dwell in doubtful joy.

Enter Macbeth.

How now, my lord? why do you keep alone,
Of sorriest fancies your companions making?
Using those thoughts, which should indeed have died
With them they think on? Things without remedy,
Should be without regard: what's done, is done.

Macb. We have scotch'd the snake, not kill'd it;
She'll close, and be herself; whilst our poor malice
Remains in danger of her former tooth.
But let
The frame of things disjoint, both the worlds suffer,
Ere we will eat our meal in fear, and sleep
In the affliction of these terrible dreams
That shake us nightly: Better be with the dead,
Whom we, to gain our place, have sent to peace,
Than on the torture of the mind to lie
In restless ecstasy. Duncan is in his grave;
After life's fitful fever, he sleeps well;
Treason has done his worst: nor steel, nor poison,
Malice domestick, foreign levy, nothing,
Can touch him further.

Lady M. Come on;
Gentle my lord, seek o'er your rugged looks;
Be bright and jocial 'mong your guests to-night.

Macb. So shall I love; and in that pray, be you
Let your remembrance apply to Banquo:
Present him eminence, both with eye and tongue;
Unsafe the while, that we Must bare our honours in these flattering streams;

And make our faces wizards to our hearts,
Disguising what they are.

Lady M. You must leave this.
Macb. O, full of scorpions is my mind, dear wife!

Thou know'st, that Banquo, and his Fleance, lives.
Lady M. But in them nature's copy's not eternal.

Macb. There's comfort yet; they are assailable;
Then be thou jocund; Ere the bat hath flown
His cloister'd flight; ere, to black Hecate's sams,
The sherd-borne beetle, with his drowsy hums,
Hath rung night's yawning peal, there shall be
A deed of dreadful note. [done

Lady M. Macb. Be innocent of the knowledge, dearest chink,
Till thou applaud the deed. Come, seeing night,
Star'd up the tender eye of pitiful day;
And, with thy bloody and invisible hand,
Cancel, and tear to pieces, that great bond
Which keeps me pale — Light thickens; and the Makes wing to the rooky wood:
[crow
Good things of day begin to droop and drowse;
Whiles night's black agents to their prey do rouse.
Thou marv'est at my words: but hold thee still;
Things that make strong themselves by ill:
So, pr'ythee, go with me.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same. A Park or Lawn, with a Gate leading to the Palace.

Enter three Murderers.

1 Mac. But who did bid thee join with us?

2 Mac. He needs not our mistrust; since he delivers
Our offices, and what we have to do,
To the direction just.

3 Mac. Then stand with us.
The west yet glistens with some streaks of day:
Now is the last traveller asleep,
To gain the timely inn; and near approaches
The subject of our watch.

2 Mac. Hark! I hear horses.

Ban. [Within.] Give us a light there, ho! Come
3 Mac. Then it is he; the test
That are within the note of expectation,
Already are the court.

1 Mac. His horses go about.

3 Mac. Almost a mile; but he does usually,
So all men do, hence to the palace gate
Make it their walk.

Enter Banquo and Fleance, a Servant with a torch preceding them.

2 Mac. A light, a light!

1 Mac. 'Tis he.

3 Mac. Stand to't.

Ban. It will be rain to-night.

1 Mac. Let it come down.

Ban. O, treachery! Fly, good Fleance, fly, fly, fly;
Thou may'st revenge—O slave!

[Dies. Fleance and Servant escape.

3 Mac. Who did strike out the light?

2 Mac. The lastest traveller asleep.

3 Mac. There's but one down: the son is fled.

2 Mac. We have lost both half of our affair.

1 Mac. Well, let's away, and say how much is done.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A Room in the State in the Palace.

A Banquet prepared.

Enter Macbeth, Lady Macbeth, Rosal, Lenox, Caissar, and Attendants.

Macb. You know your own degrees, sit down:
At first and last, the hearty welcome.

Lords. Thanks to your majesty.
Macb. Ourself will mingle with society,
And play the humble host.

Rosal. Keeps her state; but, in best time,
We will require her welcome.
Act 3.

MACBETH.

Lady M. Pronounce it for me, sir, to all our friends; For my heart speaks, they are welcome. Enter first Murderer, to the door.

Macb. See, they encounter thee with their hearts' thanks: —
Both sides are even: Here I'll sit 'tis the midst: Be large in mirth; anon, we'll drink a measure They to thine, and there's blood upon thy face. M. Ilur. 'Tis Banquo's then.

Macb. 'Tis better thee without, than he within. Is he dispatch'd?

M. Ilur. My lord, his throat is cut; that I did for him.

Macb. Thou art the best o'th'cut throats: Yet he's good, That did the like for Fleance: if thou didst it, Thou art the nonpareil.

Most royal sir,

Macb. Fleance is 'scaped.

Macb. Then comes my fit again: I had else been perfect;

Whole as the marble, founded as the rock; As broad, and general, as the casing air.

But now I am cabind, cribb'd, bound in 'To saucy doubts and devices.' But Banquo's safe?

M. Ilur. Ay, my good lord; safe in a ditch he bides, With twenty trench'd gashes on his head;

The least a death to nature.

Macb. Thanks for that:

There the grown serpent lies; the worm, that's fled, Hath nature that in time will venom breed, No teeth for the present.—Get thee gone; to-morrow We'll hear, ourselves again. [Exit Murderer.

Lady M. My royal lord, You do not give the cheer; the feast is sold, That is not often vouch'd, while 'tis a making, 'Tis given with welcome: To feed, were best at home; From thence, the sauce to meat is ceremony, Meeting were bare without it.

Macb. Sweet remembrancer!— Now, good digestion wait on appetite, And health on both!

Len. May it please your highness sit?

[The Ghost of Banquo rises, and sits in Macbeth's place.

Macb. Here had we now our country's honour roof'd,

Were the best part of our Banquo present; Who may I rather challenge for unkindness Than pity for mischance?

Roes. His absence, sir, Lays blame upon his promise. Please it your highness To grace us with your royal company?

Macb. The table's full.

Len. Here's a place reserv'd, sir.

Macb. Where?

Len. Here, my lord. What's that which moves your highness?

Macb. Which of you have done this?

Lords. What, my good lord?

Macb. Thou canst not say, I did it: never shake Thy gory locks at me.

Roes. Gentlemen, rise; his highness is not well. Lady M. Sit, worthy friends—my lord is often thus, And hath been from his youth: 'pray you, keep seat;
The fit is momentary; upon a thought He will again be well; If much you note him, You shall offend him, and extend his passion; Feed, and regard him not.—Are you a man?

Macb. Ay, and a bold one, that dare look on That which might appall the devil.

Lady M. O proper stuff!

This is the very painting of your fear:
This is the air-drawn dagger, which, you said, Led you to Duncan. O, these flaws, and starts, (Impostors to true fear) would well become A woman's story, at a winter's fire, Authoriz'd by her grandam. Shame itself! Why do you make such faces? When all's done, You look but on a stool.

Macb. Try thee, see there! behold! I look! lo! how say you?

Why, what care I? If thou canst nod, speak too.— If chamber-houses, and our graves, must send Those that we bar, look back, our monuments Shall be the maws of kites. [Ghost disappears.

Lady M. And why does he prime? For shame.

Macb. Blood hath been shed ere now, 'tis the old time, Ere human statute purged the gentle west; Ay, and since too, murders have been perform'd Too terrible for the ear: the times have been, That, when the brains were out, the man would die, And there an end: but now, they rise again, With twenty mortal murders on their crowns, And push us from our stools: This is more strange Than such a murder is.

Lady M. My worthy lord, Your noble friends do lack you.

Macb. I do forget: Do not muse at me, my most worthy friends; I have a strange infirmity, which is nothing To those that know me. Come, love and health to all; Then I'll sit down:—Give me some wine, fill full:— I drink to the general joy of the whole table, [Ghost rises.

Macb. And to our dear friend Banquo, whom we miss; Would he were here! to all, and him, we thirst, And all to all.

Lords. Our duties, and the pledge.

Macb. Avant! and quit my sight! Let the earth divide them!

Thy bones are marrowless, thy blood is cold; Thou hast no speculation in those eyes Which thou dost glare with!

Lady M. Think of this, good peers, But as a thing of custom: 'tis no other; Only it spoils the pleasure of the time.

Macb. What man dare, I dare; Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear, The arm'd Rhinoceros, or the Lycan tiger, Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves Shall never tremble: Or, be alive again, And dare me to the desert with thy sword; If trembling I inhibit thee, protest me The baby of a girl. Hence, horrible shadow! [Ghost disappears.

Unreal mockery, hence!—Why, so;—being gone, I am a man again.—Pray you, sit still.

Lady M. You have displac'd the mirth, broke the good meeting, With most admir'd disorder.

Macb. Can such things be, And overcome us like a summer's cloud, Without our special wonder? You make me strange Even to the disposition that I owe, When now I think you can behold such sights, And keep the natural ruby of your cheeks, When mine are blanch'd with fear.

Roes. What sights, my lord?

Lady M. I pray you, speak not; he grows worse and worse;

Question enranges him: at once, good night.— Stand not upon the order of your going, But go at once.

Len. Good night, and better health Attend his majesty!

Lady M. A kind good night to all! [Exeunt Lords and Attendants.

Macb. It will have blood; they say, blood will have blood;
Stones have been known to move, and trees to speak.

Angara, and understood relations, have

By magot-pies, and choughs, and rooks, brought forth

The secret's stream of blood.—What is the night?

Lady M. Almost at odds with morning, which is which.

Mac. How say'st thou, that Macduff denies his At our great bidding? [person, Lady M. Did you send to him, sir?] Mac. I hear it by the way; but I will send:

There's not a one of them, but in his house I keep a servant feed. I will to-morrow, [who will,] to the weird sisters: More shall they speak; for now I am bent to know, By the worst means, the worst: for mine own good.

All causes of give way; I am in blood Stoop in so far, that, should I wand no more, Returning were as tedious as go o'er:

Strange things I have in head, that will to hand; Which must be acted, e'er they may be scann'd.

Lady M. You lack the season of all natures, sleep.

Mac. Come, we'll to sleep: My strange and self-abuse

Is the mother's shadow, that wants hard use:—

We are yet but young in deed. [Exit.

SCENE V.—The Heath. Thunder.

Enter Hecate, meeting the three Witches.

1 Witch. Why, how now, Hecate? you look angery.

Hec. Have I not reason, beggars, as you are, Gay, and over-bold? How did you dare To trade and traffic with Macbeth, in miles, and affairs of death; And I, the mistress of your charms, The close contriver of all harms, Was never call'd to bear my part, Or show the glory of my art? And, which is worse, all you have done, Hath been but for a wayward son, Spiteful, and wrathful; who, as others do, Loves for his own ends, not for you. But make amends now; Get you gone, And at the pit of Acheron Meet me! the morning; thither he Will come to know his destiny. You scurries, and your spells, provide, Your charms, and everything beside: I am for the air; this night I'll spend Unto a dismal-fatal end.

Great business must be wrought ere noon: Upon the corner of the moon There hangs a vaporous drop profound; I' shall catch ere it come to ground: And that, distill'd by magic sighs, Shall raise such artificial sprites, As, by the strength of their illusion, Shall draw him on to his confusion: He shall spare his life, scorn death, and hear His hopes 'have wisdom, grace, and fear: And you all know, security Is mortals' chiefest enemy.

Song. [Within.] Come away, come away, &c.

Enter Banquo, call'd; my little spirit, see, Sits in a foggy cloud, and stays for me. [Exit.

1 Witch. Come, let's make haste: she'll soon be back again. [Exit.

SCENE VI.—Forests. A Room in the Palace.

Len. My former speeches have but hit your thoughts, Which can interpret further: only, I say, Things have been strangely borne: The gracious Duncan Was pitted of Macbeth—marr'd, he was dead:— And the right-valiant Banquo walked too late:

Whom, you may say, if it please you, Fleance kill'd, For Fyance said. Men must not walk too late. Who cannot want the thought, how monstrous it was for Malcolm, and for Donalbain, To kill their gracious father? damned fact! How it did grieve Macbeth! did he not straight, In plaus rage, the two delinquent tear, That were the slaves of drink, and thighs of sleep Was not that nobly done? Ay, and wisely too: For 'twould have anger'd any heart alive, To hear the men dle it. So that, I say, He has borne all things well: and I do think, That, had he Duncan's son under his key, (As, an't please heaven, he shall not,) they should

What 'twere to kill a father; so should Fleance. But, peace; for from broad words, and 'causes he fail'd His presence at the tyrant's feast, I hear, Macduff lives in disgrace: Sir, can you tell Where he bestows himself?

Lord. The son of Duncan, From whom this tyrant holds the one of birth, Lives In the English court; and is receiv'd Of the most pious Edward with such grace, That the malevolence of fortune nothing Takes from his high respect: Thither Macduff Is gone to the holy king, on his aid To make Northumberland, and warlike Seward: That, by the help of these, (with Him above To ratify the work,) we may again Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights; Free from our feasts and banquets bloody knives; Do faithful homage, and receive free honours, All which we pine for now: And this report Has so exasperate the king, that he Prepares for some attempt of war.

Len. Sent he to Macduff? Lord. He did: and with an absolute, Sir, not I, The cloudy Barker turn'd on his back: And haste; as who should say, You'll rule the time That doth me with this answer.

Len. And that well might Advise him to a caution, to hold what distance His wisdom can provide. Some holy angel Fly to the court of England, and unfold his message ere he come: that a swift blessing May soon return to this our suffering country Under a hand accord'd! [Exit.

Lord. My prayers with him! [Exit.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—A Dark Cave. In the middle, a Cauldron boiling. Thunder.

Enter the three Witches.

1 Witch. Thrice the brinded cat hath mew'd. 2 Witch. Thrice; and once the hedge-pig whin'd. 3 Witch. Harper cries.—Tis time, 'tis time.

1 Witch. Round about the cauldron go; In the poison'd entrails throw. Toad, that under coldest stone, Days and nights hast thirty-one Swole't venom sleeping goo, Boll thou first l' the charmed pot! All. Double, double toil and trouble; Fire burn, and; and, cauldron, bubble.

2 Witch. Fillet of a fenny snake, In the cauldron boil and bake: Eye of newt, and toe of frog, Whet of bat, and tongue of dog, Adder's fork, and blind-worm's sting, Lizard's leg, and owl's wing, For a charm of powerful trouble; Gangreous bred, and pitous lewd.

All. Double, double toil and trouble; Fire, burn; and, cauldron, bubble. 3 Witch. Scale of dragon, double toil and trouble. Witches' mummy; raw, and gulf,
Of the rav'ning salt-sea shark;
Root of hemlock, digg’d i’th dark;
Liver of blaspheming Jew;
Gall of goat, and slips of yew,
Sliver’d in the moon’s eclipse;
Nose of Turk, and Parson’s licks;
Finger of birth-strangled babe,
Ditch-deliver’d by a drab,
Make the gruel thick and slab:
Add then to a witch’s chandlar.
For the ingredients of our cauldron.
All. Double, double toil and trouble;
Fire, burn; and, cauldron, bubble.

2 Witch. Cool it with a baboon’s blood,
Then the charm is firm and good.

Enter Hecate, and the other three Witches.

Hec. O, well done! I command your pains;
And every one shall share i’t he gains.
And now about the cauldron sing,
Like elves and fairies in a ring,
Enchanting all that you put in.

SONG.

Black spirits and white,
Red spirits and grey;
Mingle, mingle, mingle,
You that mingle may.

2 Witch. By the pricking of my thumbs,
Something wicked this way comes:—
Open, locks, whoever knocks.

Enter Macbeth.

Macb. How now, you secret, black, and midnight hags?
What is’t you do?

All. A deed without a name.

Macb. O, I conjure you, by that which you profess, (Howe’er you come to know it,) answer me:
Though you untie the winds, and let them fight
Against the churches: though the yesty waves
Confound and swallow navigation up;
Though bladed corn be lodged and trees blown down;
Though castles topple on their warders’ heads;
Though palaces, and pyramids, do slope
Their heads to their foundations: though the treasure
Of nature’s germins tumble all together,
Even till destruction sicken, answer me
To what I ask you.

1 Witch. Speak.

2 Witch. Demand.

3 Witch. We’ll answer.

1 Witch. Sey, if thou’dst rather hear it from our mouths,
Or from our masters’?

Macb. Call them, let me see them.

1 Witch. Four in sowl’s blood, that hath eaten
Her nine farrow; grease, that’s sweating
From the murderer’s gibbet throw
Into the flame.

All. Macb. Come, high, or low;
Thyself, and office, defly show.

Thunder. An Apparition of an armed Head rises.

Macb. Tell me, thou unknown power,—

1 Witch. He knows thy thought;
Hear his speech, but say thou nought.

App. Macbeth! Macbeth! Macbeth! beware Macduff;
Beware the thane of Fife.—Dismiss me.—Enough.

[Descends.

Macb. Whate’er thou art, for thy good caution, thanks;
Thou hast harried my fear aright:—But one word
more:—

1 Witch. He will not be commanded: Here’s another,
More potent than the first.
Enter Lenox.

Len. What's your grace's will?

Macb. Saw you the weird sisters?

Len. Macb. Infected be the air wherein they ride; And damn'd, all those that trust in them. — I did hear

The gaunt hag of horse: Who was't came by?

Len. To two or three, my lord, that bring you

Macb. Is fled to England.

[Exit Lenox.

Scene II.—Fife. A Room in Macduff's Castle.

Enter Lady Macduff, her Son, and Rosse.

Lady Macb. What had be done, to make him fly

Rosse. You must have patience, madam.

L. Macb. He had none.

His flight was madness: When our actions do not, Our fears do make us traitors.

Rosse. You know not, whether it be his wisdom, or his fear.

L. Macb. Wisdom! to leave his wife, to leave his baby.

His mansion, and his titles, in a place

From whence himself does fly? He loves us not; He wants the natural touch: for the poor wretches, The most diminutive of birds, will fight, Her young ones in her nest, against the owl. All is the fear, and nothing is the love; As little is the wisdom, where the flight No runs against all reason.

Rosse. My dearst cos.

I pray you, school yourself: But, for your husband, He is noble, wise, judicious, and best known

The fits of the season. I dare not speak much further:

But cruel are the times, when we are traitors, And do not know ourselves: when we hold rumour From what we fear; yet know not what we fear; But stand upon a wild and violent sea,

Each way, and move. — I take my leve of you: Shall not be long but I'11 be here again; Things at the worst will cease, or else climb upward To what they were before. — My pretty cousin, Blessing upon you!

L. Macb. Father'd he is, and yet he's fatherless.

Rosse. I am so much a fool, should I stay longer, It would be my disgrace, and your discomfort: I take my leave at once. [Exit Rosse.

L. Macb. Sibbath, your father's dead;

And what will you do now? How will you live?

Sen. As birds do, mother.

L. Macb. What, with worms and flies?

Sen. With what I get, I mean; and so do they.

L. Macb. Poor bird! thou'st never fear the net,

So. The pit-fall, nor the gin.

Sen. Why should I, mother? Poor birds they are not set for.

My father is not dead, for all your saying.
As I shall find the time to friend, I will.
What you have spoke, it may be so, perchance.
This tyrant, whose sole name blisters our tongues,
Was once thought honest; you have lov'd him well;
He hath not touch'd you yet. I am young, but something
You may desire of him through me; and wisdom
To order a weak, poor, innocent lamb,
To appease an angry God.
Mac. I am not treacherous.
Mal. A godlike virtuous nature may so soil
In an imperial charge. But 'crave your pardon;
That which you are, my thoughts cannot transpose:
Angels are bright still, though the brightest fell:
Though all things four'd wear the brows of
Yet grace must still look so.
[Exeunt Macbeth and Macduff.

Act 4.
MACBETH.

Desire his jewels, and this other's house:
And my more-having would be as a sauce
To make me hunger more; that I should forge
Our realms unjust against the good, and loyal,
Destroying them for wealth.

Mac. This avarice
Sticks deeper; grows with more pernicious root
Than seaside acres of the world; and it hath been
The sword of our slain kings: Yet do not fear;
Scotland hath foysons to fill up your will,
Of your mere own: All these are portable,
With one's own weight?
Mal. But I have none: The king-becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temperance, stableness,
Bounty, perseverance, mercy, lowliness,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them: but abound
In the division of each several crime,
Acting it many ways. Nay, had I power, I should Pour out the sweet milk of concord into hell,
Uproar the universal peace, confound
All unity on earth.

Mac. O Scotland! Scotland!
Mal. If such a one be fit to govern, speak:
I am as I have spoken.

Mac. Fit to govern!
No, not to live.—O nation miserable,
With an untitled tyrant bold了许多?
When shalt thou see thy wholesome days again?
Since that the truest issue of thy throne
By his own interdiction stands accur'd,
And does blaspheme his breed?—Thy royal father
Was a more sainted king: the queen, that bore thee,
Off'er upon her knees than on her feet,
Died every day she lived. Fare thee well!
These evils, thou repeat'st upon thyself,
Have bastish'd me from Scotland.—O, my breast,
Thy hope ends here!

Mal. Macduff, this noble passion,
Child of integrity, hast from my soul
Wip'd sin, patience, secrecy, rectitude,
My thoughts
To thy good truth and honour. Devilish Macbeth
By many of these trains hath sought to win me
Into his power; and modest wisdom plucks me
From over-credulous haste: But God above
Deal between thee and me: for even now
I put myself to thy direction, and Unspeak mine own detraction; here abjure
The taints and blame I laid upon myself,
For strangers to my nature. I am yet
Unknown to woman; never was forsworn;
Scarce, any mirth that was mine own:
In all the poor, I struck my faith; would not betray
The down to his fellow; and my soul
No less in truth, than life: my first false speaking
Was this upon myself: What I am truly,
Is thine, and my poor country's, to command:
Whither, indeed, before thy her approach,
Old Siward, with ten thousand warlike men,
All ready at a point, was setting forth:
Now we'll together; And the chance, of goodness,
Be like our warrant'd quarrel! Why are you silent?
Mal. Such welcome and unwelcome things at 'Tis hard to reconcile.

[Exit Doctor.

Enter a Doctor.

Mal. Well; more anon.—Comes the king forth,
I pray you?

Doc. Ay, sir: there are a crew of wretched souls,
That stay his cure: their malady is such,
The greenest of art; and, but at his touch,
Such sanctity hath heaven given in his hand,
They presently amend.

Mal. I thank you, doctor.

Doc. I am at your service.

Mal. What's the disease he means?

Doc. 'Tis call'd the evil
A most miraculous work in this good king:
Which often, since my here-remembrance in England,
I have seen him do. How he solicits heaven,
Himself best knows: but strangely-visited people,

T 2
MACBETH.

Act 5.

Were, on the quarry of these murder’d deer,
To add the death of you.

Mai. Mercifui heaven! —
What, man! I ne’er pull your hat upon your brows;
But sorrow words: the grief, that does not speak,
Whispers in one ear-franght heart, and bids it break.
Mai. My children too?
Rouser. Wife, children, servants, all
That could be found.
Mai. And I must be from hence!
My wife kill’d too?
Rouser. I have said.
Mai. Let’s make us medicines of our great revenge,
To cure this deadly grief.
Mai. He has no children. — All my pretty cnes?
Did you say, all? — O, hell-kite! — All?
What, all my pretty chickens, and their dam,
At one fell swoop?
Rouser. Dispute it like a man.
Mai. I shall do so;
But I must also feel it as a man;
I cannot but remember such things were,
That were most precious to me. — Did heaven look on
And would not take their part? Sinful Macduff,
They were all struck for thee! naught that I am.
Not for their own demerits, but for mine,
Fell slaughter on their souls: Heaven rest them
Roucer. Be this the whetstone of your sword: let grief
Convert to anger; blunt not the heart, enrage it.
Mai. 0, I could play the woman with mine
And braggit with my tongue! — But gentle heaven,
Cut short all intermission: front to front,
Bring in the vessels of Scotland, and myself;
Within my sword’s length set him; if he escape,
Heaven forgive him too!
Mai. This tune goes many.
Come, go we to the king: our power is ready;
Our lack is nothing but our leave: Macbeth
Is ripe for shaking, and the powers above
Put on their instruments. Receive what cheer
You may;
The night is long, that never finds the day.
[Exit.

ACT V.

SCENE I. — Dunsinane. A Room in the Castle.

Enter a Doctor of Physick, and a waiting Gentlewoman.

Docr. I have two nights watched with you, but can perceive no truth in your report. When was it she last walked?

Gent. Since his majesty went into the field, I have seen her rise from her bed, throw her nightgown upon her, unlock her closet, take forth paper, fold it, write upon it, read it, afterwards seal it, and again return to bed, yet all this while in a most fast sleep.

Docr. A great perturbation in nature! to receive at once the beneﬁt of sleep, and do the effects of watching. — In this slumber agitation, besides her walking and other actual performances, what, at any time, have you heard her say?

Gent. That, sir, which I will not report after her.

Docr. You may, to me; and ’tis most meet you should.

Gent. Neither to you, nor any one; having no witness to conﬁrm my speech.

Enter Lady Macbeth, with a taper.

Lo you, here she comes! This is her very guise:
and, upon my life, fast asleep. Observe her: stand close.
Macbeth.

Act 5.

SCENE I.—The Country near Dunsinane.

Enter, with drum and colours, Menseth, Cathness, Angus, Lenox, and Soldiers.

Ment. The English power is near, led on by Malcolm, his uncle Wardo, and the good Macduff. Bugles reverberate in them: for their dear causes Would, to the bleeding, and the grim alarm, Excite the mortified man.

Ans. Near Birnam wood Shall we well meet them; that way are they coming.

Cath. Who knows, if Donalbain be with his brother?

Len. For certain sir, he is not: I have a file Of all the gentry; there is Siward's son, And many unlook'd youths, that even now Protest their first of manhood.

Ment. What does the tyrant?

Cath. Great Dunsinane he strongly fortifies:

Some say, he's mad; others, that lesser hate him, Do call it valiant fury: but, for certain, He cannot buckle his distemper'd cause Within the belt of rule.

Ans. Now does he feel

His secret murders sticking on his hands;

Now minutely revolts upbraids his faith-breach;

Those he commands, move only in command,

Nothing in love: now does he feel his title Hang loose about him, like a giant's robe

Upon a dwarfish thief.

Ment. Who then shall blame

His pester'd senses to recoil, and start,

When all that is within him does condemn

Itself, for being there?

Cath. Well, march we on, to give obedience where 'tis truly ow'd:

Meet we the medecin of the sickly weal;

And with him pour we, in our country's purge,

Each drop of us.

Len. Or so much as it needs,

to dew the sovereign flower, and dound the weeds.

Make we our march towards Birnam.

[Exeunt, marching.

SCENE III.—Dunsinane. A Room in the Castle.

Enter Macbeth, Doctor, and Attendants.

Mach. Bring me no more reports; let them fly all.

Till Birnam wood remove to Dunsinane,

I cannot taint with fear.

What's the boy Malcolm?

Was he not born of woman? The spirits that know

All mortal consequents pronounced me thus:

Fear not, Macbeth; no man, that's born of woman,

Shall ever have power on thee. Then fly, false thanes, And mingle with the English epicures:

The mind I sway by, and the heart I bear,

Shall never sag with doubt, nor shake with fear.

[Enter a Servant.

The derli damn thee black, thou cream-fac'd loon:

Where goest thou that gouge lineckick?

Serr. There is ten thousand—

Mach. Geese, villain?

Serr. Soldiers, sir.

Mach. Go, prick thy face, and over-red thy fear, Thou lily-liver'd boy. What soldiers, patch?

Death of thy soul! those linen cheeks of thine Are counsellors to fear. What soldiers, why?

Serr. The English force, so please you.

Mach. Take thy face hence.—Seyton!—I am sick at heart, When I behold—Seyton, I say!—This push Will cheer me ever, or disseat me now.

I have liv'd long enough: my way of life Is fall'n into the sphere, the yellow leaf;

And that which should accompany old age,

As honour, love, obedience, troops of friends,

I must not look to have; but, in their stead,

Curses not loud, but deep, mouth-honour, breath,

Which the poor heart would fain deny, but dare not.

Seyton!

[Enter Seyton.

Sey. What is your gracious pleasure?

Mach. What news more?

Sey. All is confirmed, my lord, which was reported.

Mach. I'll fight, till from my bones my flesh be hack'd.

Give me my armour,—

'Tis not needed yet.

Sey.

Mach. I'll put it on.
MACBETH.

Act 5.

We might have met them dàreful, beard to beard,
And beat them backward home. What is that noise?

[Act viii. 1.]

[Enter a Messenger.]

Thou com'st to use thy tongue; thy story quickly.

Mess. Gracious my lord,
I shall report that which I saw,
But know not how to do it.

Mess. Well, say, sir.

Mess. As I did stand my watch upon the hill,
I look'd toward Birnam, and anon, methought,
The wood began to move.

Macb. Liar, and slave!

Mess. Let me endure your wrath, it's not to be so;
Within this three mile you may see it coming;
I say, a moving grove.

Macb. If thou speak'st false,
Upon the next tree shalt thou hang alive,
Till famine clinge thee: if thy speech be sooth,
I care not if these darts for me be such:
I pull in resolution; and begin
To doubt the equivocation of the fiend,
That lies like truth: Fear not, till Birnam wood
Do come to Dunsinane—and now a wood
Comes toward Dunsinane—Arm, arm, and out—
If this, which he avouches, do appear,
There is nor flying hence, nor tarrying here.
I 'gin to be a-aweary of the sun,
And with the estate o'the world were now undone.

Ring the alarum bell: Blow, wind! come, wrack.
At least we'll die with harness on our back.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—The same. A Plain before the Castle.

Enter, with drums and colours, Malcolm, old Siward, Macduff, &c. and their Army, with boughs.

Macb. Now near enough; your leasy screens throw down,
And show like those you are:—You, worthy uncle, shall, with my cousin, your right-noble son,
Lead our first battle: worthy Macduff, and we,
Shall take upon us what else remains to do,
According to our order.

Sin. Fare you well.—
Do we but find the tyrant's power to-night,
Let us be beaten, if we cannot fight.

Macb. Make all our trumpets speak; give them all
Those clamorous barbarings of blood and death.

[Exeunt. Abersuns continued.]

SCENE VII.—The same. Another part of the Plain.

Enter Macbeth.

Macb. They have tied me to a stake; I cannot fly,
Act 5.

MACBETH.

But, bear-like, I must fight the course.—What's he, That was not born of woman? Such a one Am I to fear, or none.

Enter young Siward.

Yo. Siw. What is the name?

Macb. Thou'lt be afraid to hear it.

Yo. Siw. No; though thou call'st thyself a hot- Than any is in hell. [ter name

Macb. My name's Macbeth.

Yo. Siw. The devil himself could not pronounce a title

More hateful to mine ear.

Macb. No, nor more fearful.

Yo. Siw. Thou liest, abhorred tyrant; with my I'll prove the lie you speak'st. [sword

They fight and young Siward is slain.

Macb. Thou wast born of woman.— But swords I smile at, weapons laugh to scorn, Brandish'd by man that's of a woman born. [Exit. Alarums. Enter Macduff.

Macb. That way the noise is—Tyrant, show thy face:
If thou be'st slain, and with no stroke of mine, My wife and children's ghosts will haunt me still. I cannot strike at wretched kerns, whose arms Are hir'd to bear their staves; either thou, Macbeth, Or else my sword, with an unshattered edge, I sheathe again undeeded. There thou shoudst not be; By this great clatter, one of greatest note Seems bruited. Let me find him, fortunate! And more I beg not. [Exit. Alarum.

Enter Malcolm and old Siward.

Sim. This way my lord;—the castle's gently render'd: The tyrant's people on both sides do fight; The noble thanes do bravely in the war; The day almost itself professes yours, And little is to do.

Mal. We have met with foes That strike beside us.

Sim. Enter, sir, the castle. [Exit. Alarum. Re-enter Macbeth.

Macb. Why should I play the Roman fool, and die On mine own sword? whilst I see lives, the gashes Do better upon them.

Re-enter Macduff.

Macb. Turn, hell-hound, turn.

Macb. Of all men else I have avoided thee; But get thee back, my soul is too much charg'd With blood of thine already.

Macb. I have no words, My voice is in my sword; thou bloodier villain Than terms can give thee out! [They fight. Macb. Thou losest labour: As easy may'st thou the intrenchant air With thy keen sword impress, as make me bleed: Let fall thy blade on vulnerable crests; I bear a charmed life, which must not yield To one of woman born.

Macb. Despair thy charm; And let the angel, whom thou still hast serv'd, Tell thee, Macduff was from his mother's womb Untimely ripp'd.

Macb. Accursed be that tongue that tells me so, For it hath cost'd my better part of man! And be these juggling fiends no more believ'd, That paler with us in a double sense;

That keep the word of promise to our ear, And break it to our hope.—I'll not fight with thee. Macb. Then yield thee, coward.

And live to be the show and gaze o'the time. We'll have thee, as our rarer monsters are, Painted upon a pole; and underwrit, Here may you see the tyrant.

Macb. I'll not yield, to kiss the ground before young Malcolm's feet, And to be baited with the rabble's curse. Though Birnam wood be come to Duninane, And thou oppress'nd, being of no woman born, Yet I will try the last: Before my body I throw my warlike shield: lay on, Macduff; And damn'd be him that first cries, Hold, enough. [Exeunt. Fighting.

Mal. I would, the friends we miss were safe ar- rived.

Sim. Some must go off; and yet, by these I see, So great a day as this is cheaply bought.

Mal. Macduff is missing, and your noble son Rosse. Your son, my lord, has paid a soldier's He only liv'd but till he was a man; [debts: the which no sooner had his prowess confirm'd In the unshrinking station where he fought, But like a man he died.

Sim. Then he is dead? [of sorrow Rosse. Ay, and brought off the field: your cause Must not be measure'd by his worth, for then It hath no end.

Sim. Had he his hurts before? Rosse. Ay, on the front.

Sim. Why, then, God's soldier be he! Had I as many sons as I have hairs, I would not wish them to a fairer death: And so his knell is knoll'd—

Mal. He's worth more sorrow, And that I'll spend for him.

Sim. He's worth no more; They say, he parted well, and paid his score: So, God be with him!—Here comes newer comfort. Re-enter Macduff, with Macbeth's head on a pole.

Macb. Hall, king! for so thou art: Behold, where stands The usurper's cursed head: the time is free: I see thee compass'd with thy kingdom's pearl, That speak my salutation in their minds; Whose voices I desire aloud with mine,— Hall, king of Scotland!

All. King of Scotland, hail! [Flourish. Mal. We shall not spend a large expence of time, Before we reckon with our several loves, And make us even with you. My thanes and kinsmen, Henceforth be ears, the first that ever Scotland In such an honour nam'd. What's more to do, Which would be planted newly with the time,— As calling home our exil'd friends abroad, That fleg the snares of watchful tyranny; Producing forth the cruel ministers Of this dead butcher, and his fiend-like queen; Who, as 'tis thought, by self and violent hands Took off her life;—This, and what needful else That calls upon us, by the grace of Grace, We will perform in measure, time, and place: So thanks to all at once, and to each one, Whom we invite to see us crown'd at Scone. [Flourish. Exeunt.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Northampton. A Room of State in the Palace.

Enter King John, Queen Elinor, Pembroke, Essex,
Salisbury, and others, with Chatillon.

King John. Now, say, Chatillon, what would France with us?

Chat. Thus, after greeting, speaks the king of France.

In my behaviour, to the majesty,
The borrow'd majesty of England here.

Eli. A strange beginning:—borrow'd majesty!

K. John. nonsense, good mother; hear the embassy.

Chat. Philip of France, in right and true behalf
Of thy deceased brother Geoffrey's son,
Arthur Plantagenet, lays most lawfull claim
To this fair isle, and the territories;
To Ireland, Poictietes, Anjou, Touraine, Maine;
Desiring thee to lay aside the sword,
Which sways usurpingly these several titles;
And put the same into young Arthur's hand,
Thy nephew, and right royal sovereign.

K. John. What follows, if we disallow of this?

Chat. The proud control of fierce and bloody war.

To enforce these rights so forcibly withheld.

K. John. Here have we war for war, and blood for blood,

Controlment for controlment: so answer France.

Chat. Then take my king's desistance from my mouth,
The furthest limit of my embassy.

K. John. Hear mine to him, and so depart in peace:

Be thou as lightning in the eyes of France;
For ere thou canst report, I will be there,
The thunder of my cannon shall be heard;
So, hence! I thee the trumpet of our wrath,
And sultry pressage of your own decay,—
An honourable conduct let him have:—
Pembroke, look to't: Farewell, Chatillon.

Eli. What now, my son? have I not ever said,
How that ambitious Constance would not cease,
Till she had kindled France, and all the world,
Upon the right hand, or the left, of her son?
This might have been prevented, and made whole,
With very easy arguments of love;
Which now the manage of two kingdoms must
With fearful bloody issue arbitrate.

K. John. Our strong possession, and our right, for us.

Eli. Your strong possession, much more than your right:
Or else it must go wrong with you, and me:
So must my conscience whispers in your ear:
Which may be but heaven, and you, and I, shall hear.

Enter the sheriff of Northamptonshire, who whispers Essex.

Essex. My liege, here is the strangest controversy,
Come from the country to be judged by you,
That e'er I heard! Shall I produce the men?

K. John. Let them approach.—[Exit Sheriff.

Our absbies, and our priorities, shall pay
Re-enter Sheriff, with Robert Faulconbridge, and Philip, his bastard Brother.

This expedition's charge.—What men are you?

Bast. Your faithful subject I, a gentleman,
Born in Northamptonshire; and eldest son,
As I suppose, to Robert Faulconbridge;
A soldier, by the honour-giving hand
Of Curé-de-lion knighted in the field.

K. John. What art thou?

Rob. The son and heir to that same Faulconbridge.

K. John. Is that the elder, and art thou the heir?
You came not of one mother then, it seems.

Bast. Most certain of one mother, mighty king,
That is well known: and, as I think, one father.
But, for the certain knowledge of that truth,
I put you o'er to heaven, and to my mother;
Of that I doubt, as all men's children may.

Eli. Out on thee, rude man! thou dost shame thy mother,
And wound her honour with this diffidence.

Bast. I, madam? no, I have no reason for it;
That is my brother's plea, and none of mine;
The which if he can prove, 'tis pess me out
At least from fair five hundred pound a-year:
Heaven guard my mother's honour, and my land
K. John. A good blunt fellow:—Why, being younger born,
Doth he lay claim to thine inheritance?

Bast. I know not why, except to get the land.
But once he slander'd me with bastardy:
But when I be as true begot, or no,
That still I lay upon my mother's head;
Bast, that I am as well begot, my liege,
(Fair fall the bones that took the pains for me!)
Compare our faces, and be judge yourself.
If old sir Robert did begat us both,
And were our father, and this son like him;—

O old sir Robert, fearless
I give heaven thanks, I was not like to thee.

K. John. Why, what a madcap hath heaven lent us here!

Eli. He has a trick of Cœur-de-lion's face,
The accent of his tongue affecteth him:
Do you not read some tokens of my son
In the large composition of this man?

K. John. Mine eye hath well examined his parts,
And found in them perfect Richard.—Sirrah, speak,
What doth move you to claim your brother's land?
Bast. Because he hath a half-face, like my father;
With whom half-blooded he claimed my land;
A half-faced great five hundred pound a-year!
Rob. My gracious liege, when that my father liv'd,
Your brother did employ my father much;—

Bast. Well, sir, by this you cannot get my land:
Your tale must be, how he employed my mother.

Rob. And once despatch'd him in an embassy
To Germany, there, with the emperor,
To treat of high affairs that time;
The advantage of his absence took the king,
And in the mean time sojournd at my father's;
Where he did prevail, I shame to speak:
But sirrah, what dost thou claim for this?
Between my father and my mother lay,
(As I have heard my father speak himself,) When this same lusty gentleman was got.
Upon this wight-Bastard he will have all
His lands to me; and took it, on his death;
That this, my mother's son, was none of his;
And, if he were, he came into the world
Full fourteen weeks before the course of time.
That man I hear let me have what is mine,
My father's land, as was my father's will.

K. John. Sirrah, your brother is legitimate;
Your father's wife did after wedlock bear him:
And, if she did play false, the fault was hers;
Which fault lies on the hazards of all husbands That marry wives. Tell me, how if my brother,
Who, as you say, took pains to get this son,
Had of your father claim'd this son for his? In sooth, good friend, your father might have kept This call, bred from his cow, from all the world;
In sooth, he might: then, if he were my brother,
My brother might not claim him; nor your father,
Being of such an age, nor of such degree;
My mother's son did get your father's heir;
Your father's heir must have your father's land.

Rob. Shall then my father's will be of no force, To dispose of his estate as he did
Of no more force to dispose of, sir,
Than was his will to get me, as I think.

Eli. Whether hadst thou rather,—be a Faulconbridge,
And like thy brother, to enjoy thy land;
Or the reputed son of Cœur-de-lion,
Lord of thy presence, and no land beside?

I, my Madam, if my brother had my shape, And I had, in short, as Robert his, like him; And if my legs were two such riding-rods, My arms such eel-skins stuff'd; my face so thin, That in my ear I durst not stick a rose, Last men should say, Look, where thine-earthlings go!
And to his shape, were he to all this land, 'Would I might never stir from off this place, 'Tis given by every foot to have this face; I would not be sir Rob in any case.

Eli. I like thee well; Wilt thou forsake thy fortune, Bequeath thy land to him, and follow me? I am a soldier, and now bound to France.

Bast. Brother, take you my land, I'll take my chance; Your face hath got five hundred pounds a-year; Yet sell your face for five pence, and 'tis dear.

Madam, I'll follow you unto the death.

Eli. Nay, I would have you go before me thither.

Bast. Our country manners give our betters way.

K. John. What is thy name?

Bast. Philip, my liege; so is my name begun;
Philip, good old sir Robert's wife's eldest son.

K. John. From henceforth bear his name whose form thou bearest.
Kneel thou down Philip, but arise more great;
Arise, sir Richard, and Plantagenet.

Bast. Brother, by the mother's side, give me your hand;
My father gave me honour, your's gave land:—
Now bless'd be the hour, by night or day, When I was got, sir Robert was away.

Eli. The very spirit of Plantagenet!—
I am thy good name, Richard; call me so.

Bast. Madam, by chance, but not by truth:
What though?
Something about, a little from the right,
In at the window, or else o'er the hatch; Who dares not stir by day, must walk by night;
And have is, however men do catch;
Near or far off, well won is still well shot;
And I am I, how'er I was begot.

K. John. What, tell me, Faulconbridge; now hast thou thy desire,
A landless knight makes thee a landed square.—
Come, madam, and come, Richard; we must speed For France, and I, and you, the more the better need.

Bast. Brother, adieu; Good fortune come to thee!
For thou wast got I'the way of honesty,
With an honest heart, and no Bastard but the bastard.
A foot of honour better than I was;
But many a many foot of land the worse.
Well, well, now can I make any Joan a lady:—

Good den, sir Richard,—God-a-mercy, felion;—
And if his name be George, I'll call him Peter:
For new-made honour doth forget men's names; 'Tis too respective, and too sociable,
For your conversion. Now your traveller,—
He and his tooth-pick at my worship's mess;
And when my knightly stomach is suffoc'd,
Why then I suck my teeth, and catechise
My picked man of countries:—My dear sir,
(Thus, leaning on my elbow, I begin,) I shall beseech you,—That is question now;
And then comes answer like an ABC-book:—
O, sir, says answer, at your best command; At your employment:—at your service, sir:—
No, sir, says question, at your command; And so, ere answer knows what question would, (Saving in dialogue of compliment; And talking of the Alps, and Apennines, The Pyrenean, and the river Po,) It draws toward supper in conclusion so;
But this is worshipful society,
And fits the mounting spirit, like myself:
For he is but a bastard to the time,
That doth not smack of observation:
(And so am I, whether I smack, or no;) And not alone in habit and device;
Exterior form, outward accoutrement; But from the inward motion to deliver Sweet, sweet, sweet poison for the age's tooth:
Which, though I will not practise to deceive,
Yet, to avoid deceit, I mean to learn;
For it shall strew the footstaps of my rising—
But who comes in such haste, in riding robes?
What woman-post is this? hath she no husband,
That will take pains to blow a horn before her?

Enter Lady Faulconbridge, and James Gurney.

O me! It is my mother:—How now, good lady,
What brings you here to court so hastily?

Lady P. Who is there that is thy brother? where is he?
That holds in chase mine honour up and down?

Bast. My brother Robert? old sir Robert's son?

Colbrand the giant, that same mighty man? Is it sir Robert's son, that you seek so?
Lady F. Sir Robert's son! Ay, thou reverend boy.
Sir Robert's son: Why scorn'st thou at sir Robert?
He is sir Robert's son; and so art thou.

Bast. James Gurney, wilt thou give us leave a while?

Gov. Good leave, good Philip.

Bast. Philip!—spare a—James, there's toys abroad; anon I'll tell thee more.

[Exit Gurney.

Madam, I was not old sir Robert's son.
Sir Robert might have eat his part in me.
Upon Good-friday, and never broke his fast.
Sir Robert could do well; Marry (to confess!
Could he get me? Sir Robert could not do it;
We know him, hardy work—therefore, good mother,
To whom am I beholden for these limbs?
Sir Robert never hope to make this leg.

Lady F. Hast thou conspired with thy brother too,
That for thine own gain should'st defend mine honour?

What means this scorn, thou most untoward knave?

Bast. Knight, knight, good mother,—Basiliscus-like:

What? I am dubb'd; I have it on my shoulder.
But, mother, I am not sir Robert's son;
I have disclaim'd sir Robert, and my land;
Legends, and all land and all.
Then, good my mother, let me know my father;
Some proper man, I hope; Who was it, mother?

Lady F. Hast thou denied thyself a Faulconer?

Bast. As faithfully as I deny the devil.

Lady F. King Richard Cœur-de-lion was thy father;
By long and vehement suit I was seduced
To make room for him in my husband's bed;
Heaven lay not my transgression to my charge!
Then art the issue of my dear offence,
Which was so strongly urg'd, my past defence.

Bast. Now, by this light, were I to get again,
Nadim, I would not wish a better father.
Some sims do bear their privilege on earth,
And so doth yours: your fault was not your folly;
Needs must you lay your heart at his dispose—
Subj ected tribute to commanding love—
Against whose fury and unmatched force
The awless lion could not wage the fight.
Nor keep his princely heart from Richard's hand.
He, that performs robs ilens of their hearts,
May easily win a woman's. Ay, my mother,
With all my heart I thank thee for my father!
Who lives and dates but say, thou didst not well
When I was got, I'll send his soul to hell.
Come, lady, I will show thee to my kin;
And they shall say, when Richard me begot,
If thou hast said him say, it had been sin:
Who says it was, be lies; I say, 'twas not.

[Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—France. Before the Walls of Angiers.

Enter, on one side, the Archduke of Austria, and Forces; on the other, Philip, King of France, and Forces; Lewis, Constance, Arthur, and Attendants.

Lew. Before Angiers well met, brave Austria—
Arthur, that great force-runner of thy blood,
Richard, that robb'd the lion of his heart,
And fought the holy wars in Palestine,
By this, those Duke came early to his grave:
And, for amends to his posterity,
At our importance hither is he come,
To spread his colours, boy, in thy behalf;
And to rebuke the usurpation
Of thy unnatural uncle, English John;
Embrace him, love him, give him welcome hither.

Arth. God shall forgive you Cœur-de-lion's death,
The rather, that you give his offspring life,
Shadowing their right under the wings of war:
I give you welcome with a powerless hand,
But with a heart of unstained love:
Welcome before the gates of Angiers, duke.

Lew. A most noble boy! Who would not do thee right?

Aust. Upon thy cheek lay I this zealous kiss,
As seal to this indelence of my love;
That to my home I will no more return,
Till Angiers and the right thou hast in France,
Together with that pale, that white-faced shore,
Whose foot spurs back the ocean's roaring tides,
And coops from other lands her islands,
Even to that Frenchland, hedg'd in with the main,
That water-walled bulwark, still secure,
And confident from foreign purposes,
Even till that utmost corner of the west
Sainte-thee for her king; till then, fair boy
Will I not think of home, but follow arms.

Const. O, take his mother's thanks, a widow's thanks,
Till you, by strong hand shall help to give him strength,
To make a more requital to your love.

Aust. The peace of heaven is theirs, that lift their swords
In such just and charitable war.

K. Phi. Well then, to work; our cannon shall be bent
Against the brows of this resisting town—

Call for our chiefest men of discipline,
To cull the plots of best advantages:
We'll lay before this town our royal bones,
Wade to the market-place in Frenchmen's blood,
But we will make it subject to this boy.

Const. Stay for an answer to your embassy,
Lest unadvis'd you stain your swords with blood:
My lord Chaillot may from England bring
That right in peace, which here we urge in war;
And then we shall repent each drop of blood,
That hot rash haste so indirectly shed.

Enter Chaillot.

K. Phi. A wonder, lady!—lo, upon thy wish,
Our messenger Chaillot is arriv'd—

What England says, say briefly, gentle lord,
We coolly pause for thee; Chaillot, speak.

Chat. To turn your forces from this paltry siege,
And stir them up against a mightier task.
England, impatient of your just demands,
Hath sent seven lords of the crown in arms; these lords,
Whose leisure I have staid, have given him time
To land his legions all as soon as 1:
His marches are expedient to this town,
His forces strong, his soldiers confident.
With him along is come the mother-queen,
An Ate, stirring him to blood and strife;
With her her niece, the lady Blanch of Spain;
With them a bastard of the king deceased;
Rash, inconsiderate, fiery, voluntaries,
With ladies' faces, and fierce dragons'spleams,—
Have sold their fortunes at their native homes,
Heartyly, for their rights preserved on their backs,
To make a hazard of new fortunes here.
In brief, a braver choice of dauntless spirits,
Than now the English bottoms have waft o'er,
Did not float upon the swelling tide,
To do offence and scath in Christendom;
The interruption of their churlish drums

[Drums beat.

Cuts off more circumstance: they are at hand,
To parley, or to fight; there is no more.

K. Phi. How much unlook'd-for is this expedition!

Aust. By how much unexpected, by so much
We more awake our endeavour for defence;
For courage mounteth with occasion.
Let them be welcome then, we are prepar'd.
Enter King John, Elinor, Blanch, the Bastard, Pembroke, and Forces.

K. John. Peace be to France; if France in peace permit Our just and lineal entrance to our own! If not; bleed France, and peace ascend to heaven! Whiles we, God's wrathful agent, do correct Their proud consent that beat his peace to heaven.

K. Phi. Peace be to England; if that war return From France to England, there to live in peace! England we love; and, for that England's sake, With burden of our armour here we sweat: This toll of ours should be a work of thine; But thou, from loving England art for't. That thou hast under-wrought his lawful king, Cut off the sequence of posterity, Outfaced infant state, and done a rape Upon the maiden virtue of the crown. Look here upon thy brother Geoffrey's face:— These eyes, these brows, were moulded out of his: This little abstract doth contain that large, Which died in Geoffrey; and the hand of time Shall draw this brief into as huge a volume. That Geoffrey was thy elder brother born, And this his son; England was Geoffrey's right, And this is Geoffrey's: In the name of God, How comest thou, that thou art called a king, When living blood doth in these temples beat, Which owe the crown that thou o'er-masterest? K. John. From whom hast thou this great command To draw my answer from thy articles? K. Phi. From that supernal judge, that stirs good thoughts In any breast of strong authority, To look into the blots and stains of right. That judge hath made me guardian to this boy: Under whose warrant, I impeach thy wrong; And this is that whose face I call for. K. John. Alack, thou dost usurp authority. K. Phi. Excuse; it is to be usurping down. Eli. Who is it, thou dost call usurper, France? Con. Let me make answer,—thy usurping son. Eli. Out, insolent! thy bastard shall be king; That thou may'st be a queen, and check the world! Con. My bed was ever to thy son as true, As thine to thine; and to thys, and thys boy Liked in feature to his father Geoffrey, Than thou and John in manners; being as like, As rain to water, or devil to his dam. My boy, a bastard! By my soul, an accursed! His father never was so true begot; It cannot be, an if thou wert his mother. Eli. There's a good mother, boy, that blots thy father. Con. There's a good grandson, boy, that would blot thee. Aust. Peace! Aust. Hear the crier. Bast. What the devil art thou? Aust. One that will play the devil, sir, with you, An 'a may catch your hide and you alone. You are the bare of whom the proverb goes, Whose valour plucks dead lions by the beard; I'll smoke your skin-coat, an I catch you right; Sirrah, look to't; 'Faith, I will, 'Faith. Blanch. O, we, we did he become that lion's robe, That didst give the lion of the boy of France. Bast. It lies as lightly on the back of him, As great Alcides' shoes upon an ass:— But, ass, I'll take that burden from your back; Or lay on you shall make your shoulders crack. Aust. What cracker is this same, that dears our ears With this abundance of superfluous breath? K. Phi. Lewis, determine what we shall do straight. Lew. Women and fools, break off your conference.—

King John, this is the very sam of all,— England, and Ireland, Anjou, Touraine, Maine, In right of Arthur do I claim of thee: Wilt thou resign them, and lay down thy arms? K. John. My life as soon:—I do defy thee, France. Arthur set at rest, yield thee to my hand; And, out of my dear love, I'll give thee more Than e'er the coward hand of France can win: Submit thee, boy. Eli. Come to thy grandson, child. Con. Do, child, go to it; grandam, child; Give grandam kingdom, and it' grandam will Give it a plum, a cherry, and a fig: There's a good grandam. Arth. Good my mother, peace! I would, that I were low laid in my grave; I am not worth this coil that's made for me. Eli. His mother shames him so, poor boy, he weeps. Con. Now shame upon you, whe'r she does, or no! His grandam's wrongs, and not his mother's shames, Draw those heaven-moving pearls from his poor eyes, Which heaven shall take in nature of a fee; And those whose hands he'll braid to do just To do him justice, and revenge on you. Eli. Thou monstrous slanderer of heaven and earth! Con. Thou monstrous injurer of heaven and earth, France. Call not me slanderer; thou, and thine, usurp The dominations, royalties, and rights, Of this oppressed boy: This is thy eldest son's son, Infortuniate in nothing but in thee; Thy sins are visited in this poor child; The canon of the law is laid on him, Being but the second generation Removed from thy sin-conceiving womb. K. John. Bedlam, have done. Con. I have but this to say,— That he's not only plagued for her sin, But God hath made her sin and her the plague On this removed issue, plauge'd for her, And with her plague, her sin; his injury Her injury,—the beadle to her sin; All punished in the person of this child, And all for her; A plague upon her! Eli. Thou unadvised scold, I can produce A will, that bars the title of thy son, Con. Ay, who doubts that? a will! a wicked will! A woman's will; a canker'd grandam's will! K. Phi. Peace, lady; pause, or be more temperate! It ill becomes this presence, to cry aim To these ill-tuned repetitions.— Some trumpet summon hither to the walls These men of Angiers; let us hear them speak, Whose title they admit, Arthur's or John's.

Trumpets sound. Enter Citizens upon the walls.

1 Cit. Who is it, that hath warn'd us to the walls? K. Phi. 'Tis France, for England. K. John. England, for itself: You men of Angiers, and my loving subjects— K. Phi. You loving men of Angiers, Arthur's subjects, Our trumpet call'd you to this gentle parle. K. John. For our advantage:—Therefore, hear us first. These flags of France, that are advanced here Before the eye and prospect of your town, Have hither march'd to your endagement: The cannons have their bowels full of wrath; And ready mounted are they, to spit forth Their iron indignation 'gainst your walls; All preparation for a bloody siege, And merciless proceeding by these French,
Confront your city's eyes, your winking gates;
And, but for our approach, those sleeping stones,
That as a waifs do girdle you about,
By the compulsion of their ordinance
By their confederates from their fired beds of lime
Had been dishabited, and wide horse-mad.
For bloody power to rush upon your peace.
But, on the sight of us, your lawful king:—
Who painfully, with much expedient march,
Had been to overcome the vipers before your gates,
To save unearsted th' city's threatened cheeks.
Behold, the French, amaz'd, vouche-safe a pause;
And soon, instead, of bullets wrap'd in fire,
To make the fiery bell in your walls.
They shoot but calm words, folded up in smoke,
To make a faultless error in your ears:
Which trust accordingly, kind citizens,
And let us, in your king; whose labour'd spirits,
Forwaded in this action of swift speed,
Cave harbourage within your city walls.
K. Philip. When I have said, make answer to us both.

Io, in this right hand, whose protection
Is most divinely vow'd upon the right
Of him it holds, stands young Plantagenet;
Son to the elder brother of this man,
And heir to all his power and benefit:
For this down-trodden empire, we tread
In warlike march these green's before your town;
Being no further enemy to you,
Thus to vanquish you, and unconfine the real
In the relief of this oppressed child.
Religiously provokes. Be pleased then
To pay that duty, which you truly owe,
To him that owes it; namely, this young prince;
And these his arms, like to a muzzled bear,
Save in aspect, have all offence seal'd up;
Our cannon's malice vainly shall be spent
Against the invulnerable clouds of heaven;
And, with a blessed and unexampled might
With unhack'd swords, and helmets all unbrus'd,
We will bear here that lusty blood again,
Which here we came to spout against your town,
And leave your children, all alive, to reign in peace,
But if you fondly pass our proffer'd offer.' —
'Tis not the roundure of your old face'd walls
Can hide you from our messengers of war;
Though all these English, and their discipline,
Were harboured'd in their rude circumference.
Then, tell us, shall your city call us lord,
In that behalf which we have challeng'd it?
Or shall we give the signal to our rage,
And strike your town, whose enemy is we?
I Cit. In brief, we are the king of England's subjects;
For him, and in his right, we hold this town.
K. John. Acknowledge then the king, and let me in.
I Cit. That can we not: but he that proves the king,
To him will we prove royal; till that time,
Have we remand'd up our gates against the world.
K. John. Dost not the crown of England prove the king?
And, if not that, I bring you witnesses,
Twice fifteen thousand hearts of England's breed. —
Bast. Bastards, and else.
K. John. To verify our title with their lives.
K. Phi. As many, and as well-born bodies as Bast. Some bastards too.
K. Phi. Stand in his face, to contradict his claim.
I Cit. Till you compound whose right is worthiest,
We will not hold, or be satisfied from both.
K. John. Then God forgive the sin of all those
That to their everlasting residence,
Before the dew of evening fall, shall fleet,
In the trial of our kingdom's might.
K. Phi. Amen, Amen—Mount, chevaliers! to arms!
Bast. St. George,—that swing'd the dragon, and ever since,
Gracing the scroll, that tells of this war's loss,
With slaughter coupled to the name of kings.
Bast. His, majesty I how high thy glory towers,
When every drop of blood of kings is set on fire!
O, now doth death live his dead chaps with steel;
The swords of soldiers are his teeth, his fangs;
And now he feasts, mouching the flesh of men,
In undetermin'd differences of kings.
Why stand these royal fronts and thus?
Cry, havock, kings I back to the stained field,
You equal potens, fierily-kindled spirits!
Then let confusion of one part confirm
The other's pace; till then, blows, blood, and death!
K. John. Whose party do the towns men yet admit?
K. Phi. Speak, citizens, for England; who's your king?
1 Ct. The king of England, when we know the kings.
K. Phi. Know him in us, that here hold up his right.
K. John. In us, that are our own great deputy,
And bear possession of our person here;
Lord of our presence, Angiers, and of you.
1 Ct. One greater power than we, denies all this;
And, till it be undoubted, we do lock
Our former scurle in our strong-barr'd gates:
King'd of our fears; until our fears, resolved,
Be by some certain king purged and depop'd.
Bast. By heaven, these scrowles of Angiers flout you, kings;
And stand securely on their battlements,
As in a theatre, whence they gape and point
At your industrious scenes and acts of death.
Your royal presences he rul'd by me;
Do like the mutines of Jerusalem,
Be friends a while, and both conjointly bend
Your sharpest deeds of malice on this town:
By east and west let France and England mount
Their battering cannon charged to the mouths;
Till their soul-learing clamours have braw'd down
The flinty ribs of this contemptuous city:
I'd play incessantly upon these jades,
Even till unfenced desolation
Leave them as naked as the vulgar air.
That done, disserve your united strengths,
And part your mingled colours once again;
Turn face to face, and bloody point to point:
Then, in a moment, fortune shall cull forth
But one side her happy smile,
To whom in favour she shall give the day,
And kiss him with a glorious victory.
How like you this wild counsel, mighty states?
Enact it, or make something of the policy?
K. John. Now, by the sky that hangs above our heads,
I like it well;—France, shall we knit our powers,
And lay this Angiers even with the ground;
Then, after, fight who shall be king of it?
Bast. An if thou hast the mettle of a king,—
Being wrong'd, as we are, by this peevish town,—
Turn thou the mouth of thy artillery,
As we will ours, against these saucy walls:
And when that we have dash'd them to the ground,
Why, then defy each other: and, pell-mell,
Marching, or upon our horses' tails.
K. Phi. Let it be so.—Say, where will you assault?
K. John. We from the west will send destruction
Upon the city's bosom.
Aust. I from the north.
K. Phi. Our thunder from the south,
Shall rain their drudg of bullets on this town.
Bast. O prudent discipline! From north to south;
Austria and France shoot in each other's stream.
[Aside.
I'll stir them to it.—Come, away, away!
1 Ct. Hear us, great kings: vouchsafe a while to
And I shall show you peace, and fair-faced league;
Win you this city without stroke or wound;
Rescue those breathing lives to die in beds,
That here come sacrifices for the field:
Persever in that, but hear me, mighty kings.
K. John. Speak on, with favour; we are bent to hear.
1 Ct. That daughter there of Spain, the lady Enrique,
Is near to England; Look upon the years
Of Lewis the Dauphin, and that lovely maid:
If lusty love should go in quest of beauty,
Where should he find it fairer than in Blanche?
If real love should go in search of virtue,
Where should he find it purer than in Blanche?
If love ambitious sought a match of birth,
Whose veins bound richer blood than lady Blanche?
Such is she, as in beauty, virtue, birth,
Is the young Dauphin every way complete:
If not complete, O say, he is not she;
And she again wants nothing, to name want,
If want it be not, that she is not he;
He is the half part of a blessed man,
Left to be finished by such a she;
And she a fair divided excellence,
Whose fulness of perfection was in him.
O, two such silver currents, when they join,
Do glorify the banks that bound them in:
And two such shores to two such streams made one;
Two such controlling bounds shall you be, kings,
To these two princes, if you marry them.
This union shall do more than battery can,
To our fast-closed gates; for, at this match,
With swath-like spleen than powder can enforce,
The mouth of passage shall we fling wide ope,
And give you entrance; but, without this match,
The sea enraged is not half so deaf,
Lions more confident, mountains and rocks
More free from motion; no, not death himself
In mortal fury half so peremptory,
As we to keep this city.
Bast. Here's a stay,
That shakes the rotten carcasse of old death
Out of his rags! Here's a large mouth, indeed,
That spits forth death, and mountains, rocks, and seas;
Talks as familiarly of roaring lions,
As maids of thirteen do of puppy-dogs?
What cannoner begot this lusty blood?
He speaks plain cannon, fire, and smoke, and—
He gives the bastinado with his tongue;
Our ears are cudgel'd; not a word of his
But buffets better than a fist of France:
Zounds! you never so bethum'd with words,
Since I first call'd my brother's father, dad.
Edi. Son, list to this conjunction, make this match;
Give with our niece a dowry large enough
For by this knot thou shalt so surely tie
Thy now unsuccess'd assurance to the crown,
That your green boy shall have no sun to ripe
The bloom that promiseth a mighty fruit.
I see a yielding in the looks of France:
Mark, how they whisper: urge them, while their souls
Are capable of this ambition:
Last real, now melted by the windy breath
Of soft petitions, pity, and remorse,
Cool and congeal again to what it was.
1 Ct. Why answer not the double majesties
This friendly conference; this tender town?
K. Phi. Speak England first, that hath been for-ward first
To speak unto this city: What say you?
K. John. If that the Dauphin there, thy princely sense
Can in this book of beauty read, I love,
Her dowry shall weigh equal with a queen.
For Anjou, and fair Touraine, Maine, Poitiers,
And all the north, by this side and there,
(Except this city now by us besieg'd,) find liable to our crown and dignity, shall yield her bridal bed; and make her rich In titles, honours, and promotions. As she in beauty, education, blood, holds hand with your princess of the world. k. Phi. What say'st thou, boy? look in the lady's Lew. I do, my lord, and in her eye I find A wonder, or a wondrous miracle, the shadow of myself form'd in her eye; While I look out the shadow of your son, becomes a sun, and makes your son a shadow: I do protest, I never lov'd myself: Till now infin'd I beheld myself. Drawn in the flattering table of her eye. Best. Drawn in the flattering table of her eye!-hang'd in the frowning wrinkle of her brow! And quarter'd in her heart!-he doth enpy himself love's traitor: This is pity now, That hang'd, and drawn, and quarter'd, there should be, in such a love, so vile a rout as he. Blanch. My uncle's will, in this respect, is mine. If he see aught in you, that makes him like, That any thing he sees, which moves his liking, I would make my suit to it to my will; Or, if you will, (to speak more properly,) I will enforce it easily to my love. Further I will not flatter you, my lord, That all I see in you is worthy love, Than to prevent, you must do in you, (Though cherish thoughts themselves should be your judge,) That I can find should merit any hate. k. John. What say you, those young ones? What say you, my niece? Blanch. That she is bound in honour still to do What you in wisdom shall vouchsafe to say. k. John. Tell prince Deuphina; can you love this lady? Lew. Nay, ask me if I can refrain from love; For I do love her most unequally. k. John. Then do I give Volguesen, Tournai, Maine, Poictiers, and Anjou, these five provinces, With her to thee; and this addition more, Pull thirty thousand marks of English coin.— Phillip of France, if thou be pleased withal, Command thy son and daughter to join hands. k. Phi. It likes us well;—Young prince, close hands. Aurel. And your lips too; for, I am well assured, That I did so, when I was first assured. k. Phi. Now, citizens of Angiers, ope your gates, Let in that amity which you have made; For at saint Mary's chapel, presently, The rites of marriage shall be solemniz'd. Is not the lady Constance in this troop?— I know, she is not; for this match, made up, Her presence would have interrupted much: Where is she and her son? tell me, who knows. Lew. She is sad and passionate at your highness' tent. k. Phi. And, by my faith, this league, that we have made, Will give her sadness very little cure.— Brother of England, how may we content This widow lady? in her right we came; Which we, God knows, have turn'd another way, To our own vantage. k. John. We will heal up all; For we'll create young Arthur duke of Bretagne, And for that end, and for this rich fair town We'll make him lord of.—Call the lady Con- stance. Some speedy messenger bid her repair To see solemnity. God trust we shall, If not fill up the measure of her will, Yet in some measure satisfy her so, That we shall stop her exclamation. Go we, as well as haste will suffer us, To this unlook'd-for, unprepared pomp. (Exit all but the Bastard.)—The Citizens retire from the walls. Best. Mad world! mad kings! mad composition. John, to stop Arthur's title in the whole, Hath with him discharged with a part: And France, (whose armour conscience buckled on, Whom zeal and charity brought to the field, As son and sworn soldier,) roundest in the rear. With that same purpose-changer, that sly devil, That broker that still breaks the pate of faith; That daily break-vow; he that wins of all The kings, of beggars, old men, young men, maids; Who has hitherto, for external thing to lose, But the word maid,—-cheats the poor maid of that; That smooth-faced gentleman, tickling com- modity. Commodity, the bliss of the world; The world, who of itself is peised well, Made to run even, upon even ground; Till this advantage, this vile drawing bias, This sway of motion, this commodity, Makes it take heed from all indiscretion, From all direction, purpose, course, intent: And this same bias, this commodity, This base and wretched word, this changing word, Clapped on the outward eye of chaste France, Hath drawn him from his own determin'd aid, From a resolv'd and honourable war, To a most base and vile-concluded peace.— And why mean I on this commodity? But for because he hath not wo'd me yet: Not that I have the power to clutch my hand, When his fair angels would salute my palm: No, I have seen my native to behold, As I a poor beggar, sailath on the rich. Well, whiles I am a beggar, I will rail, And say,—there is no sin, but to be rich; And that, as rich, my wife's virtue there to lose, To say,—there is no vice, but beggary: Since kings break faith upon commodity, Gain, be my lord! for I will person thee! [Exit. ACT III. SCENE I.—The same. The French King's Tent. Enter Constance, Arthur, and Salisbury. Const. Gone to be married! gone to swear a False blood to false blood join'd! Gone to be friends! Shall Lewis have Blanch? and Blanch those provinces? It is not so; thou hast mis-spoke, misled; Be well adviz'd, tell o'er thy tale again: It cannot be; thou dost but say, 'tis so: I trust, I may not trust thee; for thy word Is but the vain breath of a common man: Believe me, I do not believe thee; man, I have a king's oath to the contrary. Thou shalt be punish'd for this frightning me, And sick, and incapable of future tale, Oppress'd with wrongs, and therefore full of fears; A widow, husbandless, subject to fears; A woman, naturally born to fears; And though thou now confesst, thou didst but jest, With my vex'd spirits I cannot take a truce, But they will quake and tremble all this day, What dost thou mean by shaking of thy head? What dost thou look so sadly on my son? What meanings that band upon his breast of thine? Why holds thine eye that lamentable rheum, Like a proud river peering o'er his bounds? Be these sad signs confirmers of thy words? Then speak again; not all thy former tale, But this one word, whether thy tale be true. Sal. As true, as, I believe, thou thinkst false, That give you cause to prove thy saying true.
KING.

Act 3.

Const. O, if thou teach me to believe this sorrow, Teach thou this sorrow how to make me die; And let belief and life encounter so, As doth the fury of two desperate men, Which, in the very meeting, fall, and die.—

Lewis marry Blanch ! O, boy, then where art thou? France' friend well with England! what becomes of me?—

Fellow, be gone: I cannotbrook thy sight; This news hath made thee a most ugly man. So, what other harm have I done, lady done, But spoke the harm that is by others done? Const. Which harm within itself so heinous is, As it makes harmless all that speak of it. Arth. I beseech you, madam, be content. Const. If thou, that bid'st me be content, were grim, Ugly, and sland'rous to my mother's wemb, Full of unpleasing blots, and sightless stains, Lame, foolish, crook'd, swart, prodigious, Patch'd with foul moles, and eye-offending marks, I would not care, I then would be content; For then I should not love thee, nor thou Become thy great birth, nor desert'st a crown. But thou art fair; and at thy birth, dear boy! Nature and fortune join'd to make thee great: Of nature's gifts thou may'st with little boast. And Fortune half so much is thine own, O! She is corrupted, chang'd, and won from thee; She adulterates hourly with thine uncle John; And with her golden hand hath pluck'd'd on France To trample and profane her faith, and made And made his majesty the bawd to theirs. France is a bawd to fortune, and king John; That strumpet fortune, that usurping John.— Tell me, fair lady, is it not a good change? Envenom him with words; or get thee gone, And leave these woes alone, which I alone, Am bound to under-bear. No. Pardon me, madam, I may not go without you to the kings. Const. Thou may'st, thou shalt, I will not go with thee; I will instruct my sorrow's to be proud: For grief's is proud, and makes his owner stout. To me, and to the state of my great grief, Let kings assemble; for my grief's so great, That no supporter but the huge firm earth Can hold it up: here I and sorrow sit; Here is my throne, bid kings come bow to it. [She throws herself on the ground.

Enter King John, King Philip, Lewis, Blanch, Elizor, Bastard, Austria, and Attendants.

K. Phi. "Tis true, fair daughter; and this blessed day, Ever in France shall be kept festival: To solemnize this day, the glorious sun Stays in his course, and plays the alchemist; Turning, with splendor of his precious eye, The meagre coldly earth to glittering gold: The yearly course, that brings this day about, Shall never see it but a holyday. Const. A wicked day, and not a holyday. —

Rising.

What hath this day descriv'd? what hath it done; That it in golden letters should be set, Among the high tides, in the calendar? Nay, sorrow, wear, and weep;This day of shame, oppression, perjury. Or, if it must stand still, let wives with child Pray, that their burdens may not fall this day, Least from that weight they lose the sight of this! But on this day, let them fear no wreck; No bargains break, that are not this day made: This day, all things begun to ill end; Yet, faith itself in hollow fates of this change! K. Phi. By heaven, lady, you shall have no cause To curse the fair proceedings of this day: Have I not pawn'd to you my majesty? Const. You have beguil'd me with a counterfeit, Resembling majesty; which, being touch'd, and Proves valueless: You are forsworn, forsworn: You came in arms to spill mine enemies' blood, But now in arms you strengthen it with yours: The grasping vigour and rough frown of war, Is cold in man and his adventur'd youth. And our oppression hath made up this league:— Arm, arm, you heavens, against these perjur'd kings! A widow, one is better, be husband to me, heavens! Let not the hours of this ungodly day Wear out the day in peace; but, ere sunset, Set armed discord 'twixt these perjur'd kings! Hear me, O, hear me! Lady Constance, peace.

Const. War! war! no peace! peace is to me a war.

O Lyons! O Austria! thou dost shame That bloody spoil; thou slave, thou wretch, thou coward; Thou little valiant, great in villany! Thou ever strong upon the stronger side! Thou fortune's champion, that dost never fight But when her humorous ladyship is by To teach thee safety! thou art perjur'd too, And sooth'st up greatness. What a fool art thou, A ramping fool; to brag, and stamp, and swear, Upon my party! Thou cold-blooded slave, Hast thou not spoke like thunder on my side? Been sworn my soldier? bidding me depend Upon thy faith, thy fortune, and thy strength? And dost thou now fall over to my foes? Thou wear a lion's hide! doff it for shame, And hang a calf's skin on those recreant limbs.

Aust. O, that a man should speak those words to me!

Bast. And hang a calf's skin on those recreant limbs.

Aust. To the darst not say so, villain, for thy life.

Bast. And hang a calf's skin on those recreant limbs.

K. John. We like not this; thou dost forget thyself.

Enter Pandulph.

K. Phi. Here comes the holy legate of the pope. Pand. Hall, you anointed deputies of heaven!— To thee king John, my holy errand is. I Pandulph, of fair Milan cardinal, And from pope Innocent the legate here, Do, in his name, religiously demand, Why thou goest against the church, our holy mother, So wilfully dost spurn; and, force perforce, Keep Stephen Langton, chosen archbishop Of Canterbury, from that holy see? This, in our forefathers holy father's name, Pope Innocent, I do demand of thee. K. John. What earthly name to interrogatories, Can task the free breath of a sacred king? Thou canst not, cardinal, devise a name So slight, unworthy, and ridiculous, To charge me to an answer, as the pope. Tell him this tale; and from the mouth of England, Add thus much more,—That no Italian priest Shall tithe or toll in our dominions; But as we under heaven are supreme head, So, under him, that great supremacy, Where we do reign, we will alone uphold, Without the assistance of a mortal hand: So tell the pope; all reverence set apart, To him, and his usurp'd authority. K. Phi. On the letter of England, you blaspheme in this. K. John. Though you, and all the kings of Christendom, Are led so grossly by this meddling priest, Dreading the curse that money may buy out; And, by the merit of vile gold, dross, dust, Purchase corrupted pardon of a man, Who, in that sale, sells pardon from himself;
Though you, and all the rest, so grossly led,
This juggling witchcraft with revenge cherish:
Yet I, alone, alone do me oppose
Against the pope, and count his friends my foes.

PONT. Then by the lawful power that I have,
Then shall stand cur’d, and excommunicate
And blessed shall be he, that doth revolt
From his allegiance to an heretic;
And meritorious shall that hand be call’d,
Canonized, and worshipp’d as a saint,
That doth make void any secret course.
Thy hateful life.

CONST. O, lawful let it be,
That I have room with Rome to curse a while
False king, and cardinal, cry thou, amen,
To my keen curses: for, without my wrong,
There is no tongue hath power to curse him right.

PONT. There’s law and warrant, lady, for my case.

CONST. And for mine too; when law can do no right.
Let it be lawful, that law bar no wrong:
Law cannot give my child his kingdom here:
For he, that holds bis kingdom, holds the law.
Therefore, since law itself is perfect wrong,
How can the law forbid my tongue to curse?

PONT. Philip, of France, on peril of curse,
Let go the hand of that swain at her revolution:
And raise the power of France upon his head,
Unless he do submit himself to Rome.

RILL. Lookst thou pale, France? do not let go thy hand.

CONST. Look to that, devil lest that France repent,
And, by disjointing hands, hell lose a soul.

JNO. King Philip, I will go to the cardinal.

CONST. And hang a calf’s skin on his recreant limbs.

AUST. Well, ruffian, I must pocket up these wrongs.

Because

BEST. Your breecches best may carry them.

K. JOHN. Philip, what sayst thou to the cardinal?

CONST. What should be said, but as the cardinal?

LEW. Bethink you, father; for the difference
Is, purchase of a heavy curse from Rome,
Our light loss of England for a friend:
Forgo the easier.

BLANCH. That’s the curse of Rome.

CONST. O Lewis, stand fast; the devil tempteth thee here,
In likeness of a new untrimm’d bride.

BLANCH. The lady Constance speaketh not from her faith,
But from her need.

CONST. O, if thou grant my need,
Which only lives but by the death of faith,
That need must needs infer this principle,
That faith would live again by death of need;
O, then, tread down my need, and faith mounts up;
Keep my need up, and faith is trodden down.

K. JOHN. The king is mov’d, and answers not to this.

CONST. O, be remov’d from him, and answer well.

AUST. Do so, king Philip; hang no more in doubt.

BEST. Hang nothing but a calf’s-skin, most sweet love,

K. PHI. I am perplex’d, and know not what to say.

PONT. What canst thou say, but will perplex thee more.

If thou stand communistic, and cur’d?

K. PHI. Good reverend father, make my person yours,
And tell me, how you would bestow yourself.
This joyful hand arme, and newly knit:
And the conjunction of our inward souls
Married in league, coupled and link’d together
With all religious strength of sacred vows;
The latest breath that gave the sound of words;

Was deep-sworn faith, peace, beauty, true love,
Between our kingdoms, and our royal sears;
And even before this truce, but new before,—
No longer than we well could wash our hands,
To clap this royal bargain up of peace,—
Heaven knew, they were besom’d and over-stain’d.

With slaughter’s pencil; where revenge did paint
The fearful difference of incensed kings:
And shall these hands, so lately pur’d of blood,
So late thirsting in love, so lately burn’d,
Unyle this seizure, and this kind regret?
Play fast and loose with faith? so jest with heaven,
Make such unconstant children of ourselves,
This lawful son, this lawful son to match our palm’s
Unwear faith sworn; and on the marriage bed
Of smiling peace to march a bloody host,
And make a riot on the gentle brow
Of true sincerity? O holy sir,
My reverend father, let it not be so:
Out of your grace, devise, ordain, impose
Some gentle order; and then we shall be bless’d
To do your pleasure, and continue friends.

PONT. All form is formless, order orderless,
Save what is opposite to England’s love.
Therefore, to arms, be champion of our church!
Or let the church, our mother, breathe her curse,
A mockable curse, or to match our palm’s.
France, thou may’st hold a serpent by the tongue,
A cased lion by the mortal paw,
A fastening tiger safer by the tooth,
Than thus hold, that hand which thou dost hold.

K. PHI. I may disjoin my hand, but not my faith.

PONT. So mak’st thou faith an enemy to faith; and Against our church, our church, dost hold his hand.
Thy tongue against thy tongue. O, let thy vow
First made to heaven, first be to heaven perform’d;
That is, to be the champion of our church!
What that was sworn, is sworn against thyself,
And may not be performed by thyself;
For that, which thou hast sworn to do amiss,
Is not amiss when it is truly done;
And being not done, where doing tends to ill,
The truth is then most done not doing it;
The better act of purposes mistake
Is, to mistake again; though indirect,
Yet indirec’tly thereof grow direct.
And falsehood hollow curses; as fire cools fire,
Within the scorched veins of one new burn’d.
It is religion, that doth make vows kept;
But thou hast sworn against religion;
By which thou swear’st, against the thing thou swear’st;
And mak’st an oath the surety for thy truth
Against an oath; The truth thou art unsure
To swear only not to be sworn; else,
What else, what mockery should it be to swear?
But thou dost swear only to be sworn;
And most forsworn, to keep what thou dost swear.
Therefore, thy latter vows, against thy first,
Is in thyself rebellion to thyself;
And better conquest never canst thou make,
Than arm thy constant and thy nobler parts
Against those giddy loose suggestions.
Upon which better part our prayers come in,
If thou vouchsafe them: but, if not, then know,
The peril of our curses light on thee;
So heavy, as thou shalt not shake them off,
But, in despair, die under their black weight.

AUST. Rebellion, flat rebellion!

BEST. Will it not be?

Will not a calf’s-skin stop that mouth of thine?

LEW. Father, to arms! Upon thy wedding day?

BLANCH. Against the blood that thou hast married?
What, shall our feast be kept with slaughtered
Shall braying trumpets, and loud clarilus drums,—
Clamours of hell,—be measures to our pomp?
O husband, hear me!—ah, silence, how new
Is husband in my mouth—-even for that name,
Act 3.

KING JOHN.

Which till this time my tongue did ne'er pronounce, Upon my knee I beg, go not to arms Against mine uncle.

Const. O, upon my knee, Made hard with kneeling, I do pray to thee, Thou virtuous Dauphin, alter not the doom Fore-thought by heaven.

Blanch. Now shall I see thy love; What motive may Be stronger with thee than the name of wife? Const. That which upholdeth him that thee up.

His honour: O, thine honour, Lewis, thine honour! Len. I muse, thy majesty doth seem so cold, When such profound respects do pull you on. Pang. I will denounce a curse upon his head.
K. Phi. Thou shalt not need!—England, I'll fall from thee.

Const. O fair return of banish'd majesty! Eli. O foul revolt of French inconstancy!

K. John. France, thou shalt rue this hour within this hour.

Bast. Old time the clock-setter, the t'eld sexton time, Is it as he will? well then, France shall rue.

Blanch. The sun's o'ercast with blood: Fair day, adieu! Which is the slave that I must go withal? I am with both; each army hath a hand; And, in their rage, I having hold of both, They whirl asunder, and dismember me. Husband, I cannot pray that thou may'st win; Uncle, I need must pray that thou may'st lose; Father, I may not wish the fortune thine; Grandam, I will not wish thy wishes thrive; Whoever wins, on that side shall I lose; Assured loss, before the match be play'd.

Len. Lady, with me; with me thy fortune lies. Blanch. There where my fortune lies, there my life dies.

K. John. Cousin, go draw our prissance togeth- [Exit Bastard. France, I am burn'd up with inflaming wrath; A rage, whose heat hath this condition, That nothing canst an alley, nothing but blood, The blood, and dearest-vain'd blood, of France. K. Phi. Thy rage shall burn thee up, and thou shalt turn To ashes here our blood shall quench that fire: Look to thy heart, thou art in jeopardy.
K. John. No more than he that threaten's.—To arms let's hie! [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. Plains near Angiers.

Alarums; Excursions. Enter the Bastard, with Austria's head.

Bast. Now, by my life, this day grows wondrous Some airy devil hovers in the sky, [hot, And pours down mischief. Austria's head, lie there; While Philip breathes.

Enter King John, Arthur, and Hubert.

K. John. Hubert, keep this boy: Philip, make My mother is assailed in its tent, [up: And ta'en, I fear.

Bast. My lord, I rescu'd her; Her highness is in safety, fear you not: But on, my liege; for very little pains Will bring this labour to an happy end. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same.

Alarums; Excursions; Retreat. Enter King John, Elinor, Arthur, the Bastard, Hubert, and Lords.

K. John. So shall it be; your grace shall stay behind, So strongly guarded.—Cousin, look not sad: [To Elinor. Thy granadam loves thee; and thy uncle will As dear be to thee as thy father was.

Arth. O, this will make my mother die with grief.

K. John. Cousin, [to the Bastard.] away for England; haste before: And, ere we come, to see the she, shake the bags Of hoarding abbotts; imprison'd angels Set thou at liberty: the fat ribs of peace Must by the hungry now be fed upon: Use our commission in his utmost force.

Bast. Bell, book, and candle shall not drive me When gold and silver becks me to come on. [back, I leave your highness.—Grandam, I will pray (If ever I remember to be holy,) For your faire safety, kiss your hand.

Eli. Farewell, my gentle cousin.

Eli. Exit Bastard. If this same were a church-yard where we stand, And thou possessed with a thousand wrongs; Or if that surly spirit, melancholy, Had bak'd thy blood, and made it heavy, thick: (Which, else, runs trickling up and down the veins, Making that idiot, laughter, keep men's eyes, And strain their cheeks to idle merriment, A passion hateful to my purposes;) Or if that thou could'st see me without eyes, Hear me without thine ears, and make reply Without a tongue, using conceit alone, Without eyes, ears, and harmful sound of words; Then, in despite of broodful watchful day, I would in thy bosom pour my thoughts: But ah, I will not.—Yet I love thee well; And, by my troth, I think, thou lov'st me well.

Hub. So well, that what you bid me undertake, Though that my death were adjacent to my act, By heaven, I do't.

K. John. Do not I know, thou would'st? Good Hubert, Hubert, throw thine eye On yon young boy: I'll tell thee what, my friend, He is a very serpent in my way; And, wheresoe'er this foot of mine doth tread, He lies before me; Dost thou understand me? Thou art his keeper.

And I will keep him so, That he shall not offend your majesty.

Hub. My lord?

Hub. He shall not live.

I could be merry now: Hubert, I love thee? Well, I'll not say what I intend for thee: Remember.—Madam, fare you well; I'll send those powers o'er to your majesty. Eli. My blessing go with thee.

K. John. For England, cousin Hubert shall be your man, attend on you With all true duty.—On toward Calais, ho!

[Exeunt.]
SCENE IV. —The same. The French King's Tent.

Enter King Phillip, Lewis, Pandulph, and Attendants.

K. Phi. So, by a roaring tempest on the flood,
A whole armado of convicted sail
Is scatter'd and disjointed with dishonour. [Foul weather.
Pand. Courage and comfort! all shall yet go well.
K. Phi. What can we go when we have run
so ill?
Are we not beaten? Is not Angiers lost?
Are we not taken prisoner? divers dear friends slain?
And bloody England into England gone,
Overbearing interruption, spite of France?
Low. What he hath won, that he has fortified:
So hot a speed with such advice dispos'd,
Such tender order in so fierce a cause,
Dost want example: Who hath read, or heard,
Of any kindred action like to this?
K. Phi. I tell could I bear that England had this praise,
So we could find some pattern of our shame.

Enter Constance.

Look, who comes here! a grave unto a soul;
Holding the eternal spirit, agitateth her will,
In the vice prison of afflicted breath —
I pray thee, lady, go away with me.
Con. Lo, now! now see the name of your peace.
K. Phi. Patience, good lady! comfort, gentle
Constance!
Con. No, I defy all counsel, all redress,
But that which ends all counsel, true redress,
Death, death! that doth annihilate love;
Thou odious stem! sound rottenness!
Arise forth from the couch of lasting night,
Thou hate and terror to prosperity,
And I will kiss thy detestable beauty,
And put my eye-balls in thy vanity brows;
And ring these fingers with thy household worms;
And stop this gap of breath with fusticate dust,
And be a carrion monster like thyself;
Come, grip on me; and I will think thee small,
And blush thee as thy wife! Misery's love,
O, come to me!

K. Phi. To fair affliction, peace.
Con. No, no, I will not, having breath to cry:
O, that my tongue were in the thunder's mouth!
Then with a passion would I shake the world;
And rouse from sleep, that fell asleep,
Who cannot hear a lady's feeble voice,
Which scornsa a modern invocation.
Pand. Lady, you utter madness, and not sorrow.
Con. Thou art not holy: thou art my so:
I am not mad: I care what hair I tear, I care;
My name is Constance; I was Geoffrey's wife;
Young Arthur is my son, and he is lost:
I am not mad: — I would to heaven, I were!
For them, 'tis like, I should forget myself;
O, if I could, what grief should I forget!
Presch some philosophy to make me mad,
And thou shalt be canoniz'd, cardinal:
For, being not mad, but sensible of grief,
My reasonable part produces reason.
How I may be deliver'd of these woes,
And teaches me to kill or hang myself:
If we were mad, I should forget my son;
O, I would think, a beaute of clouts were he:
I am not mad; too well, too well I feel
The different plague of each calamity.
K. Phi. Bind up those tresses: O, what love I
In the fair multitude of those hair's!
Where but by chance a silver drop hath fallen,
Even to that drop ten thousand of my friends
Lie for it themselves in socieble grief;
Like true, inseparable, faithful loves,
Sticking together in calamity.
Con. To England, if you will.

K. Phi. Bind up your hair's.
Con. Yes, that I will; And wherefore will I do it?
I tore them from their bonds; and cried aloud,
O that these hands could so redeem those
As they have given those hair's their liberty?
But now I envy at their liberty,
And will again commit them to their bonds,
Because my poor child's with a prophet's child,
And, faithfull Constance, I have heard you say,
That we shall see and know our friends in heaven
If that be true, I shall see my boy again; For,
Since the birth of Cain, the fairest male child,
To be holden but yesterday susipte,
There was not such a gracious creature born.
But now will canker sorrow eat my bud,
And chase the native beauty from his cheek,
And he will look as hollow as a ghost; As dim and meagre as an ague's fit; And so he'll die, and, rising, so again,
When I shall meet him in the court of heaven,
I shall not know him: therefore never, never Must I behold my pretty Arthur more.
Pand. You hold too heinous a respect of grief.
Con. He talks to me, that never did love;
K. Phi. For grief doth know no fond of grief;
And your child.
Con. Grief fills the room up of my absent child,
Lies in his bed, walks up and down with me;
Puts on his pretty looks, repeats his words,
Remembered all of all his grace and part.
Then, have I reason to be fond of grief.
Fare you well: had you such a loss as I,
I could give better comfort than you do.
I will not keep this form upon my head,
[Teared off her head-dress.
When there is such disorder in my wit.
O lord! my boy, my Arthur! — O my food, my all the world!
My widow comfort, and my sorrow's cure!
K. Phi. I fear some outrage, and I'll follow her.

Low. There's nothing in this world, can make me joy:
Life is as tedious as a twice-told tale,
Vexing the dull ear of a drowsy man.
And this shame hath spoil'd the sweet world's taste,
That it yields naught, but shame, and bitterness.

Pand. Before the curing of a strong disease,
Even in Instant of repair and rest,
That's strongest; evil, that take leave,
On their departure most of all show evil:
What have you lost by losing of this day?
Low. And all the glory, joy, and happiness.
Pand. If you have won it, certainly, you had
No, no: when fortune means to men most good,
She looks upon them with a threatening eye,
'Tis strange to think how much king John hath lost,
In this which he accounts so clearly won;
Are you not grieved, that Arthur is his prisoner?
Low. As heartily, as he is glad he hath him.
Pand. Your mind is all as youthful as your blood.
Now hear me speak, with a prophetick spirit; For even the breath of what I say to speak.
Shall, in each dust, each straw, each little rub,
Out of the path which shall directly lead
Thy foot to England's throne; and, therefore, mark:
John hath mad'd Arthur; and it cannot be,
That, whiles warm life plays in that infant's veins,
The misprison'd John should entertain an hour,
One minute, nay, one quiet breath of rest:
A scepter, which is w'd with an unruly hand,
Must be so boisterously maintain'd as gain'd:
And he, that stands upon a slippery place,
Makes hire of no wise hold to stay him up,
That John may stand, then Arthur needs must fall;
So be it, for it cannot be but so.
Arth. Are you sick, Hubert? you look pale to-day.

Hub. Young boy, I must.

Arth. And will you?

Hub. And I will.

Arth. Have you the heart? When your head did but ake,
I knit my handkerchief about your brows,
(But I had a princess wrung it me,) and I did ne'er ask it you to kiss it, nor
With my hand at midnight held your head;
And, like the watchful minutes to the hour,
Still and anon cheer'd up the heavy time:
Saying, What if you lack you? and,
Where lies your grief?

Or, what good love may I perform for you?
Many a poor man's son would have lain still,
And never have spoke a loving word to you;
But you at your sick service had a prince,

Nay, you may think, my love was crafty love,
And call it, cunning: Do, an if you will:
If heaven be pleas'd that you must use me ill,
Why, then you must—Will you put out mine eyes?

These eyes, that never did, nor never shall,
So much as frown on you?

I have sworn to do it;
And with hot iron must I burn them out.

Arth. Ah, none, but in this iron age, would do it.

The iron of itself, though heat red-hot,
Approaching near these eyes, would drink my tears,
And quench his fiery indignation,
Even in the matter of mine innocence.

Nay, after that, consume away in rust,
But for containing fire to harm mine eye.
Are you more stubborn-hard than hammer'd iron?
An if an angel should have come to me,
And told me, Hubert should put out mine eyes,
I would not have believ'd no tongue, but Hubert's.

Hub. Come forth.

[Stamps.]

Re-enter Attendants, with cords, irons, &c.

Do as I bid you do.

Arth. O, save me, Hubert, save me! my eyes are out.

Even with the fierce looks of these bloody men.

Hub. Give me the iron, I say, and bind him here.

Arth. Alas, what need you be so boistrously?

I will not struggle, I will stand stone-still.

For heaven's sake, Hubert, let me not be bound!

Nay, hear me, Hubert I drive these men away,
And I will take as quiet as a lamb.

I will not stir, nor wince, nor speak a word,
Nor look upon the iron angrily;
Thrust but these men away, and I'll forgive you,
Whatever torment you do put me to.

Hub. Go, stand within; let me alone with him.

U 2
...in such a deed.

[Enter Attendants.]

KING. Alas! it then have chid away my friend: He hath a stern look, but a gentle heart. — Let him come back, that his compassion may Give life to yours.

Hub. Come, boy, prepare yourself.

KING. Is there no remedy?

Hub. None, but to lose your eyes.

KING. O heaven! that there were but a mote in
A grain, a dust, a guat, a wand'ring hair,
Any annoyance in that precious sense!
Then, feeling what small things are boast'rous there.
Your vile intent must needs seem horrible.

Hub. Is this your promise? go to, hold your tongue.

KING. Hubert, the utterance of a brace of tongues
Must needs want pleasing for a pair of eyes;
Let me not hold my tongue; let me not, Hubert!
Or, Hubert, if you will, cut out my tongue,
So I may keep mine eyes; () spare mine eyes;
Though to no use, but still to look on you.
Lo, by my truth, the instrument is cold,
And would not harm me.

Hub. I can heat it, boy.

KING. No, in good sooth; the fire is dead with grief,
Being create for comfort, to be us'd
In undeserv'd extremes: See else yourself;
The breath of heaven hath blown his spirit out,
And strew'd repentant ashes on his head.

Hub. But with my breath I can revive it, boy.

KING. And if you do, you will but make it blushing,
And glow with shame of your proceedings, Hubert:
Nay, it, perchance, will sparkle in your eyes;
And, like a dog that is compell'd to fight,
Snarling and baring what teeth doth tarm him on.
All things, that you should use to do me wrong,
Deny their office: only you do lack
That mercy, which fierce fire, and iron, extends,
Creatures of note, for mere surviving uses.

Hub. Well, see to live; I will not touch thine eyes
For all the treasure that thine uncle owes:
Vengeance, and death, did purpose, boy.
With this same very iron to burn them out.

KING. () now you look like Hubert! all this while
You were disguised.

Hub. Peace: no more. Adieu;
Your uncle must not know but you are dead:
I'll fit these dogg'd spies with false reports.
And, pretty child, sleep dobbolasly, and secure,
That Hubert, for the wealth of all the world,
Will not offend thee.

KING. O heaven!—I thank you, Hubert.

Hub. Silence; no more: Go closely in with me;
Much danger do I undergo for thee. [Exit.]

SCENE II. —The same. A Room in State in the Palace.

Enter King John, crowned; Pembroke, Salisbury, and other Lords. The King takes his State.

K. John. Here once again we sit, once again
Ordain'd,
And look'd upon, I hope, with cheerful eyes.

Pem. This once again, but that your highness pleas'd;
Was once superfluous: you were crown'd before,
And it high royalty was never pluck'd off;
The faiths of men never stain'd with revol't;
Fresh expectation troubl'd not the land,
With any long'd for change, or better state.
Sal. There were, to be possess'd with double pomp,
To guard a title that was rich before,
To gild refined gold, to paint the lily,
To throw a perfume on the violet,
To smooth the ice, or add another hue
Unto the rainbow, or with taper-light
To seek the heavens brighter than to grismus,
Is wasteful, and ridiculous excess.

Pem. But that your royal pleasure must be done,
This act is as an ancient tale new told;
And from the last repeating, troublesome,
Being nrg'd at a time unseasonable.

Sal. In this, the antique and well-noted face (Of plain old form is much disfigur'd;
And to a shifted wind unto this fault
It makes the course of thoughts to fetch about,
Startles and frights consideration;
Makes sound opinion sick, and truth suspect;
For putting on so new a fashion'd robe.

Pem. Even workmen strive to do better than well,
They do confound their skill in covetousness:
And, oftentimes, excusing of a fault,
Both make the fault the worse by the excuse;
As patches, set upon a little breach,
Discredit more in hiding of the fault,
Than did the fault before it was so patch'd.

Sal. To this effect, before you were new-crown'd,
We breath'd our counsel: but it pleas'd your highness
To overbear it; and we are all well pleased,
Since a part of what was advis'd,
Doth make a stand at what your highness will.

K. John. Some reasons of this double coronation
I have possess'd you with, and think them strong;
And, in the last repeating, troublc's my fear,
I shall induc e you with: Mean time, but ask
What you would have reform'd, that is not well;
And well shall you perceive, how willingly
I will both hear and grant you your requests.

Pem. I, (as one that am the tongue of these,
To sound the purposes of all their hearts,) Both for myself and them, (but chief of all,
Your safety, for the sake whereof I have Hend their best studies, heartily request
The enfranchisement of Arthur; whose restraint
Doth move the murmuring lips of discontent
To break into this dangerous argument,—
If, what in rest you have, in right you hold,
Why then your fears, (which, as they say, attend
The steps of wrong,) should move you to mew up
Your kingdom, and to choke his days
With barbarous ignorance, and deny his youth
The rich advantage of good exercise
That the time's enemies may not have this occasion,
To go a-begging, and let it be our world,
That you have bid us ask his liberty;
Which for our goods we do no further ask,
Than whereupon our seal, on you depending,
Comits it your seal, he have his liberty.

K. John. Let it be so; I do commit his youth
Enter Hubert.

To your direction.—Hubert, what news with you?

Pem. This is the man should do the bloody deed:
He show'd his warrant to a friend of mine:
The image of a wicked heinous fault
Lives in his eye; that close aspect of his
Does shew the mood of a much-troubled breast;
And I do fearfully believe, tis done,
What we so fear'd he had a charge to do.

Sal. The colour of the king doth come and go,
Between two purposes, and his business,
Like heralds 'twixt two dreadful battles set;
His passion is so rife, it needs must break.

Pem. And, when it breaks, I fear, will issue
The foul corruption of a sweet child's death.

K. John. We cannot hold mortality's strong hand:—
Good long, although my will to give is living,
The suit which you demand is gone and dead.
He tells us, Arthur is deceas'd to-night.

Sal. Indeed, we fear'd, his sickness was past cure.

Pem. Indeed, we heard how near his death he was,
KING JOHN.

Act 4.

Before the child himself felt he was sick;
This may be said, or, rather, heard, hence.
K. John. Why do you bend such solemn brows on me?
Think you, I bear the shears of destiny?
Have I commandment on the pulse of life?
Sol. It is apparent foul-play; and 'tis shame,
That greatness should so grossly offer it;
So thrive it in your game! and so farewell.
Pom. Stay yet, lord Salisbury; I'll go with thee,
And bear the inheritance of this poor child,
His little kingdom of a forced grave.
That blood, which ow'd the breadth of all this isle,
Three foot of it doth hold; Bad word the while!
That blood will not be thus this blood,
To all our sorrows, and ere long, I doubt.
[Exeunt Lords.

K. John. They burn in indignation; I repent;
There is no sure foundation set on blood;
No certain life achiev'd by others' death.

Enter a Messenger.

A fearful eye thou hast; Where is that blood,
That I have send'd him in those cheeks?
So foul a sky clears not without a storm;
Pour down thy weather:—How goes all in France?
Mess. From France to England.—Never such a power
For any foreign preparation,
Was levied in the body of a land!
The copy of your speed is learn'd by them;
For, when you should be told they do prepare,
The tidings come, that they are all arriv'd.
K. John, Where hath our intelligence been drunk?
Where hath it slept? Where is my mother's care?
That such an army could be drawn in France,
And she not hear of it?
Mess. My liege, her ear
Is stopp'd with dust; the first of April, died
Your noble mother: And, as I hear, my lord,
The lady Constance in a frenzy died.
Three days before; but this from rumour's tongue
I idly heard; if true, or false, I know not.
K. John. Withhold thy speed; dreadful occasion!
O, make a league with me, till I have pleas'd
My discontented peers!—What! mother dead?
How wildly then walks my estate in France!—
Under whose sovereignty these powers of France,
That thou for truth giv'st out, are laded here?
Mess. Under the Dauphin.

Enter the Bastard and Peter of Pomfret.

K. John. Thou hast made me giddy
With these ill tidings.—Now, what says the world
To your proceedings? do not seek to stuff
My head with more ill news, for it is full.
As I travelled hither in those cheeks,
Find the people strangely fantasi'd;
Possess'd with dreams, full of idle dreams;
Not knowing what they fear, but full of fear:
And, to be SEEN, in fear and durst,
Wish'd I might fall on him,
From forth the streets of Pomfret, whom I found
With many hundreds treading on his heels;
To whom he sung, in rude harsh-sounding rhymes,
The hour at which he would ascend.
Ascends he to-night. His highness should deliver up your crown.
K. John. Thou idle dreamer, wherefore didst thou so?
Peter. To break knowing that the truth will fall out.
K. John. Hubert, away with him; imprison him;
And on that day at noon, whereon, he says,
I shall yield up my crown, let him hang'd;
Deliver him to safety, and return,
For I must use thee.—O my gentle cousin,
[Exit Hubert, with Peter.

Hear'st thou the news abroad, who are arriv'd?
Bast. The French, my lord; men's mouths are full of it:
Besides, I met lord Bigot, and lord Salisbury,
(With eyes as red as new-enkindled fire),
And others more, going to seek the grave
Of Arthur, who, they say, is kill'd to-night
On your suggestion.

K. John. Gentle kinsman, go,
And thrust thyself into their companies;
I have a way to win their loves again;
Bring them before me.
Bast. I will seek them out.

K. John. Nay, but make haste, the better foot before.
O, let me have no subject enemies,
When adverse foreigners affright my towns
With dreadful pomp of stout invasion!—
Be Mercury, set feathers to thy heels;
And fly, like thought, from them to me again.
Bast. The spirit of the time shall teach me speed

K. John. Spoke like a spritifule noble gentleman.—
Go after him; for he, perhaps, shall need
Some messenger betwixt me and the peers;
And be thou he.
Mess. With all my heart, my liege.

K. John. My mother dead!
[Re-enter Hubert.

Hub. My lord, they say, five moons were seen to-night;
Four fixed; and the fifth did whirl about
The other four, in wondrous motion.
K. John. Five moons?
Hub. Old men, and beldams, in the streets
Do prophesy it dangerously:
Young Arthur's death is common in their mouths:
And when they talk of him, they shake their heads,
And whisper one another in the ear;
And he, that speaks, doth wipe the hearer's wrist;
Whilst he, that hears, makes fearful action,
With wrinkled brows, with nods, with rolling eyes.
I saw a smith stand with his hammer, thus,
The whilst his iron did on the anvil cool,
With open mouth swallowing a tailor's news;
Who, with his shears and measure in his hand,
Standing on slippers, (which his nimble haste
Had falsify'd thrust upon contrary feet,) Told of a many thousand warr'd in French,
That were embattell'd and rank'd in Kent.
Another lean undaw'd artificer
Cuts off his tale, and talks of Arthur's death.
K. John. Why seek'st thou to possess me with these fears?
Why urg'st thou so oft young Arthur's death? Thy hand hath murder'd him: I had mighty cause
To wish him dead, but thou hast done none to kill him.
Hub. Had none, my lord! why, did you not provoke me?
K. John. It is the curse of kings, to be attended
By slaves, that take their humours for a warrant
To break within the bloody house of life:
And, on the winking of authority,
To undersell a law, to know the meaning
Of dangerous majesty, when, perchance, it frowns
More upon humour than advis'd respect.
Hub. Here is your hand and seal for what I did.
K. John. Within the last account twixt heaven and earth
Is to be made, then shall this hand and seal
Witness against us to damnation!
How oft the hand of man, to do ill deeds,
Makes deeds ill done! Hadest not thou been by,
A fellow by the hand of nature mark'd,
Quoted, and sign'd, to do a deed of shame,
This murder had not come into my mind.
Enter the Bastard.

Bast. One more to-day well met, distemper'd with the king.

The king, by me, requests your presence straight.

Sal. The king hath dispos'd of himself of us; we will not line his thin besmeared cloak with our pure honours, nor attend the foot that leaves a trail of blood where'er it walks; return, and tell him so; we know the worst.

Bast. Whatever you think, good words, I think, were best.

Sal. Our griefs, and not our manners, reason now.

Bast. But there is little reason in your grief; therefore, 'twere reason, you had manners now.

Pem. Pray, sir, impartiality hath his privilege.

Bast. 'Tis true; to hurt his master, no man else.

Sal. This is the prince: What is he lies here? [Seizing Arthur.

Pem. O death, made proud with pure and princely beauty!

The earth hath not a hole to hide this deed.

Sal. Murder, as hating what himself hath done,

Doth lay it open, to rage where'er it walks:

Big. Oh, when he doth this beauty to a grave,

Found it too precious-princely for a grave.

Sal. Sir Richard, what think you? Have you been to the world?

Or have you read, or heard? or could you think?

Or do you almost think, although you see,

That you do see? could thought, without this bit,

Form such another? This is the very top,

The height, the crest, or crest unto the crest,

Of murder's arms; this is the bloodiest shame,

The world's swagg'y, the vilest stroke,

That ever wall-eyed wrath, or starving rage,

Presented to the tears of soft remorse.

Pem. All murderers past do stand excus'd in this

And this so noble, so unmatchable;

Shall give a holiness, a purity,

To the yet-unbegot'ten sin of times;

And prove a deadly bloodshed but a jest,

Exampl'd by this heinous spectacle.

Bast. It is a dammed and bloody work;

The graceless action of a heavy hand;

If that it be the work of any hand.

Sal. If that it be the work of any hand?—

We have a kind of light, what would enshrine

It is the shameful work of Hubert's hand;

The practice, and the purpose, of the king:

From whose obedience I forbid my soul,

Kneeling before this ruin of sweet life,

And breathing to his breathless silence

The incense of a vow, a holy vow;

Never to taste the pleasures of the world,

Never to be infected with delight,

Nor conversant with ease and idleness,

Till I have set a glory to this hand,

By giving it the worship of revenge.

Pem. Big. Our souls religiously confirm thy words.

Enter Hubert.

Hub. Lords, I am hot with haste in seeking you

Arthur doth live; the king hath sent for you.

Sal. O, he is bold, and blisters not at death—

Avast, thou hateful villain, get thee gone!

Hub. I am no villain.

Sal. Must I rob the law?

Big. Your sword is bright, sir; put it up again.

Sal. Not till I sheath it in a murderer's skin.

Hub. Stand back, lord Salisbury, stand back, I

By heaven, I think, my sword's as sharp as yours—

I would not have you, lord, forget yourself,

Nor tempt the danger of my true defence;

Lest I, by marking of your rage, forget

Your worth, your greatness, and nobility.
KING JOHN.

Act 4.

Hold out this tempest. Bear away that child, And follow me with speed; I'll to the king: A thousand businesses are brief in hand, And heaven itself doth frown upon the land.

Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter King John, Pandulf with the crown, and Attendants.

K. John. Thus have I yielded up into your hand The circle of my glory.

Pand. Take again [Giving John the crown.]

From this my hand, as holding of the pope, Your sovereign greatness and authority. K. John. Now keep your holy word: go meet the French; And from his holiness use all your power To stop their marches, 'fore we are inflam'd. Our discontented counties do revolt; Our people quarrel with obedience; Swearing allegiance, and the love of soul, To strange blood, to foreign rivalry. This inundation of mistemper'd humour Rests by you only to be qualified. Then pause not; for the present time's so sick, That your best medicine must be minister'd, Or overthrow incurable ensues.

Pand. It was my breath that blew this tempest up, Upon your stubborn usage of the pope: But, since you are a gentle convertible, My tongue shall hush again this storm of war, And make fair weather in your blustering land. On this Ascension-day, remember well, Upon your oath of service to the pope, Go I to make the French lay down their arms.

[Exit Lords.

Bast. Here's a good world!—Knew you of this fair work? Beyond the infinite and boundless reach Of mercy, if you did this deed of death, Art thou damn'd, Hubert.

Hub. Do but hear me, sir;

Bast. Ha! I'll tell thee what;

Thou art damn'd as black—nay, nothing is so black;

Thou art more damn'd than prince Lucifer: There is not yet so ugly a fiend of hell As thou shalt be, if thou didst kill this child.

Hub. Upon my soul,

If thou didst but consent

To this most cruel act, do but despair, And, if thou wert a cord, the thickest thread The spider twisted from her womb Will serve to strangle thee; a rush will be A beam to hang thee on; or wouldst thou drown thyself, Put but a little leaver in a spoon, And it shall be as all the ocean, Enough to stifle such a villain up. I do suspect thee very grievously. Hub. If I in act, consent, or sin of thought Be guilty of the stealing that sweet breath Which was embroiled in this beastly cove, Let hell want pains enough to torture me! I left him well.

Bast. Go, bear him in thine arms.— I am amaz'd, methinks; and lose my way Among the thorns and dangers of this world. But how may Ist thou take all England up! From forth this morsel of deadly raft, The life, the right, and truth of all this realm Is fled to heaven; and England now is left To tug and struggle, and to part by the teeth The unwieldy interest of proud-swelling state. Now, for the bare-pick'd bone of majesty, Doth dogged war bristle his angry crest, And snarl in the gentle eyes of peace: Now powers from home, and discontented at home, Meet in one line; and vast confusion waits (As doth a raven on a sick-fallen beast,) The eminence decay of wrested pomp. Now happy he, whose cheek and chute can...

[Exit.

K. John. Is this Ascension-day? Did not the prophet Say, that before Ascension-day at noon, My crown I should give off? Even so I have: I did suppose, it should be on constraint; But, heaven be thank'd, it is but voluntary.

Enter the Bastard.

Bast. All Kent hath yielded; nothing there holds out, But Dover castle: London hath receiv'd, Like a kind host, the Dauphin and his powers: Your nobles will not hear you, but are gone To offer service to your enemy; And wild amazement hurries up and down The little number of your doubtful friends. K. John. Would not my lords return to me again, After they heard young Arthur was alive? Bast. They found him dead, and cast into the streets; An empty casket, where the jewel of life By some damn'd hand was rob'd and ta'en away. K. John. That villain Hubert told me he did it.

Bast. So, on my soul, he did, for aught he knew But wherefore do you droop? why look you sad? Be great in act as you have been in thought; Let not the world see fear, and sad distrust, Govern the motion of a kingly eye: Be stirring as the time; be fire with fire; Threaten the threaten'r, and outface the brow Of bragging horror; so shall in us, That borrow their behaviour's from the great, Grow great by your example, and put on The dauntless spirit of resolution. Away; and glitter like the god of war, When he intendeth to become the field; Show boldness and aspiring confidence. What, shall they seek the lion in his den,
And fright him there? and make him tremble there?
O, let it not be said,—Forage, and run
To meet displeasure further from the doors;
And peace, and peace, such peace as is in night.

K. John. The legate of the pope hath been with me,
And I have made a happy peace with him;
And I have sworn to dismiss the powers
Led by the Dauphin.

Bast. O inglorious league!
Shall we, upon the footing of our land,
Send fair-play orders, and make compromise,
Insinuate, parley, and base truce,
To arms invasive? shall a heartless boy,
A cocker'd silk'en wanton brave our fields,
And flesh his spirit in a warlike soil,
Mocking the air with colours idly spread,
And find no check? Let us, my liege, to arms:
Perchance, the cardinal cannot make your peace;
Or if he do, let it at least be said,
They saw we had a purpose of defence.

K. John. Have thou the ordering of this present time.
Bast. Away then, with good courage; yet, I
Must be the precedent to these lords again;
That, having our fair order written down,
Both then, and we, perusing o'er these notes,
May know wherefore we took the sacrament,
And keep our faiths firm and inviolable.

Sol. Upon our sides it never shall be broken.
And, noble Dauphin, albeit we swear
A voluntary zeal, and unswear'd faith,
To your proceedings; yet, believe me, prince,
I am not glad that such a sore of time
Should seek a plaster by contemn'd revolt,
And heal the inveterate canker of one wound,
By making many: O, it grieves my soul.
That I must draw this metal from my side
To be a widow-maker; O, and there,
Where honourable rescue, and defence,
Cries out upon the name of Salisbury:
But such the infection of the time,
That, for the health and physic of our right,
We cannot deal but with the very hand
Of stern injustice and confused wrong.—
And isn't not pity, O my griev'd friends! that we,
The sons and children of this isle,
Were born to see so sad an hour as this:
Wherein we step after a stranger march
Upon her gentle bosom, and fill up
Her enemies' ranks, (I must withdraw and weep Upon the spot of this enforced cause,) to Grace the gentrity of a land remote,
And follow unacquainted colours here?
What, here?—O nation, that thou couldst not remove!
That Neptune's arms, who clippeth thee about,
Would bear thee from the knowledge of thyself,
And to the pleasant land of foreign lands.
Where these two Christian armies might combine
The blood of malice in a vein of league,
And not to spend it so unenjoyably!
Bast. These same gentlemen, and not these,
And great affections, writhing in thy bosom,
Do make an earthquake of nobility.
O, what a noble combat hast thou fought,
Between compulsion, and a brave respect!
Let me wipe off this honor so dear.
Thy silverly doth progress on thy cheeks
My heart hath melted at a lady's tears,
Being an ordinary involution;
But this effusion of such manly drops,
And, as you answer, I do know the scope
And warrant limited unto my tongue.

Pan. The Dauphin is too wilful-opposite,
And will not temporize with my entreaties;
He flatly says, he'll not lay down his arms.

Bast. By all the blood that ever fury breath'd,
The youth says well:—Now hear our English king;
For thou, in thy royal majesty, art hard;
He is prepar'd; and reason too, he should:
This aspish and unmannerly approach,
This harness'd masque, and unadvised revel,
This unskill'd sauciness, and boyish troops,
The king doth smile at; and is well prepar'd
To whip this dwarfish war, these piggym arms,
From out the circle of his territories.

That hand, which had the strength, even at your door,
To cudgel you, and make you take the hatch;
To dive, like buckets, in concealed wells;
To crouch in litter of your stable planks;
To lie, like pawns, lock'd up in chess's trunks;
To hug with swine; to seek sweet safety out
In vaults and prisons; and to thrill, and shake,
Even at the crying of your nation's crow,
Thinking his voice an armed Englishman:—
Shall that victorious hand be feebled here,
That in your chambers gave you chastisement?

No: Know, the gallant monarch is in arms;
And, like an eagle o'er his airy towers,
To some annoyance that comes upon his nest.—
And you derogate, you intrigue revolt,
You bloody Neros, ripping up the womb
Of your dear mother England, blush for shame;
For, in your ladies, and pale-visaged maids,
Like Amazons, come tripping after drums;
Their thimbles into armed gauntlets change,
Their needs to lances, and their gentle hearts
To fierce and bloody inclination shall.

Lew. There end thy brave, and turn thy face in peace;
We grant, thou canst outcounsel us: fare thee well;
We hold our time too precious to be spent
With such a brabiler.

Pan. Give me leave to speak.

Bast. No, I will speak.

Lew. Strike up the drums; and let the tongue of war
Plead for our interest, and our being here.

Bast. Indeed, your drums, being beaten, will cry
And so shall you, being beaten: Do but start
An echo with the clamour of thy drum,
And even at hand a drum is ready brduc'd,
That shall reverberate all as loud as thine;
Sound but another, and an answer shall,
As loud as thine, rattle the wittkin's ear.
And mock the deep-mouth'd thunder: for at hand
(Not trusting to this halting legate here, Whom he hath us'd rather for sport than need,) Is warlike John; and in his forefront sits
A bare-riv'd death, whose office is this day
To feast upon whole thousands of the French.

Lew. Strike up our drums, to find this danger out.

Bast. And thou shalt find it, Dauphin, do not doubt

K. John. Tell him, toward Swinested, to the abbey there.

Mess. Be of good comfort; for the great supply,
That was expected by the Dauphin here,
Are wreck'd three nights ago on Goodwin sands.
This news was brought to Richard but even now:
The French fight coldly, and retire themselves.

K. John. Ah me! this tyrant fever burns me up,
And will not let me welcome this good news.
Set on to toward Swinested: to my litter straight;
Weakness possesseth me, and I am faint. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The same. Another part of the same.

Enter Salisbury, Pembroke, Bigot, and others.

SAL. I did not think the king so sturd' with friends.

Pem. Up once again; put spirit in the French.

SAL. That misbegotten devil, Faulconbridge,
In spite of spite, alone upholds the day.

Pem. They say, king John, sore sick, hath left the field.

Enter Melun wounded, and led by Soldiers.

Mel. Lead me to the revolts of England here.

SAL. When were we happy, we had other names.

Pem. It is the count Melun.

SAL. Wounded to death.

Mel. Fly, noble English, you are bought and sold;
Unthread that thistle eye of rebellion,
And welcome home again discarded faith.
Seek out king John, and fall before his feet;
For, if the French he lords of this loud day,
He means to recompense the pains you take,
By cutting off your heads: Thus hath he sworn.
And I with him, and many more with me,
Upon the altar at Saint Edmund's-Bury;
Even on that altar, where we swore to you
Dear amity and everlasting love.

SAL. May this be possible? may this be true?

Mel. Have I not hideous death within my view,
Retaining but a quantity of life;
Which bleeds away, even in the form of wax
Resolveth from his figure 'gainst the fire?
What in the world should make me now deceive,
Since I must lose the use of all decet?
Why should I then be false; since it is true?
That I must die here, and live in my truth?
I say again, if Lewis do win the day,
He is forsworn, if e'er those eyes of yours
Behold another day break in the east:
But even this night,—whose black contagious breath
Already smokes about the burning crest
Of the old, feeble, and day-wearied sun,—
Even this ill night, your breathing shall expire:
Paying the fine of rated treachery.
Even with a treacherous fine of all your lives,
If Lewis by your assistance win the day.

Commend me to one Hubert, with your king;
The love of him,—and this respect besides,
For that my grandsire was an Englishman,— Awakes my conscience to confess all this.
In lieu whereof, I pray you, bear me hence
From forth the noise and tumult of the field;—
Where I may think the remnant of my thoughts
In peace, and part this body and my soul
With contemplation and devout desires.

SAL. We do believe you, and beshrew my soul
But I do love the favour and the form
Of this most fair occasion, by the which
We will untried the steps of dammed flight;
And, like a hasted and retired fool,
Leaving our rankness and irregular course,
Stoop low within those bounds we have o'erlook'd,
And calmly run on in obedience.
Even to our great king, king John.—

My arm shall give thee help to bear thee hence;
For I do see the cruel pangs of death.
KING JOHN.

Act V.$

Scene V.—The same. The French Camp.

Enter Lewis and his Train.

Lew. The sun of heaven, methought, was lost!

But stay'd, and made the western welkin blush,
When the English measured back their own ground,
In faint retire: O, bravely came we off,
When with a volley of our needleshot,
After such bloody told, we bid good night;
And wound our tatter'd colours clearly up,
Last in the field, and almost lords of it!

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Where is my prince, the dauphin?

Lew. Here — What news

Mess. The count Melun is slain; the English lords,
By his persuasion, are again fallen off:
And your supply, which you have wish'd so long,
Are cast away, and sunk, on Goodwin sands.

Lew. Ah, foul shrewd news! — Be shrew thy very heart!

I did not think to be so sad to-night,
As this hath made me. — Who was he, that said,
King John did fly an hour or two before
The stumbling night did part our weary powers?

Mess. Whoever spoke it, it is true, my lord.

Lew. Well: keep good quarters, and good care to-night;
The day shall not be up so soon as I,
To try the fair adventure to-morrow. [Exit.

Scene VI.—An open Place in the neighbourhood of Swinstead-Abbey.

Enter the Bastard and Hubert, meeting.

Hub. Who's there? speak, ho I speak quickly, or
I shoot.

Bast. A friend. — What art thou?

Hub. Of the part of England.

Bast. Whither dost thou go?

Hub. What's that to thee? Why may I not demand
Of thine affairs, as well as thou of mine?

Bast. Hubert, I think.

Hub. Thou hast a perfect thought:
I will, upon all hazards, well believe
Thou art my friend, that know'st my tongue so well:
Who art thou?

Bast. Who thou wilt: an if thou please,
Thou mayst befriend me so much, as to think
I come one way of the Plantagenets.

Hub. Unkind remembrance! thou, and eyeless night,
Have done me shame. — Brave soldier, pardon me,
That any accent, breaking from thy tongue,
Should 'scape the true acquaintance of mine ear.

Bast. Come, come; sans compliment, what news abroad?

Hub. Why, here walk I, in the black brow of
To find you out. — [night.

Bast. Brief, then; and what's the news?

Hub. O, my sweet sir, news fitting to the night,
Black, fearful, comfortless, and horrible.

Bast. Show me the very wound of this ill news. — I am not wise, I'll not be soon at it.

Hub. The king, I fear, is poison'd by a monk:
I left him almost speechless, and broke out
To acquaint you with this evil; that you might
The better arm you to the sudden time,
Than if you had at leisure known of this.

Bast. How did he take it? who did taste to him?

Hub. A monk, I tell you; a resolved villain,
Whose heart is suddenly burst by the king.
Yet speaks, and perdurance, may recover.

Bast. Who didst thou leave to tend his majesty?
K. John. O cousin, thou art come to set mine eye:
The tackle of my heart is crack'd and burn'd;
And all the shrouds, wherewith my life should sail,
Are turned to one thread, one little hair:
My heart hath one poor string to stay it by,
Which holds but till thy news be uttered;
And then all this thou seest is but a cloud,
And mode of confounded royalty.

Bast. The Dauphin is preparing hitherward;
Where, heaven knows, he now shall answer us.

For, in a night, the best part of my power,
As I upon advantage did remove,
In the washes, all unwarily,
Devour'd by the unexpected flood.

Sal. You breathe these dead news in as dead an ear.
My liege! my Lord!--But now a king,—now thus.
P. Hen. Even so must I run on, and even so stop.
What surety of the world, what hope, what stay,
When this was now a king, and now is clay!

Bast. Art thou gone yet? I do but stay behind,
To do the office for thee of revenge;
And then my soul shall wait on thee to heaven,
As it on earth hath been thy servant still.

Now, now, you stars, that move in your right spheres,
Where be your powers? Show now your mended faiths;
And instantly return with me again,
To push destruction, and perpetual shame,
Out of the weak door of our fainting land:
Straight let us seek, or straight we shall besought;
The Dauphin rages at our very heels.

Sal. It seems, you know not then so much as we:
The cardinal Pundulphe is within at rest.
Who halfe an hour since came from the Dauphin;
And brings from him such offers of our peace
As we with honour and respect may take,
With purpose presently to leave this war.

Bast. He will the rather do it, when he sees Ourselves well seasoned to our defence.

Sal. Nay, it is in a manner done already;
For many carriages he hath despatch'd
To the seasides, and put his cause and quarrel
To the disposing of the cardinal.

With whom yourself, myself, and other lords,
If you think meet, this afternoon will post
To consummate this business happily.

Bast. Let it be so:—And you, my noble prince,
With other princes that may best be spared,
Shall wait upon your father's funeral.
P. Hen. At Worcester must my body be inter'd;
For so he will'd it.

Bast. Thither shall it then.
And happily may your sweet self put on
The lineal state and glory of the land!
To whom, with all submission, on my knee,
I do bequeath my faithful services
And true subjection everlastingly.

Sal. And the like tender of our love we make,
To rest without a spot for evermore.
P. Hen. I have a kind soul, that would give you thanks,
And knows not how to do it, but with tears.

Bast. O, let us pay this time but needful woo,
Since it hath been beforehand with our griefs.
This England never did, (nor never shall,) Lie at the proud foot of a conqueror,
But when it first did help to wound itself.
Now these her princes are come home again,
Come the three corners of the world in arms,
And we shall shock them: Nought shall make us true,
If England to itself do rest but true.

—Exeunt.
KING RICHARD II.

Act 1.

Re-enter Attendants, with Bolingbroke and Norfolks.

Boling. Many years of happy days befall
My gracious sovereign, my most loving liege!—
Nor. Each day still better other's happiness;
And 1 am thankful to my crown!—

K. Rich. We thank you both: yet one but flat,
Setters, us,
As well appeareth by the cause you come;
Namely, to appeal each other of high treason.—

Come, show me what deeds of blood you do.
Against the duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray?

Boling. First, (heaven be the record to my speech) In the defence of a subject's love,
Offering the precious safety of my prince,
And free from other misbegotten hate,
Come I appellant to this princely presence.—

Now, Thomas Mowbray, do I turn to thee,
And mark my greeting well; for what I speak,
My body shall make good upon this earth,
Or my divine soul answer it in heaven.
Then art a traitor, and a miscreant;
Too good to be so, and too bad to live;
Since, the more fair and crystal is the sky,
The uigour seem the clouds that in it fly.
On you more, the more to aggravate the note,
With which I name thee. I must be bold,
And wish, (so please my sovereign,) ere I more,
What my tongue speaks, my right-drawn sword may prove.

Nor. The weight of cold words here accesse my zeal:
'Tis not the trial of a woman's war,
The bitter clamour of two eager tongues,
Can arbitrate this cause between us twain:
The blood that must be shed in this case,
Yet can I not of such tame patience boast,
As to be hush'd, and nought at all to say:
First, the fair reverence of your highness curbs me
From devotion and spurs to my free speech;
Which else would post, until it had return'd
These terms of treason doubled down his throat.
Setting aside his high blood's royalty,
And let him be no kineman to my liege,
I do defy him, and I spit at him;
Call him—a slanderous coward, and a villain:
Which to maintain, I would allow him odds;
And meet him, were I tied to run a foot.
Eveven to the edge of the lips,
Or any other ground inhabitable
Wherever Englishman durst set his foot.
Mean time, let this defend my loyalty,—
By all my hearth, my heart, my head, my foot.
Boling. Pale trembling coward, there I throw my page,
Disclaiming here the kindred of the king;
And lay aside my high blood's royalty,
Which fear, not reverence, makes thee to except:
If guilty dread hath left thee so much strength,
As to take up mine honour's pawn, then stoop;
By that, and all the rights of knighthood else,
Will I make good against thee, arm to arm,
What I have spoke, or thou canst worse devise.
Nor. I take it up; and, by that word I swear,
Which gently lay'd my knighthood on my shoulder,
I'll answer thee in any fair degree,
Or chivalrous design of knightly trial:
And, when I mount, alive may I not light,
If I be traitor, or unjustly fight!
K. Rich. Then say, both our cousin lay to Mowbray's charge?

It must be great, that can inherit us
So much as of a thought of ill in him.

Boling. I look, what I speak my life shall prove true:—
That Mowbray hath receiv'd eight thousand nobles, in name of lendings for your highness' soldiers;
The which he hath dethair'd for lewd employments,
Like a false traitor, and injurious villain.

Besides I say, and will in battle prove,—
't here, or elsewhere, to the furthest verge
That ever was survey'd by English eye,—
That all the treason, for these eighteen years
Complotted and contrived in this land, Fetch from false Mowbray their first head and spring.

Further I say, and further will maintain
Upon his bad life, to make all this good—
That he did plot the duke of Gloucester's death:
Suggest his soon-believing adversaries;
And, consequently, like a traitor coward, Sinica'd his innocent soul through streams of blood:
Which blood, like sacrificing Abel's, cries,
Even from the tongueless caverns of the earth,
To the, for justice, and tough chastisement;
And, by the glorious worth of my descent,
This arm shall do it, or this life be spent.

K. Rich. How high a pitch his resolution soars!—
Thomas of Norfolk, what say'st thou to this?

Nor. 0, let my sovereign turn away his face,
And bid his ears a little while be deaf,
Till I have told this slander of his blood,
How of a traitor, good men, how to soul a liar.
K. Rich. Mowbray, impatience are our eyes and ears:

Were he my brother, nay, my kingdom's heir,
(As he is but my father's brother's son,) Nor may my scepter's name have which
Such neighbour nearness to our sacred blood
Should nothing privilege him, nor partialize
The unstooping firmness of my upright soul;
If in the subject, Mowbray, be the traitor,
Free speech, and fearless, I to thee allow.

Nor. Then, Bolingbroke, as low as to thy heart,
Through the false passage of thy throat, thou

Three parts of that receipt I had for Cialia,
Disbur'sd I duly to his highness' soldiers:
The other part reserved I by consent;
For a remission, and as a pledge of my debt,
Upon remainder of a dear account,
Since last I went to France to fetch his queen.
Now swallow down that lie.—For Gloucester's
death,
I slew him not; but to my own disgrace,
Neglected my sworn duty In that case.—
For you, my noble lord of Lancaster,
The honourable father to my foe,
Once I did lay in a dish, in a dish, to thy life,
A treaspe that doth vex my grievous soul;
But, ere I last receiv'd the sacrament,
I did confess it; and exactly hagg'd
Of God's pardons; and, I do believe
This is my fault: As for the rest appeal'd,
It issues from the rancour of a villain,
A recreant and most degenerate traitor:
Which in myself I boldly will defend;
And interchangeably hurl down my page
Upon this overweening traitor's foot,
To prove myself a loyal gentleman
Even in the best blood chamber'd in his bosom
In haste whereof, most heartily I pray
Your highness to assign our trial day.

K. Rich. Wrath-kindled gentlemen, be rul'd by me.
Let's pursue this choler without letting blood:
This we prescribe, though no physician;
Deep malice makes too deep incision;
Forget, forgive; conclude, and be agreed;
Our doctrine this, it is no time to bleed.—
Good uncle, let this end where it begun;
We'll call the duke of Norfolk, you your son.

Gaunt. To be a make-peace shall become my Throw down, my son, the duke of Norfolk's gage.

K. Rich. And, Norfolk, throw down his.

Gaunt. When, Harry? when?

Obdurate bids, I should not bid again.
K. Rich. Norfolk, throw down; we bid; there is no boot.
Act I.

KING RICHARD II.

Nor. Myself I throw, dreadful sovereign, at thy foot:
My life thou shalt command, but not my shame:
The one my dutty owes: but my fair name,
(Despite of death, that lives upon my grave,) To dark dishonour use thou shalt not lose,
I am disgrac'd, impeach'd, and baffled here; Pierc'd to the soul with slanderer's venom'd spear; The which no balm can cure, but his heart-blood Which breath'd this poison.

K. Rich. Rage must be withstood:
Give me my gage:—Lions make leopards tame.

Nor. Yea, but not change their spots: take but a begin.

And I resign my gage. My dear dear lord, The purest treasure mortals time afford, Is—spotless reputation; that away, Men are but gilded foam, or painted clay. A jewel in a ten-times-barr'd-up chest, Is—a bold spirit in a loyal breast.

Mine honour is my life; both grow in one;
Take honour from me, and my life is done:
Then, dear my liege, mine honour let me try:
In that I live, and for that will I die.

K. Rich. Cousin, throw down your gage; do you begin.

Boling. God defend my soul from such foul sin!

Shall I seem crest-fallen in my father's sight? Or with pale beggar-fear impeach my height How should I, that did not once disgrace Shall wound mine honour with such feeble woe, Or sound so base a parle, my teeth shall tear The sluggish motive of recanting fear;

And spit it bleeding, in his high disgrace, Where shall the doth harbour, even in Mowbray's face.

[Exeunt.

K. Rich. We were not born to sue, but to command.
Which once we cannot do to make you friends, Be ready, as your lives shall answer it,
At Coventry, upon Saint Lambert's day;
There shall your swords and lances arbitrate That settling differences of our settled hate; Since we cannot atone you, we shall see Justice design the victor's chivalry.

Marshal, command our officers at arms Be ready to direct these home alarms.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. A Room in the Duke of Lancaster's Palace.

Enter Gaunt, and Duchess of Gloster.

Gaunt. Alas! the part I had in Gloster's blood Doth more solicit me, than your exclaiming, To stir against the butchers of his life.

But since correction lie thir'd in the lands Which made the fault that we cannot correct, Put we our quarrel to the will of heaven; Who when he sees the hours ripe on earth, Will rain hot vengeance on offenders' heads.

Duch. Finds brotherhood in thee no sharper spur? Hath love in thy old blood no living fire? Edward's seven sons, whereof thyself art one, Were as seven phials of his sacred blood, Or seven fair branches springing from one root: Some of those seven are dry'd by nature's course, Some of those branches by the destinies cut: But Thomas, my dear lord, my life, my Gloster,— One phial full of Edward's sacred blood, One flourishing branch of his most royal root, Is crack'd, and all the precious liquor split; Is hack'd down, and his summer leaves all faded, By envy's hand, and murder's bloody axe. Ah, Gaunt! his blood was thine; that bed, that womb,

That matle, that self-mould, that fashion'd thee, Made thee a man; and though thou liest, and breath'st, Yet art thou slain in him: thou dost consent In some large measure to thy father's death; In that thou seest thy wretched brother die,

Who was the model of thy father's life. Call it not patience, Gaunt, it is despair: In suffering thus thy brother to be slaughter'd, Thou show'st the naked pathway to thy life, Teaching stern murder, how to butcher thee: That which in mean men we entitle—patience, Is pale cold cowardice in noble breasts.

What shall I say? to safeguard thine own life, The best way is— to venge my Gloster's death.

Gaunt. Heaven's is the quarrel: for heaven's substitute, His deputy anointed in his sight, Hath caus'd his death: the which if wrongfully, Let heaven beavenge; for I may never lift An angry arm against his minister.

Duch. Where then, alas? I may I complain myself? Gaunt. To heaven, the widow's champion and defence.

Duch. Why then, I will. Farewell, old Gaunt. Thou go'st to Coventry, there to behold Our cousin Hereford and fell Mowbray fight: O, sit my husband's wrongs on Hereford's spear, That it may enter butcher Mowbray's breast! Or, if misfortune miss the first career, Be Mowbray's sins so heavy in his bosom, That they may break his foaming courser's back, And throw the rider headlong in the lists, A caitiff recrapt to my cousin Hereford! Farewell, old Gaunt; thy sometimes brother's wife, With her companion grief must end her life.

Gaunt. So be it, Farewell: I must to Coventry: As much good stay with thee, as go with me!

Duch. Yet one word more:—Grief boundeth where it falls, Not with the empty hollowness, but weight: I take my leave before I have begun: For sorrow ends not when it seemeth done. Commend me to my brother, Edmund York.

Lo, this is all:—Nay, yet depart not so; Though thou be all, do not so quench me: I shall remember more. Bid him,— 0, what?— With all good speed at Flashy visit me. Alack, and what shall good old York see, But empty lodgings and unfurnish'd walls, Unpeopled offices, untrou'den stones? And what cheer there for welcome, but my groans? Therefore commend me; let him not come there, To seek our borrow, that swells every where: Desolate, desolate, will I hence, and die; The last leave of thee takes my weeping eye.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Gosford, near Coventry.

Lists set out, and a Throne. Heralds, &c. attending.

Enter the Lord Marshal and Aumerle.

Mar. My lord Aumerle, is Harry Hereford arm'd? Aum. Yea, at all points; and longs to enter in.

Mar. The duke of Norfolk, sprightly and bold, Stays but the summons of the appellant's trumpet. Aum. Why then, the champions are prepar'd and stay For nothing but his majesty's approach.

Flourish of trumpets. Enter King Richard, who takes his seat on his throne: Gaunt, and several Noblemen also take their places. A trumpet is sounded, and answered by another trumpet within. Then enter Norfolk, in armour, preceded by a Herald.

K. Rich. Marshal, demand of yonder champion The cause of his arrival here in arms: Ask him his name; and orderly proceed To swear him in the justice of his cause.

Mar. In God's name, and the king's, say who thou art. And why thou com'st, thus knighthly clad in arms: Against what man thou com'st, and what thy quarrel: Speak truly, on thy knighthood, and thy oath; And so defend thee heaven, and thy valour!
Nor. My name is Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk:
Who hither come engaged by my oath,
(Which, heaven forefend, a knight should violate!
Both to defend my loyalty and truth.
To God, my king, and my succeeding issue,
Against the duke of Hereford that appeals me;
And, by the grace of God, and this mine arm,
I resolve him, in defending myself,
A traitor to my God, my king, and me!
And, as I truly fight, defend me heaven!

[He takes his seat.]

Trumpet sounds. Kater Bollingbrooke, in armour: preceded by a Herald.

K. Rich. Marshal, ask yonder knight in arms,
Both who he is, and why he cometh hither.
Thus platted in habiliments of war;
And formally according to our law,
Depose him in the justice of his cause.

Mar. What is his name? and wherefore cometh thos hither,
Before King Richard, in his royal lists?
Against whom cometh thou? and what's thy reason?
Speak like a true knight, so defend thee heaven!

Boling. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,
Am I; who ready here do stand in arms,
To me, by heaven's grace, and my body's value,
In lists, on Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk,
That he's a traitor, foul and dangerous,
To God of heaven, king Richard, and to me;
And, as I truly fight, defend me heaven!

Mar. Learn, good marshal, let me kiss thy sovereign's hand,
And bow my knee before his majesty.
For Mowbray, and myself, are like two men
That vow a long and weary pilgrimage;
Then let us take a ceremonious leave,
And loving farewell, of our several friends.

Mar. The appellant in all due grants your highness
And craves to kiss your hand, and take his leave.

K. Rich. We will descend, and fold him in our arms.

Counsel of Hereford, as thy cause is right,
So be the fortune in this royal fight!

Boling. 0, let no noble eye profane a tear
For me, with Vere's noblest spear.
As confident, as is the falcon's flight
Against a bird, do I with Mowbray fight.

My loving lord, [to Lord Marshall.] I take my leave of you.

Of you, my noble cousin, lord Aumerle:—
Not sick, although I have to do with death;
But lusty, young, and cheerly drawing breath.
Lo, as at English feasts, so I regard:
The daintiest last, to make the end most sweet:
0 thou, the earthily author of my blood,

[To Gaunt.]

Whose youthful spirit, in me regenerate,
Both with a two-fold vigour like the me:
To reach at victory above my head—
Add proof unto mine armour with thy prayers;
And with thy blessings steel my lance's point;
That it may enter Mowbray's waken cost,
And furnish new the name of John of Gaunt,
Even in the lusty 'avour of his son.

Gaunt. Heaven in thy good cause make thee propitious.

He swift like lightning in the execution;
And let thy blows, doubly redoubled,
Fall like amazing thunder on the casque
Of thy adverse pernicious enemy;
Rouse up thy youthful blood, be valiant and live.

Boling. Mine innocence, and Saint George to thrive.

[He takes his seat.]

Nor. [Rising.]—However heaven, or fortune, cast
my lot,
There lieth the rules, true to king Richard's throne,
A loyal, just, and upright gentleman;
Never did captive with a fierer heart
Cast off his chains of bondage, and embrace
His native land; my mind's end to re-establish,
More than my dancing soul doth celebrate
This feast of battle with mine adversary—
Most mighty liege,—and my companion peers,—
Eating from my mouth the wish of happy years:
As gentle and as jocund as to jest,
Go I to fight; Truth hath a quiet breast.

K. Rich. Farewell, my lord: securely I esp'y
Virtue with colour couched in thine eye.

Order the trial, marshal, and begin.

[The King and the Lords return to their seats.

Mar. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,
Receive thy lance; and God defend the right!

Boling. [Rising.] Strong as a tower in hope, I cry.—amen.

Mar. Go bear this lance [to an Officer],] to Thomas, duke of Norfolk.

I Her. Here standeth Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk,
on pain to be found false and recreant,
To prove the duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray,
A traitor to his God, his king, and him,
And set him to set forward to the fight.

2 Her. Here standeth Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk,
on pain to be found false and recreant,
Both to defend himself, and to approve;
Henry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,
To God, his sovereign, and to him, disloyal;
Courageously, and with a free desire,
Attend but the signal to begin.

Mar. Sound, trumpets; and set forward, combatants.

[As charge sounded.]

Stay, the king hath thrown his warder down.
K. Rich. Let them lay by their helmets and their spaps,
And both return back to their chairs again:
Withdraw with us:—and let the trumpets sound,
While we return these dukes what we decree.

Boling. [Draw near.]

[To the Combatants.

And list, what with our council we have done.
For that our kingdom's earth should not be solid
With blood shed which it hath provoked;
And for our eyes do hate the dire aspect
Of civil wounds plough'd up with neighbours' sword.

And fill my heart with eagle-winged pride
Of sky-aspiring and ambitious thoughts,
With rival-hating envy, set you on
To make our peace, which in our country's cradle
Draws the sweet infant breath of gentle sleep;
Which so round'd up with boisterous untun'd drums,
With harsh resounding trumpets' dreadful bray,
And grating shock of wrathful iron arms,
Might from our quiet confines f tightening fair peace,
And make us wake even in our kindred's blood—
Therefore, we banish you our territories:—
You, cousin Hereford, upon pain of death,
Till twice five summers have enrich'd our fields,
Shall not approach our fair dominions;
But tread the stranger paths of banishment.

Boling. Your will be done: This must my comfort be,
That such; as warms you here, shall shine on me;
And those his golden beams, to you here lent,
Shall point on me, and gild my banishment.

K. Rich. Norfolk, for thee remaineth a heavier penalty:
Which I with some unwillingness pronounce:
The fly slow hours shall not determine
The dateless limit of thy dear exile;—
The hopeless word of—never to return
Breathe I against thee, upon pain of life.
KING RICHARD II.

Act I

Nor. A heavy sentence, my most sovereign liege, And all unlook'd for from your highness' mouth: A dearer merit, not so deep a main As the之内aust of thy countenance, my liege, Have I deserved at your highness' hand. The language I have learn'd these forty years, My native English, now I must forego: And now my tongue's use is to no more, Than an unstringed viol, or a harp: Or like a cunning instrument cas'd up, Or, being open, put into his hands. That knows no touch to tune the harmony, Within my mouth you have engag'd my tongue, Doubly portcullis'd, with my teeth, and lips; And dull, unfeeling, barren ignorance Is made my gosler to attend on me. I am too old to fawn upon a nurse, Too far in years to be a pupil now: What is thy sentence then, but speechless death, Which robs my tongue from breathing native breath? K. Rich. It boots thee not to be compassionate; After our sentence playing comes too late. Nor. Then thus I turn me from my country's light, To dwell in solemn shades of endless night. Retiring.

K. Rich. Return again, and take an oath with thee. Lay on thy royal sword your banish'd hands; Swear by the duty that you owe to heaven, (Our part therein we banish with yourselves,) To keep the oath that we administer: You never shall (so help you truth and heaven !) Embrace each other's love in banishment; Nor never look upon each other's face; Nor never write, regret, nor reconcile This lowering tempest of your home-bred hate; Nor never by advised purpose meet, To plot, contrive, or complot any ill, 'Gainst us, our state, our subjects, or our land. Boling. I swear.

Nor. And I, to keep all this.

Boling. Norfolk, so far as to mine enemy; — By this time, had the king permitted us, One of our souls had wander'd in the air, Banish'd this frail sepulchre of our flesh, As now our flesh is banish'd from this land: Confess thy treasons, ere thou fly the realm; Since thou hast far to go, bear not along The clogging burden of a guilty soul. Nor. By this, Bolingbroke, and ever I were traitor, My name be blotted from the book of life, And I from heaven banish'd, as from hence! But what thou art, heaven, thou, and I do know; And how I fell rue — Farewell, my liege: — Now no way can I stray; Save back to England, all the world's my way. [Exit.

K. Rich. Uncle, even in the glasses of thine eyes I see thy grieved heart; thy sad aspect Hath from the number of his banish'd years Pluck'd four away; — six frozen winters spent, Return [to Boling.] with welcome home from banishment.

Boling. How long a time lies in one little word! Four lagging winters, and four wanton springs, End in a word; Such is the breath of kings. Gaunt. I thank my liege, that, in regard of me, He shortens four years of my son's exile: But little vantage shall I reap thereby; For, ere the six years, that he hath to spend, Can change their moods, and bring their times about, My oil-dried lamp, and time-bewast'd light, Shall be extinct with age, and endless night; My son, my son, is at the door, and gone, And blindfold death not let me see my son. K. Rich. Why, uncle, thou hast many years to live.

Gaunt. But not a minute, king, that thou canst give:

Shorten my days thou canst with sullen sorrows, And pluck nights from me, but not lend a morrow: Thou canst not help time to furrow me with age, But stop no wrinkle in his pilgrimage: Thy word is current with him for my death: But, dead, thy kingdom cannot buy my breath. K. Rich. Thy soul is in good ease, my gentle lord; Whereeto thy tongue a party-verbatim: Why at our justice seem'st thou then to lower? Gaunt. Things sweet to taste, prove in digestion sour. Thou urg'dst me not as a judge; but I had rather, Thou wouldst have bid me argue like a father: — O, had it been a stranger, not my child, To smooth his fault I should have been more mild: A partial slander sought I to avoid, And in the sentence my own life destroy'd: Alas, I look'd, when some of you should say, I was too strict, to make mine own away; But you gave leave to mine unwilling tongue, Against my will, to do myself this wrong. K. Rich. Cousin, farewell: — and, uncle, bid him so; Six years we banish him, and he shall go.

Aum. Cousin, farewell: what presence must not know, From where you do remain, let paper show. Mor. My lord, no leave take I; for I will ride As far as land will let me, by your side.

Gaunt. O, to what purpose dost thou hoard thy words, That thus return'st no greeting to thy friends? Boling. I have too few to take my leave of you, When the tongue's office should be prodigal To breathe the abundant dolour of the heart. Gaunt. Thy grief is but thy absence for a time. Boling. Thy absent, grief is present for that time. Gaunt. What is six winters? they are quickly gone.

Boling. To men in joy; but grief makes one hour ten.

Gaunt. Call it a travel that thou tak'st for pleasure.

Boling. My heart will sigh, when I miscall it so, Which fign^{s} it an enforced pilgrimage. Gaunt. The sullen passage of thy weary steps Esteem a fole, wherein thou art to set The precious jewel of thy home-return. Boling. Nay, rather, every tedious stride I make Will but reinforce me, what a deal of world I wander from the jewels that I love. Must I not serve a long apprenticeship To foreign passages; and in the end, Having my freedom, boast of that else But that I was a journeyman to grief? Gaunt. All places that the eye of heaven visits, Are to a wise man ports and happy havens; Teach thy necessity to reason thus; There is no virtue like necessity. Think not, the king did banish thee; But thou the king: Woe doth the heavier sit, Where it perceives it is but faintly borne. Go, say,—I sent thee forth to purchase honour, And not,—the king exil'd thee: or suppose, Devouring pestilence hangs in our air, And thou art flying to a fresher clime. Look, what thy soul holds dear, imagine it To lie that way thou go'st, not whence thou com'st.

Suppose the singing birds, musicians; The grass the season thou tread'st, the presence strew'd: The flowers, fair ladies; and thy steps, no more Than a delightful measure, or a dance; For garling sorrow, the harder will the bitter bite The man that mocks at it, and sets it light. Boling. O, who can hold a fire in his hand, By thinking on the frosty Caucasus! Or cloy the hungry edge of appetite, By bare imagination of a feast?
KING RICHARD II.

Act 2.

SCENE IV. — The same. A Room in the King's Castle.

Enter King Richard, Bagot, and Green; Aumerle following.

K. Rich. We did observe — Cousin Aumerle, How far brought you high Hereford on his way?

Aumer. I brought high Hereford, if you call him so.

But to the next highway, and there I left him.

K. Rich. And, say, what store of parting tears were shed?

Auer. More, my Lord, not by me, except the north-east wind,

Which then blew bitterly against our faces,

Awak’d the sleeping tear; and so, by chance,

Lid grace our hollow parting with a tear.

K. Rich. What said our cousin, when you parted?

Aum. Farewell! [with him?] And, for my heart disdained that my tongue

Should so profane the word, that taught me craft

To counterfeit oppression of such grief,

That words seem’d buried in my soul’s grave.

Marry, would the word farewell have lengthen’d hours,

And added years to his short banishment,

He should have had a volume of farewells.

But, since it would not, he had none of me.

K. Rich. He is our cousin, cousin; but I doubt,

When time shall call him home from banishment,

Whether our kinsman come to see his friends,

Ourself, and Bushy, Bagot here, and Green,

Observe’d his courtship to the common people:

How their new friends seem to dive into their maxims,

With humble and familiar courtesy;

What reverence he did throw away on slaves;

Wooing poor craftsmen, with the craft of smiles,

And patient under-bearing of his fortune,

As ’twere, to banish their affects with him.

Off goes his bonnet to an oyster-tench;

A brace of draymen bid — God speed him well,

And had the tribute of his supple knee.

With,— Thanks, my countryman, my loving friends;

As we were England in reverision his,

And he our subjects’ next degree in hope.

Green. Well, he’s gone; and with him go these.

Now for the rebels, which stand out in Ireland;

— Expedient manage must be made, my Liege;

Lest further leisure yield them further means,

For their new friends seem to dive into their maxims,

With humble and familiar courtesy;

What reverence he did throw away on slaves;

Wooing poor craftsmen, with the craft of smiles,

And patient under-bearing of his fortune,

As ’twere, to banish their affects with him.

Off goes his bonnet to an oyster-tench;

A brace of draymen bid — God speed him well,

And had the tribute of his supple knee.

With,— Thanks, my countryman, my loving friends;

As we were England in reverision his,

And he our subjects’ next degree in hope.

Green. Well, he’s gone; and with him go these.

K. Rich. We will ourself in person to this war.

And, for our coffers— with too great a court,

And liberal largesses — are grown somewhat light,

We are enforce’d to farm our royal realm;

The revenue whereof shall furnish us.

For our affairs in hand: If that come short,

Our substitutes at home shall have blank charters;

Where the graver knows what men are rich.

They shall subscribe them for large sums of gold,

And send them after to supply our wants;

For we will make for Ireland presently.

Enter Bushy.

Bushy. What news?

Bushy. Old John of Gaunt is grievous sick, my lord;

Sudden distress; and hath sent post-haste,

To entreat your majesty to visit him.

K. Rich. Where lies he?

Bushy. At Ely-house.

To help him to his grave immediately!

The lining of his coffers shall make coats

To deck our soldiers for these Irish wars. —

Come, gentleman, let’s all go visit him;

Pray God, we may make haste, and come too late.

[Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I. — London. A Room in Ely-house.

Gaunt on a couch; the Duke of York, and others standing by him.

Gaunt. Will the king come? that I may breathe my last

In whose same counsel to his unstable youth.

York. Vex not yourself, nor strive not with your breath;

For all in vain comes counsel to his ear.

And, though they say, the tongues of dying men

Enforce attention, like deep harmony;

Where words are scarce, they are seldom spent in vain;

For they breathe truth, that breathe their words in

He, that no more must say, is list’ned more

Than they whom youth and ease have taught to glose;

More are men’s ends mark’d, than their lives before;

The setting sun, and music at the close,

As the last taste of sweets, is sweetest last;

Writ in remembrance, more than things long past

Though Richard my life’s counsel would not hear,

My death’s sad tale may yet undeaf his ear.

York. No; it is stopp’d with other flattering sounds,

As praises of his state: then, there are found

Laevicis metres; to whose venom sound

The open ear of youth doth always listen;

Report of fashions in proud Italy;

Whose maids still our tardy sphyn nation

Limp in after in base imitation;

Where doth the world thrust forth a vanity,

(So it be new, there’s no respect how vile.)

That is not quickly buzz’d into his ears?

Then I, in like state comes counsel to be heard,

Where will doth mutiny with wit’s regard;

Direct not him, whose way himself will choose;

’Tis breath thou lack’st, and that breath will thou lose.

Gaunt. Methinks, I am a prophet new inspir’d;

And thus, expiring, do foretell of him:

His rash fierce blaze of riot cannot last;

For violent fires soon burn out themselves:

Small showers last long, but sudden storms are short;

He tires betimes, that spurs too fast betimes;

With easy feeding, food doth choke the feeder.

Light vanity, insatiate corromptor,
Consuming means, soon prey’s upon itself.

This royal throne of kings, this scepter’d isle,

This earth of majesty, this seat of Mars,

This other Eden, demi-paradise;

This fortress, built by nature for herself,

Against infection, and the hand of war:

This happy breed of men, this little world;

This precious stone set in the silver sea,

Which serves it in the office of a wall,

Or as a most defensive to a house.

Against the envy of less happier lands;

This blessed plot, this earth, this realm, this England,

This nurse, this teeming womb of royal kings,
Act 2. KING RICHARD II.

Fear'd by their breed, and famous by their birth, Renowned for their deeds as far from home, (For Christian service, and true supersity,) As is the squinch in stonborn Jewry.

Of the world's dear sons, blessed Mary's son: This land of such dear souls, this dear land, Dear for her reputation through the world, It's now, I find out (I die professed,) Like to a tenement, or pelting farm;

England, bound in with the triumphant sea, Whose rocky shore beats back the envious siege Of the same with which I bound in with shame. With Inky blots, and rotten parchmen bonds; That England, that was wont to conquer others, Hath made a shameful conquest of itself: Of all that I was, the saddest issue is: How happy then were my ensuing death!

Enter King Richard and Queen; Aumerle, Busby, Green, Bagot, Ross, and Willoughby.

York. The king is come: deal mildly with his youth;

For young hot colts, being rags'd, do rage the more.

Queen. How fares our noble uncle, Lancaster?

K. Rich. What comfort, man? how 'is with aged Gaunt?

Gaunt. O, how that name befits my compos-

Old Gaunt, indeed; and gaunt in being old: Within me grief hath kept a tedious fast; And who abstains from meat, that is not gaunt? For slovening England long time have I watch'd; Watching breeds leanness, leanness is all gaunt: The pleasure, that some fathers feed upon, Is my strict fast, I mean—my children's looks; And, therein fasting, hast thou made me gaunt; Gaunt, for the grave, gaunt, for the grave, Whose hollow womb inherits nought but bones. K. Rich. Can sick men play so nicely with their names?

Gaunt. No, misery makes sport to mock itself: Since thou dost seek to kill my name in me, I mock my name, great king, to flatter thee.

K. Rich. Should dying men flatter with those that live?

Gaunt. No, no; men liviing flatter those that die.

K. Rich. Thou, now a dying, say'st—thou flatt-

Gaunt. Oh! no; thou diest, though I the sicker be.

K. Rich. I am in health, I breathe, and see thee

Gaunt. Now, He that made me, knows I see thee ill: I'll in myself to see, and in thee seeing ill, Thy death beded is not lesser than thy land, Wherein thou liest in reputation sick; And thou, too careless patient as thou art, Commit'st thy anointed body to the care Of those physicians that first wounded thee: A thousand flatterers sit within thy crown, Whose compass is no bigger than thy head; And yet, incaged in so small a verge, The waste is no whit lesser than thy land. O, had thy grandharte, with a prophet's eye, Seen how his son's should destroy his sons, From forth thy reach he would have laid thy shame!

Deposition before thou went possess'd, Which art possess'd now to depose thyself. Why, cousin, went thou regent of the world, It were a shame, to let this land by lease: By his hand, standing in thy hand be this land, Is it not more than shame, to shame it so?

Landlord of England art thou now, not king: Thy state of law is bondslave to the law; And hence—

K. Rich. —a lunatick lean-witted fool, Presuming on an ague's privilege, Dar'st with thy frozen admonition Make pale our cheek; chasing the royal blood,

With fury, from his native residence.

Now by my seat's right royal majesty, Wert thou not brother to great Edward's son, This tongue that runs so roundly in thy head, Should run thy head from thy unrevend shoul-

Gaunt. Let me spare me not, my brother Edward's son,

For that I was his father Edward's son; That blood already, like the pelican, Hast thou ta'en out, and drank only carous'd:

My brother Gloster, plain well-meaning soul, (Whom fair befall in heaven 'mongst happy souls) May be a precedent and witness good, That thou respect'st not spilling Edward's blood: Join with the present sickness that I have; And thy unkindness be like crooked age, To crop at once a too-long wither'd flower, Live in thy shame, but die not shame with thee!— These words hereafter thy tormentors be! Convey me to my bed, then to my grave:

Love they to live, that love and honour have. [Exit, borne out by his Attendants.

K. Rich. And let them die, that age and sullens have;

For both hast thou, and both become the grave

York. 'Beseech your majesty, impute his words To wayward sickness and thy age, I say; He loves you, on my life, and holds you dear

As Harry duke of Hereford, were he here. K. Rich. Right; you say true: as Hereford's lived, So has he:

As thers, so mine; and all be as it is.

Enter Northumberland.

North. My liege, old Gaunt commendns him to your majesty.

K. Rich. What says he now?

North. Nay, nothing; all is said:

His tongue is now a stringless instrument; Words, life, and all, old Lancaster hath spent.

York. Be York the next that must be bankrupt so! Though death be poor, it ends a mortal woe.

K. Rich. The ripest fruit first falls, and so doth he;

His time is spent, our pilgrimage must be:

So much for that.—Now for our Irish wars: We must supplant those rough rug-headed pars; Which live like venom, where no venom else, But only they, hath privilege to live.

And for these great affairs do ask some charge, Towards of assistance, we do so great a press:

The plate, coin, revenues, and moveables, Whereof our uncle Gaunt did stand possess'd.

York. How long shall I be patient? Ah, how long shall tender duty make me suffer wrong? Not Gloster's death, nor Hereford's banishment, Not Gaunt's rebukes, nor England's private wrongs, Nor the prevention of poor Bolingbroke About his marriage, nor my own disgrace, Have ever made me sour my patient cheek, Or bend one wrinkle on my sovereign's face.— I am the last of noble Edward's sons, Of whom thy father, prince of Wales, was first; In war, was never lion rag'd more fierce, In peace was never gentle lamb more mild, Than was that young and princely gentleman: His face thou hast, for even so look'd he. Accomplish'd with the number of thy hours; But, when he frown'd, it was against the French, And not against his friends: his noble hand Did win war, and war, with his scandalous garb, That Which his triumphant father's hand had won: His hands were guilty of no kindred's blood, But bloody with the enemies of his kins.

O, Richard! York is too far gone in grief, Or else he knew not what to compare between.

K. Rich. Why, uncle, what's the matter?

York. O, my liege,
Pardon me, if you please; if not, I pray'd not to be pardon'd, am content withal.

Seek ye to see, and gripe into your hands,
The royalties and rights of banish'd Hereford?
Is not Exeter dead? and doth not Hereford live?
Was it not just? and is not Harry true?
Uld not the one deserve to have an heir?
Is not his heir a well-deserving son?
To be his rights away, and take from time his charters, and his customary rights;
Let not to-morrow then ensue to-day;
Be not thyself, for how art thou a king,
But in thy own dominion, and according
Now, afore God (God forbid, I say true!) If you do wrongfully seize Hereford's rights,
Call in the letters patents that he hath
By his attorneys-general to sue
His lively, and deny the offer'd hommage,
You pluck a thousand dangers on your head,
You lose a thousand well-disposed hearts,
And prick my tender patience to those thoughts Which honour and allegiance cannot think.

K. Rich. Think what you will; we seize into our hands
His plate, his goods, his money, and his lands.
Yor. I will not be by, the while: My liege, farewell:

What will ensue hereafter, there's none can tell;
But by bad courses may be understood,
The heigh thereon men may never fall untoward. [Exit.]

K. Rich. Go, Bushy, to the earl of Wiltshire straight:
Bid him repair to us to Elly house,
To see the bashful To-morrow next
We will for Ireland; and, 'tis time, I trow;
And we cre te, in absence of ourself.
Our uncle York lord governor of England,
For he is just, and to always us well.
Come on, Lord Wiltshire; to-morrow must we part;
Be merry, for our time of stay is short. [Exeunt.

North. Well, lords, not in revenue.

North. Richly in both, if justice had her right.

Rose. The earl is great; but it must break with silence,
Ere't be disburden'd with a liberal tongue.

North. Nay, speak thy mind; and let him never
That speaks thy words again, to do thee harm!

Wil. Tends that thou'dt speak, to the duke of Hereford?
If it be so, our wish it boldly, man;
Quick is mine ear, to hear of good towards him.

Rose. No good at all, that I can do for him;
Unless you call it good, to pity him,
Repose and guided of his patrimony.

North. Now, afore heaven, 'tis shame, such wrongs are borne,
In him a royal prince, and many more
Of noble blood in this declining land.
The king is not himself, but basely led
By flatters: and what they will inform,
Merely in hate, 'gainst any of us all,
That will the king severely prosecute
'Gainst those that oppose, our children and our heirs.

Rose. The commons hath he pill'd with grievous taxes,
And lost their hearts: the nobles hath he fin'd
For his service in the pursuance of the state.
Wil. And daily new excursions are desiv'd as:
As blinks, benevolence, and I wot not what;
But what, o'God's name, doth become of this?

North. Wars have not wasted it, for war'd he hath not:
But basely yielded upon compromise
That which his ancestors achieved with blows:
Mere hath he spent in peace, than they in wars.

Rose. The earl of Wiltshire hath the realm in farm.

Wills. The king's crown bankrupt, like a broken man.

North. Reproach, and dishonour, hang her over him.

Rose. And yet both not money for these Irish wars,
His burdensome taxation notwithstanding,
But by the robbing of the banish'd duke.

North. His noble kinsman: most degenerate

But lords, we hear this fearful tempest sing,
Yet seek no shelter to avoid the storm:
We see the wind sit sore upon our sails,
And yet with rancour, but securely perish.

Rose. We see the very wreck that we must suffer:
And unavoidable is the danger now,
For suffering the causes of our wreck.

North. Nor too; even through the hollow eyes of death,
I spy life peering; but I dare not say
How near the tidings of our comfort is.

Wil. Nay, let us share thy thoughts, as thou dost ours.

Rose. Be confident to speak, Northumberland:
That is, he hath robb'd, heigh, lord Cobham,
The son of Richard Earl of Arundel,

Tast late broke from the duke of Exeter,
His brother, archbishop late of Canterbury,
Sir Thomas Lyngbourn, sir John Northumberland,
Sir John Needlery, sir Robert Waterton, and Francis Quoin,——

All these, well furnish'd by the duke of Burgundy,
With many tull ships, three thousand men of war,
Are making hither with all due expedition,
And shortly mean to touch our northern shore.
Perhaps, they had ere this: but that they stay
The first departing of the king for Ireland.
If then we shall shake off our slavish yoke,
Imp out our drooping country's broken wing.
Redeem from breaking pawn the blemish'd crown.
Wipe off the dust that hides our sceptor's gilt,
And make our High majesty look like itself.

Away, with me, in post to Havenspur
But if you fail, as fearing to do so,
Stay and be secret, and myself will go.

Rose. My thoughts worse, to horse! urge doubts to them that fear.

Wil. Hold out my horse, and I will first be there.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Queen, Bushy, and Bagot.

Bushy. Madam, your majesty is too much sad
You promised, when you parted, to stay with
To lye aside life-harming heaviness,
And entertain a cheerful disposition.

Queen. To please the king, I did; to please myself,
I cannot do it; yet I know no cause
Why I should welcome such a guest as grief,
Spare bidding farewell so to sweet a guest
As myself, and, in parting, foreign'd from my lord the king.

Bushy. Ephesian. — Every substance of a grief hath twenty shadows,
Which show like grief itself; but are not so:
For my grief is clad with black and white:
Divides one thing entire to many objects;
Like perspectives, which, rightly gaz'd upon,
Show nothing but confusion; ey'd away,
Distinguish form; so your sweet majesty,
Looking upon your lord's departure,
Finds shapes of griefs, more than himself, to wait,
The nobles they are fled, the commons cold,
And will, I fear, revolt on Hereford's side.—
Sirrah,
Get thee to Flashy, to my sister Glose;
Bid her send me presently a thousand pound.
Hold, take my ring.
Serv. My lord, I had forgot to tell your lordship:
To-day, as I came by, I called there:—
But I shall grieve you to report the rest.
York. What is it, knave?
Serv. An hour before I came, the duchess died.
York. God for his mercy! what a time of woes
Comes rushing on this woeful land at once!
I know not what to do:—I would to God,
(So my untruth had not provok'd him to it,)
The king must off my head with my brother's.
What are there posts despatch'd for Ireland?—
How shall we do for money for these wars?—
Come, sister,—cousin, I would say: pray, pardon me.
Go, fellow, [to the Servant.] get thee home, provide some carts,
And bring away the armour that is there.—
Serv. Gentlemen, will you go muster men? If I know
How, or which way, to order these affairs,
Thus thrust disorderly into my hands,
Never believe me. Both are my kinsmen:
The one's my sovereign, whom both my oath
And duty bids defend; the other again,
Is my kinsman, whom the king hath wrong'd;
Whom conscience and my kindred bids to right.
Well, some I must do.—Come, cousin, I'll Dispose of you:—Go, muster up your men,
And meet me presently at Berkley-castle.
I should to Flashy too;—
But time will not permit.—All is uneven,
And every thing is left at six and seven.

Bushy. The wind sits fair for news to go to Ireland.
But none returns. For us to levy power,
Proportionable to the enemy,
Is all impossible.
Green. Besides, our nearness to the king in
Is near the hate of those love not the king.
Bagot. And that's the wavering commons: for their love
Lies in their purses; and whose empties them,
By so much fills their hearts with deadly hate.
Bushy. Wherein the king stands generally condemn'd.
Bagot. If judgment lie in them, then so do we,
Because we have never been near the king.
Green. Well, I'll for refuge straight to Bristol castle:
The earl of Wiltshire is already there.
Bushy. Thither will I with you; for little office
The hateful commons will perform for us;
Except, like curs, to tear us all to pieces.—
Will you go along with us?
Bagot. No; I'll to Ireland to his majesty.
Farewell; if heart's presages be not vain,
We three here part, that ne'er shall meet again.
Bushy. That's as York strives to beat back Bol-ingbroke.
Green. A poor duke! the task he undertakes is—num'ring sands, and drinking oceans dry;
Where one on his side fights, thousands will fly.
Bushy. Farewell at once; for once, for all, and ever.
Green. Well, we may meet again.
Bagot. I fear me, never.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The Wilds in Glos tershire.
Enter Bolingbroke and Northumberland, with Forces.
Boling. How far is it, my lord, to Berkley now?
North. Believe me, noble lord,
I am a stranger here in Glos tershire.

X 2
These high wild hills, and rough uneven ways,
Draw out our miles, and make them warsome:
And yet your fair discourse hath been so sugar,
Making the hard way sweet and delectable.
But, I bethink me, what a weary way
From Ravenspurge to Oswestry, will be found,
In Ross and Willoughby, wanting your company;
Which, I protest, hath very much beguiled
The tediousness and process of my travel:
But theirs is sweeten'd with the hope to have
The present benefit which I possess:
And hope to joy, is little less in joy Than hope enjoy'd: by this the weary lords
Shall make their way seem short; as mine hath done.

By sight of what I have, your noble company,
Your good words. But who comes here?

Enter Harry Percy.

North. It is my son, young Harry Percy,
Sent from my brother Worcester, whencesoever.
Harry, how fares your uncle?

Percy. I had thought, my lord, to have learnt
His health of you.

North. Why, is he not with the queen?

Percy. No, my good lord; he hath forsook the court,
Broken his staff of office, and dispers'd
The household of the king.

North. What was his reason?
He was not so resolv'd, when last we spake together.

Percy. Because your lordship was proclaimed traitor.
But he, my lord, is gone to Ravenspurge,
To offer service to the duke of Hereford;
And sent me o'er by Berkeley, to discover
What power the duke of York had levied there; Then with direction to repair to Ravenspurge.

North. Have you forgot the duke of Hereford, boy?

Percy. No, my good lord; for that is not forgot,
Which ne'er I did remember: to my knowledge,
I never in my life did look on him.

North. Then learn to know him now; this is the duke.

Percy. My gracious lord, I tender you my service,
Such as it is, in being tender, raw, and young;
Which elder days shall ripen, and confirm
To more approved service and desert.

Boling. I thank thee, gentle Percy; and be sure,
I shall account me no less in thee than in thyself,
As in a soul remembering my good friends;
And, as my fortune ripens with thy love,
It shall be still thy true love's recompense:
My heart this covenant makes, my hand thus seals it.

North. How far is it to Berkley? And what stir
Keeps good old York there, with his men of war?
Percy. There stands the castle, by you tuft of trees.
Msm'd with three hundred men, as I have heard:
And in it are the lords of York, Berkley, and Seymour;
None else of name, and noble estimate.

Enter Ross and Willoughby.

North. Here come the lords of Ross and Willoughby, bloody with spurring, fiery-red with haste.

Boling. Welcome, my lords: I wot your love pursues.
A banter his master; all my treasury Is yet but unfelt thanks, which, more enrich'd,
Shall be your love and labour's recompense.

Ross. Your presence makes us rich, most noble
Wills. And far surmounts our labour to attain it.

Boling. Evermore thanks, the exchequer of the poor.

Which, till my infant fortune comes to years,
Stands for my bounty. But who comes here?

Enter Berkley.

North. It is my lord of Berkley, as I guess.

Berk. My lord, my message is to you.

Boling. My lord, my answer is—to Lancaster;
And I am come to seek that name in England:
And I must find that title in your tongue,
Before I make reply to aught you say.

Berk. Mistake me not, my lord; 'tis not my meaning,
To raise with these of your honour out—
To you, my lord, I come, (what lord you will,) From the most glorious regent of this land, The duke of York; to know, what pricks you on To take advantage of the absent time,
And fright our native peace with self-born arms.

Enter York, attended.

Boling. I shall not need transport my words by you;
Here comes his grace in person.—My noble uncle!—

York. Show me thy humble heart, and not thy knee,
Whose duty is deceivable and false.

Boling. My gracious uncle!—

York. Tut, tut, tut! Grace me no grace, nor uncle me no uncle.
I am no traitor's uncle; and that word—grace— In an honest mouth, is but to me a jest.
Why have those banish'd and forbidden legs
Darr'd once to touch a dust of England's ground? But then more why;—Why have they darr'd to
So many miles upon her peaceful bosom:
Frighting her pale-fac'd villages with war,
And ostentation of despised arms?

Com't then, because the anointed king is hence:— Why, foolish boy, the king is left behind,
And in my loyal bosom lies his power.
Were I but now the lord of such hot youth,
As when brave Gaunt, thy father, and myself, Rescued the Black Prince, that young Mars of men,
From forth the ranks of many thousand French; O, then, how quickly should this arm of mine, Now prisoner to the palsy, chastise thee, father,
And minister correction to thy fault!

Boling. My gracious uncle, let me know my fault:
On what condition stands it, and wherein?

York. Even in condition of the worst degree,— In gross rebellion, and detested treason:
Thou art a banish'd man, and here art come,
Before the expiration of thy banishment,
In braving arms against thy sovereign.

Boling. As I was banish'd, I was banish'd Hereford:

But as I come, I come for Lancaster. And, noble uncle, I beseech your grace,
Look on my wrongs with an indifferent eye: You are my father, for, methinks in you I see old Gaunt alive; O, then, my father! Will you permit that I shall stand condemn'd A wand'ring vagabond; my rights and royalties Pluck'd from my arms perform, and given away To upset unthrifts? Wherefore w's I born? If that my cousin king be king of England, It must be granted, I am duke of Lancaster. You have a son, Aumerle, my noble kinsman; Had you first died, and he been thus trod down, He should have found, in his uncle's name, father, To rouze his wrongs, and chase them to the bay.
I am desir'd to sue my livery here,
And yet my letters patent give me leave:
My father's goods and lands, all distrain'd, and sold; And these, and these, and all amiss employ'd;
What would you have me do? I am a subject, And challenge law: Attorneys are denied me,
KING RICHARD II.

And therefore personally I lay my claim
To my inheritance of free descent.

North. The noble duke hath been too much
To be towards his grace by his endowments-
Ross. It stands your grace upon, to do him right.

Wil. Base men by his endowments are made

York. My lords of England, let me tell you
I have had feeling of my cousin's wrongs, [this,—
And labour'd all I could to do him right:
But in this kind to come, in braving arms,
Be he in man or man in my way,
To find out right with wrong—it may not be;
And you that do abet him in this kind,
Cherish rebellion, and are rebels all.

North. The noble duke hath sworn, his coming is
But for his own: and, for the right of that,
We all have strongly sworn to give him aid;
And let him see joy, that breaks that oath.

York. Well, well, I see the issue of these arms;
I cannot mend it, I must needs confess,
Because my power is weak, and all ill left:
But, if I could, by Him that gave me life,
I would attach you all, and make you stoop
Unto the sovereign law of God and men;
But, since I cannot, be it known to you,
I do remain as neuter. So, fare you well;
Unless you please to enter in the castle,
And then repose you for which you wish.

Boling. An offer, uncle, that we will accept.
But we must win your grace, to go with us
To Bristol castle; which, they, say, is held
By Bushy, Bagot, and their complices,
The cataphracts of the commonwealth,
Which I have sworn to weed, and pluck away.
York. It may be, I will go with you—but yet
I'll pause.
For I am loath to break our country's laws.
Nor friends, nor foes, to me welcome you are;
Things past redress, are now with me past care.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—A Camp in Wales.

Enter Salisbury and a Captain.

Cap. My lord of Salisbury, we have staid ten days,
And hardly kept our countrymen together,
And yet we hear no tidings from the king:
Therefore we will disperse ourselves: farewell.

Sal. Stay yet another day, thou trusty Welshman;
The king reposeth all his confidence
In thee.

Cap. 'Tis thought, the king is dead; we will not stay.
The bay trees in our country are all wither'd,
And meteors fright the fixed stars of heaven.
The pale-fair moon looks bloody on the earth,
And lean-lion'd prophets whisper fearful change;
Rich men look sad, and ruffians dance and leaap—
The one, in fear to lose what they enjoy,
The other, to enjoy by rage and war:
These signs forerun the death or fall of kings.—
Farewell! our countrymen are gone and fled,
As well assured, Richard their king is dead. [Exit.]

Sal. Ah, Richard! with the eyes of heavy mind,
I see thy glory, like a shooting star,
Fall to the base earth from the firmament!
Thy sun sets weeping in the lowly west,
Witnessing storms to come, woe, and unrest;
Thy friends are fled, to wait upon thy foes;
And crossly to thy good fortune goes. [Exit.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Bolingbroke's Camp at Bristol.

Enter Bolingbroke, York, Northumberland, Percy, Willoughby, Ross: Officers behind with Bushy and Green, prisoners.

Boling. Bring forth these men.—Bushy, and Green, I will not vex your souls (Since presenty your souls must part your bodies), With too much urging your pernicious lives, For 'twere no charity: yet, to wash your blood From off my hands, here, in the view of men, I will unfold some causes of your death. You have missed a prince, a royal ransom:
A happy gentleman in blood and lineaments, By you unhappied and disfigured clean.
You have, in manner, with your sinful hours, Made a divorce between your queen and him;
Broke the possession of a royal bed,
And stain'd the beauty of a fair queen's cheeks
With tears drawn from her eyes by your foul wrongs.

Myself—a prince, by fortune of my birth;
Near to the king in blood; and near in love,
Till you did make him misinterpret me,—
Have stoop'd my neck under your injuries,
And sild my English breath in foreign clouds,
Eating the bitter bread of banishment:
Whilst you have fed upon my signories,
Dispark'd my parks, and fell'd my forest woods;
From my own windows torn my household coat,
Raz'd out my impress, leaving me no sign—
Save men's opinions, and my living blood—
To show the world I am a gentleman. [this,
This, and much more, much more than twice all
Condemns you to the death—See them deliver'd
To execution and the hand of death. [over
Bushy. More welcome is the stroke of death to me.

Than Bolingbroke to England.—Lords, farewell.

Green. My comfort is—that heaven will take our souls,
And plague injustice with the pains of hell.

Boling. To the lord Northumberland, see them despatch'd.
[Exeunt Northumberland and others, with Prisoners.

Uncle, you, the queen is at your house:
For heaven's sake, fairly let her be entreated;
Tell her, I send to her my kind commends;
Take special care my greetings be deliver'd.

York. A gentleman of mine I have despatch'd
With letters of your love to her at large.

Boling. Thanks, gentle uncle. Come, lords, away;
To fight with (glendorow and his complices;
A while to work, and, after, holiday. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Coast of Wales. A Castle in View.

K. Rich. Barkoughley castle call you this at hand?

Aum. Yea, my lord: How brooks your grace the air,
After late tossing on the breaking seas?

K. Rich. Needs must I like it well; I weep for joy.
To stand upon my kingdom once again.—
Dear earth, I do salute thee with my hand,
Though rebels wound thee with their horses' hoofs:
As a long parted mother with her child
Plays fondly with her tears, and smiles in meeting;
So, weeping, smiling, greet I thee, my earth,
And do thee favour with my royal hands,
Feed not thy sovereign's foe, my gentle earth,
Nor with thy sweets comfort his ravenous sense:
But let thy spiders, that suck up thy venom,
And heavy-gaited toads, lie in their way;
Doling annoneance to the treacherous foe,
Which with usurping steps do trample thee.
Yield stinging nettles to mine enemies:
And when they from thy bosom pluck a flower,
Guard it, I throw it on a living bed;
Whose double tongue may with a mortal touch
Throw death upon thy sovereign's enemies.—
Mock not my senseless conjunction, lords;
This earth shall have a feeling, and these stones
Prove armed soldiers, even her native king
Shall falter under foul rebellious arms.

Bishop. Fear not, sir; that Power, that made ye Hath power to keep you king, in spite of all.
The means that heaven yields must be embraced,
And not neglected; else, if heaven would,
And could not love you, then you must not refuse;
The proffer’d means of succour and redress.
Aum. He means, my lord, that we are too remiss;
Whilst Bolingbroke, through our security,
Grows strong and great, in substance, and in friends.

K. Rich. Discomfortable counsel I know’t thou not,
That when the searching eye of heaven is bid
Behind the globe, and lights the lower world,
Then thieves and robbers range abroad unseen,
In murders, and in outrage, bloody here;
But when, from under this terrestrial ball,
He fires the proud tops of the eastern pipes,
And darts his light through every guilty hole,
Then murders, treasons, and detestableness,
The cloak of night being placed from off their heads.

Stand bare and naked, trembling at themselves?
So when this thief, this traitor, Bolingbroke,
Who all this while hath revel’d in the night,
While the moonlight was not with them good—
Shall we see rising in our throne the east,
His treasons will sit blushing in his face,
Not able to endure the sight of day.
But, self-affrighted, tremble at his sin.
Not all the water in the rough rude sea
Can wash the balm from an anointed king;
The breath of worldly men cannot depose
The deputy elected by the Lord;
Foremost he that rais’d him hath presa’d,
To lift shrv’d steel against our golden crown,
God for his Richard hath in heavenly pay
A glorious angel: then, if angels fight,
Weak men must fall: for heaven still guards the right.

Enter Salsbury.

Welcome my lord: How far off lies your power?
Sal. Nor near, nor farther off, my gracious lord,
Than this weak arm: Discomf’t, guides my tongue,
And bids me speak of nothing but despair.
Our strength now waxeth meagre, and more dear,
Hath clouded all the happy days on earth:
O, call back yesterday, bid time return,
And than shalt have twelve thousand fighting men:
To-day, to-day, unhappy day, too late,
Threws thy joys, friends, fortune, and thy state;
For all the Welshmen, hearing thou wert dead,
Are gone to Bolingbroke, diapers’d, and fled.

Aum. Comfort, my liege: why looks your grace so pale?

K. Rich. But now, the blood of twenty thousand
Did triumph in my face, and they are fled:
And, till so much blood thither come again,
Have I not reason to look pale and dead?
All souls that will be safe, fly from my side;
For time hath set a blot upon my pride.
Aum. Comfort, my liege; remember who you are.
K. Rich. I had forgot myself: Am I not king?
A wake, thou sluggard majesty! thou sleepest.
Is not the king’s name forty thousand names?
Arm, arm, my name! a puny subject strikes
Not more than a plover’s wing in the sky.
Look not to the ground: Ye favourites of a king:
Are we not high?
High be our thoughts: I know, my uncle York Hath power enough to serve our turn. But who Comes here?

Enter Scroop.

Scroop. More health and happiness betide my liege,

Than can my care-tan’d tongue deliver him.
K. Rich. Mine ear is open, and my heart pre-par’d;
The worst is worldly loss, thou canst unfeel.
Not that, nor yet, what was my care?
And what loss is it, to be rid of care?
Strives Bolingbroke to be as great as we?
Greater he shall not be: if he serve God,
We’ll serve him too, and be his fellow so:
Revolving truths? that we cannot mend;
They break their faith to God, as well as us:
Cry, woe, destruction, ruin, loss, decay;
The worst is—death, and death will have his day.
Scroop. Lord, am I, that your highness is so arm’d
To bear the tidings of calamity.
Like an unseasonable stormy day,
Which makes the silver rivers drown their shores,
As if the world were all dissolved to tears;
So high above his limits swells the rage
Of Bolingbroke, covering your fearless land
With hard bright steel, and hearts harder than steel.
White beards have arm’d their thin and hairless scalps
Against thy majesty: boys, with women’s voices,
Strive to speak big, and clap their female joints
In stiff and bulky arms against thy crown.
Thy very beardsmen learn to bend their bows
Of double-fatal yew against thy state;
Yes, distant women manage rusty bills
Against the heat: both in our place of rebel,
And all goes worse than I have power to tell.

K. Rich. Too well, too well, thou tell’st a tale
so ill.
Where is the earl of Wiltshire? where is Bagot?
What is become of Bushy? where is Green?
That they have let the dangerous enemy
 Measure our confines with such peaceful steps?
I prevail, their heads shall pay for it.
I warrant, they have made peace with Bolingbroke.

Scroop. Peace have they made with him, indeed,
my lord.

K. Rich. O villains, vipers, damn’d without redemption!
Dogs, easily won to fawn on any man!
Snakes, in my heart-blood warm’d, that sting my heart.

Three Judasses, each one thrice worse than Judas!
Would they make peace? terrible hell make war
Upon their spotted souls for this offence!
Scroop. Sweet love, I see, changing his property,
Turns to the base and basest cause of hate.
Again uncure their souls: their peace is made
With heads, and not with hands: those whom you curse.
Have felt the worst of death’s destroying wound,
And lie full low, grav’d in the hollow ground.
Aum. Is Bushy, Green, and the earl of Wiltshire, dead?
Scroop. Yes, all of them at Bristol lost their heads.

Aum. Where is the duke my father with his power?
K. Rich. No matter where; of comfort so man shall have.

Let’s talk of graves, of worms, and epitaphs;
Make dust our paper, and with rainy eyes
Write sorrow on the bosom of the earth.
Let’s choose executors, and talk of wills:
And yet not so,—for what can we bequeath,
Save our deceased bodies to the ground?
Our lands, our lives, and all are Bolingbroke’s,
And nothing can we call our own, but death;
And that small model of the better earth,
Which serves as paste and cover to our bones
For heaven’s sake, let us sit upon the ground,
And to the sad stories of the death of kings —
How some have been depo’d, some slain in war,
Some haunted by the ghosts they have depos’d,
Some poison’d by their wives, some sleeping kill’d;
All murder’d,—For within the hollow crown,
That rounds the mortal temples of a king,
Keeps death his court: and there the antic sits, Scoffing his state, and grinning at his pomp; Allow him a break, a little scene To monarchical, be feared, and kill with looks; Infusing him with self and vain conceit.— As if this flesh, which walls about our life, Were brass impassable, and, humour'd thus, Conforms to man, and last, and with a roar Bore through his castle wall, and—farewell king! Cover your heads, and mock not flesh and blood With solemn reverence; throw away respect, To ceremony, and ceremonious awe For you have but mistook me all this while: I live with bread like you, feel want, taste grief, Need friends:—Subjected thus, How can you say to me, I am a king? Car. My lord, wise men ne'er wail their present woes, But presently prevent the ways to wall. To fear the foe, since fear oppreath strength, Giveth, in your weakness, strength unto your foe, And so your follies fight against yourself. Fear, and be slain; no worse can come, to fight: And fight and die, is death destroying death; Where fear dying, pays death servile breath.

Am. My father hath a power, enquire of him; And learn to make a body of a limb. K. Rich. Thou childish man!—Proud Bolingbroke's canst! To change blows with thee for our day of doom. This ague-fit of fear is over-blown; An easy task it is, to win our own.— Say, in what place, where liveth Bolingbroke with his power? Speak sweetly, man, although thy looks be sour. Scroop. Men judge by the complexion of the sky The state and inclination of the day: So may you by my dull and heavy eye, My tongue hath but a heavier tale to say. I play the tormentor, by small and small, To lengthen out the worst that must be spoken— Your uncle York hath join'd with Bolingbroke; And all your northern castles yielded up, And all your southern gentlemen in arms Upon his party. K. Rich. Thou hast said enough.— Beshrew thee, cousin, which didst lead me forth To Aumerle. Of that sweet way I was in to despair! What say you now? What comfort have we now? By heaven! it is enough! Why, my lord, That hinders me of comfort any more. Go to Flint castle; there I'll pine away; A king, whose slave, shall kinglily woe obey. That power I have, discharge; and let them go To that great land that hath some hope to grow, For I have none:—Let no man speak again To alter this, for counsel is but vain.

Am. My liege, one word. K. Rich. He does me double wrong. That wounds me with the flatteries of his tongue. Discharge my followers, let them hence:—Away, From Richard's night, to Bolingbroke's fair day. [Exeunt.] SCENE III.—Wales. Before Flint Castle. Enter, with drum and colours, Bolingbroke and Forces: York, Northumberland, and others. Boling. So that by this intelligence we learn, The Welshmen are dispers'd; and Salisbury Is gone to meet the king, who lately landed, With some few private friends, upon this coast. North. The news is very fair, and good, my lord; Richard, not far from hence, hath hid his head. York. It would be seemle the lord Northumberland- To say—king Richard:—Alack the heavy day, When such a sacred king should hide his head! North. Your grace mistakes me; only to be brief, Left I his title out. York. The time hath been, Would you have been so brief with him, he would Have been so brief with you, to shorten you, For taking upon the head, your whetstone's length. Boling. Mistake not, uncle, further than you should. York. Take not, good cousin, further than you shoule.

Lest you mis-take: The heavens are o'er your head. Boling. I know it, uncle; and oppose not Myself against their will.—But who comes here? Enter Percy. Well, Harry; what, will not this castle yield? Percy. The castle royally is man'd, my lord, Against thy entrance. Boling. Royally! Why, it contains no king? Percy. Yes, my good lord, It doth contain a king; king Richard lies Within the limits of yon lime and stone: And with him are the lord Aumerle, lord Salisbury, Sir Stephen Scroop; besides a clergyman Of holy reverence, who, I cannot learn. North. Belike, it is the bishop of Carlisle. Boling. Noble Lord, To North. Go to the rude ribs of that ancient castle; Through brazen trumpet send the breath of parie Into his rebel ears, and thus deliver. Harry Bolingbroke On both his knees, doth kiss king Richard's hand; And sends allegiance, and true faith of heart, To his most natural person: hither come Even at his feet to lay my arms and power; Provided that, my banishment repeal'd, And lands restor'd again, be freely granted If not, I'll use the advantage of my power, And lay the summer's dust with showers of blood, Rain'd from the wounds of slaughter'd Englishmen:

The which, how far off from the mind of Bolingbroke It is, such crimson tempes should bedrench The fresh green lap of fair king Richard's land, My stooping duty tenderly shall show. Go, signify as much; whilst here we march Upon the grassy carpet of this plain—[Northumberland advances to the castle, with a trumpet. Let's march without the noise of threatening drum, That from the castle's tooter'd battlements Our fair appointments may be well perus'd. Methinks, king Richard and myself should meet With no less terror, in the solitary concert Of fire and water, when their thund'ring shock At meeting tears the cloudy cheeks of heaven. Be he the fire, I'll be the yielding water: The rage be his, while on the earth I rain My waters; on the earth, and not on him. March on, and mark king Richard how he looks. A purle wounded, and answered by another trumpet within. Flourish. Enter on the walls King Richard, the bishop of Carlisle, Aumerle, Scroop, and Salisbury. York. See, see, king Richard doth himself appear. As doth the blushing discontented sun, From out the fiery portal of the east: When he perceives the envious clouds are bent To dim his glory, and to stain the track Of his bright passage to the occident. Yet looks he like a king; behold, his eye, As bright as is the eagle's, lightens forth Controlling majesty; Alack, alack, for woe, That any harm should stain so noble a show! K. Rich. We are amaz'd; and thus long have we stood To watch the fearful bending of thy knee, To Northumberland. Because we thought ourself thy lawful king: And if we be, how dare thy joints forget
To pay their awful duty to our presence? If we be not, show us the hand of God That hath disdained us from our stewardship: For we know not, nor have we known, And though you think, that all, as you have done, Have torn their souls, by turning them from us, And cast us barren, and bereft of friends: Yet know,—my master, God omnipotent, Is mastering in his clouds, on our behalf, Armies of pestilence; and they shall strike Your children yet unborn, and unbegot: That lift your vassal hands against my head, And threat the glory of my precious crown. Tell Bolingbroke, (for yond', methinks, he is,) That every stripe he makes upon my land, Is dangerous treason: He is come to ope The purple testament of bleeding war; But ere the crown he looks for live in peace, Ten thousand bloody crowns of mothers' sons Shall become the flower of England's face: Change the complexion of her maid-pale peace To scarlet indignation, and bedew Her pasture's grass with faithful English blood.

North. The king of heaven forbid, our lord the king
Should so with civil and uncivil arms Be rush'd upon? Thy thrice-noble cousin, Ha'ing millen both harkly in thy hand; And by the honourable tomb he weares, That stands upon thy royal grand sire's bones; And by the royalties of both your bloods, Curvatures that show from one most serious head; And by the bared hand of warlike guant: And by the worth and honour of himself, Comprising all that may be sworn or said,— His coming hither hath no further scope, Than to fetch forth his fine legions, and Enfranchise-lment immediate on his knees; Which on thy royal party granted once, His glittering arms be will commend to rust, His barbed steeds to stables, and his heart To faithful service of your majesty. This swears he, as he is a prince, is just; And, as I am a gentleman, I credit him.

K. Rich. Northumberland, say,—thence the king returns:
His noble cousin is right welcome hither, And all the number of his fair demands Shalt be accomplished with the utmost pacation: With all the gracious utterance thou hast, Speak to his gentle hearing kind commends.— We do debase ourselves, cousin, do we not, Aumerle. To look so poorly, and to speak so fair? Shalt we call back Northumberland, and send Defiance to the traitor, and so die? Aum. No, good my lord; let's fight with gentle words.

Till time lend friends, and friends their helpful swords.

K. Rich. O God! O God! that e'er this tongue of mine,
That said the sentence of dread bustainment On you proud man, should take it off again With words of sooth; O, that I were so great As your chief self, or less than your chief self! Or that I could forget what I have been! Or not remember what I must be now! Swell'st thou, proud heart? I'll give thee scope to Since foes have scope to beat both thee and me.

Aum. Northumberland comes back from Bolingbroke.

K. Rich. What must the king do now? Must he submit? The king shall do it. Must he be depos'd? The king shall be contented: Must he be lose The name of king? o'God's name, let it go: I'll do for a jewel a set of stone; My gorgeous palace, for a hermitage;

My gay apparel, for an alms-man's gown; My figur'd goblets, for a dish of wood; My scepter, for a palmer's walking-staff; My subjects, for a pair of cursed saints; And my large kingdom for a little grave, A little little grave, an obscure grave:— Or I'll be buried in the king's highway, Some way of common trade, where subjects' feet May lightly trample on their sovereign's head, For on my heart they tread, now whilst I live; And, buried once, why not upon my head?— Aumerle, thou weep'st: My tender-hearted cou

We'll make foul weather with desplièd tears; Our sighs, and they, shall lodge the summer corn, And make a dearth in this revolting land. Or shall we play the wantons with our woes, And make some pretty match with shedding tears? As thus:—To drop them still upon one place, Till they have fretted us a pair of graves Within the earth; and, therein laid,—There lies Two kinmen, dear'd their graves with weeping eyes? Would not this ill do well?—Well, well, I see I talk but idly, and you mock at me.— Most mighty prince, my lord Northumberland, The king of heaven forbid, our lord the king Give Richard leave to live till Richard die? You make a leg, and Bolingbroke says—ay. North. My lord, in the base court he doth attend To speak to you; you may't please you, to come down?

Enter King Richard, and his Attendants below.

Boling. Stand all apart, And show fair duty to his majesty,— My gracious lord,—K. Rich. Fair cousin, you debase your princely knee, To make the base earth proud with kissing it: Me rather had, my heart might see you weep, And slumbering eyes should me appear. Up, cousin, up; your heart is up, I know, Thus high at least, [touching his own head.] although your knee be low. [own.

Boling. My gracious lord, I come but for mine K. Rich. Your own is yours, and I am yours, and all.

Boling. So far be mine, my most redoubted lord, As my true service shall deserve your love. K. Rich. Well you deserve:—They well deserve to have, That know the strongest and surest way to get— Uncle, give me your hand: nay, dry your eyes: Tears show their love, but want their remedies:— Cousin, I am too young to be your father, Though you are old enough to be my heir. What you will have, I'll give, and willing too; For do the best, what force will have we do— Set on towards London—Cousin, is it so? Boling. Yes, my good lord.

SCENE IV.—Langley. The Duke of York's Garden. Enter the Queen and two Ladies. Queen. What sport shall we devise here in This to drive away the heavy thought of care? [garden,
Act 3.

KING RICHARD II.

[Scene: The garden of the Palace of Westminster.]

LADY. Madam, we'll play at bowls.

QUEEN. 'Twill make me think. The world is full of rubs, and that my fortune runs 'gainst the bias.

LADY. Madam, we will dance.

QUEEN. My legs can keep no measure in delight, When my poor heart no measure keeps in grief: Therefore, no dancing, girl; some other sport.

LADY. Madam, we'll tell a tale.

QUEEN. Of sorrow, or of joy?

LADY. Of either, madam.

QUEEN. Of neither, girl: For I of joy, being altogether wrong, It doth remember me the more of sorrow; Or if of grief, being altogether had, It adds more sorrow to my want of joy: For what I have, I need not to repeat; And what I want, it boots not to complain.

LADY. Madam, I'll sing.

QUEEN. 'Tis well, that thou hast cause; But thou should'st please me better, would'st thou weep.

LADY. I could weep, madam, would it do you good.

QUEEN. And I could weep, would weeping do me good.

And never borrow any tear of thee. But stay, here come the gardeners:

Let's step into the shadow of these trees.

Enter a Gardener, and two Servants. My wretchedness unto a row of pins, They'll talk of state: for every one doth so Against a change: Woe is forerun with woe.

[Queen and Ladies retire.

GARD. Go, bind thou up yo' dangling apricocks, Which, like unruly children, make their sire Stoop with oppression of their prodigal weight: Give some supportance to the bending twigs.

Go thou, and like an executioner, Cut off the heads of too-fast-growing sprays, That look too lofty in our commonwealth: All must be even in our government.

Thus thou employ'd, I will go root away The noisome weeds, that without profit suck The soil's fertility from wholesome flowers.

1 SERV. Why should we, in the compass of a pale, Keep law, and form, and due proportion, Showing, as in a model, our firm estate? When our array'd-gardeners shall have land, Is full of weeds; her fairest flowers chok'd up, Her fruit-trees all unprun'd, her hedges run't, Her knots disorder'd, and her wholesome herbs Swarming with caterpillars? Hold thy peace:

He that hath suffer'd this disorder'd spring, Hath now himself met with the fall of leaf: The weeds, that his broad-spreading leaves did shelter, That seem'd in eating him to hold him up, Are pluck'd up, root and all, by Bolingbroke; I mean, the earl of Wiltshire, bushy, Green.

1 SERV. What, are they dead?

GARD. They are; and Bolingbroke Hath seiz'd the wasteful king. Oh! what pity is it, That he had not so trimm'd and dress'd his land, As we this garden! We at time of year, Do wound the bark, the skin of our fruit-trees; Last, being over-proud with sap and blood, With too much riches it confound itself.

Had he done so to great and growing men, They might have liv'd to bear, and he to taste Their fruits of duty. All superfluous branches We lop away, that bearing boughs may live: Had he done so, himself had borne the crown, Which waste of idle hours hath quite thrown down.

1 SERV. What, think you then, the king shall be depos'd?

GARD. Depose'd he is already; and depos'd, 'Tis doubt, he will be. Letters came last night

To a dear friend of the good duke of York's, That tells black tidings.

QUEEN. O, I am press'd to death, Through want of speaking!—Thou, old Adam's likeness, [Coming from her concealment. Set to dress this garden, how darest Thou shrowd-tongue sound this unpleasing news?

What Eve, what serpent hath suggested thee To make a second fall of cursed man? Why dost thou say, king Richard is depos'd? Dar'st thou, thou little better thing than earth, Divine his downfall? whether, when, and how, Can'st thou by these ill-tidings? speak, thou wretch.

GARD. Pardon me, madam: little joy have I, To breathe this news: yet, what I say is true. King Richard, he is in the mighty hold Of Bolingbroke; their fortunes both are weigh'd: In your lord's scale is nothing but himself, And some few vanities that make him light; But in the balance of great Bolingbroke, Besides himself, are all the English peers, And with that odds he weighs king Richard down. Post ye to London, and you'll find it so: I speak no more than every one doth know.

QUEEN. Nimble mischance, thou art so light of foot, Doth not thy embassy belong to me, And am I late, that knows it? O, thou think'st To serve me last, that I may longest keep Thy sorrow in my breast. Come, ladies, go, To meet at London London's king in woe.

What, was I born to this! that my sad look Should grace the triumph of great Bolingbroke? Gardener, for telling me this news of woe, I would, the plauts thou graft'st may never grow.

[Exit Queen and Ladies.

GARD. I poor queen! so that thy state might be no worse, I would my skill were subject to thy curse. Here did she drop a tear; here, in this place, I'll set a bank of tears, sour bath of grace; Rue, even for ruth, here shortly shall be seen, In the remembrance of a weeping queen.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—London. Westminster Hall. The Lords spiritual on the right side of the throne; the Lords temporal on the left: the Commons below.

Enter Bolingbroke, Aumerle, Surrey, Northumberland, Percy, Fitzwater, another Lord, Bishop of Carlisle, Abbot of Westminster, and Attendants. Officers behind, with Bagot.

Boling. Call forth Bagot:

NOW, Bagot, freely speak thy mind: What thou dost know of noble Glesoter's death, Who wrought it with the king, and who perform'd The bloody office of his timeless end.

Bagot. Then set before my face the Lord Aumerle.

Boling. Cousin, stand forth, and look upon that man.

Bagot. My lord Aumerle, I know your daring tongue Scorns to unmask what once it hath deliver'd. In that dead time when Glesoter's death was plotted, I heard you say, Is not my arm of length, That reacheth from the restful English court As far as Calais, to my uncle's head? Amongst much other talk, that very time, I heard you say, that you had rather refuse The offer of an hundred thousand crowns, Than Bolingbroke's return to England; Adding withal, how blest this land would be, in this your cousin's death.

Aumerle. Princes, and noble lords, What answer shall I make to this base man?
Shall I so much dishonour my fair stars, On equal terms to give him chastisement? Either I must, or have mine honour soil'd With unendurable infamy. This slander, This hideous calumny must be confuted.

There is my gage, the manful seat of death, That marks thee out for hell: I say, thou liest, And will maintain, what thou hast said, is false, In thy heart-blood, though being all too base To stake the temper of my knightly soul's death. If thou deny'st it, twenty times thou liest:
And I will turn thy falsehood to thy heart, Where it was forged, with my rapier's point.

Aum. Thou dost not, coward, live to see that day.

Fitz. Now, by my soul, I would it were this hour.

Aum. Fitzwater, thou art damn'd to hell for this.

Ferre. Aumerle, thou liest: his honour is as true, In this appeal, as thou art most subject: And now, there I throw my gage, To prove it on thee to the extreme point. Of mortal breathing; seize it, if thou dost.

Aum. And if I do not, may my hands rot off, And never brandish more revengeful steel Over the glittering helmet of my foe!

Lord. I take the earth to the like, forsworn Aumerle;
And spare thee on with full as many lies As may be boil'd in thy treacherous ear. From sun to sun: there is my honour's pawn;
Engage it to the trial, if thou dost.

Aum. Who sets me else? by heaven, I'll throw it all at:
I have a thousand spirits in one breast, To answer twenty thousand such as you.

Surrey. My lord Fitzwater, I do remember well The very time Aumerle and you did talk.

Fitz. My lord, 'tis true: you were in presence then;
And you can witness with me, this is true.

Surrey. As false, by heaven, as heaven itself is false.

Fitz. Surrey, thou liest.

Surrey. Dishonourable boy!

That lie shall lie so heavy on my sword, That earth will raise it, and thunder rend it, Till thou the lie-giver, and that lie, do lie In earth as quiet as thy father's soul.
In proof whereof, there is my honour's pawn; Engage it to the trial, if thou dost.

Fitz. How fondly dost thou spur a forward horse? If I dare eat, or drink, or breathe, or live, I dare meet Surrey in a wilderness, And spit upon him, whilst I say, he lies, And may be held in thy treasonous ear, To tie thee to my strong correction.

As I intend to thrive in this new world, Aumerle is guilty of my true appeal: Besides, I heard the banish'd Norfolk say, That thou, Aumerle, didst send two of thy men To execute the noble duke at Calais.

Aum. Some honest Christian trust me with a gage.
That Norfolk lies: here do I throw down this, If he may be repeal'd to try his honour.

Boling. These differences shall all rest under gage.

Till Norfolk be repeal'd; repeal'd he shall be, And, though mine enemy, restor'd again To all his land and dignities; when he's return'd, Against Aumerle we will enforce his trial.

Car. That honourable day shall never be seen.

Many a time hath banish'd Norfolk fought For Jesus Christ; in glorious Christian field Streaming the ensign of the Christian cross, At Mountebaum against Engaghs, Turks, and Saracen's. And, toil'd with works of war, to win himself To Italy; and there, at Venice, gave His body to that pleasant country's earth, And his pure soul unto his captain Christ, Under whose colours he had fought so long.

Boling. Why, bishop, is Norfolk dead?

Car. As sure as I live, my lord.

Boling. Sweet peace conduct his sweet soul to Of good old Abraham!—lords appellants, Your differences shall all rest under gage, Till we assign you to your days of trial.

Enter York, attended.

York. Great duke of Lancaster, I come to thee From plume-pluck'd Richard; who with willing soul Adopts thee heir, and his high scepter yields To the possession of thy royal hand: Ascend his throne, descending now from him. And lend me this Henry, of that name the fourth! For I, in God's name, I'll ascend the regal throne.

Car. Marty, God forbid!—

York. What in this royal presence may I speak, Yet be it seeming to me to speak the truth. Would God, that any in this noble presence Were enough noble to be upright judge Of noble Richard; then true nobles would Learn him forbearance from so foul a wrong. What subject can give sentence on his king? And who sits here, that is not Richard's subject? Thieves are not judg'd, but they are by hear, Although not apparent guilt be seen in them: And shall the figure of God's majesty, His captain, steward, deputy elect, Anointed, crowned, planted many years, In his own land, and under his own roof, And he himself not present? O, forbid it, God, That in a Christian climate, souls refin'd Should show so heinous, black, obscene a deed! I speak to subjects, and a subject speaks, Stood up by heaven thus boldly for his king. My lord of Hereford here, whom you call king, Is a soul traitor to proud Hereford's king: And if you crown him, let me prophecy— The land of England shall mutiny again, And future ages groan for this foul act; Peace shall go sleep with Turks and infidels, And, in this seat of peace, tumultuous wars Shall spring from thy kind with kind confound: Disorder, horror, fear, and maltreat, Shall here inhabit, and this land be call'd The field of Golgotha, and dead men's skulls. O, if you rest this house against this house, It will be the woefullest division prove, That ever fell upon this cursed earth: Prevent, resist it, let it not be so,

York. No, lords, I do not live to be

North. Well have you argu'd, sir; and, for your pains, Of capital treason we arrest you here:

York. May it please you, lords, to grant the commons suit? Boling. Fetch hither Richard, that I common York. He may surrender; so we shall proceed Without suspicion.

North. I will be his conduct. [Exit. Boling. Lords, you that are here under our arrest, Procure your sureties for your days of answer— Little are we behelden to your love, 'Tis Carlisle And little look'd for at your helping hands.
K. Rich. Alack, why am I sent for to a king,
Before I have shooed off the regal thoughts
Wherewith I reign'd? I hardly yet have learn'd
To insinuate, flatter, bow, and bend my knee:—
Give sorrow leave a while to sulk and weep:—
To this submission. Yet I well remember
The favours of these men: Were they not mine? Did they not sometime cry, all hail! to me? So Judas did to Christ: but I have twenty, Found truth in all, but one; I, in twelve thousand, none.

God save the king!—Will no man say, amen?
Am I not high priest and clerk? well then, amen.
God save the king! although I be not he;
And yet, amen, if heaven do think him me.—
To do what service am I sent for hither?
York. To do that office, of thine own good will,
Which tired majesty did make thee offer,
The resignation of thy state and crown
To Henry Bolingbroke.

K. Rich. Give me the crown:—Here, cousin,
Now on this side, my hand; on that side, thine.
Now is this golden crown like a deep well,
That owes two buckets filling one another;
To drinker ever dancing, with winking eyes.
The other down, unseen, and full of water:
That bucket down, and full of tears, am I,
Drinking my griefs, whilst you mount up on high.

Boling. I thought you had been willing to resign.

K. Rich. My crown I am, but still my griefs are mine:
You may my glories and my state depose,
But not my griefs; still am I king of those.

Boling. Incessant are of your cares you give me with your crown.

K. Rich. Your cares set up, do not pluck my cares down.
My care is—loss of care; by old care done;
Your care is—gain of care, by new care won;
The cares I give, I have, though given away;
They tend the crown, yet still with me they stay.

Boling. I thought you had been willing to resign.

K. Rich. Ay, no;—no, say I—for must nothing be;—Therefore no, no, for I resign to thee.
Now I would know how I will undo myself:—
I give this heavy weight from off my head,
And this unwieldy scepter from my hand,
The pride of kingly sway out from my heart;
With mine own tears I wash away my balm,
With mine own breath I form a crown,
With mine own tongue deny my sacred state,
With mine own breath release all duteous oaths:
All pomp and majesty I do forswear;
My manors, rents, revenues, I forego;
My acts, decrees, and statutes, I deny;
God pardon all oaths, that are broke to me!
God keep all vows unbrok, are made to thee!
Make me, that nothing have, with nothing grieve'd;
And thou with all pleas'd, that hast all achiev'd!
Long mayst thou live in Richard's seat to sit,
And soon lie Richard in an earthy pit!

God save king Henry, unking'd Richard says,
And send him man years of sunshine days!
What more remains?

North. No more, but that you read
Offering a paper.

These accusations, and these grieves, was crimes,
Committed by your person, and your followers,
Against the state and profit of this land;
That, by confessing them, the souls of men
May be more happy, that you disavow'd.

K. Rich. Must I do so? and must I ravel out
My weav'd-up follies? Gentle Northumberland,
If thy offences were upon record,
Would I, in mercy, turn thee to a fair a troop,
To read a lecture of them? If thou wouldst,
There should'st thou find one heinous article,—
KING RICHARD II.

How to lament the cause. I'll beg one boon, And then be gone, and trouble you no more. Shall I obtain it?

Boling. Name it, fair cousin.

K. Rich. Fair cousin? Why, I am greater than any that was a king, my flatteners. Were then but subjects; being now a subject, I have a king here to my flatterer. Being so great, I have no need to beg.

Boling. Yet ask he shall have?

K. Rich. And shall I have?

Boling. You shall.

K. Rich. Then give me leave to go.

Boling. Whither?

[aside] K. Rich. Whither you will, so I will from your Tower. Some of you, convey him to the Tower. [you all, K. Rich. O, good! Convey?—Convey are that rise thus humbly by a true king's fall.

[Execut K. Richard, some Lords, and a Guard.

Boling. On Wednesday next, we solemnly set down Our coronation: lords, prepare yourselves.

[Execut all but the Abbot, Bishop of Carlisle, and Aumerle.

Abbot. A woeful pageant have we here beheld.

Car. The wo'e to come; the children yet unborn Shall raise their voices, as this day do they so born. Amen. You holy clergy, is there no plot To rid the realm of this pernicious blot?

Boling. Before I freely speak my mind herein, You shall not only take the sacrament Therein, but also help him to effect. Whatever I shall happen to devise— I see your brows are full of discontent, Your hearts of sorrow, and your eyes of tears; Come home with me to supper; I will lay A plot, shall show us all a merry day. [Execut.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—London. A Street leading to the Tower.

Enter Queen and Ladies.

Queen. This way the king will come; this is the To Julius Cæsar's ill-iterated tower, [way To whose flint bosom my condemned lord Is doomed a prisoner by proud Bolingbroke. Here let us rest, if this be the quakers earth, [Enter King Richard and Guards.

Have any rest for her true king's queen.

Queen. But soft, but see, or rather do not see, My fair rose wither: yet look up; behold; That you in pity may dissolve to dews, And wash him fresh again with true-love tears. Ah, then, the model where old Troy did stand; Thou map of honour; thou king Richard's tomb, And not king Richard; thou most bounteous Inn, Why should hard-favoured grief be lodg'd in thee, When triumph is become an abode house guest? K. Rich. Join not with grief, fair woman, do not so, To make my end too sudden: learn, good soul, To think our former state a happy dream; From which we wake, the truth of what we are Shows us but this: I am sworn brother, sweet, To grim necessity; and he and I Will keep a league till death. He is thee to France, And cloister thee in some religious house; Our holy lives must win a new world's crown, Which our profane hours here have stricken down.

Queen. What, is my Richard both in shape and mind?

Transform'd, and weaken'd? Hath Bolingbroke Depo'd thine intellect? Hath he been in thy heart? The lion, dying, thrusteth forth his paw, And makes the image, if not mortal, wise To be overpow'r'd; and wilt thou, pupil-like, Take thy correction mildly? kiss the rod; And fawn on rage with base humility, Which art a lion, and a king of beasts?

K. Rich. A king of beasts, indeed; if aught but I had been still a happy king of men. [beasts, Good sometime queen, prepare thee hence for France:

Think, I am dead; and that even here thou tak'st, As from my death-bed, my last living leave, In winter's tedious nights, sit by the fire With good old folks; and let them tell thee tales Of woeful ages, long ago betid. And, ere thou bid good night, to quit their grief, Tell thou the lamentable fall of me, And send the herdiers weeping to their beds. For why, the senseless bands will sympathize The sudden account of thy moving tongue, And, in compassion, weep the thought: And some will mourn in ashes, some cool-black, For the deposing of a rightful king.

Enter Northumberland, attended.

North. My lord, the mind of Bolingbroke is changed; You must to Pomfret, not unto the Tower.

And, madam, there is order taken for you; With all swift speed you must away to France. K. Rich. Northumberland, thou ladder whereby The moving Bolingbroke ascends my throne,— The time shall not be many hours of age; More than it is, ere soul sin, gathering head, Shall break into corruption thou shalt think, Though be divine the realm, and give thee half, It with the help of heaven durst make thee king, And shall he think, that thou, which know'st the To plant unrightful kings, wilt know again, [way Being ne'er so little urg'd, another way To break him headlong from the usurped throne. The love of wicked friends converts to fear: That fear, to hate; and hate turns one, or both, To worthy danger, and deserved death. Now, madam, this cannot be on my head; There are no more. Take leave, and part; for you must part forthwith.

K. Rich. Doubly divorc'd?—Bad men, ye violate A two-fold marriage; 'twixt my crown and me; And then, betwixt me and my married wife— Let me unkiss the oath, 'twixt thee and me; And yet not so, for with a kiss twas made— Part us, Northumberland; I towards the north, Where shivering cold and sickness pines the clime; Myself to France from whence forth I'll go, In pity, to be born a king of beasts again. She came adorned hither like sweet May, Sent back like Hallowmas, or short'st of day. Queen. And must we be divided? must we part? K. Rich. Leave me; and from hand, my love, and heart from heart.

Que. n. Banish us both, and send the king with North. That were some love, but little policy. Queen. Then whither be gone, whither let me go. K. Rich. So two, together weeping, make one woe. Weep thou for me in France, I for thee here; Better far off, than—near, be ne'er the near, Go, count thy way with sighs; i, mine with groans. Queen. So longest way shall have the longest moans. K. Rich. Twice for one step I'll groan, the way being short. And piece the way out with a heavy heart. Come, come, in wooring sorrow let's be brief, Since, wedded heart, there is such length in grief. One kiss, stop your mouths, and dumpy dub; I thus give me mine, and thus I take thy heart. [They kiss. Queen. Give me mine own again; 'twere no part.

To take on me to keep, and kill thy own heart. [Kiss again. So, now I have mine own again, begone, That may strive to kill it with a groan. K. Rich. We make woe wanton with this fond delay: Once more, adieu; the rest let sorrow say. [Exit.
It is a matter of small consequence, Which for some reasons I would not have seen. York. Which for some reasons, sir, I mean to see. I fear, I fear,—

Duch. What should you fear?
York. 'Tis nothing but some bond, that he is enter'd into For gay apparel, 'gainst the triumph day. York. Bound to himself to? what doth he with a bond
That he is bound to? Wife, thou art a fool.—
Boy, let me see the writing.
Aum. I do beseech you, pardon me; I may not show it.
York. I will be satisfied; let me see it, I say.

[Stretches it, and reads.]

Treason! foul treason!—villain! traitor! slave!—
Duch. What is the matter, my lord?
York. Ho! who is within there? [Enter a Servant.]
Servant. Saddle my horse.
God for his mercy! what treachery is here!
York. Why, what is it, my lord?
York. Give me my boots, I say; saddle my horse:
Now by mine honour, by my life, my truth,
I will appeach the villain. [Exit Servant.
Duch. What's the matter?
York. Peace, foolish woman.
Duch. I will not peace. What is the matter, Aum. Good mother, be content; it is no more Than my poor life must answer.
Duch. Thy life answer?
Re-enter Servant, with boots.
York. Bring me my boots, I will unto the king.
Duch. Strike him, Aumerle.—Poor boy, thou art amaz'd:
Hence, villain; never more come in my sight.—
[To the Servant.]
Wilt thou not hide the trespass of thine own?
Have we more sons? or are we like to have?
I not my teeming date drunk up with time?
And wilt thou pluck my fair son from mine age,
And rob me of a happy mother's name?
Is he not like thee? is he not thine own?
York. Thou fond mad woman,
Wilt thou conceal this dark conspiracy
A dozen of them here have ta'en the sacrament,
And interchangeably set on their hands,
To kill the king at Oxford.
Duch. He shall be none;
We'll keep him here: Then what is that to him?
York. A way!
Fond woman! were I he twenty times my son
I would appeach him.
Duch. Hadst thou gromd for him,
As I have done, thou'dst be more pitiful.
But now I know thy mind; thou dost suspect,
That I have been disloyal to thy bed,
And that he is a bastard, not thy son:
Sweet York, sweet husband, be not of that mind:
He is as like thee as a man may be,
Not like to me, or any of my kin,
And yet I love him.
York. Make way, unruly woman. [Exit.

Ducha. After, Aumerle; mount thee upon his horse;
Spur; post; and get before him to the king,
And beg thy pardon ere he do accuse thee.
I'll not be long behind; though I be old,
I doubt not but to ride as fast as York:
And never will I rise up from the ground,
Till Bolingbroke have pardon'd thee: Away;
[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Windsor. A Room in the Castle.
Enter Bolingbroke, as King; Percy, and other Lords.
Boling. Can no man tell of my unthriftly son?
Tis full three months, since I did see him last—
If any plague hang over us, 'tis he.
To tell God, my lords, he might be found;
Inquired of London, amongst the taverns there,
For there, they say, he daily doth frequent,
With unrestrained loose companions;
Even such, they say, as stand in narrow lanes,
And beat our watch, and rob our passengers;
While he was young, was patron, and effeminate boy.
Takes on the point of honour, to support
So dissolve a crew.
Percy. My lord, some two days since I saw the
And told him of these triumphs held at Oxford.
Boling. And what said the gallant?
Percy. His answer was,—he would unto the
And from the common creature pluck a glove,
And wear it as a favour; and with that
He would unhorse the lustiest challenger.
Boling. As dissolve, as desperate; yet, through
I see some sparkles of a better hope,
Which elder days may happily bring forth.
But who comes here?
[Enter Aumerle, hastily.
Aum. Where is the king?
Boling. What means
Our sovereign, that he strides and looks so wildly?
Aum. God save your grace. I do beseech your majesty,
To have some conference with your grace alone.
Boling. Withdraw yourselves, and leave us here alone.—[Ereunt Percy and Lords.
What is the matter with our cousin now?
Aum. For ever may my knee grow to the earth,
My tongue cleave to my roof within my mouth,
Unless a pardon, ere I rise, or speak.
Boling. Intended, or committed, was this fault?
If but the first, how heinous ere it be,
To win thy after-love, I pardon thee.
Aum. Then give me leave that I may turn the key,
That no man enter till my tale be done.
Boling. I have thy desire.
[Enter York.
York. [Within.] My liege, beware; look to thyself;
Thou hast a traitor in thy presence there.
Boling. Villain, I'll make thee safe.
[Drawing.
Aum. Stay thy revengeful hand;
Thou hast no cause to fear.
York. [Within.] Open the door, secure, foot alone.
Bolingbrooke opens the door.
[Enter York.
Boling. What is the matter, uncle? speak;
Recover breath; tell us how near is danger,
That we may arm us to encounter it.
York. Peruse this writing here, and thou shalt know
The treason that my haste forbids me show.
Aum. Remember, as thou read'st, thy promise past:
I do repent me; read not my name there,
My heart is not confederate with my hand.
York. 'Twas, villain, ere thy hand did set it
I tore it from the traitor's bosom, king;
Fear, and not love, begets his penitence,
Forget to pity him, lest thy pity prove
A serpent that will sting thee to the heart.
Boling. O bellow, strong, and bold conspiracy!—
O loyal father of a treacherous son!
Thou sheer, immaculate, and silver fountain,
From whence this stream through muddy passages
Hath held his current, and defiled himself!

Thy overflow of good converts to bad;
And thy abundant goodness shall excuse
This deadly blot in thy disregarding son.

Speak, how so near my true heart canst thou bode;
And he shall spend mine honour with his shame,
As thristless sons their sprinkling fathers' gold.
Mine honour lives when his dishonour dies;
Or my shamed life in his dishonour lies:
There knight I in my life, and will expire,
The traitor lives, the true man's part to die.
Duch. [Within.] What ho, my liege! for God's sake let me in.
Boling. In our sight, what will-voiced supplicant makes this eager cry?
Duch. A woman, and thine aunt, great king;—
'tis I.

Speak with me, pity me, open the door:
A beggar begs that never begg'd before.
Boling. Our scene is alter'd,—from a serious thing.
And now chang'd to The Beggar and the King—
My dangerous cousin, let your mother in;
I know, she's come to pray for your foul sin.
York. If thou so pardon, whosoever pray,
More sins, for this forgiveness, proper may.
This jointed bond cut off, the rest is confound;
This, let alone, will all the rest confound.
[Enter Duchess.
Duch. O, king, believe not this hard-hearted
man;
Love, loving not itself, none other can.
York. Thee frantick woman, what dost thou make here?
Shall this day's treason once more a traitor rear?
Duch. Sweet York, be patient; hear me, gentle liege.
[Enter Duchess.
Duch. Against them both, my true joints bended
And ill may'st thou thrive, if thou grant any grace!
Duch. Plead'st he in earnest? look upon his face;
His eyes do drop no tears, his prayers are in jest;
His words come from his mouth, ours from our breast.
He prays but faintly, and would be denied;
We pray with heart, and soul, and all beside;
His weary joints would gladly rise, I know;
Ours, shall kneel till the ground, and they grow;
His prayers are full of false hypocrisy;
Ours, of true zeal and deep integrity.
Our prayers do out-pray his; then let them have
That mercy, which true prayers ought to have.
Boling. Good aunt, stand up.
Duch. Nay, do not say—stand up;
But pardon, first; and afterwards, stand up.
And if I were the nurse, thy tongue to teach;
Pardon—should be the first word of thy speech.
I never long'd to hear a word till now;
Say—pardon, king; let pity teach thee how;
The word is short, but not so short as sweet.
No word like, pardon, for kings months so meet.
York. Speak it in French, king; say, pardonnez moi.
Duch. Dost thou teach pardon pardon to destroy?
Ah, if we were the hand, my hand-hearted lord,
That set'st the word itself against the word!—
Speak, pardon, as 'tis current in our land;
The chopping French we do not understand.
Thine ear to please to speak, set thy tongue there;
Or, in thy piteous heart plant thou thine ear;
That, hearing how our plaints and prayers do pierce.
Pity may'st thee pardon to rehearse.
Boling. Good aunt, stand up.
KING RICHARD II

Act 5.

Duch. I do not sue to stand, Sir, and, as I sometimes think, can keep as I do.

Boling. I pardon him, as God shall pardon me.

Duch. God is a happy vantage of a kneeling knee!

Yet am I sick for fear: speak it again;

Twice saying pardon, doth not pardon twice,

But makes one pardon strong. With all my heart

I pardon him.

Duch. A god on earth thou art.

Boling. But for our trysted brother-in-law,—and the abbot,

With all the rest of that consorted crew,

Of or where these traitors are:

They shall not live within this world, I swear,

But I will have them, if I once know where.

Uncle, farewell,—and cousin too, adieu!

Your mother will hath pray'd, and prove you true.

Duch. Come, my old son:—I pray God make thee new. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Exton and a Servant.

Exton. Didst thou not mark the king, what words he make the king?

Have I no friend will rid me of this living fear?

Was it not so?

Serv. Those were his very words.

Exton. Have I no friend? quoth he: he spake it twice,

And urg'd it twice together; did he not?

Serv. He did.

Exton. And, speaking it, he wistfully look'd on the king.

As who should say,—I would, thou wert the man

That would divorce this terror from my heart;

Meaning, the king at Pomfret. Come, let's go;

I am the king's friend, and will rid his foes. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Pomfret. The Dungeons of the Castle.

Enter King Richard.

K. Rich. I have been studying how I may compare

This prison, where I live, unto the world.

And, for because the world is populous,

And here is not a creature but myself,

I cannot do it. —Yet it will hammer it out.

My brain I'll prove the female to my soul;

My soul, the father: and these two beget

A generation of still-breeding thoughts,

And these same thoughts people this little world;

In humours, like the people of this world.

For no thought is contented. The better sort,

As thoughts of things divine,—are intermix'd

With scruples, and do set the world itself

Against the world.

As thus,—Come, little ones; and then again,

It is as hard to come, as for a ewe

To thread the posteri of a needle's eye.

Thoughts tending to ambition, they do plot

Unlike wonders: how these vain weak mails

May tear a passage through the flinty ribs

Of this hard world, my ragged prison walls;

And, for they cannot, die in their own pride.

Thoughts tend not to content, find themselves,

That they are not the first of fortune's slaves,

Nor shall not be the last; like silly beggars,

Who, sitting in the stocks, refuse their shame,

That many have, and others must sit there;

And in this thought they find a kind of ease,

Bearing their own misfortune on the back

Of such as have before endur'd the like.

Thus play I, in one person, many people,

And none contented: Sometimes am I king;

Then treasun makes me wish myself a beggar,

And so I am: Then crushing penury

Persuades me I was better when a king;

Then am I king'd again: and, by-and-by,

Think that I am unking'd by Bolingbroke,

And straight am nothing:—But, what'er I am,

Nor I, nor any man, that but man is,

With nothing shall be pleas'd till he be eas'd

Ha! I keep time—How soon sweet music is,

When time is broke, and no proportion kept!

So is it in the musick of men's lives.

And here have I the daintiness of ear!

To check time broke in a disorder'd string;

But, for the concord of my state and time,

Had not an ear to hear my true time broke.

I wasted time, and now doth time waste me.

For now hath time made me of a wanking clock:

My thoughts are minutes; and, with sighs, they jar

Their watches on to mine eyes, the outward watch,

Whereto my finger, like a dial's point,

Is pointing still, in cleansing them from tears.

Now, sir, the sound, that tells what hour it is,

Are clamorous groans, that strike upon my heart,

Which is the bell: So sighs, and tears, and groans,

Show minutes, times, and hours:—but my time

Hans posting on in Bolingbroke's proud joy,

While I stand fooling here, his Jack o' the clock.

This musick mads me, let it sound no more;

For, though it have holp madmen to their wits,

In me, it seems it will make me mad.

Yet blessing on his heart that gives it me!

For 'tis a sign of love; and love to Richard

Is a strange brooch in this all-hating world.

Enter Groom.

Groom. Hall, royal prince!

K. Rich. Thanks, noble peer!

The cheapest of us is ten groats too dear.

What art thou? and how comes it thou art bither,

Where no man never comes, but that sad dog

That brings me food, to make misfortune live?

Groom. I was a poor gorem of thy stable, king,

When thou wert king; who, travelling towards York,

With much ado, at length have gotten leave

To look upon my sometimes master's face.

O, how it doth concur, when with that face,

I, in London streets that coronation day,

When Bolingbroke rode on roan Barbary!

That horse, that thou so often hast bestri'd;

That horse, that I so carefully have pres't;

K. Rich. Rode on Barbary? Tell me, gentle Groom,

How went he under him?

[friend,

Groom. So proudly, as if he disdained the ground.

K. Rich. So proud that Bolingbroke was on his back!

That jade hath eat bread from my royal hand;

This hand hath made him proud with clapping him.

Would he be not stumble? Would he not fall down,

(Since pride must have a fall,) and break the neck Of that proud man, that did usurp his back?

Forgiveness, horse! why do I rail on thee,

Since thou, created to be aw'd by man,

Was born to bear? I was not made a horse;

And yet I bear a burden like an ass,

Spur-gait'd, and tir'd by jaunting Bolingbroke.

Enter Keeper, with his keys.

Keep. Fellow, give place; here is no longer stay.

Groom. What my tongue dares not, that my heart shall say. [Exit.

K. Rich. If thou love me, 'tis time thou wert away.

Groom. What my tongue dares not, that my heart shall say. [Exit.

K. Rich. Keep. My lord, wilt'please you to fail to?

K. Keep. Keep my lord, I dare not; sir Pierce of Exton, who Lately came from the king, command's me the contrary.

K. Rich. The devil take Henry of Lancaster, and thee!

Patience is stale, and I am weary of it. [Exit the Keeper.
Keep. Help, help, help!

Enter Exton, and Servants, armed.

K. Rich. How now? what means death in this rude assault?

Villain, thy own hand yields thy death's instrument.

Go thou, and kill another room in hell.

[Exeunt.

Hath with the king's blood stain'd the king's own land.

Moont, mount, my soul! thy seat is up on high:

Whilest my gross flesh sinks downward, here to die.

[Exeunt.

As full of valour, as of royal blood:

Both have I spilt; if, would the deed were good!

For now the devil, that told me—I did well,

Says, that this deed is chronicled in hell.

This dead king to the living king I'll bear?

Take hence the rest, and give them burial here.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Windsor. A Room in the Castle.

Flourish. Enter Bolingbroke and York, with Lords and Attendants.

Boling. Kind uncle York, the latest news we hear,

Is—that the rebels have consum'd with fire

This town of Chester in Glosstershire;

But whether they be taken, or slain, we hear not.

Enter Northumberland.

Welcome, my lord! What is the news?

North. First, to thy sacred state wish I all hap.

The next news is,—I have to London sent all news,

The heads of Brocas, and Sir Bennet Seely;

Two of the dangerous consorted traitors,

Boling. Thy pains, Fitzwater, shall not be forgot;

Right noble is thy merit, well I wot.

Enter Percy, with the Bishop of Carlisle.

Percy. The grand conspirator, abbot of Westminister,

With clog of conscience, and sour melancholy,

Hath yielded up his body to the grave;

But here is Carlisle living, to abide

Thy kindly doom, and sentence of his pride.

Boling. Carlisle, this is your doom—

Choose out some secret place, some reverend room,

More than thou hast, and with it joy life;—

So, as thou liest in peace, die free from strife:

For though mine enemy thou hast ever been,

High sparks of honour in thee I have seen.

Enter Exton, with Attendants bearing a coffin.

Exton. Great king, within this coffin I present

Thy buried fear; herein all breathless lies

The mightiest of thy greatest enemies,

Richard of Bourdeaux, by me hither brought.

Boling. Exton, I thank thee not; for thou hast brought

A deed of slander, with thy fatal hand,

Upon my head, and all this famous land.

Exton. From your own mouth, my lord, did I this deed.

Boling. They love not poison that do poison need,

Nor do I thee; though I did wish him dead,

I hate the murderer, love him murdered.

The guilt of conscience take thou for thy labour,

But neither my good word, nor princely favour:

With Cain go wander through the shade of night,

And never show thy head by day nor light.

Lords, I protest, my soul is full of woe,

That blood should sprinkle me, to make me grow.

Come, mourn with me for what I do lament,

And put on sullen black, incontinent;

I'll make a voyage to the Holy land,

To wash this blood off from my guilty hand—

March sadly after; grace my mournings here;

In weeping after this untimely bier.

[Exeunt.

SCENE,—England.

ACT I.

Enter King Henry, Westmoreland, Sir Walter Blunt, and others.

K. Hen. So shaken as we are, so war with care,

Find we a time for frighted peace to pant,
FIRST PART OF KING HENRY IV

All of one nature, of one substance bred,—
Did lately meet in the intestine shock
And furious course of civil butchery,
Shall now, in mutual well-seeing ranks,
March all one way; and be so more impud'nt
Against acquaintance, kindred, and allies:
The edge of war, like an ill-sheathed knife,
No more shall cut his master. Therefore, friends,
And to the sequel headlong we proceed.
(Whose soldier now, under whose blessed cross
We are impressed and engag'd to fight,) Forthwith a power of English shall we levy;
Whose arms are so many as we can summon,
To chase these pagans, in those holy fields.
Over whose acres walk'd those blessed feet,
Which, fourteen hundred years ago, were nail'd
For our advantage, on the bitter cross.
But this our purpose is a twelvemonth old,
And bootless 'tis to tell you— we will go;
Therefore we meet not now.—Then let me hear
Of you, my gentle cousin Westmoreland,
What yeast'y night our council did decree,
In forwarding this dear expedition.

West. My liege, this haste was hot in question,
And many limits of the charge set down.
But yesternight: when all a war was,
There came A post from Wales, laden with heavy news:
Whose worst was,—that the noble Mortimer,
Leading the men of Herefordshire to fight
Against the irregular and wild Glendower,
With one hand seizing of that Welshman taken,
And a thousand of his people butcher'd:
Upon whose dead corpse there was such musing:
Such beastly, shameless transformation.
By the Welshwomen done, as may not be,
Without much shame, re-told or spoken of.
K. Hen. It seems then, that the tidings of this broil
Brake of their business for the Holy land.

West. This, match'd with other, did, my gracious lord;
For more uneven and unwelcome news
Came from the north, and thus it did import.
On Holy good day, the gallant Hotspur there,
Young Harry Percy, and brave Archibald,
That ever-valiant and approved Scot,
At Holmedon met,
Where they did spend a sad and bloody hour;
As by discharge of their artillery,
And shape of likelihood, the news was told;
For he that brought them, in the very heat
And sweat of their combat, did take horse,
Uncertain of the issue any way.
K. Hen. Here is a dear and true industrious friend.
Sir Walter Hunt, new lighted from his horse,
Stain'd with the variation of each soil
Betwixt that Holmedon and this seat of ours;
And he hath brought us smooth and welcome news.
The earl of Douglas is discomfited;
The ten thousand bold Scots, two-and-twenty knights,
Bal'd in their own blood, did sir Walter see
On Holmedon's plains: Of prisoners, Hotspur took,
Mordake the earl of Fiffe, and eldest son
To beaten Douglas; and the earls of Athol,
Of Murray, Angus, and Menteith.
And is not this an honourable spoil?
Adlington prize: ha, cousin, is it not?
West. In faith,
It is a conquest for a prince to boast of.
K. Hen. Yes, there thou mak'st me sad, and mak'st me mad.
In envy that my lord Northumberland
Should be the father of so blest a son:
A son, who is the theme of honour's tongue;
A son, who doth a deed with a name, a deed;
Who is sweet fortune's minion, and her pride;
Whilst I, by looking on the praise of him,
See riot and dishonour stain the brow
If my young Harry, O, that it could be prov'd,
That some night-tripping fairy had exchang'd
In cradle-clothes our children where they lay,
And call'd mine—Percy, his—Plantagenet!
Then would I have his Harry, and he mine.
But let him from my thoughts:—What think you
Of this young Percy's pride? the prisoners,
Which he in this adventure hath surpriz'd,
To his own use he keeps; and sends me word,
I shall have the seeing Fordace earl of Fiffe.

West. This is his uncle's teaching, this is Worcester,
Malevolent to you in all aspects;
Which makes him fine a man himself, and bristle up
The crest of youth against your dignity.
K. Hen. But I have sent for him to answer this;
And, for this cause, awhile we must neglect
Our holy purpose to Jerusalem.
Cousin, on Wednesday next our council we
Will hold at Windsor, so inform the lords:
But come yourself with speed to us again;
For more is to be said, and to be done,
Than out of anger can be uttered.

West. I will, my liege.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. Another Room in the Palace.

Enter Henry, Prince of Wales, and Falstaff.

Fal. Now, Hal, what time of day is it, lad? P. Hen. Thou art so fat-witted, with drinking of old sack, and that thing in hands that Welshman taken, and sleeping upon benches after noon, that thou hast forgot to demand that truly which thou would'st truly know. What a devil hast thou to do with the time of the day? unless hours were cups of sack, and minutes capons, and clocks the tongues of bawds, and dials the signs of leaping houses, and the blessed sun himself a fair hot flower in flagstaff's cradle clothes, and so broken so many thousand, why thou should'st be so superfluous to demand the time of the day. Fal. Indeed, you come near me now, Hal: for we, that take purses, go by the moon and seven stars; and not by Phoebus, be, that wondering knight so fair. And, I pray thee, sweet wag, when thou art king, as, God save thy grace, (majesty, I should say;) for grace thou wilt have none. — P. Hen. What! none? Fal. No, by thy truth; not so much as will serve to be prologue to an egg and butter. P. Hen. Well, how then? come, roundly, roundly Fal. Marry, and what wouldst thou? this art king, let not us, that are sQUIRES of the night's body, be called thieves of the day's beauty; let us be—Diana's foresters, gentlemen of the shade, minions of the moon, and let Henry the prince of good government; being governed as the sea is, by our noble and chaste mistress the moon, under whose countenance we—steal.

P. Hen. Thou say'st well; and it holds well too for the fortune of us, that are the moon's men, doth ebb and flow like the sea; being governed as the sea is, by the moon. As, for proof, now: A pursu of gold most resolutely snatched on Monday night, and most insolently spent on Tuesday morning; got with swearing—lay by; and spent with crying—bring in: now, in as low an ebb as the foot of the ladder: and, by and by, in as high a flow as the rising of the gallows.

Fal. By the lord, thou say'st true, lad. And is not my hostess of the tavern a most sweet wench? P. Hen. As the honey of Hybla, my old lad of the castle. And not a buff jerkin a most sweet robe of durance? Fal. How now, how now, mad wag? what, in thy quips, and thy quiddities? what a plague have I the like? P. Hen. Why, what a box have I to do with my hostess of the tavern? Fal. Well, thou hast called her to a reckoning, many a time and oft.

P. Hen. Did I ever call for thee to pay thy part?
Fal. No; I'll give thee thy due, thou hast paid all there.

P. Hen. Yes, and elsewhere, so far as my soul would stretch; and, where it would not, I have used my credit.

Fal. Vouch and so used it, that were it not here apparent that thou art heir apparent. — But I pray thee, sweet way, shall there be gallows standing in England when thou art king? and resolution thus fuel'd with the rusty curb of old fate, antick the law? Do not thou, when thou art king, hang a thief.

P. Hen. No; thou shalt.

Fal. Shall I? (I rare! By the Lord, I'll be a brave judge.

P. Hen. Thou judgest false already: I mean, thou shalt have the hanging of the thieves, and so become a rare hangman.

Fal. Well, Hal, well; and in some sort it jumps with my humour, as well as waiting in the court, I can tell you.

P. Hen. For obtaining of suits?

Fal. Yes, for obtaining of suits: whereas the hangman hath no lean wardrobe. 'tis blood, I am as melancholy as a gib cat, or a lugged bear.

P. Hen. Or an old lion; or a lover's taste.

Fal. Yes, or the dromes of a Lincolnshire bag-pipes.

P. Hen. What say'st thou to a hare, or the melancholy of Moor-ditch?

Fal. I'd rather the most unsavoury similes; and art, indeed, the most comparative, rascalliest, sweet young prince. — But, Hal, I pray thee, trouble me no more with vanity. I would to God, thou and I knew where a company of good names were to be bought: An old lord of the council rated me the other day in the street about you, sir; but I marked him not: and yet he talked very wisely, but I regarded him not: and yet he talked wisely, and in the street too.

P. Hen. Thou dost well; for wisdom cries out in the streets, and no man regards it.

Fal. O, thou hast damnable expectation; and art, indeed, able to corrupt a saint. Thou hast done much harm upon me, Hal; — God forgive thee for it! Before I knew thee, Hal, I knew nothing; and now am I, if a man should speak truly, little better than one of the wicked. I must give over this life, and I will give it over; by the Lord, an I do not, I am a villain; I'll be damned, for never a king's son in Christendom.

P. Hen. Where shall we take a purse-to-morrow, Jack?

Fal. Where thou wilt, lad, I'll make one; an I do not, call me villain, and battle me.

P. Hen. Well, I am a wood; our taint of life in thee; from praying, to purse-taking.

Enter Poins, at a distance.

Fal. Why, Hal, 'tis my vocation, Hal; 'tis no sin for a man to labour in his vocation. Poins — Now shall we know if Gadshill have set a match. O, if men were be saved by merit, what hole in hell were hot enough for him? This is the most compest villain that ever cried, Stand, to a true man.

P. Hen. Good morrow, Ned.

Poins. Good morrow, sweet Hal. — What says merchandise? What says John Sack-and-Sugar? Jack, how agrees the devil and thee about thy soul, that thou soldest him on (good-friday last, for a cup of Madeira, and a cold cake)

P. Hen. Sir John stands to his word, the devil shall have his bargain; for he was utter yet a breaker of proverbs, he will give the devil his due. Poesy and art thou damned for keeping thy word with the devil.

P. Hen. Bie he been damned for cozening the devil.

Poins. But, my lads, my lads, to-morrow-morning, by four o'clock, early at Gadshill: There are pilgrims going to Canterbury with rich offerings, and traders riding to London with fat purses: I have visors for you all, you have horses for yourselves; — Gadshill lies to-night in Rochester; I have bespoke supper to-morrow night in Eastcheap; we will do it as secure as sleep then: I will go, I will stuff your purses full of crowns; if you will not, tarry at home, and be hanged.

Fal. Hear me, Wedward; if I tarry at home and go forth with you, I will a profit go.

Poins. You will, chops?

Fal. Hal, wilt thou make one?

Fal. There's neither honesty, manhood, nor good fellowship in thee, nor thou camest not of the blood royal, if thou darest not stand for ten shillings.

P. Hen. Well, then, once in my days I'll be a mad-cap.

Fel. Why, that's well said.

P. Hen. Well, come what will, I'll tarry at home.

Fal. By the Lord, I'll be a traitor then, when thou art going.

P. Hen. I care not.

Poins. Sir John, I pray thee, leave the prince and me alone; I will lay him down such reasons for this night, that he shall not.

Fal. Well, may'st thou have the spirit of persuasion, and he the ears of profitting, that what thou speakest may move, and what he hears may be believed! — But, Hal, 'tis a rare sport (I do, as may, I'll take it) prove a false thief; for the poor abuses of the time want contentence. Farewell: You shall find me in Eastcheap.

P. Hen. But how shall we part with them in setting forth?

Poins. Why, we will set forth before or after them, and appoint them a piece of meeting, where, in it is at our pleasure to fail: and then they shall adventure upon the exploit themselves; which shall have no sooner achieved, but we'll set upon them.

P. Hen. Ay, but 'tis like, that they will know us, by our horses, by our habits, and by every other appointment, to be ourselves.

Poins. Tut! our horses they shall not see, I'll thieve them in a cloud; we shall, in the wood; we shall, after we leave them; and, sirrah, I have cases of buckram for the nonce, to immask our outward garments.

P. Hen. But, I doubt, they will be too hard for us.

Poins. Well, for two of them, I know them to be as true-bred cowards as ever turned back; and for the third, if he fight longer than he sees his arms. The fortune of this jest will be, the incomprehensible lies that this same fat rogue will tell us, when we meet at supper: how thrifty, at least, he fought with; what words, what blows, what extremities he endured; and, in the reproof of this, lies the jest.

P. Hen. Well, I'll go with thee; provide us all things necessary, and meet me to-morrow night in Eastcheap, I'll sup. Farewell.

Poins. Farewell, my lord. [Exit Poins.

P. Hen. I know you all, and will abide uphold the unyrk'd humour of your idleness; Yet, I tell you, I will not imitate the way he does.

Who dott permit the base contagious clouds To smother up his beauty from the world, That, when he please again to be himself, Being wanted, he may be more would'd at. By breaking through the soul and ugly mists
Of vapours, that did seem to strangle him.
If all the year were playing holidays,
To sport would be as tedious as to work;
But, when they seldom come, they wish'd for come,
And then among the long pleasant but rambling houses;
So, when this loose behaviour I throw off,
And pay the debt I never promised,
By how much better than my word I am,
By so much have I falsify'd men's hopes;
And, like bright metal on a sullen ground,
My reformation, glittering o'er my fault,
Shall show more goodly, and attract more eyes,
Than that which hath no foil to set it off.
I'll so offend, to make offence a skill;
Redeeming time, when men think least I will.

[Exit.

SCENE III.—The same. Another Room in the Palace.

Enter King Henry, Northumberland, Worcester, Hotspur, Sir Walter Blunt, and others.

K. Hen. My blood hath been too cold and temperate,
Unapt to stir at these indignities,
And, as I have found, and, accordingly,
You tread upon my patience: but, be sure,
I will from henceforth rather be myself,
Mighty, and to be fear'd, than my condition;
Which hath been smooth as oil, soft as young down,
And therefore lost that title of respect,
Which the proud soul ne'er pays, but to the proud.
War, our house, my sovereign liege, little deserve.
The sovereign greatness to be used on it;
And that same greatness too which our own hands
Have holp to make so portly.

North. My lord,—
K. Hen. Worcester, get thee gone, for I see danger
And disobedience in thine eye: O, sir,
Your presence is too bold and pertinacious,
And majesty might never yet endure
The moody frontier of a servant brow.
You have good leave to leave us; when we need
Your use and counsel, we shall send for you.

You were about to speak.

[Exit Worcester.

North. Yea, my good lord.
Those prisoners in your highness' name demanded,
Which Harry Percy here at Holmedon took,
Were, as I say, not without some strength denied,
As is deliver'd to your majesty:
Either envy, therefore, or misprision
Is guilty of this fault, and not my son.
Unto the lawful liege, I did deny no prisoners.
But, I remember, when the sight was done,
When I was dry with rage, and extreme toll,
Breathless and faint, leaning upon my sword,
Came there a certain lord, neat, trimly dress'd,
Fresh as a bridgroom; and his chin, new rasp'd,
Show'd like a stubble-land at harvest-home;
He was perfum'd like a milliner;
And 'twixt his finger and his thumb he held
A pointed box, which ever and anon
He gave his nose, and took't away again;
Who, therewith angry, when it next came there,
Took it in snuff— and still he smile'd and talk'd!
And you he said some bold and barefaff'd story,
He call'd them—untaught knaves, unmanly,
To bring a slovenly unhandsome corpse
Betwixt the wind and his nobility.
With many holiday and lady terms
He question'd me; among the rest, demanded
My prisoners, in your majesty's behalf.
I then, all smarting, with my wounds being cold,
To be so pester'd with a popinjay,
But of my grief, and my impatience,
Answer'd neglectingly, I know not what;
He should, or he should not;—for he made me mad,
To see him shine so brisk, and smell so sweet,
And talk so like a waiting-gentlewoman,
Of guns, and drums, and wounds, (God save the mark!)
And telling me, the sovereign'st thing on earth
Was parcell'd for, to an inward bruise;
And that it was great pity, so it was,
That villainous salt petre should be digg'd
Out of the bowels of the harmless earth,
Which many a good tall fellow had destroy'd
So cowardly; and, but for these vile guns,
He would himself have been a soldier.
This bald unjointed chat of his, my lord,
I answer'd Indifferently, as I said
And, I beseech you, let not his report
Come current for an accusation,
Betwixt my love and your high majesty.
Blunt. The circumstance consider'd, good my lord.
Whatever Harry Percy then had said,
To such a person, and in such a place,
At such a time, with all the rest re-told,
May reasonably die, and never rise
To do him wrong, or any way impeach
What then he said, so he unsay it now.
K. Hen. Why, yet he doth deny his prisoners;
But with provocation, and excepting,
That we, at our own charge, shall ransom straight
His brother-in-law, the foolish Mortimer;
Who, on my soul, hath willfully betray'd
Those of the lives of those that did in that fight Against the great magician, damn'd Glendower;
Whose daughter, as we hear, the earl of March
Hath lately married. Shall our coffers then
Be emptied, to redeem a traitor home?
Shall we buy treason? and indent with fears,
When they have lost and forfeited themselves?
No, on the barren mountains let him starve;
For I shall never hold that man my friend,
Whose tongue shall ask me for one penny cost
To ransom home revolted Mortimer.
Hot. Revolted Mortimer!
He never did fall off, my sovereign liege,
But by the chance of war;—To prove that true,
Needs no more but one tongue for all those wounds
Those mouthed wounds, which valiantly he took,
When on the gentle Severn's sedgy bank,
In single opposition, hand to hand,
He did confound the best part of an hour
In changing hardiment with great Glendower;
Three times they breath'd, and three times they did drink,
Upon agreement, of swift Severn's flood;
Who then, a-flights with their bloody looks,
Ran fiercely among the trembling reeds,
And hid his crisp head in the hollow bank
Blood-stained with those valiant combatants.
Never did bare and rotten policy
Colour her working with such deadly wounds;
Nor never could the noble Mortimer
Receive so many, and all willingly;
Then let him not be slander'd with revolt,
K. Hen. Thou dost belle him, Percy, thou dost belle him,
He never did encounter with Glendower;
I tell thee,
He durst as well have met the devil alone,
As Owen Glendower for an enemy.
Art not ashamed? But, sirrah, henceforth
Let me not hear you speak of Mortimer:
Send me your prisoners, with the speediest means,
Or you shall hear in such a kind from me
As will displease you. My lord Northumberland,
We licence your departure with our son
Send us your prisoners, or you'll hear of it.
[Exeunt King Henry, Blunt, and Train.

Hot. And if the devil come and roar for them,
I will not send them—I will sorely afflict,
And tell him so; for I will ease my heart,
Although it be with hazard of my head.
North. What, drunk with choleric? stay, and pause awhile;
Here comes your uncle...
Re-enter Worcester.

Hot. Speak of Mortimer?

Wor. Zounds, I will speak of him; and let my soul Want mercy, if I do not join with him:

Yet, on his part, I'll empty all these vials, And shed my dear blood drop by drop like the dust, But I will lift the down-trod Mortimer As high the air as this unthankful king, As this ingrate and canker'd Bolingbroke.

North. Brother, the king hath made your nephew mad.

[To Worcester.]

Wor. Who struck this heat up, after I was gone?

Hot. He will, forsooth, have all my prisoners; And when I arg'd the ransom once again Of my wife's brother, then his desire look'd pale; And on my face he turn'd an eye of death, Trembling even at the name of Mortimer.

Wor. I cannot blame him: Was he not proclamed—

By Richard that dead is, the next of blood?

North. He was; I heard the proclamation; And then it was, when the unhappy king (Whose wrongs in us God pardon;) did set forth Upon his Irish expedition; From whence he, intercepted, did return To be depred, and, shortly, murdered.

Wor. And for whose death, we in the world's wide mouth Live scandal'd, and falsely spoken of?

Hot. But, soft, I pray you; Did king Richard then Proclaim my brother Edmund Mortimer Heir to the crown?

North. He did; myself did hear it.

Hot. Nay, then I cannot blame his cousin king, That did put him on the barrell, with a sins star'd; But shall it be, that you— that set the crown Upon the head of this forgetful man; And, for his sake, went the detested blot Of unholy subversion—shall it be, That you a world of curses under go; Being the agents, or base second means, The cords, the ladder, or the hangman rather?— O, pardon me, that I descend so low, To show the line, and the predicament, Wherein you range under this subtle king— Shall it, for shame, be spoken in these days, Still up chronicles in time to come, This figure of your nobility and power? Did gage them both in an unjust behalf, As both of you, God pardon it! have done,— To put down Richard, that sweet lovely rose, And plant this thorn, this canker, Bolingbroke? And shall it, in more shame, be further spoken, That you are fool'd, discarded, and shook off By him, for whom these shame ye underwent? No; yet time serves, wherein you may redeem Your banish'd honours, and restore yourselves Into the good thoughts of the world again: Revenge the jeering, and disdain'd contempt, Of this proud king: who studieth, day and night, To answer all the debt he owes to you, Even with the bloody payment of your deaths. Therefore, I say,—

Peace, cousin, say no more;

And now I will unclasp a secret book, And to your quick-conceiving discourses I'll read you matter deep and dangerous; As full of peril, and advent'rous spirit, As such a story as this can bear, no more; On the unsteadfast footing of a spear.

Hot. If he fall in, good night,—or sink or swim:

Send danger from the east unto the west, So honour cross it from the north to south, And let them grapple;— till the blood more stirs, To rouse a lion, than to start a hare.

North. Of some great exploit Drives him beyond the bounds of patience.

Hot. By heaven, methinks, it were an easy leap, To pinch bright honour from the pale fac'd moon; Or dive into the bottom of the deep, Where fathom-line could never touch the ground, And pluck up drowned honour by this lock; So he, that doth redeem her thence, might wear, Without correction, all her dignities: But out upon this half-fac'd fellowship!

Wor. He apprehends a world of figures here, But not the form of what he should attend— Good cousin, give me audience for a while.

Hot. I cry you mercy.

Those same noble Scots, That are your prisoners—

Hot. I'll keep them all; By heaven, he shall not have a Scot of them: If a Scot would save his soul, he shall not: I'll keep them, by this hand.

Wor. And lend no ear unto my purposes—

Those prisoners you shall keep.

Hot. Nay, I will; that's fair. He said, he would not ransom Mortimer; Forbade my tongue to speak of Mortimer; But I will find him when he lies asleep, And in his ear I'll holla—Mortimer!

Nay. I'll have a startling shall be taught to speak Nothing but Mortimer, and give it him, That keep his anger still in motion.

Hear you, Cousin; a word.

Hot. All studies here I solemnly defy, Studies to gall and pinch this Bolingbroke: And that same word and shift beyond the world of Wiles, But that I think his father loves him not, And would be glad he met with some mishance, I'd have him poison'd with a pot of ale.

Hot. Farewell, kinsman! I will talk to you, When you are better temper'd to attend.

North. Why, what a wasp-stung and impatient fool Art thou! to break into this woman's mood; Tyning thine ear to no tongue but thine own?

Hot. Why, look you, I am whipp'd and scourg'd with rods, Netted, and stung with pismires, when I hear Of this vile politician, Bolingbroke.

In Richard's time,—What do you call the place?— A plague upon it!—It is in Gloucestershire;— 'Tis where the mad-cap duke his uncle kept; His uncle, York;—where I first bow'd my knee Unto this king of smiles, this Bolingbroke, When you and he came back from Ravenspurgh.

North. At Berkley castle.

Hot. Why, what a candy deal of courtesy This fawning greyhound then did proffer me! Look,—when his infatual fortune came to age,

And,—gentle Harry Percy,—and, kind cousin, O, the devil take such cozeners!—God forgive me!

Good uncle, tell your tale, for I have done.

Hot. Nay, if you have not, to't again;— We'll stay your leisure.

Wor. I have done, I'faith.

Hot. Then once more to your Scottish prisoners; Deliv'r them up without their ransom straight, And make the laird's son your only mean For powers in Scotland; which,—for divers rea- sons, Which I shall send you written,—be assur'd, Will easily be granted.—You, my lord,

[To Northumberland.]

Your son in Scotland being thus employ'd,— Shall secretly into the bosom creep Of this noble prelate, well belov'd, The archbishop.

Hot. Of York, is't not?

Wor. True; who bears hard

Hot. Imagination, at Bristol, the lord Scroop. I speak not this in estimation, As what I think might be, but what I know Is ruminated, plotted, and set down;
KING HENRY IV 325

And only stays but to behold the face
Of that occasion that shall bring it on.
Hot. I smell it; upon my life, it will do well.
North. Before the game's a-foot, thou still let's slip.
Hot. Why, it cannot choose but be a noble plot—
And then the power of Scotland, and of York.
To join with Mortimer, ha? And so they shall.
Wor. In faith, it is exceedingly well aim'd.
Wor. And 'tis no little reason bids us speed,
To save our heads by raising of a head:
For, bear ourselves as even as we can,
The king will always think him in our debt;
And think we think ourselves unsatisfied,
Till he hath found a time to pay us home.
And see already, how he doth begin
To make us strangers to his looks of love.
Hot. He does, he does; we'll be reveng'd on him.

For. Cousin, farewell;—No further go in this,
Than I by letters shall direct your course.
When time is ripe, (which will be suddenly,) I'll steal to Glendower, and lord Mortimer;
Where you and Douglas, and our powers at once,
(As I will fashion it,) shall happily meet,
To bear our fortunes in our own strong arms,
Which now we hold at much uncertainty.
North. Farewell, good brother; we shall thrive,
I trust.
Hot. Uncle, adieu:—O, let the hours be short,
Till fields, and blows, and groans applaud our sport!
[Exeunt.]

ACT II.

Enter a Carrier, with a lantern in his hand.

1 Car. Heigh ho! An't be not four by the day,
I'll be hanged: Charles' wain is over the new chimney, and yet our horse not packed. What, ostler?

Out. [Within.] Anon, anon.

1 Car. I pr'ythee, Tom, heat Cut's saddle, put a few flocks in the point; the poor jade is wrung in the withers out of all ease.

Enter another Carrier.

2 Car. Pease and beans are as dank here as a dog, and that is the next way to give poor jades the bots: this house is turned upside down, since Robin ostler died.

1 Car. Poor fellow I never joyed since the price of a rose; it was the death of him.

2 Car. I think, this be the most villainous house in all London road for fles: I am stung like a trench.

1 Car. Like a trench? by the mass, there is never a king in Christendom could be better bit than I have been since the first cock.

2 Car. Why, they will allow us never a Jordan, and then we leak in your chimney; and your own ostler breeds fleas like a loach.

1 Car. What, ostler! I come away, and be hanged, come away.

2 Car. I have a gammon of bacon, and two razzes of ginger, to be delivered as far as Charing-cross.

1 Car. 'Od'sbody! the turkeys in my pannier are quite starved—What, ostler!—A plague on thee! last thou never an eye in thy head? cannot hear? An 'twere not as good a deed as drink, to break the pate of thee, I am a very villain.—Come, and be hanged!—Has not faith in thee?

Enter Gadshill.

Gads. Good morrow, carriers. What's o'clock?

1 Car. I think it be two o'clock.

Gads. I pr'ythee, lend me thy lantern, to see my gelding in the stable.

1 Car. Nay, soft, I pray ye; I know a trick worth two of that. [Exit.

Gads. I pr'ythee, lend me thine.

2 Car. Ay, when? cannot tell?—Lend me thy lantern, quoth a?—marry, I'll see thee hanged first.

Gads. Sirrah carrier, what time do you mean to come to London?

2 Car. Time enough to go to bed with a candle, I warrant thee.—Come, neighbour Mugs, we'll call up the gentlemen: they will along with company, for they have great charge. [Exeunt Carriers.

Gads. What, ho! chamberlain!

Cham. [Within.] At hand, quoth pick-purse.

Gads. That's an as fair a Fat lady: let the chamberlain: for thou variest no more from picking of nurses, than giving direction doth from labours; thou lay'st the plot how.

Enter Chamberlain.

Cham. Good morrow, master Gadshill. It holds current, that I told you yesternight: There's a franklin in the wild of Kent, hath brought three hundred marks with him in gold: I heard him tell it to one of his company, last night at supper; a kind of augury that his abundance of charge too, God knows what. They are up already, and call for eggs and butter: They will away presently.

Gads. Sirrah, if they meet not with saint Nicholas' clerks, I'll give thee this neck.

Cham. No, I'll none of it: I pr'ythee, keep that for the hangman; for, I know, thou worshipst saint Nicholas as truly as a man of falsehood may.

Gads. What talkest thou to me of the hangman? if I hang, I'll make a fat pair of gallowes: for, if I hang, old sir John hangs with me; and, thou knowest, he's as true a man as the old Trojans that thou dreamest not of, the which, for sport sake, are content to do the profession some grace; that would, if matters should be looked into, for their own credit sake, make all whole. I am joined with no foot land-rakers, no long-staff, six-penny strikers; none of these mad, mustachio purple-hued malt-worms; but with nobility, and tranquillity; such as chamberlains, and great oncomers, such as can hold in: such as will strike sooner than speak, and speak sooner than drink, and drink sooner than pray: And I yet lie; for they pray continually to their saint, the commonwealth; or, rather, not for their own on her: for they ride up and down on her, and make her their boots.

Cham. What, the commonwealth their boots? will she hold out water in foul way?

Gads. She will, she will; justice hath liquored her. We steal as in a castle, cock-sure; we have the receipt of fern-seed, we walk invisible.

Cham. Nay, by my faith; I think you are more beholden to the night, than to fern-seed, for your walking invisible.

Gads. Give me thy hand: thou shalt have a share in our purchase, as I am a true man.

Cham. Nay, rather let me have it, as you are a false thief.

Gads. Go to; Homo is a common name to all men. Eft the ostler bring my gelding out of the stable. Farewell, you muddy knave. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Road by Gadshill.

Enter Prince Henry and Poins; Bardolph and Peto, at some distance.

Poins. Come, shelter, shelter; I have removed Falstaff's horse, and he frets like a gummed velvet.

P. Hen. Stand close.
First Part of

Act 2.

Enter Falstaff.

Fal. Where's Poins, Hal? P. Hen. He is walked up to the top of the hill; I'll go seek him. [Pretends to seek Poins.

Fal. Am I accursed to rob in that thief's company? A bath removed from horse, and tied him I know not where. If I travel but four foot by the square further afoot, I shall break my wind. Well, I doubt not but to die a fair death for all this. If I escape that fellow for killing that rogue. I have forsworn his company hourly any time this two-and-twenty years; and yet I am bewitched with the rogue's company. If the rascal have not given me medicines to make me love him, I'll be hanged; it could not be else; I have drunk medicines—Poins!—Hal!—A plague upon you both!—Bardolph!—Peto!—I'll starve, ere I'll rob a foot further. An 'twere not as good a deed as drink, to turn true man, and leave these rogues, I am the veriest variet that ever chewed with a tooth. Eight yards of uneven ground, is threescore and ten miles afoot with me; and the stony-hearted villains know it well enough: A plague upon them, when thieves cannot be true to one another! [They whistle.] Whew!—A plague upon you all! Give me my horse, you rogues; give me my horse, and be hanged.

Fal. I'll carry thee, good prince Hal, help me to my horse, good king's son. P. Hen. Out, you rogue! shall I be your ostler? Fal. Go, hang thyself in thy own heir-apparent garrets! If I be taken, I'll pitch for this. And I have not ballads made on you all, and sung to filthy tunes, let a cup of sack be my poison: When a jest is so forward, and afoot too, I hate it. Enter Gadshill. God. Stand. Fal. So I do, against my will. Poins, O, 'tis our setter! I know his voice. Enter Bardolph. Bar. What news?

Goe. Case ye, case ye, on with your visors; there's money of the king's coming down the hill; 'tis going to the king's exchequer. Fal. You lie, you rogue; 'tis going to the king's tavern.

God. There's enough to make us all.

Fal. To be hanged. P. Hen. Sirs, you four shall front them in the narrow lane; Ned Poins and I will walk lower; if they 'scape from your encounter, then they light on us. Peto. How many be there of them? God. Some eight, or ten. Fal. Shalt they not rob us? P. Hen. What, a coward, sir John Paunch? Fal. Indeed, I am not John of Gaunt, your grandfather: but yet no coward, Hal. P. Hen. Well, we leave that to the sooth. Poins. Sirrah Jack, thy horse stands behind the hedge; when thou need'st him, thou shalt find him. Farewell, and stand fast.

Fal. Now cannot I strike him, if I should be hanged.

Fal. Now, my masters, happy man be his dole, say I; every man to his business.

Enter Travellers. 1 Trav. Come, neighbour; the boy shall lead our horses down the hill: we'll walk afoot awhile, and talk of it. Thieves. Stand. 2 Trav. Jésus bless us! Fal. Strike! down with them; cut the villains' throats, and put their doublet, handkerchief knaves! they hate us youth; down with them; fleece them. 1 Trav. O, we are undone, both we and ours, for want of swords. Fal. Hang ye, gorbelld knaves: Are ye undone? No, ye fat chuffs; I would, your store were here! On, bacon, on! What, ye knaves? young men must live: You are grand-jurors are ye? We'll jure ye, faith. [Exit Fais, &c. driving the Travellers out. Re-enter Prince Henry and Poins.

P. Hen. The thieves have bound the true men: Now could thou and I rob the thieves, and go merrily to London, it would be argument for a week, laughter for a month, and a good jest for ever. Poins. Stand close, I hear them coming.

Re-enter Thieves.

Fal. Come, my masters, let us do so, and then to the aid of the king. An the prince and Poins be not two arrant cowards, there's no equity stirrin': there's no more value in that Poins, than in a wild duck.

P. Hen. Your money. [Rushing out upon them. Poins. Villains. [As they are sharin', the Prince and Poins set upon them. Falstaff, after a blow or two, and the rest, run away, leaving their body behind them. P. Hen. Got with much ease. Now merrily to horse: The thieves are scatter'd, and posses'sd with fear; So strongly, that they dare not meet each other; Each takes his fellow for an officer. Away, good Ned. Falstaff sweats to death, And lards the lean earth as he walks along: We will ease our legging, I should pley him; Poins. How the rogue roard! [Exit.}

Scene III.—Warwick. A Room in the Castle. Enter Hotspur, reading a letter.

—But, for mine own part, my lord, I could be well contented to be there, in respect of the love I bear your house.—He could be contented.—Why is he not then? In respect of the love he bears our house:—he shows in this, he loves his own barn better than he loves our house. Let me see some more. The purpose you undertake, is dangerous:—Why, that's certain; 'tis dangerous to take a cold, to sleep, to drink: but I tell you, my lord, fool, out of this nettle, danger, we pluck this flower, safety. The purpose you undertake, is dangerous: the friends you now are alive in: the house itself, unrestored: and your whole plot too light, for the counterpoise of so great an opposition.—Say you so, say you so? I say unto you again, you are a shallow, cowardly kind, and you lie. What a lack here is this? By the Lord, our plot is a good plot as ever was laid; our friends true and constant: a good plot, good friends, and full of expectation: an excellent plot, very good friends. A frosty-spritied rogue is this? Why, my lord of York comments the plot, and the general course of the action. 'Zounds, an I were now by this rascal, I could brain him with his lady's fan. Is there not my father, my uncle, and myself? lord Edmund Mortimer, my lord of York, and Owen Glendower? Is there not, besides, the Douglas? Have I not all their letters, to meet me in arms by the ninth of the next month?
Enter Lady Percy.

How now, Kate? I must leave you within these two hours.

Lady. O, my good lord, why are you thus alone? For what offence have I, this fortnight, been A banish'd woman from my Harry's bed? Tell me, sweet lord, what 'st that takes from thee Thy stomach, pleasure, and thy golden sleep? Why dost thou bend thine eyes upon the earth; And start so often when thou sit'st alone? Why hast thou lost the fresh blood in thy cheeks; And given my treasures, and my rights of thee, To thick-eyed musing, and curs'd melancholy? In that faint slumber, I by thee have watch'd, And heard thee murmur terms of iron wars; Speak terms of manage to thy bounding steed; Cry, Courage!—to the field!—And thou hast talk'd Of safety, and retir'd; of trenches, tents, Of palisadoes, frontiers, parapets; Of basilisks, of cannon, culverin; Of prisoners' ransom, and of soldiers slain, And all the surru'ring wounds of war. Thy spirit within thee hath been so at war, And thus hath so burt'st thee in thy sleep, That beads of sweat have stood upon thy brow, Like bubbles in a late disturbed stream; And in thy face strange motions have appear'd, Such as we see when men restrain their breath On some great sudden haste. O, what portents are these!

Some heavy business hath my lord in hand, And I must know it, else he loves me not.

Hot. What, ho! is Williams with the packet gone?

Enter Servant.

Serv. He is, my lord, an hour ago.

Hot. Hath Butler brought those horses from the stables?

Serv. Yes, my lord, he brought even now.

Hot. What horse? a roan, a crop-ear, is it not?

Serv. It is, my lord.

Hot. What horse? That roan shall be my throne.

When I will back him, and bid him O experience! Bid Butler lead him forth into the park.

[Exit Servant.

Lady. But hear you, my lord.

Hot. What say'st, my lady?

Lady. What is it carries you away?

Hot. My horse, my love, my horse.

Lady. Out, you mad-headed ape! A weas'rd want not such a deal of spleen, As you are toss'd with. In faith, I'll know your business, Harry, that I will. I fear, my brother Mortimer doth sit, About this title; and hath sent for you, To line his enterprise. But if you go...

Hot. So far aloof, I shall be weary, love.

Lady. Come, come, you parquisto, answer me Direly, to this question that I ask. In faith, I'd break thy little finger, Harry, If thou wilt not tell me all things true.

Hot. Away, away, you trifler!—Love!—I love thee not, I care not for thee, Kate: this is no world, To play with mamments, and to tilt with lips: We must have bloody noses, and crack'd crowns, And so 'tis halcyon an action! Hang him! Let him tell the king: We are prepared: I will set forward to-night.

SCENE IV.—Eastcheap. A Room in the Boar's Head Tavern.

Enter Prince Henry and Poins.

P. Hen. Ned, pr'ythee, come out of that fast room, and lend me thy hand to laugh a little.

Poins. Where hast been, Hal?

P. Hen. With three or four of the lads, amongst three or four score hogheads, I have sounded the very base string of humility. Sirrah, I am sworn brother to a leach of drawers; and can call them all by their christian names, as—Tom, Dick, and Francis. They take it already upon their salvation, that, though I be but prince of Wales, yet I am the king of courtesy; and tell me flatly I am no proud Jack, like Falstaff; but a Corinthian, a lad of mettle, a good boy—by the Lord, so they call me; and I am king of England, I shall command all the good lads in Eastcheap. They call—drinking deep, dying scarlet: and when you breathe in your watering, they cry—hem! and bid you play it off....To conclude, I am so good a proficient in one quarter of an hour, that I can drink with any tinker in his own language during my life. I tell thee, Ned, thou hast lost much honour, that thou wert not with me in this action. But, sweet Ned,—to sweeten which name of Ned, I give thee this pennypo't of sugar, clapped even now into my hand by an under-skinker; one that never spake other English in his life, than—Eight shillings and sixpence, and—You are welcome, with this shilll addition,—Anon, anon, sir! Score a pint of bastard in the Half-moon; or so. But, Ned, to drive away the time till Falstaff come, I pr'ythee, do thou stand in some by-room, while I question my puny drawer to what end he gave me the sugar; and do thou never leave calling—Francis, that his tale to me may be nothing but—anon. Step aside, and I'll show thee a precedent.

Poins. Francis!

P. Hen. Thou art perfect.

Poins. Francis!

[Exit Poins.

Enter Francis.

Frn. Anon, anon, sir.—Look down into the pomegranate, Ralph.

P. Hen. Come hither, Francis.

Frn. My lord.

P. Hen. How long hast thou to serve, Francis?

Frn. Forsooth, five year, and as much as to—

P. Hen. [Within.] Francis!

Frn. Anon, anon, sir.

P. Hen. Five years! By'rdiad, a long lease for the clinking of my master. But, Francis, dares thou be so valiant, as to play the coward with thy indeniture, and to shew it a fair pair of heels, and run from it?
P. Hen. Didst thou never see Titan kiss a dish of butter? pitiful-hearted Titan, that melted at the sweet tale of the son if thou didst, then behold that compound.

Fal. You rogue, here's lime in this sack too; There is nothing but regurgity to be found in villainous man: Yet a coward is worse than a cup of sack with lime in it; a villainous coward.—(to thy ways, old Jack; die when thou wilt, if manhood, go and manhood, ye, not forget upon your feet out of the earth, then am I a shotten herring. There live not three good men unhanged in England; and one of them is fat, and grows old: God help the worse.—I say I would I were a weaver; I could sing psalms or any thing: A plague of all cowards, I say still.

P. Hen. How now, wool-sack? what matter you?

Fal. A king's son! If I do not beat thee out of thy kingdom with a dagger of lath, and drive all thy subjects afore thee like a flock of wild geese, I never wear hair on my face more. You prince of Wales.

P. Hen. Why, you whoreson round man! what's the matter?

Fal. Are you not a coward? answer me to that; and answer me, I say, to that.

P. Hen. Away, you rogue; dost thou not hear them call?

Fal. I come, I come.

P. Hen. What! stand'st thou still, and hear'st such a calling? Look to the guests within. [Exit P. Hen.] My lord, old sir John, with half a dozen more, are at the door; Shall I let them in?

P. Hen. Let them alone a while; and then open the door. [Exit Vintner.] Points!

Re-enter Poins.

Poins. Point, anon, anon, sir.

P. Hen. Sirrah, Falstaff, and the rest of the thieves are at the door; Shall we be merry?

Poins. As merry as cricket's, my lad. But hark ye; What cunning match have you made with this host? your lines, the issue.

P. Hen. I am now of all humours, that have showed themselves humours, since the old days of Goodman Adam, to the pupil age of this present thing. [Re-enter Francis, with wine.] What's o'clock, Francis? P. Hen. Anon, anon, sir.

P. Hen. That ever this fellow should have fewer words than a parrot, and yet the son of a woman!—His industry is—up-stairs, and down-stairs; his eloquence, the parcel of a reckoning. I am not yet of Percy's mind, the Hotspur of the north; he that kills me some six or seven dozen of Scots at a breakfast, washes his hands, and says to his wife, Eye upon this quiet life! I want work. O my sweet Harry, says she, how many hast thou killed to-day? Give me your horse a drench, says he; and answers, Suppose I take an hour after; a triffle, a triffle, a verytrife, call in Falstaff: I'll play Percy, and that damned brawn shall play dame Mortimer his wife. Rino, says the drunkard. Call in ribs, call in tallow.

Enter Falstaff, Gadshill, Bardolph, and Poins.

Poins. Welcome, Jack. Where hast thou been?

Fal. A plague of all questions, Jack; I say, and a very plague of them too, and amen!—Give me a cup of sack, boy.—Ere I lead this life long, I'll sew neither-stocks, and mend them, and foot them too. A plague of all cowards!—Give me a cup of sack, rogue.—Is there no virtue extant? [He drinks.]
and thus I bore my point. Four rogues in buckram led me at that rate.

P. Hen. What? four? thou saidst but two, even now.

Fal. Four, Hal; I told thee four.

P. Hen. Ay, and four.

Fal. These four came all a-front, and mainly thrust at me. I made me no more ado, but took all their seven points in my target, thus.

P. Hen. Seven? why, there were but four, even now.

P. Hen. Seven, by these hits, or I am a villain else.

Fal. P'rythee, let him alone; we shall have more anon.

Fal. Dost thou hear me, Hal?

P. Hen. Ay, and mark thee too, Jack.

Fal. Do so, for it is worth the listening to. These nine in buckram, that I told thee of.

P. Hen. So, two more already.

Fal. Their points being broken,

Points. Down fell their hose.

Fal. Began to give me ground; But I followed me close, came in foot and hand; and, with a thought, seven of the eleven I paid.

P. Hen. O monstrous! eleven buckram men grown out of two!

Fal. But, as the devil would have it, three misbegotten knaves, in Kendal green, came at my back, and let drive at me;—for it was so dark, Hal, that I could not see thy hand. P. Hen. These lies are like the father that begats them; gross as a mountain, open, palpable. Why, thou clay-brained guts; thou knotty-pated fool: thou whoreson, obscene, greezy tallow-keech.

Fal. What, art thou mad? art thou mad? is not the truth, the truth?

P. Hen. Why, couldst thou know these men in Kendal green, when it was so dark thou couldst not see thy hand, come, tell us thy reason; What sayest thou to this?

Points. Come, your reason, Jack, your reason.

Fal. What, upon compulsion? No; were I at the strappado, or all the racks in the world, I would not tell you on compulsion. Give you a reason on compulsion! if reasons were as plenty as blackberries, I would give no man a reason upon compulsion.

P. Hen. I'll be no longer guilty of this sin; this sanguine coward, this bed-presser, this horse-back broken. Fie, thou villain, thou villain, thou villain, thou villain.

Fal. Away, you starveling, you elf-skin, you dried neat's-tongue, bull's pizzle, you stock-fish,—O, for breath to utter what is like thee!—you tailor's yard, you sheath, you bow-case, you vile standing tuck;—

P. Hen. Well, breathe awhile, and then to it again; and when thou hast tired thyself in base comparisons, hear me speak but this.

Points. Mark, Jack.

Fal. We two saw you four set on four; you bound them, and were masters of their wealth.

Mark now, how plain a tale shall you put down. These two were on you four: and, with a word, out-faced you from your price, and have it; yea, and can show it you here in the house:—and, Falstaff, you carried your guts away as nimble, with a kind of roared, and, in a word, still ran and roared, as ever I heard bul-bluff. What a slave art thou, to hack thy sword as thou hast done; and then say, it was in fight! What true knight in arms, what starting-horse, cans thou now find out, to hide thee from this open and apparent shame?

Points. Come, let's hear, Jack; What trick hast thou now, Jack?

Fal. By the Lord, I knew ye, as well as he that made ye. Why, hear ye, my masters: Was it for me, to kill the heir apparent? Should I turn upon the true prince? Why, thou knowest, I am as valiant as Hercules: but beware instinct; the lion will not touch the true prince. Instinct is a great matter, I was a coward on instinct. I shall think the better of myself, and thee, during my life; I, for a valiant lion, and thou, for a true prince. But, by the Lord, Iads, I am glad you have the money. Hostess, clap to the doors; watch to-night, pray to-morrow. Gallants, lords, boys, hearts of gold, all the titles of good fellowship come to you! What, shall we be merry? shall we have a play extempore?

P. Hen. Content; and the argument shall be, thy running away.

Fal. Ah! no more of that, Hal, an thou loveth me.

Enter Hostess.

Host. My lord the prince.

Fal. P. Hen. How now, my lady the hostess? what sayst thou to me?

Host. Marry, my lord, there is a nobleman of the court at door, would speak with you: he says, he comes from your father.

P. Hen. Give him as much as will make him a royal man, and send him back again to my mother.

Fal. What manner of man is he?

Host. And say.

Fal. What doth gravity out of his bed at midnight?—shall I give him his answer?

P. Hen. Pr'ythee, do, Jack.

Fal. Faith, and I'll send him packing. [Exit.]

P. Hen. Faith, our letters are not fought fair;—so did you, Petos;—so did you, Bardolph; you are lions too, you ran away upon instinct, you will not touch the true prince; no,—fye!

Bard. 'Faith, I ran when I saw others run.

P. Hen. Tell me now in earnest, How came Falstaff's sword so hacked?

Peto. Why, he hacked it with his dagger; and said he would swear truth out of England, but he would make you believe it was done in fight; and persuaded us to do the like.

Bard. Yes, and to tickle our noses with spear-grass, to make them bleed; and then to beslubber our garments with it, and to swear it was the blood of true men. I did that I did not this seven years before, I blushed to hear his monstrous devices.

P. Hen. O villain, thou stol'st a cup of sack off eighteen year ago, and was taken with the manner, and ever since thou hast blush'd extempore: Thou hadst fire and sword on thy side, and yet thou ranst away; What instinct hadst thou for it?

Bard. Nay, Jack, do you see these meteors? do you behold these exhalations?

P. Hen. I do.

Bard. Choler, my lord, if rightly taken.

P. Hen. No, if rightly taken, halter.

Re-enter Falstaff.

Here comes lean Jack, here comes bare-bone. How now, my sweet creature of combustion? How long 'st ago, Jack, since thou sawest thine own knee?

Fal. My own knee? when I was about thy years, Hal, I was not an eagle's talon in the waist; I could have cleft into any alderman's thumb-ring: A plague of sighing and grief! it biows a man up, and makes him like a bladder, and overroasted for mercy, and, over such a man;—here was Sir John Iracy from your father; you must to the court in the morning. That same mad fellow of the North, Percy; and he of Wales, that has grave Almondbury, and, made Lucifer, cuckold, and swore the devil his true liegeman upon the cross of a Welsh hook,—What, a plague, call you him?—

Points. O, Glendower.

Fal. Owen, Owen; the same;—and his son-in-law, Mortimer; and old Northumberland; and that sprightly Scot of Scots, Douglas, that runs o'horseback up a hill perpendicular.
Act 2.

P. Hen. If he that rides at high speed, and with his pistol kills a sparrow flying.

Fal. You have hit it.

P. Hen. So did he never the sparrow.

Fal. Well, that rascal hath good mettle in him: he will not run.

P. Hen. Why, what a rascal art thou then, to praise him so for running.

Fal. O'horseback, ye cuckow! but, afoot, he will not budge a foot.

P. Hen. Ye are a buck, upon instinct.

Fal. I grant ye, upon instinct. Well, he is there too, and one Mordake, and a thousand blue-caps more: Worcester is stolen away to-night; thy father's been brought a term by-white with the news; you may buy land now as cheap as stinking mackerel.

P. Hen. Why then, 'tis like, if there come a hot June, and this civil buffeting hold, we shall buy maineheads as they buy hob-nails, by the hundred.

Fal. By the mass, lad, thou sayest true; it is like, we shall have good trading that way.—But, tell me, Ishal, art thou not horribly afraid; thou being heir apparent, couldst the world pick thee out three such enemies again, as that fiend Dongles, that spirit Percy, and that devil Glendower? Art thou not horribly afraid? do not thy blood thrill at it?

P. Hen. Not a whit, 'tis faith; I lack some of thy instinct.

Fal. Well, thou wilt be horribly child to-morrow, when thou comest to thy father: if thou love me, practice with me.

P. Hen. Do thou stand for my father, and examine me upon the particulars of my life.

Fal. Shall I? content:—This chair shall be my dagger, this scepter my sword, and this cushion my crown.

P. Hen. Thy state is taken for a joint-stool, thy golden scepter for a wooden dagger, and thy precipice for a spirit board. Hence, old hag, for all my behavior.

Fal. Well, an the fire of grace be not quite out of thee, now shalt thou be moved.—Give me a cup of sack, to make mine eyes look red, that it may be thought I have wept; for I must speak in passion, and I will do it in King Cambyses' vein.

P. Hen. Well, here is my leg.

Fal. And here is my speech:—Stand aside, nobility.

Host. This is excellent sport, 'tis faith.

Wal. Neep not, sweet queen, for trickling tears are vain.

Host. O, the father, how he holds his countenance!

Fal. For God's sake, lords, convey mytraitful queen.

Fearear do stop the flood-gates of her eyes.

Host. O rare! be doth it as like one of these harlots, players, as I ever see.

Fal. Peace, good pint-pot: peace, good tickle-brain.—Harry, I do not only marvel where thou spendest thy time, but also how thou art accompanied: for though the camomile, the more it is trodden on, the faster it grows; yet youth, the more it is wasted, the sooner it wears. That thou art my son, I have prayed on thy mother's word, parricide of my own: but chiefly, a villainous trick of thine eye, and a foolish hanging of thy nether lip, that doth warrant me. If then thou be son to me, here lies the point:—Why, being son to me, art thou so pale? Art thou a vapor?—I have seen the blood of men, when they have been too much, and eat blackberries? a question not to be asked. Here lies the son of England prove a thief, and take purses? a question to be asked thyself. Harry, which thou hast often heard of, and it is known to many in our land by the name of pitch: this pitch, as ancient writers do report, doth defile; so doth the company. He who keepeth for Harry, Harry, now do I speak to thee in drink, but in tears; not in pleasure, but in passion; not in words only, but in woes also:—And yet there is a virtuous man, whom I have often noted in thy company, but I know not his name.

P. Hen. What manner of man, an it like your majesty?

Fal. A good portly man, I faith, and a corpulent; of a cheerful look, a pleasing eye, and a most noble humours, I mean, as I think, against the fifty, or, by"t'lay, inclining to threescore; and now I remember me, his name is Falstaff: if that man should be clearly given, he deceiteth me; for, I say, Harry, he hungs in his looks. If then the tree may be known by the fruit, as the fruits by the tree, then, peremptorily I speak it, there is virtue in that Falstaff: he keep will, the rest banish. And to them all, this man, a nifty varlet, tell me, when that he hath been this month.

P. Hen. Dost thou speak like a king? Do thou stand for me, and I'll play my father.

Fal. Depose me? if thou dost it half so gravely, so majestically, both in word and matter, hang me up by the heels for a rabbit-sucker, or a poultier's hare.

P. Hen. Well, here I am set.

Fal. And here I stand.—Judge, my masters.

P. Hen. Now, Harry? whence come you?

Fal. My noble lord, from Eastcheap.

P. Hen. The complaints I hear of thee are notorious.

Fal. 'Sblood, my lord, they are false—I may, I tickle ye for a young prince, I faith.

P. Hen. Swearest thou, ungracious boy? henceforth me'er on look. Thou art violently carried away, and there is a dish that tempteth thee, in the likeness of a fat old man: a tun of man is thy companion. Why dost thou converse with that trunck of humours, that boiling-hutch of bestiality, that swarm parcel of dropsy, that huge bombard of sack, that stuffed cock-bag of guts, that roasted Manningtree ox with the pudding in his belly, that reverend vice, that grey iniquity, that old and fat Falstaff? Wherein is he good, but to taste sack and drink it? wherein neat and cleanly, but to care a capon and eat it? wherein cunning, but in craft? wherein crafty, but in villainy? Wherein is he virtuous, but in all things? wherein worthy, but in nothing?

Fal. I would, your grace would take me with you: Whom means your grace?

P. Hen. That villainous abominable misleader of youth, that old white-bearded Satan.

Fal. My lord, the man I know.

P. Hen. I know, thou dost.

Fal. But to say, I know more harm in him than in myself, I do say more than I know. That he is old, (the more the pity,) his white hairs do witness it: but that he is (saving your reverence,) a whoremaster, that I utterly deny. If sack and sugar be a fault, God help the wicked! if to be old and merry be a sin, then many an old host that I know, is damned; if to be fat be to be hated, then Pharaoh's lean kine are to be loved. No, my good lord; banish Peto, banish Bardolph, banish Poins; but for sweet Jack Falstaff, kind Jack Falstaff, true Jack Falstaff, valiant Jack Falstaff, and therefore more valiant, being as he is, old Jack Falstaff, banish not him thy Harry's company, banish not him thy Harry's company; banish plump Jack, and banish all the world.

P. Hen. I do, I will.

[Exit Hostess, Francis, and Bardolph.

Re-enter Bardolph, running.

Bard. O, my lord, my lord; the sheriff, with a most monstrous watch, is at the door.

Fal. Out, you rogue! play out the play: I have much to say in the behalf of that Falstaff.

Re-enter Hostess, hastily.

Host. O Jesu, my lord, my lord!

Fal. Heigh, heigh! the devil rides upon a fiddlesstick: What is the matter?
KING HENRY IV.

Act 3.

Enter Sheriff and Carrier.

Now, master sheriff: what's your will with me? Sher. First, pardon me, my lord. A hue and cry Hath follow'd certain men unto this house. P. Hen. What men? Sher. One of them is well known, my gracious Lord; A gross fat man. [lord; Car. As fat as butter. P. Hen. The man, I do assure you, is not here; For I myself at this time have employ'd him. And, sheriff, I will engage my word to thee, That I will, by to-morrow dinner-time, Send him to answer thee, or any man, For any thing he shall be charg'd withal: And so let me entreat you to save the house. Sher. I will, my lord: There are two gentlemen Have in this robbery lost three hundred marks. P. Hen. It may be so: if he have robb'd these He shall be answerable; and so, farewell. Sher. Good night, my noble lord. P. Hen. I think it is good morrow; Is it not? Sher. Indeed, my lord, I think it be two o'clock. [Exit Sheriff and Carrier. P. Hen. This icky rascal is known as well as Paul's. Go, call him forth. Poins. Fairfall!—fast asleep behind the arras, And snorting like a horse. P. Hen. Hark, how hard he frets breath: Search his pockets. [Poins searches.] What hast thou found? Poins. Nothing but papers, my lord. P. Hen. Let's see what they be; read them. Poins. Item, A capon, 2s. 2d. Item, Sauce, 4d. Item, Sack, two gallons, 5s. 6d. Item, Anchovies, and sack after supper, 2s. 6d. Item, Bread, a halfpenny. P. Hen. O monstrous! but one half-pennyworth of bread to this intolerable demij of sack!—What there is else, keep close: we'll read it at more advantage: there let him sleep till day. I'll to the court in the morning: we must all to the wars, and this place shall be honourable. I'll procure this fat rogue a charge of foot; and, I know, his death will be a march of twelve-score. The money shall be paid back again with advantage. Be with me betimes in the morning; and so good morrow, Poins. Poins. Good morrow, good my lord. [Exit.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Bangor. A Room in the Archdeacon's House.

Enter Hotspur, Worcester, Mortimer, and Glendower.

Mort. These promises are fair, the parties sure, And our induction full of prosperous hope.

Hot. Lord Mortimer, and cousin Glendower,— Will you sit down?

Hot. And, uncle Worcester:—A plague upon it! I have forgot the map.

Glen. No, here's the map! Sit, cousin Percy; sit, good cousin Hotspur: For by that name as oft as Lancaster Both speak of you, his cheek looks pale, and, with A rising sigh, he wisheth you in heaven.

Hot. And you too, in hell, if often as he hears Owen Glendower spoke of.

Glen. I cannot blame him: at my nativity, The front of heaven was full of fiery shapes, Of burning cressets; and, at my birth, The frame and huge foundation of the earth Shad like a coward.

Hot. Why, so it would have done At the same season, if your mother's cat had But kitten'd, though yourself had never been born.

Glen. I say, the earth did shake when I was born.

Hot. And I say, the earth was not of my mind, If you suppose, as fearing you it shook.

Glen. The heavens were all on fire, the earth did tremble.

Hot. O, then the earth shook to see the heavens on fire.

And not in fear of your nativity.

Diseased nature oftentimes breaks forth In strange eruptions: oft the teeming earth Is with a kind of choleick pinch'd and vex'd By the imprisoning of untidy wind Within her womb; which, for enlargement striving, Shakes the old beitame earth, and topples down Steeples, and moss-grown towers. At your birth, Our grandam earth, having this distemper, In passion shook.

Glen. Cousin, of many men I do not hear these cursings. Give me leave To tell you once again,—that at my birth, The front of heaven was full of fiery shapes; The goats ran from the mountains, and the herds Were strangely clamorous in the frighted fields These signs have mark'd me extraordinary; And all the courses of my life do show, I am not in the roll of common men. Where is he living—clipp'd in with the sea That clidles the banks of England, Scotland, Wales, Which calls me pupil, or hath read to me? And bring him out, that is but woman's son, Can trace me me in the tedious ways of art, And hold me pace in deep experiments. Hot. I think, there is no man speaks better I will to dinner. [Welch!—— Mort. Peace, cousin Percy: you will make him mad. Glen. I can call spirits from the vasty deep. Hot. Why, so can I; or so can any man: But will they come, when you do call for them? Glen. Why, I can teach thee, cousin, to comm In the devil. [mand Hot. And I can teach thee, coz, to shame the devil. By telling truth; Tell truth, and shame the devil. If thou have power to raise him, bring him hither, And I'll be sworn, I have power to shame him hence. O, while you live, tell truth, and shame the devil. Mort. Come, come, No more of this unprofitable chat. Glen. Three times hath Henry Bolingbroke made this against my power: thrice from the banks of Wye, And sandy-bottom'd Severn, have I sent him, Bootless home, and weather-beaten back. Hot. Home without boots, and in foul weather too! How 'scapes he agues, in the devil's name? Glen. Come, here's the map; Shall we divide According to our threefold order then? [Your right,
Mort. The archdeacon hath divided it
Into three limits, very equally:
England, from Trent and Severn hither,
By south and east, is to my part assign'd:
All westward, Wales beyond the severn shore,
And all the fertile land within that bound,
To Owen Glendower:— and, dear cousin,
The remnant northward, lying off from Trent.
And our indentures tripartite are drawn:
Which being sealed interchangeably,
(I mean that this night shall be executed,)—
To-morrow, cousin Percy, you, and I,
And my good lord of Worcester, will set forth,
To meet your father, and the Scottish power,
As it is ordered, at Shrewsbury.
My father Glendower is not ready yet,
Nor shall we need his help these fourteen days:
Within that space, [to Glend.] you may have drawn together
Your tenants, friends, and neighbouring gentlemen.
Glend. A shorter time shall send me to you, lords,
And in my conduct shall your ladies come:
From whom you now must steal, and take no
leave:
For there will be a world of water shed,
Upon the parting of your wives and you.
Hot. Methinks, my moity, north from Burton do.
here,
In quantity equals not one of yours:
See how this river comes me cranking in,
And sweeps the middle from the best of all my land,
A huge half-moon, a monstrous castle out.
I'll have the current in this place damn'd up;
And here the yelling and silver Trent shall run,
In a new channel, fair and even:
And then I'll not waste water with such a deep indent,
To rob me of so rich a bottom here.
Glend. Not wind? It shall, it must; you see, it both.
Mort. Yes, but mark how he bears his course, and runs me up
With like advantage on the other side;
Gilding the opposed continent as much,
As on the other side it takes from you.
War. Yes, but a little charge will trench him
here,
And on this north side win this cape of land;
And then he runs straight and even.
Hot. I'll have it so: a little charge will do it.
Glend. I will not have it alter'd.
Hot. Will not you?
Glend. No, nor you shall not.
Hot. Why, that will I.
Let me not understand you then,
Says Glendower in Welsh.
Glend. I can speak English, lord, as well as you:
For I was train'd up in the English court:
Where, being but young, I framed to the harp
Many an English ditty, lovely well,
And gave the tongue a helpful ornament;
A virtue that was never seen in you.
Hot. Marry, and I am glad of it with all my heart.
I had rather be a kitten and cry—new,
Than one of these same metre ballad-mongers:
I had rather hear a brazen canstick turn'd,
Th' a dry wheel grate on an axle-tree;
And that would set my teeth a-gritting on edge,
Nothing so much as misciting poetry;
'Tis like the for'c'd gait of a shuffling nag.
Glend. Come, you shall have Trent turn'd.
Hot. I do not care: I'll give threeso much lend
To any well-deserving friend:
But, in the way of bargain, mark ye me,
I'll cavil on the ninth part of a hair.
Are the like kimono's and th' like stuffs shall we be gone?
Glend. The moon shines fair, you may away by night:
I'll haste the writer, and, withal,
Break with your wives of your departure hence:
I am afraid, my daughter will run mad,
So much she doth on her Master's mammon.
[Exit Mort.
Mort. Fye, cousin Percy! how can you cross my father!
Hot. I cannot choose: sometimes he angers me,
With telling me of some of the mold-arp and the ant,
Of the dreamer Merlin, and his prophecies;
And of a dragon and a finless fish,
A chipp-wing'd griffin, and a moulen raven,
A couning lion, and a ramping cat,
And such a deal of skil'mable skimmable stuff
As puts me from my faith. I tell you what,
He held me, but last night, at least nine hours,
To recriminating all the several devil's names,
That was his basons' lackey: I cried, hump, and—well,—go to,—
But mark'd him not a word. O, he's as tedious
As is a tired horse, a ralling wife;
Worse than a smoky house— I had rather five
With cheese and garlic, in a windmill, far,
Than feed on cates, and have him talk to me,
In any summer-house in Christendom.
Hot. In faith, he is a worthy gentleman;
Exceedingly well tead, and profited
In strange concealing's; valiant as a lion,
And wand'rous affable; and as bannifiable
As any man on earth. Shall I tell you, cousin?
He holds your temper in a high respect,
And curbeth himself even of his natural scope,
When you do cross his humour: faith, he does.
I say to you, that man is not alive,
That you must not have tempted him as you have done,
Without the taste of danger and reproof;
But do not use it off, let me entreat you.
War. In faith, my lord, you are too wilful
And since your coming hither, have done enough
To put him quite beside his patience.
You must needs learn, lord, to amend this fault:
Though sometimes it show greatness, courage,
blood,
(And that's the dearest grace it renders you.)
Yet oftentimes it doth present harsh rage,
Deserve the punishment of government,
Pride, haughtiness, opinion, and disdain:
The least of which, hantting a noblemen,
Loseth men's hearts; and leaves behind a stain
That never beauty of all parts be tires,
Beguiling them of commendation.
Hot. Well, I am schoold; good manners be your speed!
Here come our wives, and let us take our leave.
Re-enter Glendower, with the Ladies.
Mort. This is the deadly spite that angels me,
May with no English, I no Welsh.
Glend. My daughter weeps; she will not part with you,
'Shel'll be a soldier too, she'll to the wars.
Mort. Good father, tell her,—that she, and my aunt Percy,
Shall follow in your conduct speedily.
[Glendower speaks to his daughter in Welsh, and she answers him in the same.
Glend. She's desperate here; a peevish self-will'd harlotry,
One no persuasion can do good apon.
[Lady M. speaks to Mortimer in Welsh.
Mort. I understand sth. and thy looks: sth. pretty Welsh,
Which thou pourest down from these swelling heavens,
I am too perfect in: and, but for shame,
In such a parley I would have.
Lady M. speaks.
I understand thy kisses, and thou mine,
And that's a feeling disputation:
But I will never be a truant, love,
Tell I have learn'd thy language, for thy tongue
Makes Welsh as sweet as ditties highly pen'd,
Sung by a fair queen in a summer's bow'r,
With ravishing division, to her lute.
Gland. Nay, if you melt, then will she run mad. [Lady M. speaks again.]

Mort. O, I am ignorance itself in this.

Gland. She bids you

Upon the wanton rushes lay you down,
And rest your gentle head upon her lap,
And she will sing the song that pleaseth you,
And it is done, with all wondrous speed.
Charming your blood with pleasing heaviness;
Making such difference 'twixt wake and sleep,
As is the difference betwixt day and night,
The hour before the heavenly-harnessed team
Begins his golden progress in the east.

Mort. With all my heart I'll sit, and hear her sing:
By that old still our book, I think, be drawn.

Gland. Do so;
And those musicians that shall play to you,
Hang in the air a thousand leagues from hence;
Yet straight they shall be here: sit, and attend.

Hot. Come, Kate, thou art perfect in lying down:
Come, quick, quick; that I may lay my head in thy lap.

Lady P. Go, ye giddy goose.

Glandower speaks some Welsh words, and then the Music play'd.

Hot. Now I perceive, the devil understands Welsh;
And 'tis no marvel, he's so humorous.

By'r Lady, he's a good musician.

Lady P. Then should you be nothing but musical;
As you are altogether governed by humours,
Lie still, ye thief, and hear the lady sing in Welsh.

Hot. I had rather hear Lady, my brach, how in Irish.

Lady P. Would'st thou have thy head broken?

Hot. No.

Lady P. Then be still.

Hot. Neither; 'tis a woman's fault.

Lady P. Now God help thee! [Exeunt.

Hot. To the Welsh lady's bed.

Lady P. What's that?

Hot. Peace! she sings.

A Welsh Song, sung by Lady M.

Hot. Come, Kate, I'll have your song too.

Lady P. Not mine, in good sooth.

Hot. Not yours, in sooth and all: 'Heart, you swear on a cromit-maker's heart; Not you, in good sooth; and, as true as I live; and, As God shall mende me; and, as sure as day: And give'st such sacrest surety for thy oaths, As thou never walkest further than Painsbury.

Swear me, Kate, like a lady, as thou art,
A good mouth-filling oath; and leave in sooth,
And such protest of pepper-gingerbread,'
To velvet-guards, and Sunday-citizens.

Come, sing.

Lady P. I will not sing.

Hot. 'Tis the next way to turn tailor, or be red-breast teacher. An the indentures be drawn, I'll away within these two hours; and so come in when ye will. [Exit.

Gland. Come, come, lord Mortimer; you are as slow.

As hot as Percy is on fire to go.
By this our book's drawn; we'll but seal, and then
To horse immediately.

Mort. With all my heart.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—London.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter King Henry, Prince of Wales, and Lords.

K. Hen. Lords, give us leave; the Prince of Wales and I Must have some conference: But be near at hand, For we shall presently have need of you.—

[Exeunt Lords.

I know not whether God will have it so.
For some displeasing service I have done,
That, in his secret doom, out of my blood
He'll breed revengement and a scourge for me;
But thou dost, in thy passages of life,
Make me believe,—that thou dost by mark't
For the hot vengeance and the rod of heaven,
To punish my mis-treadings. Tell me else,
Could such inordinate, and low desires,
Such poor, such bare, such lewd, such mean attempts
Such barren pleasures, rude society,
As thou art match'd with, and granted to,
Accompany the greatness of thy blood,
And hold their level with thy princely heart?

P. Hen. So please your majesty, I would, I could Quit all offences with as clear excuse,
As well as I, I am doubtless, I can purge
Myself of most of what I have and shal;
Yet such extenuation let me beg,
As, in reproof of many tales devil'd,
Which oft the ear of greatness needs must hear,—
By smiling pick-thanks and base newsmongers,
I may, for some things true, wherein my youth
Hath fanty wander'd and irregular,
Find pardon on my true submission.

K. Hen. God pardon thee!—yet let me wonder,
Harry,
At thy affections, which do hold a wing
Quite from the flight of all thy ancestors.
Thy place in council thou hast rudest lost,
Which by thy younger brother is supplied;
And art almost an alien to the hearts
Of all the court and princes of my blood:
The hope and expectation of thy time
Is ruin'd; and the soul of every age
Prophetically does forethink thy fall.
Had I so lavish of my presence been,
So common-hackney'd in the eyes of men,
So stale and cheap to vulgar company;
Opinion, that did help me to the crown,
Had still kept loyal to possession;
And left me in reputable banishment,
A fellow of no mark, nor likelihood.
By being seldom seen, I could not stir;
But, like a comet, I was wonder'd at:
That men would tell their children, This is he:
Others would say,—Where? which is Bollingbroke?
And then I stole all courtesy from heaven,
And dress'd myself in such humility,
That I did pluck allegiance from men's hearts,
Loud shouts and salutations from their mouths,
Even in the presence of the crowned king.
Thus did I keep my person fresh, and new:
My presence, like a rope pontifical,
Ne'er seen, but wonder'd at: and so my state,
Seldom, but sumptuous, showed like a feast;
And won, by rareness, such solace.
The skipping king, he ambled up and down
With shallow jesters, and rash bavish wits,
Soon kindled, and soon burn'd: carded his state;
Mingled his royalty with capering fools;
Had his great name profaned with their scorns;
And gave his countenance, against his name,
To laugh at gibing boys, and stand the push
Of every heedless vain comparative;
Grew a companion to the common streets,
Enfeoff'd himself to popularity:
That being daily swallow'd by men's eyes,
They surfeited with honour; and began
To loathe the taste of sweetness, whereof a little More than a little is by much too much.
So, when he had occasion to be seen,
He was but as the Huntsman in Juvenal:
Heard, not regarded; seen, but with such eyes,
As, sick and blunted with community,
Afford no extraordinary gare,
Such as is bent on such majesty
When it shines seldom in admiring eyes:
But rather drowz'd, and hung their eye-lids down,
Slept in his face, and render'd such aspect
As cloudy men use to their adversaries;
Being with his presence glitter'd out, and full.
And in that very line, Harry, stand'st thou:
For thou hast lost thy princely privilege,
With vile participation; not an eye
But a -weary of this common sight,
Save mine, which hath duet'd to see thee more;
Which now dost that I would not have it do,
Make blind itself with foolish tenderness.

P. Hen. I shall hereafter, my thrice-gracious lord,
Be more myself.

K. Hen. For all the world,
And all this bitter to this hour, was reaped then
When I from France set foot at Havernapurg:
And even as I was then, is Percy now
Now by my sceptre, and my soul to boot,
He hath more worthy interest to the state,
Than those, the shadow of succession.
For, of no right, nor colour like to right;
He doth fill fields with harness in the realm:
Turns head against the lion's armed jaws;
And, being in no more in debt to years than thou,
Leads ancient lords and reverent bishops on,
To bloody battles, and to braining arms.
What never-dying honour hath he got Against renowned Douglas; whose high deeds,
Whose hot insurrections, and great name in arms,
Hold's all soldiers chief majority,
And military title capital,
Throughout all the kingdoms that acknowledge Christ?
Thrice hath this Hotspur Mars in sweating clothes,
This infant warrior in his enterprises
Dishonour'd great Douglas; 'tis no once
Enlarged himself; and made a friend of him,
To fill the mouth of deep defance upon,
And to shake the peace and safety of our throne.
And what say you to this? Percy, Northumberland,
The Prince of York's sons, Mortimer,
Capitulate against us, and are up.

But wherefore do I tell these news to thee?
Why, Harry, do I tell thee of my woes,
What is your name and descent?
Thou that art like enough,—through vassal fear,
Base inclination, and the start of spleen,—
To fight against me under Percy's yar,
To be a heir, and to be a Wark:
To show how much degenerate thou art.

P. Hen. Do not think so; you shall not find it so;
And God forgive them, that have so much way'd
Vagabond's; grey's good thoughts away from me!
I will redeem all this on Percy's head,
And, in the closing of some glorious day,
Be bold to tell you, that I am your son;
When I will wear a garment all of blood,
And put on my favour out of the burning bush,
Which, wash'd away, shall sear my shame with it.
And that shall be the day, when'er it lights,
That same child of honour and renown,
That same Pope Hotspur, this all-praised knight,
Shall see his end:
And your unthought-of Harry, chance to meet:
For every honour sitting on his helm,
Would they were multitudes; and on my head
My shames redoubled! for the time will come,
That I shall make this northern youth exchange
His glorious deeds for my indignities.
Percy is but my factor, good my lord,
To engross up glorious deeds on my behalf;
And I will call him to so strict an account,
That he shall render every glory up,
Yea, even the slightest worship of his time,
Or I will tear the reckoning from his heart.
The name of trust, I promise thee,
The which if he be pleas'd I shall perform,
I do beseech your majesty, may salvation
The long-grown wounds of my Intemperance:
If these your pleasure, this your grace,
And I will die a hundred thousand deaths,
Brie break the smallest parcel of this vow.

K. Hen. A hundred thousand rebels die in this:—
They shall have way to, and sovereign trust, herein.

Enter Blunt.

How now, good Blunt? thy looks are full of speed.

Blunt. So hath the business that I come to speak of.

Lord Mortimer of Scotland hath sent word,—
That Douglas, and the English rebels, met,
The eleventh of this month, at Shrewsbury:—
A mighty and a fearful head they are,
If promises be kept, now very day.

As ever offer'd soul play in a state.

K. Hen. The earl of Westmoreland set forth to
With his my son, lord John of Lancaster; [day: For
This advertising is past his day.
On Wednesday next, Harry, you shall set
Forward; on Thursday, we ourselves will march:
Our meeting is Bridgnorth: and, Harry, you Shall march through Glosstershire; by which account.

Our business valued, some twelve days hence,
Our general forces at Bridgnorth shall meet.
Our hands are full of business: let's away;
Advantage feeds him fat, while men delay.

SCENE III.—Eastcheap. A Room in the Bear's Head Tavern.

Enter Falstaff and Bardolph.

Fal. Bardolph, am I not fallen away vilely since this care? Do I not bate? do I not dwindle? Why, my skin hangs about me like my lady's loose gown; I am wither'd like an old apple-John. Well, I'll repent, and that suddenly, while I am in something I shall be out of heart shortly, and then I shall be out of heart shortly, and then I shall be out of heart shortly, and then I have not forgotten what the inside of a church is made of, I am a pepper-corn, a brewer's horse: the inside of a church! Company, villainous company, hath been the spoil of me.

Bard. Sir John, you are so frettful, you cannot live long.

Fal. Why, there is it:—come, sing me a bawdy song, mas'ry me; and I was as virtuously given, as a gentleman need to be; virtuous enough: swore little; dined, not above seven times a week; went to a bawdy-house, not above once in a quarter—of an hour; paid money that I borrowed, three or four times; lived well, and in good compass: and now I live out of all orders, out of all compass.

Bard. Why, you are so fat, sir John, that you must needs be out of all compass; out of all reasonable compass, sir John.

Fal. Do thou amend thy face, and I'll amend my life: Thou art our admiral, thou bearest the lantern in the poop,—but 'tis in the nose of thee; thou art a knight, and hast a cap. Bard. Why, sir John, my face does you no harm.

Fal. No, I'll be sworn; I make as good use of it as many a man doth of a death's head, or a scullion's eye,—or a bald drapery upon hell-fire, and Dives that lived in purple; for there he is in his roses, burning, burning. If thou wert any way given to virtue, I would swear by thy face; my oath should be, by this fire: but thou art altogether given over; and wert indeed, but for the light in thy face, the son of utter darkness.
When thou ranst up Gads-hill in the night to catch my horse, if I did not think thou hadst been set upon with hell-fire, there's no purchase in money. O, thou art a perpetual triumph, an everlasting bonfire-light! Thou hast saved me a thousand marks in links and torches, with these in the night last; at tavern and tavern; but the sack that thou hast drunk me, would have bought me lights as good cheap, at the dearest Chandler's in Europe. I have maintained the salt therein: and end your hours with fire, any time this two and thirty years; Heaven reward me for it!

Bard. 'Shblood, I would my face were in thy belly.

Fal. God-a-mercy! so should I be sure to be heart-burned.

Enter Hostess.

How now, dame Partlet the hen? have you inquired yet, who picked my pock?
Host. Why, sir John! what do you think, sir John? do you think I keep thieves in my house? I have searched, I have inquired, so has my husband, man by man, boy by boy, servant by servant: the title of a hair was never lost in my house before.

Fal. You lie, hostess; Bardolph was shaved, and lost many a hair; and I'll be sworn, my pocket was picked: Go to, you are a woman, go.

Host. Who, I? I defy thee: I was never called so in mine house, nor have I ever known to beguile me of it: I bought you a dozen of shirts to your back.

Fal. Dowlas, filthy dowlas: I have given them away to bakers' wives, and they have made bitters of them.

Host. Now, as I am a true woman, hollando of eight shillings an ell. You owe money here besides, sir John, for your diet, and by-drinkings, and money lent you, four and twenty pound.

Fal. He had his part of it; let him pay.

Host. He? alas, he is poor; he hath nothing.

Host. How! poor? look upon his face! What call you this rich man? he coin his nails upon his cheeks; I'll not pay a denier. What, will you make a younger of me? shall I not take mine ease in mine inn, but I have my pocket picked? I had lost a seal-ring of my grandfather's, worth forty mark.

Host. O Jesu! I have heard the prince tell him, I know not how oft, that that ring was copper.

Fal. And setting these things as a Jack, is a sneak-cup, and, if he were here, I would cudgel him like a dog, if he would say so.

Enter Prince Henry and Pals, marching. Falstaff meets the Prince, playing on his truncheon, like a fife.

Fal. How now, lad? is the wind in that door? 'Faith, must we all march?

Bard. Yea, two and two, Newgate-fashion.

Host. My lord, I pray you, hear me.

P. Hen. What sayest thou, mistress Quickly? How does thy husband? I love him well, he is an honest man.

Host. Good my lord, hear me.

Fal. Pr'ythee, let her alone, and list to me.

P. Hen. What sayest thou, Jack? How does thy wife?—And setting these things as a Jack, is a sneak-cup, and, if he were here, I would cudgel him like a dog, if he would say so.

Fal. What, he! he did not?

Host. There's neither faith, truth, nor womanhood in me else.

P. Hen. A trifle, some eight-penny matter.

Fal. So I told him, my lord; and I said, I heard your grace say so: And, my lord, he speaks most vilely of you, like a foul-mouthed man as he is; and said he would cudgel you.

P. Hen. What! he did not?

Host. There's neither faith, truth, nor womanhood in me else.

Fal. There's no more faith in thee in a stewed prune; nor no more truth in thee, than in a tavern-reckonings, nor womanhood, maid Marian may be the deputy's wife of the ward to thee. Go, you thing, go.

Host. Say what thing? what thing?

Fal. What thing? why, a thing to thank God on.

Host. I am no thing to thank God on, I would thou should'st know it; I am an honest man's wife: and, setting thy knighthood aside, thou art a knave to call me so.

Fal. Setting thy womanhood aside, thou art a beast to say otherwise.

Host. Say, what beast, thou knave thou?

P. Hen. Am I an otter? why a woman?

Fal. Why? she's neither fish nor flesh; a man knows not where to have her.

Host. Thou art an unjust man in saying so; thou or any man knows where to have me, thou knave thou.

P. Hen. Thou sayest true, hostess; and he slanderst thee most grossly.

Host. So he doth you, my lord; and said this other day, you had a thousand pound.

P. Hen. Sirrah, do I owe you a thousand pound?

Fal. A thousand pound, Hal? a million: thy love is worth a million; thou owest me thy love.

Host. Nay, my lord, he called you Jack, and said, he would cudgel you.

Fal. Did I, Bardolph?

Bard. Indeed, sir John, you said so.

Fal. Yea; if he said, my ring was copper.

P. Hen. I say, 'tis copper: Darest thou be as good as thy word now?

Fal. Why, Hal, thou knowest, as thou art but man, I dare: but, as thou art prince, I fear thee, as I fear the roaring of the lion's whelp.

P. Hen. And why not, as the lion's whelp?

Fal. The prince is to be feared as the lion: Dost thou think, I'll fear thee as I fear thy father? nay, an I do, I pray God, my girdle break!

P. Hen. O, if it should, how would thy guts fail about thy knees! But, sirrah, there's no room for faith, truth, nor honesty, in this bosom of thine; it is all filled up with guts and midriff. Charge an honest woman with picking thy pocket! Why, thou villainous whomson, impudent, embossed rascal, if there were any thing in thy pocket but tavern-reckonings, memorandums of bawdy-houses, and one poor penny-worth of sugar-candy, to make thee long-winded; if thy pocket be enriched with any other injuries but these, I am a villain. And yet you will stand to it; you will not pocket up wrong: Art thou not ashamed?

Fal. Dost thou hear, Hal? thou knowest, in the state of innocence, Adam fell; and what should poor Jack Faistaff do, in the days of villainy? Thou seest I have more flesh than another man; and therefore more frailty,—You confess, then, you picked my pocket?

P. Hen. It appears so by the story.

Host. Falstaff, I forgive thee: Go, make ready breakfast; love thy husband, look to thy servants, and let her, like her ladyship, shall find me tractable to any honest reason: thou seest, I am pacified.—Still?—Nay, pr'ythee, be gone. [Exit Hostess.] Now, Hal, to the news at court! For the robberies, lad,—How is that answered?

P. Hen. O, my sweet beef, I must still be good angel to thee,—The money is paid back again.

Fal. I do not like that paying back, 'tis a double labour.

P. Hen. I am good friends with my father, and may do any thing.

Fal. Rob me the exchequer, the first thing thou dost, and do it with unwashed hands too.

Bard. Do, my lord.

P. Hen. I have procured thee, Jack, a charge of foot.

Fal. I would, it had been of horse. Where shall I find one that can steal well? O for a fine thief, of the age of two and twenty, or thereabouts! I am heinously unprovided. Well, God be thanked for these rebels, they offend none but the virtuous; I laud them, I praise them.

P. Hen. Bardolph.

Bard. My lord.

P. Hen. Go bear this letter to lord John of Lancaster.

My brother John; this to my lord of Westmoreland.

Go, Poins, to horse, to horse; for thou, and I, have thirty miles to ride yet ere dinner time.
Jack,
Meet me to-morrow in the Temple-hall:
At two o'clock in the afternoon:
There shalt thou know thy charge: and there receive
Money, and order for their furniture.
The land is burning; Percy stands on high;
And either they, or we, must lower here.
[Exeunt Prince, Pains, and Baldolph.

Fol. Rare is the brave world! — Hostess,
My breakfast; come: —
0, I could wish, this tavern were my drum. [Exit.

ACT IV.

Scene I.—The Rebel Camp near Shrewsbury.

Enter Hotspur, Worcester, and Douglas.

Hot. Well said, my noble Scit: If speaking truth,
In this long age, were not thought flattering,
Such attribution should the Douglas have,
As not a soldier of this season's stamp
Should go so current general through the world.
By heaven, I cannot flatter; I defy
The thoughts of men; but a braver place
In my heart's love, hath no man than yourself;
Nay, take me to the word; approve me, lord.
Dou. Thou art the king of honour:
No man so much as we tread upon the ground.
But I will hear him. Host.

Enter a Messenger, with letters.

What letters hast thou there? — I can but thank you.
Mess. These letters come from your father,—
Host. Letters from him! why comes he not himself?
Mess. He cannot come, my lord; he's grievous sick.

Hot. Sounds! how has he the leisure to be sick,
In such a bustling time? Who leads his power?
Under whose government come they along?
Mess. His letters bear his mind, not 1, my lord.

Wor. I pr'ythee, tell me, doth he keep his bed?
Mess. He did, my lord, four days ere I set forth;
And at the time of my departure hence,
He was much feared by his physicians.

War. I would, the state of time had first been seen by sickness had been visited: his health was never better worth than now.
Host. Sceh now I drop now! this sickness doth
The very life-blood of our enterprise:
'Tis catching hitler, even to our camp.

He writes me here,—that inward sickness —
And that his friends by deputation could not
So soon be drawn; nor did he think it meet,
To lay so dangerous and so dear a trust
In any soul remod'd, but on his own.
Yet doth he give us bold advertisement,—
The war with our small conjunction, we should on,
To see how fortune is dispor'd to us;
For, as he writes, there is no quailing now;
Because the king is certainly possed —
Of all our powers. What say you to it?
War. Your father's sickness is a main to us.

Hot. A perilous gash, a very limb lopp'd off! —
And yet, in faith, 'tis not; his present want
Seems like to this rich repose: perchance it good,
To set the exact wealth of all our states
All at one cast! to set so rich a main
On the nice hazard of one doubtful hour?
If were not good; for therein should we read
The very bottom and the soul of hope;
The very list, the utmost bound
Of all our fortunes.

Dou. 'Philth, and so we should;
Where now remains a sweet reversion:

We may boldly spend upon the hope of what
Is to come in:
A comfort of retirement lives in this.

Hot. A rendezvous, a home to fly unto,
If that the devil and mischance look big
Upon the midleain of our affairs.
War. But yet, I would your father had been here.
The quality and hair of our attempt
Brooks no division: It will be thought
By some, that it was not why he saw,
That wisdom, loyalty, and more dislike
Of our proceedings, kept the earl from hence;
And think, how such an apprehension
May turn the tide of fearful faction,
And that a kind of question in, we cause:
For, well you know, we of the offering side
Must keep aloof from strict arbitration;
And stop all sight-sights, every loop, from whence
The eye of reason misgives was upon us:
This absence of your father's draws a curtain,
That shows the ignorant a kind of fear
Before not dream'd of.

You strain too far,
I, rather, of his absence make this use:
It lends a lustre, and more great opinion,
A larger dare to our great enterprise,
There is a true and noble end we must think
If, we, without his help, can make a head
To push against the kingdom; with his help,
We shall over-turn it topsy-turvy down.
Vast as the world, yet all our joints are whole.

Dou. As heart can think'; there is not such a word
Spoke of in Scotland, as this term of fear.

Enter Sir Richard Vernon.

Hot. My cousin Vernon! welcome, by my soul.
Ver. Fray God, my news be worth a welcome,
Hot. The earl of Westmoreland, seven thousand strong,
Is marching hitherwards; with him, prince John.

Ver. No harm; what more?
Hot. And further, I have learn'd, —
The king himself in person is upon it,
Or hitherwards intended speedily,
With strong and mighty preparation.

Hot. He shall be welcome too. Where is his son,
The nimble-footed mad-cap prince of Wales,
And his comrades, that daff'd the world aside,
And bid it pass?

Ver. All furnish'd, all in arms, —
A lord's worth like estridges, that walk the wind;
Bated like eagles having lately bath'd;
Glittering in golden coats, like images;
As full of spirit as the month of May,
And as infectious as the sun at midsummer;
Wanton as youthful goats, wild as young bulls.
I saw young Harry — with his bea'ry on,
His cusses on his thighs, gallantly arm'd; —
Rise from the ground like feather'd Mercury,
And vaulted with such ease into his seat,
As if an angel dropp'd down from the clouds,
To turn and wind a fiery Pegasus,
And wish the world with noble horsemanship.

Ver. No more, no more; worse than the sun in March,
This praise doth nourish agues. Let them come;
They come like sacrifices in their trim,
And the fire-eyed maid of rocky war.
All bot, and bleeding, will we offer them:
The mailed Mars shall on his altar sit,
Up to the ears in blood. I am on fire,
Upon the midleain of our affairs.
And yet not ours; — Come, let me take my horse,
Who is to bear me, like a thunderbolt,
Against the bound of the prince of Wales:
Here Harry for me, hot horses to horse,
Meet, and ne'er part, till one drop down a corse —
O, that Glendower were come!

Ver. There is more news
I learn'd in Worcester, as I rode along.
He cannot draw his power this fourteen days.
Act 4.  KING HENRY IV.  337

Doug. That's the worst tidings that I hear of yet.
Wor. Ay, by my faith, that bears a frosty sound.
Hot. What may the king's whole battle reach unto?
Ver. To thirty thousand.
Hot. Forty let it be;
My father and Glendower being both away,
The powers of us may serve so great a day.
Come, let us make a master speedily.
Doomsday is near; die all, die merrily.
Doug. Talk not of dying; I am out of fear
Of death, or death's hand, for this one half year.
[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A publick Road near Coventry.
Enter Falstaff and Bardolph.
Fal. Bardolph, get thee before to Coventry; fill me a bottle of sack: our soldiery shall march through: we'll to Sutton-Colefield to-night.
Bard. Will you give me money, captain?
Fal. Lay out, lay out.
Bard. This bottle makes an angel.
Fal. An if it do, take it for thy labour: if it make twenty, take them all, I'll answer the coinage. Bid my lieutenant Peto meet me at the town's end.
Bard. I will, captain: farewell.
[Exit. Fal. If I be not ashamed of my soldiers, I am a son great gentleman. I have misused the king's press damnable. I have got, in exchange of a hundred and fifty soldiers, three hundred and odd pounds, I press me none but good householders, yeomen's sons: inquire me out contracted bachelors, such as have a stock and a table to serve as a bird of my company: I have misled their women, and I have poets of their lovers, and such as were never soldiers; but discarded unjust serving-men, younger sons to young brothers, revolted tapsters, and others trade-fallen: the cankers of a calm world, and a long peace; ten times more dishonourable raged than an old faced ancient: and such have I, to fill up the rooms of them that have bought out their horses, their hatchets, and I would think, that I had a hundred and fifty tattered prodigals, lately come from swine-keeping, from eating draft and hawks. A mad fellow met me on the way, and told me, I have not left behind the heir of the labour and sweat of their bellies no bigger than pins' heads, and they have bought out their services: and now my whole charge consists of ancients, corporals, lieutenants, gentlemen of companies, slaves as ragged as Lazarus in the painted cloth, where the glutton's dogs licked his sores: and such as, indeed, were never soldiers; but discarded unjust serving-men, younger sons to young brothers, revolted tapsters, and others trade-fallen: the cankers of a calm world, and a long peace; ten times more dishonourable raged than an old faced ancient: and such have I, to fill up the rooms of them that have bought out their horses, their hatchets, and I would think, that I had a hundred and fifty tattered prodigals, lately come from swine-keeping, from eating draft and hawks. Andacious cruelty. If that the king
Hurt in any way your good deserts forgot,—
Which he confesseth to be manifold,—
He bids you name your griefs; and, with all speed,
You shall have your desires, with interest; And pardon absolute for yourself, and these,
Herein misled by your suggestion.

Hut. The king is kind; and, well we know, the king
Knows at what time to promise, when to pay. My master and his uncle, and all the rest,
Did give him that same royalty he wears: And,—when he was not six and twenty strong,
Sick in the world's regard, wretched and low,
A famous outlaw sneaking house;—my father gave him welcome to the shire; And,—when he heard him swear and vow to God,
He came but to be duke of Lancaster,
To sue his livery, and beg his peace;
With tears of innocence, and terms of real—
My father, in kind heart and pity mov'd,
Swore him assistance, and performed it too.
Now, when the lords, and barons of the realm
Perceiv'd Northumberland did lean to him,
The more and less came in with cap and knee; Met him in boroughs, cities, villages; Attended on him on bridges, stood in lanes,
Laid hands on him, pressed their oaths,
Gave him their heirs: as pages follow'd him,
Even at the heels, in golden multitudes.
He presently,—as greatness knows itself,— Stepp'd out no further than his vow
Made to my father, while his blood was poor,
Upon the naked shore at Ravenspur: And now, forsooth, takes on him to reform
Some certain edicts, and some stratagems decrees,
That on the crown's account: he wept,
Cries out upon abuses, seems to weep
Over his country's wrongs; and, by this face,
This seeming brow of justice, did he win
This purpose of all others, out of his head;
Proceeded further; cut me off the heads
Of all the favourites, that the absent king
In depredation left behind him here,
Where he was personal in the Irish war.

Blunt. Tot, I came not to hear this.

Hut. Then, to the point.—
In short time after, he depos'd the king: And, in that, depri'd him of his life: And, in the tooting of that, took the whole state: To make that worse, suffered his kinsman March (Who is, if every owner were well pleased, Indeed his king,) to be incog'd in Wales, There, without ransom to be made: disgrac'd me in my happy victories; Sought to entrap me by intelligence; Rated my uncle from the council-board; In rage dismiss'd my father from the court; Broke oath on oath, committed wrong on wrong: And, in conclusion, drove us to seek out This head of safety; and, whilst, to pry Into his title, the which we find Too indirect for long continuance.

Blunt. Shall I return this answer to the king?

Hut. Not so, sir Walter; we'll withdraw awhile. Go to the king; and let there be impaw'd Some secrecy for the state; and, in short,
And in the morning early shall mine uncle Bring him our purposes: and so farewell.

Blunt. I would, you would accept of grace and love.

Hut. And, may be, so we should find.

Blunt. 'Pray heaven, you do.

[Exeunt.]

Enter the Archbishop of York, and a Gentleman.

Arch. Hee, good sir Michael; bear this sealed brief, With winged haste, to the lord marshall: This to my cousin Scroop; and all the rest

To whom they are directed: if you knew How much they do import, you would make haste.

Blunt. My good lord, I guess their tenor.

Arch. Like enough, you do. To-morrow, good sir Michael, is a day, Wherein the fortune of ten thousand men Must ride the touch: For, sir, Sir John Shrews bury, As I am truly given to understand, The king, with mighty and quick-rased power, Meets with our Lord Harry: and I fear, sir Michael, What with the sickness of Northumberland, (Whose power was in the first proportion,) And what with Owen Glendower's absence, thence, (Who with them was a rated swine too, And through the force of such in army,)— I fear, the power of Percy is too weak To wage an instant trial with the king.

Gent. Why, good my lord, you need not fear: there's Douglas,

And Mortimer.

Arch. No, Mortimer's not there.

Gent. But there is Mardake, Vernon, lord Harry Percy,

And there's my lord of Worcester; and a head Of gallant warriors, noble gentlemen.

Arch. And so there is: but yet the king hath

The special head of all the land together:—

The prince of Wales, lord John of Lancaster,

The noble Westmoreland, and warlike Blunt; And many more cor-rivals, and dear men Of estimation and command in arms.

Gent. Doubt not but, my lord, they shall be well opposed.

Arch. I hope no less, yet needful 'tis to fear;

And, to prevent the worst, sir Michael, speed: For, if lord Percy thrive not, ere the king

Dismiss his power, he means to visit us:—

For he hath heard of our confederacy, And his's the doom to make strong against him: Therefore, make haste: I must go write again To other friends; and so farewell, sir Michael.

[Exeunt, severally.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The King's Camp near Shrews bury.

K. Hen. How bloody the sun begins to peer Above you busky hill! the day looks pale At his distemper.

P. Hen. The southern wind Does blow the trumpet to his purposes; And, by his hollow whistling in the leaves, Foretells a tempest, and a basting day.

K. Hen. Then with the losers let it sympathize! For nothing can seem foul to those that win.

Trumpet. Enter Worcester and Vernon.

How now, my lord of Worcester? 'tis not well, That you and I should meet upon such terms As now we meet: You have deceived our trust; And made us doss our easy robes of peace, To crush our old limbs in urgent steel: This is not well, my lord, this is not well. What say you to't? will you again unkind This churlish knot of all-abhorred war? And move in that obedient orb again, Where you did give a fair and natural light; And be no more an exhal'd meteor,

A prodigy of fear, and a portent Of breached mischief to the unborn times?

War. Hear me, my liege.

Foremost in part, I could be well content To entertain the lag-end of my life With quiet hours; for, I do protest, I have not sought the day of this dislike.
Act 5.  KING HENRY IV. 339

K. Hen. You have not sought it! how comes it then?
Fal. Rebellion lay in his way, and he found it.
P. Hen. Prithee, deliver.
Wer. It pleas'd your majesty, to turn your looks
Of favour, from myself, and all our house;
And yet I must remember you, my lord,
We were your father's first and dearest friends.
For you, my staff of office did I breaze
In Richard's time; and posted day and night
To meet you on the way, and kiss your hand,
When yet you were in place and in account
Now, in your strong and mighty arms,
That brought you home, and boldly tid out
The dangers of the time: You swore to us,—
And did swear that oath at Doncaster,—
That you did nothing purpose 'gainst the state;
Nor claim no further than your new-fall'n right,
The seat of Gaunt, dukedom of Lancaster:
To this we swore our aid. But, in short space,
It raim'd down fortune showering on your head;
And such a flood of greatness fell on you,—
What with our help; what with the absent king;
What with the injuries of a wanton time;
The seeming sufferances that you had borne;
And the contrarious winds, that held the king
So long in his unlucky Irish wars,
That all in England did repute him dead,—
And by this wise advantage of a victory,
You took occasion to be quickly wo'd
To grip the general sway into your hand:
Forgot your oath to us at Doncaster;
And, being fed by us, you us'd us so
As that gentle gull, the cuckoo's bird,
Useth the sparrow: did oppress our nest;
Grew by our feeding to a great bulk,
That men our very durst not come our sight,
For fear of swallowing: but with nimble wing
We were enforc'd, for safety sake, to fly
Out of your sight, and raise this present head:
Whereby we stand opposed by such means
As you yourself have for'd against yourself;
By unkind usage, dangerous countenance,
And violation of all faith and troth
Sworn to us in your younger enterprise.

K. Hen. These things, indeed, you have articulated,
Proclaim'd at market-crosses, read in churches;
To face the garment of rebellion.
We must begin another colour: may the eye
Of fickle changelings, and poor discontentes,
Which gape, and rub the elbow, at the news
Of hurriedly innovation;
And how ye did ye so? for no such want
Such water-colours, to impart his cause;
Nor moody beggars, starving for a time
Of pellmell havock and confusion.

P. Hen. In both our armies, there is many a soul
Shall pay full dearly for this enterprize,
If once they join in trial. Tell your nephew,
The prince of Wales doth join with all the world
In praise of Henry Percy: by my hopes,—
This present enterprize set off his head,—
I do not think a braver gentleman,
More active-valiant, or more valiant-young,
More daring, or more bold, is now alive,
To raise his head and give the signal tasks.
For my part, I may speak it to my shame,
I have a truant been to chivalry;
And so, I hear, he doth account me too;
Yet herefore my father's majesty,—
I am content, that he shall take the odds
Of his great name and estimation;
And will, to save the blood on either side,
Try fortune with him in a single fight.
K. Hen. And prince of Wales, so dare we venture thee,
Albeit, considerations infinite
Do make against it:—No, good Worcester, no,
We find our affairs go well; even those we love,
That are misled upon your cousin's part:
And, will they take the offer of our grace,
Both he, and they, and you, yea, every man
Shall be my friend again, and I'll be his:
And that, perchance, to tell your ear one word.
What he will do:—But if he will not yield,
Rebuke and dread correction wait on us,
And they shall do their office. So be gone;
We will not now be troubled with reply:
We offer fair, take it advisedly.

[Exeunt Worcester and Vernon.

P. Hen. It will not be accepted, on my life:
The Douglas and the Hotspur both together
Are confederate against the king and forms,
K. Hen. Hence, therefore, every leader to his
For, on their answer, will we set on them:
And God befriend us, as our cause is just.

[Exeunt King, Blunt, and Prince John.

Fal. Hal, if thou see me down in the battle,
And bestride me, so; 'tis a point of friendship.
P. Hen. Nothing but a colossus can do thee that friendship: Say thy prayers, and farewell.

Fal. I would it were bed-time, Hal, and all well.
P. Hen. Why, thou owest God a death. [Exit.
Fal. 'Tis not due yet; I would be loath to pay him before his time. What need I be so forward with him on my part, when I have no matter; Honour pricks me on, Yea, but how if honour pricks me off? when I come on? how then? Can honour set to a leg? Or an arm? No. Or take away a privilege of a soldier? No. Honour hath no skill in surgery then? No. What is honour? A word. What is in that word, honour? What is that honour? Air. A trim reckoning—
Who hath thy name that died by Wednesday. Doch he feel it? No. DOTH he hear it? No. Is it insensible then? Yea, to the dead. But will it not live with the living? No. Why? Detraction will not suffer it: therefore I'll none of it: Honour is a mere scratchew, and so ends my catechism.

SCENE II.—The Rebel Camp.

Enter Worcester and Vernon.

Wor. O, no, my nephew must not know, sir Richard,
The liberal kind offer of the king.
Ver. 'Twere best, he did. Wor. Then are we all undone.
It is not possible, it cannot be,
The king should keep his word in loving us;
He will suavise us still, and find a time
To punish this offence in other faults:
Suspicion shall be all stuck full of eyes:
For treason is but trusted like the fox;
Who, we're told, he doth seem harmless, lock'd up,
Will have a wild trick of his ancestors.
Look how we can, or sad, or merrily,
Interpretation will misquote our looks;
And we shall feel like oxen at a stall,
The better cherish'd, still the nearer death.
My nephew's trespass may be well forgot,
It hath the excuse of youth, and heat of blood;
And an adopted name of privilege.

Enter Hotspur and Douglas; and Officers and Soldiers, behind.

Hot. My uncle is return'd:—Deliver up
My lord of Westmoreland.—Uncle, what news? Wor. The king will bid you battle presently.
Dou. Defy him by the lord of Westmoreland.
Hot. Lord Douglas, go you and tell him so.
Dou. Marry, and shall, and very willingly.

[Exit.

Act 5.

would prove the better counterfeit. Therefore I'll make him sure, yea, and I'll swear I killed him. Why may not he rise, as well as I? Nothing confuses me but eyes, and nobody sees me. Therefore, sirrah, [wading him.] with a new wound in your thigh, come you along with me.

[Exeunt Hotspur on his back.

Re-enter Prince Henry and Prince John.

P. Hen. Come, brother John, full bravely hast thou flesh'd
The maiden sword.

P. John. But, soft! whom have we here?

P. Hen. Did you not tell me this fat man was dead?

P. Hen. I did; I saw him dead, breathless and bleeding
Upon the ground.

Art thou alive? or is it phantasy
That plays upon our eyesight? I pr'ythee, speak:
We will not trust our eyes, without our ears.

Thou art not what thou seem'st.

Fal. No, that's certain; I am not a double man:
but if I be not Jack Falstaff, then am I a Jack.
There is Percy! [Throwing the body down.] if your father will do me any honour, so; if not, let him kill the next Percy himself. I look to be either earl or duke, I can assure you.

P. Hen. Why, Percy I killed myself, and saw the dead depart.

Fal. Didst thou?—Lord, lord, how is this world given to lying!—I grant you I was down, and out of breath; and so was he: but we rose both at an instant, and fought a long hour by Shrewsbury clock. If I may be believed, so; if not, let them, that should reward valour, bear the sin upon their own heads. This wound in the thigh: if the man were alive, and would deny it, I would make him eat a piece of my sword.

P. John. This is the strangest tale that ever I heard.

P. Hen. This is the strangest fellow, brother John.

Come, bring your luggage nobly on your back:
For my part, if a lie may do thee grace,
I'll gild it with the happiest terms I have.

[Exit. The trumpet sounds, the day is ours.

P. Hen. This is strange, brother, let's to the highest of the field,
To see what fellows are living, who are dead.

[Exeunt Prince Henry and Prince John.

Fal. I'll follow, as they say, for reward. He that rewards me, God reward him! If I do grow great, I'll grow less, for I'll purge, and leave sack, and live cleanly, as a noblesman should do.

[Exeunt bearing off the body.

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Field.

The trumpets sound. Enter King Henry, Prince Henry, Prince John, Westmoreland, and others, with Worcester and Vernon, prisoners.

K. Hen. Thus ever did rebellion and rebuke—
Ill-spirited Worcester! did we not send grace, Pardon, and terms of love to all of you?
And wouldst thou turn our offers contrary
Misuse the tenor of thine kinsman's trust?
Three knights upon our party slain to-day,
A noble earl, and many a creature else,
Had been alive this hour,
If, like a christian, thou hadst truly borne
Betwixt our armies true intelligence.

Wor. What I have done, my safety urg'd me to;
And I embrace this fortune patiently,
Since not to be avoided it falls on me.

K. Hen. Bear Worcester to the death, and Vernon too:

Other offenders we will pause upon.—

How goes the field?

P. Hen. The noble Scot, lord Douglas, when he saw
The fortune of the day quite turn'd from him,
The noble Percy slain, and all his men
Upon the foot of fear,—fled with the rest:
And, falling from a hill, he was so bruist'd,
That the pursuers took him. At my tent
The Douglas is; and I beseech your grace,
I may dispose of him.

With all my heart.

P. Hen. Then, brother John of Lancaster, to
You this honourable bounty shall belong:
Go to the Douglas, and deliver him
Up to his pleasure, ransomless, and free;
His valour, shown upon our crest to-day,
If I taught them how to cherish such high deeds,
Even to the bosom of our adversaries.

K. Hen. Then this remains,—that we divide our power.—
You, son John, and my cousin Westmoreland,
Towards York shall bend you, with your dearest speed,
To meet Northumberland, and the prelate Scoop,
Who, as we hear, are busily in arms:
Myself, I send you, son Harry,—will towards Wales,
To fight with Glaudower, and the earl of March.
Rebellion in this land shall lose his way,
Meeting the check of such another day:
And since this business so fair is done,
Let us not leave till all our own be won.

[Exeunt.

land.

sengers, Drawers, Beadles, Grooms, &c.

SCENE,—England.

INDUCTION.

Warkworth. Before Northumberland's Castle.

Enter Rumour, painted full of tongues.

Rum. Open your ears; For which of you will stop
The vent of hearing, when loud Rumour speaks? I, from the orient to the drooping west,
Making the wind my post horse, still unfold
The acts commenced on this ball of earth:
Upon my tongues continual strikers ride;
The which in every language I pronounce,
Stuffing the ears of men with false reports.
I speak of peace, while covert enmity,
Under the smile of safety, wounds the world:
And who but Rumour, who but only I,
Make fearful musters, and prepar'd defence:
Whilst the big year, swol'n with some other grief,
Is thought with child by the stern tyrant war,
And no such matter! Rumour is a pipe
Blown by surmisings, jealousies, conjectures;
And of so easy and so plain a stop,
That the blunt monster with uncouth heads,
The still-discordant wavering multitude,
Can play upon it. But what need I thus
My well-known body to animate
Among my household? Why is Rumour here?
I run before king Harry's victory;
Who, in a bloody field by Shrewsbury,
Hath beaten down young Hotspur, and his troops;
Quenching the flame of bold rebellion
Even with the rebels' blood. But what mean I
To speak so true at first? my office is
To noise abroad, that Harry Monmouth fell
Under the wrath of noble Hotspur's sword;
And that the king before the Douglas' rage
Stoop'd his anointed head as low as death.
This have I rumour'd through the pleasant towns
Between that royal field of Shrewsbury
And this worm-eaten hold of ragged stone,
Where Hotspur's father, old Northumberland,
Lies crafty-nick: the posts come tiring on,
And not a man of them brings other news
Than they have learnt of me; From Rumour's tongues
They bring smooth comforts false, worse than true wrongs.

[Exit.}

ACT I.

SCENE I.—The same.

The Porter before the Gate; Enter Lord Bardolph.

Bard. Who keeps the gate here, ho?—Where is the earl?

Port. What shall I say you are?

Bard. Tell thou the earl,
That the lord Bardolph doth attend him here.

Port. His lordship is walk'd forth into the or chard;

Please it your honour, knock but at the gate,
And he himself will answer.

Enter Northumberland.

Bard. Here comes the earl.

North. What news, lord Bardolph? every minute
now
Should be the father of some stratagem:
The times are wild; contention, like a horse
Full of high feeding, madly hath broke loose;
And bears down all before him.

Bard. Noble earl,
I bring you certain news from Shrewsbury.

North. Good, an heaven will!

Bard. As good as heart can wish:—
The king is almost wounded to the death;
And, in the fortune of my lord your son,
Prince Harry slain outright; and both the Blunts
Killed by the hand of Douglas: young prince John,
And Westmorland, and Stafford, fled the field;
And Harry Monmouth's brawn, the hulk sir John,
Is prisoner to your son: 0, such a day,
So fought, so follow'd, and so fairly won,
Came not, till now, to dignify the times,
Since Cæsar's fortunes!

North. How is this deri'v'd?

Saw you the field? came you from Shrewsbury?

Bard. I spake with one, my lord, that came from thence,
A gentleman well bred, and of good name,
That freely render'd me these news for true.

North. Here comes my servant, Travers, whom I sent
On Tuesday last to listen after news.

Bard. My lord, I over rode him on the way:
And he is furnish'd with no certainties,
More than he haply may retail from me.

Enter Travers.

North. Now, Travers, what good tidings come with you?

Trav. My lord, sir John Umfringle turn'd me back
With joyful tidings; and, being better hors'd, the litter is set on foot, and prov'd so hard,
A gentleman almost forspight with speed;
That stopp'd by me to breathe his bloodied horse:
He ask'd the way to Chester; and of him I did demand, what news from Shrewsbury.
He answer'd, that rebellion had broke out,
And that young Harry Percy's spur was cold:
With that, he gave his able horse the head,
And, bending forward, struck his armed heels Against the panting sides of his poor jade
Up to the rowell head; and starting so,
He seem'd in running to devour the way,
Staying no longer question.

North. Ifs!—Again.

Say he, young Harry Percy's spur was cold?

Trav. Of Hotspur, cold spur? that rebellion Had met all luck!
My lord, I'll tell you what;—
If my young lord your son have not the day,

North. Upon mine honour, for a silken point
I'll give my barony: never talk of it.

Trav. Why should the gentleman, that rode by
To furnish our party.

There were such instances of loss?

North. Who, he?

He was some hilding fellow, that had stolen
The horse he rode on; and, upon my life,
Spoke at a venture. Look, here comes more news.

Enter Morton.

North. Yes, this man's brow, like to a leaflet,
Foretells the nature of a tragick volume;
So looks the stround, wherefrom the Imperious flood
Hath left a witness'd usurpation.

Say, Morton, didst thou come from Shrewsbury?

Mor. I ran from Shrewsbury, my noble lord;
Where hateful death put on his ugliest mask,
To fright our party.

North. How dost my son, and brother?

Thou tremblest; and the whiteness in thy cheek Is such, as thou too hast tell'd thy errand.
Even such a man, so faint, so spiritless,
So dull, so dead in look, so woe-begone,
Drew Priam's curtain in the dead of night.
And could have told him, half his Troy was burn'd
But I'm safe: and the fire, ere the long range,
And I my Percy's death, ere thou report'dst it.

Thou would'st not say,—Thy son did thus, and thus;

Thy brother thus; so fought the noble Douglas:
Stopping my greedy ear with their bold deeds:
But in the end, to stop mine ear indeed,
Thou hast a sigh to bow away this praise,
Ending with—brother, son, and all are dead.

Mor. Douglas is living, and your brother, yet;
But, for my lord your son,—

North. Why, he is dead.

Say what a ready tongue suspicion hast
He, that but fears the thing he would not know,
Hath, by instinct, knowledge from others' eyes,
That what he fear'd is charg'd. Yet speak,

Morton:—Tell then thy case, his divination lies;
And I will take it to a sweet disgrace,
And make thee rich for doing me such wrong.

Mor. You are too great to be by me maltsaid:
You are in time, your fear is certain.

North. Yet, for all this, say not that Percy's dead.

I see a strange confession in thine eye.
Thou shak'st thy head; and hold'st it fear, or sin,
He speak a truth; if he be slain, say so.
I his tongue offends not, that reports his death:

And he doth sin, that doth belie the dead;
Not he, which says the dead is not alive.
Yet the first bringer of unwelcome news
Hath but a losing office; and his tongue
Sav'd as a sullen beast, who would be slain,
Remember'd knolling a departing friend.

Bard. I cannot think, my lord, your son is dead.

Mor. I am sorry, I should foyce you to believe
That in my joy, I would to heaven I had not seen:
But these mischance's saw him in a state
Rending faint quittance, wearied and out-breath'd,

To Harry Monmouth; whose swift wrath beat down
The new勋'ded Percy to the earth,
From whence with life he never more sprang up.
In few, his death (whose spirit lent a fire
Even to the dullest peasan't in his camp,)—
Being bruited once, took fire and heat away.

From the best-teniper'd courage in his troops:
For from his metal was his party steel'd;
Which once in him abated, all the rest
Turn'd on themselves, like dull and heavy lead.
And as the thing that's heavy in itself,
Upon enforcement, flies with greatest speed;
So did our men, heavy in hotspur's loss.

Let's think this bright such lightness with their fear
That arrows flew not swifter towards us, than Did our soldiers, aiming at the same safety.

Fly from the field: Then was that noble Worcestress,

Too soon a lamb prisoner: and that furious Scot,
The bloody Douglas, whose well-baiting sword
Had three times slain the appearance of the king,
Tian vail his stomach, and did grace the shame
Of his supporter's backs: and in his light,
Stumbling in fear, was took. The sum of all
Is,—that the king hath won; and hath sent out
A speedy power to encounter you, my lord,
Unto the conduct of young Lancaster,
And Westmoreland: this is the news at full.

For this I shall have time enough to mourn.

In poison, there is physic; and these news,
Having been well, that would have made me sick,
Being sick, have in some measure made me well:

And as the wretch, whose fever-weak'nd joints,
Like strengthless hinges, buckle under life,
Impatient of his fit, breaks like a fire.

Out of his keeper's arms; even so my limbs,
Weak'en'd with grief, being now engag'd with grief,
Are thrice themselves: hence therefore, thou uice.

A scaly gauntlet now, with joints of steel,
Must glove this hand: and hence, thou stilly quoth:

Thou art a guard too wanton for the head,
Which princes, flesh'd with conquest, aim to hit.
Now bind my brows with iron: And approach
The rag'dest hour that time and spite dare bring,
To crown upon the enrag'd Northumberland!

Let bea'n's kiss earth! Now let not nature's hand
Keep the wild flood conflu'd! let order die!
And let this world no longer be a stage,
To bear contention in a lingering act;
But let the spirit of the first-born gain
Reign in all bosoms, that each heart being set
On bloody courses, the rude scene may end,
And darkness be the burier of the dead.

Trav. This strained passion doth you wrong, my lord.

Bard. Sweet earl, divorce not wisdom from your honour.

Mor. Let the eyes of all your loving complices
I can on your health; the which, if you give o'er
To stormy passion, must perforce decay.
You cast the event of war, my noble lord,
And suspend the account of chance, before you said,—

Let us make head. It was your presumtise,
That in the dote of blows your son might drop:
You knew, he walk'd o'er yeasts, on some edge,
More likely to fall in, than to get o'er:
SCENE II.—London. A Street.

Enter Sir John Falstaff, with his Page bearing his sword and buckler.

Fal. Sirrah, you giant, what says the doctor to my water?

Page. He said, sir, the water itself was a good health-preserver: but, for the party that owed it, he might have more diseases than he knew for.

Fal. Men of all sorts take a pride to gird at me: The brain of this foolish-compounded clay, man, is not able to vent any thing that tends to laughter, more than I invent, or is invented on me: I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men. I do here walk before thee, like a sow that hath overwhelmed all her litter but one. If the prince put thee into my service for any other reason than to set me off, why then I have no judgment. Thou wondrous mandrake, thou art fitting to be a horseman! Where hast thou wait at my heels. I was never manned with an agate till now; but I will set you neither in gold nor silver, but in vile apparel, and send you back again to your master, for a jewel; arra, arra, the prince your master, whose chin is not yet fledged. I will canoe have a beard grow in the palm of my hand, than he shall get one on his cheek; and yet he will not stick to say, his face is a face-royal! God make it which it please him abroad: I have not a hair amiss yet: he may keep it still as a face-royal, for a barber shall never earn sixpence out of it; and yet he will be crowing, as if he had writ man ever since his father was at school. He may have his own grace, but he is almost out of mine, I can assure you.

What said master Dumbleton about the satin for my short cloak, and slops?
Fad. An't please your lordship, I hear, his majesty is returned with some discomfort from Wales.

Ch. Just. I talk not of his majesty:—You would not come when I sent for you?

Fad. And I hear moreover, his highness is fallen into this same wheresome apoplexy.

Ch. Just. Well, heaven mend him I pray, let me have him.

Fad. This apoplexy is, as I take it, a kind of lethargy, an't please your lordship: a kind of sleeping in the blood, a whoreson tinnitus.

Ch. Just. What tell ye me of it? be it as it is.

Fad. It hath its original from much grief; from study, and perturbation of the brain: I have read the cause of his effects in (laine); it is a kind of dreams.

Ch. Just. I think, you are fallen into the disease; for you hear not what I say to you.

Fad. Very well, my lord, very well: rather, an't please you, it is the disease of not listening, the mark of not marking, that I am troubled with.

Ch. Just. To punish you by the heels, would amend the attention of your ears; and I care not, if I do become your physician.

Fad. Well, I pray my lord; but not so patient: your lordship may minister the potion of imprisonment to me, in respect of poverty; but how I should be your patient to follow your precepts, I mean, make some dram of a scruple, or, indeed, a scruple itself.

Ch. Just. I sent for you, when there were matters against you for your life, to come speak with me.

Fad. As it was advised by my learned counsel in the laws of this land-service, I did not come.

Ch. Just. Well, the truth is, sir John, you live in great misery.

Fad. Ille that backles his him in my belt, cannot live in his.

Ch. Just. Your means are very slender, and your waste is great.

Fad. I would it were otherwise; I would my means were greater, and my want slenderer.

Ch. Just. You have mislaid the youthful prince.

Fad. The young prince hath mislaid me: I am the fellow with the great belly, and he my dog.

Ch. Just. Well, I am glad that you have a head wound; your day's service at Shrewsbury hath a little gilded over your night's exploit on Gadshill: you may thank the unquiet time for your quiet oversight.

Fad. My lord.

Ch. Just. But since all is well, keep it so: wake not a sleeping wolf.

Fad. To wake a wolf, is as bad as to smell a fox.

Ch. Just. But I see you are as a candle, the better part burnt out.

Fad. A wassail candle, my lord; all tallow: if I did say of wax, my growth would approve the truth.

Ch. Just. There is not a white hair on your face, but should have his effect of gravity.

Fad. His effect of gravity, gravie, gravie.

Ch. Just. You follow the young prince up and down, like his ill angel.

Fad. Not so, my lord: your ill angel is light; but, I hope, he that looks upon me, will take me without some weighing: yet, in some respects, I grant, I cannot go, I cannot tell: Vis mea est so little regard in those coster-monger times, that true valour is turned bear-herd: Pregnancy is made a tapster, and hath his quick wit wasted in giving reckoning. All the other gifts appertaining to the man, as the malice of this age shapes them, are not worth a gooseberry.

Ch. Just. You are old, consider not the capacities of us that are young: you measure the heat of our blood with the bliteness of your gall; and we that are in the vaward of our youth, I must confess, are wags too.

Ch. Just. Do you set down your name in the severel youth, that are written down old with all the characters of age? Have you not a moist eye?
Act 2.

KING HENRY IV.

And, my most noble friends, I pray you all, Speak plainly your opinions of our hopes:—
And first, lord marshal, what say you to it?

Bard. The question then, lord Hastings, stand-eth thus;
Whether our present five and twenty thousand
May hold the field without Northumberland.

Hast. With him, we may.

Bard. Ay, marry, there's the point;—
But if without him we be thought too feeble,
My judgment is, we should not step too far.
Till we had his assistance by the hand:
For, in a theme so bloody—nit this as,
Conjecture, expectation, and surprise
Of bids undutin', should not be suspected.

Arch. Tis very true, lord Bardolph; for, indeed,
It was young Hotspur's case at Shrewsbury.

Bard. It was; my lord; who lin'd himself with Eating the air on promise of supply,
Flattering himself with project of a power
Much smaller than the smallest of his thoughts:
And so, with great imagination,
Proper to madmen, led his powers to destruction,
And, winking, leapt into destruction.

Hast. But, by your leave, it never yet did hurt,
To lay down likelihoods, and forms the hope.

Bard. Yes, in this present quality of war;—
Indeed the instant action, (a cause on foot,) Lives so in hope, as in an early spring
We see the approaching buds; which, to prove fruit,
Hope gives not so much warrant, as despair,
That frosts will bite them. When we mean to build,
We first survey the plot, then draw the model; And when we see the figure of the house,
Then must we rate the cost of the erection;
Which if we find outwights ability,
What do we then, but draw anew the model
In fewer offices; or, at least, design
To build at all? Much more, in this great work, (Which is, almost, to pluck a kingdom down,
And set another up,) should we survey
The plot of situation, and the model;
Consider upon a universal question;
Surveyors; know our own estate,
How able such a work to undergo,
To weigh against his opposite; or else,
We fortify in paper, and in figures,
Using the names of men, instead of men:
Like one, that draws the model of a house
Beyond his power to build it; who, half through,
Gives over, and leaves his part-created cost
A naked subject to the weeping clouds,
And waste for cherisht winter's tyranny.

Arch. Grant, that our hopes (yet likely of fair hold) should be still-born, and that we now possess'd
The utmost man of expectation;
I think, we are a body strong enough,
Even as we are, to equal with the king.

Bard. What is the king but five and twenty thousand?

Hast. To na, no more; nay, not so much, lord Bardolph.

For his divisions, as the times do brawl,
Are in three heads; one power against the French,
And one against Glendower; perficte, a third
Must take us up; So is the unform'd king
In three divided; and his colours sound
With hollow poverty and emptinesse.

Arch. That he should draw his several strengths
Together,
And come against us in full puissance,
Need not be dreaded.

Hast. If he should do so,
He leaves his back unarm'd, the French and Welsh
Baying him at the heels: never fear that.

Bard. Who, is it like, should lead his forces hither?

Hast. The duke of Lancaster, and Westmoreland:
Against whom Welsh, himself, and Harry Monmouth:
But who is substituted 'gainst the French,
I have no certain notice.

Arch. Let us on;
And publish the occasion of our arms,
The commonwealth is sick of their own choice,
Their over-greedye love hath surfeited;—
An habituation giddy and unsure
Hath he, that buildeth on the vulgar heart.
O thou fond many! with what loud applause
Didst thou beat heaven with blessing Bolingbroke,
Before he was what thou'ldst have him be?
And being now crimm't in thine own desires,
Thou, beasty feeder, art so full of him,
That thou provok'st thyself to cast him up.
So, so, thou common dog, didst thou disgorge
Thy gluton bosom of the royal Richard;
And now thou wouldest eat thy dead vomit up,
And howl'st to find it? What trust is in these times?
They that, when Richard liv'd, would have him die
Are now become enamour'd on his grave:
Thou, that threwst dust upon his goodly head,
When throughly proud London he came sighing on
In day doth admiration of Bolingbroke,
Cry'st now, O earth, yelds us that king again,
And take thou this! O thoughts of men accurst!
Past, and to come, seem best; things present, worst.

Momb. Shall we go draw our numbers, and set on?

Hast. We are time's subjects, and time bids be gone.
[Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—London. A Street.

Enter Hostess; Fang, and his Boy, with her; and Snare following.

Host. Master Fang, have you entered the action?

Fang. It is entered.

Host. Where is your yeoman? Is it a lusty yeoman? Will a' stand to't?

Fang. Sirrah, where's Snare?

Host. O, lord, ay; good master Snare.

Snare. Here, here.

Fang. Snare, we must arrest sir John Falstaff.

Host. Yen, good master Snare; I have entered him and all.

Snare. It may chance cost some of us our lives,
For he will stab.

Host. Alas the day! I take heed of him; he stabbed me in mine own house, and that most badly:
In good faith, a' cares not what mischief he doth,
If his weapon be out; he will foin like any devil;
He will spare neither man, woman, nor child.

Fang. If I can close with him, I care not for his thrust.

Host. No, nor I neither: I'll be at your elbow.

Fang. An I but fist him once; an' a' come but within my vice;

Host. I am done by his going; I warrant you, he's an infinitive thing upon my score;—good master Fang, hold him sure;—good master Snare, let him not 'scape. He comes continually to Pies-nonger, (saving your manhoods,) to buy a saddle; and he's indited to dinner to the lubber's head in Lambert-street, to master Smooth's the allman: I upon, by the passion is entered, and my case so openly known to the world, let him be brought in to his answer. A hundred mark is a long loan for a poor lorn woman to bear: and I have borne, and borne, and borne; and have been fuddled off, and fuddled off, and fuddled off, from this day to that day, that it is a shame to be thought on. There is no honesty in such dealing; unless a woman should be made an ass, and a beast, to bear every knave's wrong.

Enter Sir John Falstaff, Page, and Bardolph.

Yonder he comes; and that arrant malmsey-know man, with his company. Do your offices, your offices, master Pang, and master Snare; do me, do me, do me your offices.

Fal. How now? whose mare's dead? what's the matter?

Pang. Sir John, I arrest you at the suit of mistres-ness quickly.

Fal. Away, varlets!—Draw, Bardolph; cut me off the villain's head; throw the queen in the channel.

Host. Throw me in the channel! Ill throw thee in the channel. Will thou? wilt thou? thou bas-tardly rogue!—Murder, murder! 1 thou honey-seeks; thou wilt kill God's officers, and the king's;
1 thou honey-seek rogue thou art a honey-seed;
1 a man queller, and a woman queller.

Fal. Keep them off, Bardolph.

Page. Rescue!—a rescue!

Host. This is my house, bring a rescue or two.—
Thou wilt, wilt thou? thou wilt, wilt thou? do, do, do thou rescue! do, thou hemp-seed!

Fal. Away, you scullion! you rampallian! you fastilastian! I'llattle your catastrophe.

Enter the Lord Chief Justice, attended.

Ch. Just.What's the matter? keep the peace here, boy?

Host. Good my lord, be good to me! I beseech you, stand to me!

Ch. Just. How now, sir John? what are you yawning here?

Doth this become your place, your time, and business?

You should have been well on your way to York.

Stand from him, fellow! Wherefore hang'st thou on him?

Host. 0, my most worshipful lord, an't please your grace, I am a poor widow of Eastcheap, and he is arrested at my suit.

Ch. Just. What a suit?—

Host. It is more than for some, my lord; it is for all, I have: he hath eaten me out of house and home; he hath put all my substance into that fat belly of his,—but I will have some of it out again, or I'll ride thee out, like the mare.

Fal. I think, I am as like to ride the mare, if I have any vantage of ground to get up.

Ch. Just. How comes this, sir John? Fye! what man of good temper would endure this tempest of exclamation? Are you not ashamed, to enforce a poor widow to so rough a course to come by her
of?

Fal. What is the gross sum that I owe thee?

Host. Many, if thou wert an honest man, thyself, and the money too. Thou didst swear to me upon a parcel-gilt goblet, sitting in my Dolphin-chamber, at the round table, by a sea-coal fire, upon Wednesday in Whitsun-week, when the prince broke thy head for liking his father to a singing-man of Windsor, thou didst swear to me then, as I was about to wed, to marry me, and make me my lady thy wife. Canst thou deny it? Did not goodwife Keech, the butcher's wife, come in then, and call me gossip quickly? coming in to hurt me, she was young, she had a good dish of prawns; whereby thou didst desire to eat some; whereby I told thee, they were ill for a green wound? And didst thou not, when she was gone down stairs, desire me to be no more so familiar with such poor people; saying, that ere long they should call me madam? And didst thou not kiss me, and bid me fetch thee thirty shillings
I put thee now to thy book-oath; deny it, if thou canst.

Host. My lord, this is a poor mad soul: and she says, up and down the town, that her eldest son is like you; she hath been in good case, and, the truth is, poverty hath distracted her. But for these foul words, I beseech you, I may have redress against them.

Ch. Just. Sir John, sir John, I am well acquainted with your manner of wrenching the true cause from the way. It is not a confident brow, nor the throng of words that come with such more than impatient sauciness from you, can thrust me from a level consideration; you have, as it appears to me, practised upon the easy yielding spirit of this woman, and made her serve your uses both in pursu and person.

Host. Yea, in troth, my lord.

Ch. Just. Prythee, peace,—Pay her the debt you owe her, and unpay the villain you have done with her; the one you may do with sterling money, and the other with current repeniance.

Fal. My lord, I will not undergo this snape with this madman. I will not endure thee to command business, nor the throng of words that come with such more than impatient sauciness from you, can thrust me from a level consideration; you have, as it appears to me, practised upon the easy yielding spirit of this woman, and made her serve your uses both in pursu and person.

Host. Thou askest no power to do worse: but answer in the effect of your reputation, and satisfy the poor woman.

Fal. Come hither, hostess. [Taking her aside.

Enter Gower.

Ch. Just. New, master Gower: What news?

Gower. The king, my lord, and Harry prince of Wales are near at hand; the rest the paper tells.

Fal. As am a gentleman;—Come, no more words of it.

If he be this heavenly ground I tread on, I must be fain to pawn both my plate, and the tapestry of my dining-chambers.

Fal. Glasses, glasses, is the only drinking; and for thy walls,—a pretty slight drollery, or the story of how, in the German country, fair in water-work, is worth a thousand of these bed-hanguls, and these fly-bitten tapestries. Let it be ten pound if thou canst. Come, an it were not for thy humours, there is not a better wench in England.
Go, wash thy face, and draw thy action: Come, thou must not be in this humour with me; dost not know me? Come, come, I know thou wast set on to this.

Host. Pray thee, sir John, let it be but twenty nobles; I'faith I am loath to pawn my plate, in good earnest, la.

Fal. Let it alone; I'll make other shift: you'll be a fool still.

Host. Well, you shall have it, though I pawn my gown. I hope, you'll come to supper: You'll pay me all together.

Fal. Will I live?—Go, with her, with her; [to Bardolph.] hook on, hook on.

Host. Will you have Doll Tear-sheet meet you at supper?

Fal. I want more words, let's have her.

[Exeunt Hostess, Bardolph, Officers, and Page.

Ch. Just. I have heard better news.

Fal. What's the news, my good lord?

Ch. Just. What of the woman? What of the woman?—

Gower. At Basingstoke, my lord.

Fal. I hope, my lord, all's well: What's the news,
my lord?
Act 2.

KING HENRY IV.

Ch. Just. Come all his forces back?
Gov. No; fifteen hundred foot, five hundred horse,
Are mustered up to my lord of Lancaster,
Against Northumberland, and the archbishop.
Fal. Comes the king back from Wales, my noble lord?
Ch. Just. You shall have letters of me presently.
Come, go along with me, good master Gower.
Fal. My lord!
Ch. Just. What's the matter?
Fal. Master Gower, shall I entreat you with me to dinner?
Gov. I must wait upon my good lord here:
I thank you, good sir John.
Ch. Just. Sir John, you loiter here too long, being you are to take soldiers up in counties as you go.
Fal. Will you sup with me, master Gower?
Ch. Just. What foolish master taught you these manners, sir John?
Fal. Master Gower, if they become me not, he was a fool that taught them me.—This is the right fencing grace, my lord; tap for tap, and so part fair.
Ch. Just. Now the Lord lighten thee! thou art a great fool.
[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. Another Street.

Enter Prince Henry and Poins.

P. Hen. Trust me, I am exceeding weary.
Points. Is it come to that? I had thought, weariness durst not have attached one of so high blood.
P. Hen. Alas! foul Faith it does me; though it discourses the complexion of my greatness to acknowledge it.
Doth it not show vilely in me, to desire small bread?
Points. Why, a prince should not be so loosely studied, as to remember so weak a composition.

P. Hen. Belike then, my appetite was not princely got; for, by my troth, I do now remember the poor creature, small beer. But, indeed, these humble considerations make me out of love with my greatness.
What a disgrace is 't to me, to remember thy name? or to know thy face to-morrow? or to take the many pair of silk stockings thou hast; stiles these, and those that were the peach-colour'd ones? or to hear the inventory of thy shirts; as, one for superfluity, and one other for use?—but that, the tennis court-keeper knows better than I; for it is a low ebb of linen with thee, when thou keepest not racket there; as thou hast not done a great while, because the rest of the low-countries have a shift to eat up thy Holland; and God knows, by my faith, thou hast out the ruins of thy linen, shall inherit his kingdom; but the midwives say, the children are not in the fault; whereupon the world increases, and kindreds are mightily strengthened.
Points. How ill it follows, after you have laboured so hard, you should talk so idly? Tell me, how many good young princes would do so, their fathers being so sick as yours at this time is?
P. Hen. Shall I tell thee one thing, Points?
Points. Yes; and let it be an excellent good thing.
P. Hen. It shall serve among wits of no higher breeding than thine.
Points. Go to; I stand the push of your one thing that you will tell.
P. Hen. Why, I tell thee,—it is not meet that I should be sad; albeit I could tell to thee, (as to one it pleases me, for fault of a better, to call my friend,) I could be sad, and sad indeed too.
Points. I was hardly upon such a subject.
P. Hen. By this hand, thou think'st me as far in the devil's book, as thou, and Falstaff, for obduracy and persistency: Let the end try the man. But I tell thee,—my heart bleeds in me; hardly, that my father is so sick; and keeping such vile company as thou art, hath in reason taken from me all ostentation of sorrow.
Points. The reason?
P. Hen. What wouldst thou think of me, if I should weep?
Points. I would think thee a most princely hypocrite.
P. Hen. It would be every man's thought; and thou art a blessed fellow, to think as every man thinks; never a man's thought in the world keeps the road-way better than thine; every man would think me an hypocrite indeed. And what accites your most worshipful thought to think so?
Points. Why, because you have been so lewd, and so much engrailed to Falstaff.
P. Hen. And to thee.
Points. By this light, I am well spoken of, I can hear it with my own ears: the worst that they can say of me is, that I am a second brother, and that I am a proper fellow of my hands; and those two things, I confess, I cannot help. By the mass, here comes Bardolph.

P. Hen. And the boy that I gave Falstaff: he had him from me christian; and look, if the fat villain have not transformed him ape.

Enter Bardolph and Page.

Bard. 'Save your grace!
P. Hen. And yours, most noble Bardolph!
Bard. Commen'ge, sir knight, [to the Page,] you bashful fool, must you be blushing? wherefore blush you now? What a maidenly man at arms are you become? Is it such a matter, to get a potter's maiden's page?
Page. He called me even now, my lord, through a red lattice, and I could discern no part of his face from the window; at last, I spied his eyes; and, methought, he had made two holes in the ale-wife's new petticoat, and peeped through.
P. Hen. Hath not the boy profited?
Bard. Away, you whoreson upright rabble, away! Page. Away, you rashly Althea's dream, away!
P. Hen. Instruct us, boy: What dream, boy?
Page. Marry, my lord, Althea dreamed she was delivered of a fire-brand; and therefore I call him her dream.
P. Hen. A crown's worth of good interpretation.
Page. There it is, boy.
Points. O, that this good blossom could be kept from cankers!—Well, there is sixpence to preserve thee.

Bard. An you do not make him be hanged among you, the gallows shall have wrong.
P. Hen. And how doth thy master, Bardolph?
Bard. Well, my lord. He heard of your grace's coming to town; and there's none but you.
Points. Delivered with good respect. And how doth the martelias, your master?
Bard. In bodily health, sir.
Points. Marry, the immortal part needs a physician: but that moves not him; though that be sick, it dies not.
P. Hen. I do allow this wen to be as familiar with me as my dog; and he holds his place; for, look you, how he writes.
Points. [Reads.] John Falstaff, knight,—Every man must know that, as oft as he has occasion to name himself. Even like those that are kin to the king; for they never prick their finger, but they say, There is some of the king's blood spilt; How comes that? says he, that takes upon him not to conceive: the answer is as ready as a borrower's cap; I am the king's poor cousin, sir.
P. Hen. Nay, they will be kin to us, or they will fetch it from Japhet. But the letter:
Points. Sir John Falstaff, knight, to the son of the king, a Newspense, Sir John, father, Harry prince of Wales, greeting,—Why, this last certificate.
P. Hen. Peace!
Points. I will imitate the honourable Roman in brevity:—he sure means brevity in breath; short-winded. 'I commend me to thee, I commend thee, and I leave thee. Be not too familiar with Pola; for he misuses thy favours so much, that he sweats, thou art to marry his sister Nell. Repent at idle times as thou may'rt, and so farewell.

Thine, by you and no, (which is as much as to say, as thou usedst,) Jack Falstaff, with my sisters: John, with my brothers and sisters: and our John with all Europe.

My lord, I will steep this letter in sack, and make him eat it.

P. Hen. That's to make him eat twenty of his words; heavens, use me thus, Ned? must I marry your sister?

Pols. May the wench have no worse fortune! but I never said so.

P. Hen. Well, thus we play the fools with the time; and the spirits of the wise sit in the clouds, and mock us. Is your master here in London?

Bard. Yes, my lord.

P. Hen. Where sups he? doth the old boar feed in the old frank?

Bard. At the old place, my lord; in Eastcheap.

P. Hen. What company?

Page. Ephesians, my lord; of the old church.

P. Hen. Were these women with him?

Page. None, my lord, but old mistress Quickly, and mistress Doll Tear-sheet.

P. Hen. What pagan may that be?

Page. A young gentleman, sir, and a kind woman of my master's.

P. Hen. Even such kin, as the parish heiresses are to the town bull. Shall we steel upon them, Ned, at supper time?

Pols. I am your shadow, my lord; I'll follow you.

P. Hen. Sirrah, you boy,—and Bardolph; no word to your master, that I am yet come to town: There's for your silence. Bard. I have no tongue, sir.

Page. And for mine, sir—I will govern it.

P. Hen. Page, ye well; go. [Exeunt Bardolph and Page.] This Doll Tear-sheet should be some toad.

Pols. I warrant you, as common as the way between Saint Albans and London.

P. Hen. How mighty we see Falstaff bestow himself to-night in his true colours, and not ourselves be seen?

Pols. Put on two leather jerkins, and aprons, and write upon him at his table as drawers.

P. Hen. From a god to a bull? a heavy descent! it was Jove's case. From a prince to a prentice? a low transformation! that shall be mine: for, in every thing, the purpose must weigh with the folly. Follow me, Ned. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Warkworth. Before the Castle.

Enter Northumberland, Lady Northumberland, and Lady Percy.

North. I pray thee, loving wife, and gentle daughter.

Give even way unto my rough affairs; Put not you on the visage of the times, And be, like them, to Percy troublesome Lady N. I have given over, I will speak no Do what you will; your wisdom be your guide.

North. Alas, sweet wife, my honour is at pawn: And, but my going, nothing can redeem it. Lady P. O! yet, for God's sake, go not to these wars!

The time was, father, that you broke your word, When you were more endeared to it than now; When you were to Percy, when my heart's dear Harry, Threw many a northward look, to see his father Bring up his powers; but he did long in vain. Who then persuaded you to stay at home? There were two honours lost; yours, and your son's.

For yours, may heavenly glory brighten it! For his,—it stuck upon him, as the sun in the grey vault of heaven: and, by his light, Did all the ichor of England move and so farewell.

Thine, by you and no, (which is as much as to say, as thou usedst,) Jack Falstaff, with my sisters: John, with my brothers and sisters: and our John with all Europe.

SCENE IV.—London. A Room in the Boar's Head Tavern, in Eastcheap.

Enter Two Drawers.

2 Draw. Mais, thou sayest true: The prince once set a dish of apple-Johns before him, and told him, there were five more sir John: and, putting off his hat, said, I will now take my leave of these dear, withered kind, it angered him to the heart: but he hath forgot that.

1 Draw. Why then, cover, and set them down: And see if thou canst find out sneek's noise; mis- tres Tear-sheet would fain hear some music. Despatch. — The room where they supped, is too hot; they'll come in straight.

2 Draw. Sirrah, here will be the prince, and master Polian anon: and they will put on two or our jerkins, and aprons: and sir John must not know of it: Bardolph hath brought word.

For yours, may heavenly glory brighten it! For his,—it stuck upon him, as the sun in the grey vault of heaven: and, by his light, Did all the ichor of England move
KING HENRY IV.

Act 2.

1 Draw. By the mass, here will be old utis: It will be an excellent stratagem.
2 Draw. I'll see, if I can end out Sneak. [Exil.

Enter Hostess and Doll Tear-sheet.

Host. If truth, sweet heart, methinks now you are in an excellent good temperality: your pulisidge beats as extraordinarily as heart would desire; and your colour, I warrant you, is as red as any rose:
But, if truth, you have drunk too much canaries; and that's a marvellous searching wine, and it perfumes the blood ere one can say,—What's this? How do you now?

Doll. Better than I was. Hem.

Host. Why, that's well said; a good heart's worth gold. Look, here comes sir John.

Enter Falstaff, singing.

Fal. When Arthur first in court.—Empty the jordan.—And was a worthy king: [Exit Drawer. How now, mistress Doll?

Host. Sick of a calm: ye, good sooth.

Fal. So is all her sect; an they be once in a calm, they are sick.

Doll. You muddy rascal, is that all the comfort you give me?

Fal. You make fat racasles, mistress Doll.

Doll. I make them! glutony and diseases make them; I make them not.

Fal. If the cook help to make the glutony, you help to eat the diseases. Doll: we catch of you, Doll, we catch of you; grant that, my poor virtue, grant that.

Doll. Ay, marry; our chains, and our jewels.

Fal. Your brooches, pearls, and onche:—for to serve bravely, is to come halting off, you know: To come off the breach with his pike bent bravely, and to surgery bravely; to venture upon the charged chambers bravely.

Doll. Hang yourself, you muddy conger, hang yourself!

Host. By my troth, this is the old fashion: you two never meet, but you fall to some discord: you are both, in good troth, as rheumatick as two dry toasts; you cannot one bear with another's con- formities. What the good-year! one must bear, and that must be you: to Doll you are the weake vessel, as they say, the emptier vessel.

Doll. Can a weak empty vessel bear such a huge full hogshhead? there's a whole merchant's venture of Bourdeaux stuff in him; you have not seen a half meath, better ploughed in the hold. Come, I'll be friends with thee, Jack: thou art going to the wars; and whether I shall ever see thee again, or no, there is nobody cares.

Re-enter Drawer.

Draw. Sir, ancient Pistol's below, and would speak with you.

Doll. Hang him, swaggering rascal! let him not come hither: it is the foul mouth'd rogue in England.

Host. If he swagger, let him not come here: no, by my faith; I must live amongst my neigh- bours; to call no swaggerers: I am in good name and fame with the very best:—Shut the door:—there comes no swaggerers here; I have not lived all this while, to have swaggering now:—shut the door, I pray you.

Fal. Dost thou hear, hostess?—

Host. Pray you, pacify yourself, sir John; there comes no swaggerers here.

Fal. Dost thou hear? I am mine ancient.

Host. Tilly-fally, sir John, never tell me; your ancient swaggerer comes not in my doors. I was before master Tislick, the deputy, the other day; and, as he said to me,—it was no longer ago than Wednesday last,—"Nearbour quickly, says he,—master Dumb, our minister, was by then;—Nearbou Quickly, says he, receive those that are civil; for, saith he, you are in an ill name:—now he said so, I can tell whereupon; for, says he, you are an honest woman, and well thought on; therefore take heed what guests you receive: Receive, says he, no swaggering companions. —There comes none here;—you would bless you to hear what he said:—no, I'll no swaggerers.

Fal. He's no swaggerer, hostess; a tame cheater, he; you may stroke him as gently as a puppy greyhound: he will not swagger with a Barbary hen, if he could get him back in any show of resistance. —Call him up, drawer.

Host. Cheater, call you him? I will bar no honest man my house, nor no cheater: But I do not love swaggering; by my troth, I am the worse, when one says,—"My master, my master, how I shake; I look you, I warrant you.

Doll. So you do, hostess.

Enter Pistol, Bardolph, and Page.

Pist. Save you, sir John!

Fal. Welcome, ancient Pistol. Here, Pistol, I charge you with a cup of sack: do you discharge upon mine hostess.

Pist. I will discharge upon her, sir John, with two bullets.

Fal. She is pistol-proof, sir; you shall hardly offend her,

Host. Come, I'll drink no proofs, nor no bullets: I'll drink no more than will do me good, for no robber of my pleasures.

Pist. Then to you, mistress Dorothy; I will charge you.

Doll. Charge me? I scorn you, scurrvy companion. What you must, base, rascally, cheating, lack-linen mate! Away, you mouldy rogue, away! I am meate for your master.

Pist. I know you, mistress Dorothy.

Doll. Away with you, clear rogue! You filthy bung, away! by this wine, I'll thrust my knife in your mouldy chaps, an you play the saucy cuttle with me. Away, you bottle-ale rascal! you basket- hilted stale juggler, you!—since when, I pray you, sir?—What, with two points on your shoulder! much?

Pist. I will murder your ruff for this.

Fal. No more, Pistol; I would not have you go off here: discharge yourself of our company, Pistol.

Host. No, good captain Pistol; not here, sweet captain.

Doll. Captain! thou abominable damned cheater, art thou not ashamed to be called—captain? If captains were of my mind, they would trunchon you out, for taking their names upon you before you have earned them. You a captain, can you slave! for what? for tearing a poor whore's ruff in a bawdy-house?—He a captain! Hang him, rogue! He lives upon mouldy stewed prunes, and dried cakes. A captain! these villains will make the word captain as odious as the word occup; which was an excellent good word before it was ill sort- ed: therefore captains had need look to it.

Bard. Pray thee, go down, good ancient.

Fal. Harry thee hither, mistress Doll.

Pist. Not I: tell thee what, corporal Bardolph:—I could tear her:—I'll be revenged on her.

Page. Pray thee, go down.

Fal. Till I get proofs:—to Pluto's damned lake, to the infernal deep, with Erebus and tortures vile also. Hold hook and line, say I. Down! down, dogs! down faithors! Have we not marked him here?

Host. Good captain Peeceel, be quiet; it is very late, if'faith: I beseech you now, aggravate your choler.

Pist. These be good humours, indeed! Shall packhorses, And hollow pamper'd jades of Asia, Which cannot go but thirty miles a day, Compare with Cæsars, and with Cannibals.
SECOND PART OF

Enter behind, Prince Henry and Pains, disguised like Drawers.

Fal. Peace, good Doll! do not speak like a death's head: do not bid me remember mine end.

Doll. Sirrah, what humour is the prince of? Enter the thalow young fellow: he would have made a good pantler, he would have chipped bread well.

Doll. The heay, Pains has a good wit.

Fal. But this good wit? hang him, baloon! his wit is as thick as Tewksbury mustard; there is no more conceit in him, than is in a mallet.

Doll. Why does the prince love him so then?

Fal. Though their legs are both of a blackness: and he plays at quots well; and eats conger and fennel; and drinks off candles' ends for flap-dragons; and rides the wild mare with the boys; and jumps upon joint-stools; and swears with a good grace; and wears his boot very smooth, like unto the sign of the leg; and breeds no bate with telling of discreet stories, and such other gambol faculties he hath, that show a weak mind and an able body, for the which the prince admits him: for the prince himself is such another: the weight of a hair will turn the scales between their soft and point.

P. Hen. Would not this nape of a wheel have his ears cut off?

Doll. Let's beat him before his whore.

P. Hen. Look, if the withered elder hath not his heart turned to his head.

Doll. Is it not strange, that desire should so many years outlive performance?

Fal. Kiss me, Doll.

Doll. Is Saturn and Venus this year in conjunction? who says the almanack to that?

Doll. And, look, whether the fiery Trigon, his man, be not lisping to his master's old tables; his note-book, his counsel-keeper.

Fal. Thou dost give me flattering busses.

Doll. Nay, truly; I kiss thee with a most constant heart.

Fal. I am old, I am old.

Doll. I love thee better than I love ever a scurvy young boy of them all.

Doll. What stuff wilt have a kittle of? I shall receive money on Thursday; thou shalt have a cap to-morrow. A merry thing, come: it grows late, well to bed. Thou!t forget me, when I am gone.

Doll. By my thought thou!t set me a weeping, an thou sayest so: prove that ever I dress myself honest till thy return.—Well, beaurok the end.

Fal. Some sack, Francis.

Doll. Ha! a bastard son of the king's! And art thou not Pains his brother?

P. Hen. Why, thou globe of sinful contemplations, what a life dost thou lead?

Fal. A better than thou; I am a gentleman, thou art a drawer.

P. Hen. Very true, sir: and I come to draw you out by the ears.

Host. O, the Lord preserve thy good grace! by any troth, welcome to London.—Now the Lord bless that sweet face of thine! O Jesus, are you come from Wales?

Fal. Thou whoreson mad compound of majesty, by this bright flesh and corrupt blood, thou art welcome. [Leaning his hand upon Doll.

Doll. How! you fat fool, I scorn you.

Points. My lord, he will drive you out of your restaurant, and turn all to a merriment, if you take not the heat.

P. Hen. You whoreson candle-mine, you, how witty did you speak of me even now, before this honest, valiant, civil gentleman? He was my brother, and that was your good heart! and so she is, by my troth.

Fal. Didst thou hear me?
KING HENRY IV.

Act 3.

P. Hen. Yes; and you knew me, as you did when you ran away by Gads-hill: you knew, I was at your back; and spoke it on purpose, to try my patience.

Fal. No, no, no, not so: I did not think, thou wast within hearing.

P. Hen. I shall drive you then to confess the wild abuse; and then I know how not to handle you.

Fal. No abuse, Hal, on mine honour; no abuse.

P. Hen. Not to dispraise me; and call me pantler, and bread-chipper, and I know not what?

Fal. No abuse, Hal.

Poisn. No abuse.

Fal. Not for abuse, Ned, in the world; honest Ned, none. I dispraised him before the wicket, that the wicked might not fall in love with him:—in which doing, I have done the part of a careful friend, and a true subject, and thy father is to give me thanks for it. No abuse, Hal:—none, Ned, none:—no, boys, none.

P. Hen. See now, whether pure fear, and entire cowardice, do not make thee wrong this virtuous gentlewoman to close with us? Is she of the wicked?
is thine hostess here of the wicked? or is the boy of the wicked? Or honest Bardolph, whose zeal burns in his nose, of the wicked?

Poisn. Answer, thou deceitful answer.

Fal. The fiend hath pricked down Bardolph, Ir recoverable; and his face is Lucifer's privy-kitchen, where he doth nothing but roast malt-worms. For this boy, there is a good angel about him; but the devil outbids him too.

P. Hen. For the women—

Fal. For one of them,—she is in hell already, and burns for poor soul! For the other,—I owe her money; and whether she be damned for that, I know not.

Host. No, I warrant you.

Fal. No, I think thou art not; I think, thou art quit for that. To marry and another indictment upon thee, for suffering flesh to be eaten in thy house, contrary to the law; for which, I think, thou wilt have.

Host. All victualers do so: What's a joint of mutton or two in a whole Lent?

P. Hen. You, gentlewoman,—

Doll. What says your grace for these?

Fal. My grace says that which his flesh rebels against.

Host. Who knocks so loud at door? look to the door there, Francis.

Enter Peto.

P. Hen. Peto, how now? what news?

Peto. The king your father is at Westminster;
And there are twenty weak and wailed posts,
Come from the north: and, as I came along,
I met, and overtook, a dozen captains,
Bare-headed, sweating, knocking at the taverns,
And asking every one for sir John Falstaff:

P. Hen. By heaven, Pots, I feel me much to blame,
So silly to profane the precious time;
When tempest of commotion, like the south
Borne with black vapour, begin to swell,
And drop upon our bare unarm'd heads.
Give me my sword, and cloak:—Falstaff, good night.

[Exeunt Prince Henry, Poins, Peto, and Bardolph.

Fal. Now comes in the sweetest morsel of the night, and we must hence, and leave it unpicked.
[Knocking heard.] More knocking at the door?

Re-enter Bardolph.

How now? what's the matter?

Bard. You must away to court, sir, presentely: a dozen captains stay at door for you.

Fal. Pay the musicians, sirrah. [To the Page.—]

Farewell, hostess:—farewell, Doll. —You see, my good wenches, how men of merit are sought after:
the undesigner may sleep, when the man of action is called on. Farewell, good wenches: if I be not sent away post, I will see you again ere I go.

Doll. I cannot speak:—if my heart be not ready to burst:—well, sweet Jack, have a care of thyself.

Fal. Farewell, fairewell. [Exeunt Falstaff and Bardolph.

Host. Well, fare thee well: I have known thee these twenty-nine years, come peacocked time; but an honest and truer-hearted man,—Well, fare thee well.

Bard. [Within.] Mistress Tear-sheet,—

Host. What's the matter?

Bard. [Within.] Did mistress Tear-sheet come to my master.

Host. O run, Doll, run; run, good Doll.

[Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I.——A Room in the Palace.

Enter King Henry in his nightgown, with a Page.

K. Hen. Go, call the ears of Surrey and of Warwick;

But, ere they come, bid them o'er-read these letters.

And well consider of them: Make good speed.

[Exit Page.

How many thousand of my poorest subjects
Are at this house asleep!—Needs Nature's soft nurse, how have I fainted thee,
That thou no more wilt weigh my eye-lids down,
And steep my senses in forgetfulness?
Which rather, sleep, lies thou in smoky cribs,
Upon uneasy pallets stretching thee,
And hush'd with buzzing night-flies to thy slumber;
Then in the Perfum'd chambers of the great,
Under the canopies of costly hangings
And kull'd with sounds of sweetest melody?
O thou dull god, why liest thou with the vile,
In loathsome beds; and leav'st the kingly couch,
A watch-case, or a common 'larum-bell?—
With thou upon the high and giddy mast
Seal up the ship-boy's eyes, and rock his brains
In cradle of the rude imperious surge;
And in the visitation of the winds,
Who take the ruffian billows by the top,
Curling their monstrous heads, and hanging them
With deaf'ning clamours in the slippery clouds,
That, with the hurl, death itself awakes?
Canst thou, O partial sleep! I give up repose
To the wet sea-boy in an hour so rude;
And, in the calmest and most stilliest night,
With all appliances and means to boot,
Deny it to a king? Then, happy low, lie down!
Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown.

Enter Warwick and Surrey.

War. Many good morrows to your majesty!

K. Hen. Is it good morrow, lords?

War. 'Tis one o'clock, and past.

K. Hen. Why then, good morrow to you all, my lords.

Have you read o'er the letters that I sent you?

War. We have, my liege,

K. Hen. Then you perceive, the body of our kings
How foul it is! what rank diseases grow,
And with what danger, near the heart of it.

War. It is but a body, yet, distemper'd;
Which to his former strength may be restor'd,
With good advice, and little motive.

My lord Northumberland will soon be cool'd.

K. Hen. O heaven! that one might read the book of fate;

And see the revolution of the times
Make mountains level, and the continent
(Weary of solid firmness,) melt itself
Into the sea ! and, other times, to see
The beaky girdle of the ocean
Too wide for Neptune's hips; how chances muck.

2 A
SECOND PART OF

Act 3

And changes all the cup of alteration
With divers liquors! So, if this were seen,
The happiest youth, viewing his progress through,
What port is past, what course to pursue—
Would shunt the book, and sit him down and die.
'Tis not ten years gone,
Since Richard, and Northumberland, great friends,
Did meet, and, in the very face of death,
Were they at wars: It is but eight years, since
This Percy was the man nearest my soul;
Who like a brother told in my affairs,
And I did love and live under my roof;
Yes, for my second son; and he, of Richard,
Gave him defiance. But which of you was by,
(You, cousin Neville, as I may remember.)

[To Warwick.

When Richard,—with his eye brimful of tears,
Then check'd and rated by Northumberland,—
Did speak these words, now prov'd a prophecy?
Northumberland, then ladder, by the which
My cousin fool'd broke ascend my throne.

Though then, heaven knows, I had no such intention;
But that necessity so how'd the state,
That I and greatness were compell'd to kiss:
The time shall come, thus did he follow it,
The time will come, that final sin, gathering head,
Shall break into corruption,—so went on.
Forbidding this, the time's condition,
And the division of our amity.

War. There is a history in all men's lives,
Figuring the nature of the times deceas'd:
The which observ'd, a man may prophesy.
With a near aim, of the main chance of things
As yet not come to life; which in their seeds,
And weak beginnings, is intent
Such things become the hatch and brood of time;
And, by the necessary form of this,
King Richard might create a perfect guess,
That great Northumberland, then false to him,
Would, of that seed, grow to a greater fall:
Which should not find a ground to root upon,
Unless on you.

K. Hen. Are these things then necessities?
Then let us meet them like necessities
And that same word, even now get out on us;
They say, the bishop and Northumberland
Are fifty thousand strong.

War. It cannot be, my lord;
Reap what thou dost sowed, like the earth and echo,
The numbers of the fear'd,—Please it your grace,
To go to bed; upon my life, my lord,
The powers that you already have sent forth,
Shall, by pursuing this price in very easily.
To confirm you more, I have receive'd
A certain instance, that (Glendower is dead).
Your majesty hath been this fortnight ill;
And these nine month's hours, perfurse, must add
Unto your sickness.

I will take your counsel:
And were these inward wars once out of hand,
We would, dear lords, unto the Holy Land.

[Exeunt]

SCENE II.—Court before Justice Shallow's House in Gloucestershire.

Enter Shallow and Silence, meeting: Mouldy, Shadow,
Wart, Feeble, Bull-calf, and Servants behind.

Shal. Come on, come on, come on; give me your hand, sir, give me your hand, sir: an early stirrer, by the road. And how doth my good cos-in Silence?

Sil. To morrow, good cousin Shallow.

Shal. And how doth my cousin, your bedfellow?
and your fairest daughter, and mine, my god-ddaughter Ellen?

Sil. Alas, a black ocell, cousin Shallow.

Shal. By your leave, sir, I dare say, my cousin William is become a good scholar: He is at Oxford still, be net.

Sil. Indeed, sir: to my cost.

Shal. He must then to the inns of court shortly:
I was once of Clement's-inn; where, I think, they will talk of mad shallow yet.

Sil. You were called—lusty shallow, then, cousin.

Shal. By the mass, I was called any thing; and I would have done any thing, indeed, and ronndly too. There was I, and little John Doit of Staffordshire, and Jack George Burmely, and Francis Rick-bone, and Will Squeal a Cotswold man,—yon had not four such swing-bolders in all the inns of court again: and, I may say to you, we knew where the better part was carried: and here are dead!

Sil. We shall all follow, cousin.

Shal. Certain, 'ts certain; very sure, very sure.

Sil. Doth he venture, that the Justice shall be sent, is certain to all; all shall come.

Shal. How a good joke of bullocks at Stamford-fair?

Sil. Truly, cousin, I was not there.

Shal. Death is certain.—Is old Doubt of your town ever out these days?

Sil. Dead, sir.

Shal. Dead!—See, see!—he drew a good bow;
And dead!—he shot a fine shot.—John of Gaunt loved him well, and did bettie much money on his head.

Shal. He would have made a tolerable score at a reasonable: and he himself did have a forehand shaft a forty and fourteen and a half, that it would have done a man's heart good to see.—How a score of eves now.

Sil. Thereafter as they be: a score of good eves may be worth ten pounds.

Shal. And is old Double dead?

Enter Bardolph, and over with him.

Sil. Here come two of sir John Falstaff's men, as I think.

Bard. Good morrow, honest gentlemen: I beseech you, which is Justice Shallow?

Shal. I am Robert Shallow, sir; a poor esquire of this county, and one of the king's justices of the peace, and am very good pleasure with him.

Bard. My captain, sir, commends him to you:
my captain, sir John Falstaff: a tall gentleman, by heaven, and most a gallant leader.

Shal. Sir, I am well, sir; I know him a good backward man: How doth the good knight? may
I ask, how my lady his wife doth?

Bard. Sir, pardon; a soldier is better accommodated, than a knight's wife.

Shal. It is well said, in faith, sir; and it is well said indeed too. Better accommodated!—it is good; yea, indeed, it is: good phrases are surely,
and ever were, very commendable. Accommodated! From accommodate: very good; a good phrase.

Bard. Pardon me, sir; I have heard the word.

Shal. Phrase, call you it? By this good day, I know not the phraseology, but I will maintain in the word with my sword, to be a soldier-like word, and a word of exceeding good command. Accommodated; That is, when a man is, as they say, accommodated: or, perhaps, they are dead:—whereby—be may not be thought to be accommodated; which is an excellent thing.

Enter Falstaff.

Shal. It is very just:—Look, here comes good sir John.—Give me your good hand, give me your workman's good hand: By my troth, you look well,
...and bear your years very well: welcome, good sir John.

Fal. I am glad to see you well, good master Robert Shallow.—Master sure-card, as I think.

Shal. No, sir John; it is my cousin Silence, in common with me.

Fal. Good master Silence, it well befits you should be of the peace.

Sil. Your good worship is welcome.

Fal. Fye! this is hot weather.—Gentlemen, here's provided me here half a dozen sufficient men?

Shal. Marry, have we, sir. Will you sit? Fal. Let me see them, I beseech you.

Shal. O, here's the roll? where's the roll? where's the roll?—Let me see, let me see. So, so, so: Yea, marry, sir.—Ralph Mouldy: let them appear as I call; let them do so, let them do so.—Let me see; Where is Mouldy?

Moul. Here, an't please you.

Shal. What think you, sir John? a good limbed fellow: young, strong, and of good friends.

Fal. Is thy name Mouldy?

Moul. Yes, an't please you.

Fal. 'Tis the more time thou wert used.

Shal. Ha, ha, ha! most excellent, if'faith! things, that are mouldy, lack use; Very singular good—In fact, very well said, sir John; very well said.

Moul. I was prick'd well enough before, an you could have let me alone: my old dame will be undone, when she seeth to her husbandry, and her drudgery: you need not to have prick'd me; there are other men fitter to go out than I.

Fal. Go to; peace, Mouldy, you shall go. Mouldy it is time you were spent.

Moul. Spent!

Shal. Peace, fellow, peace; stand aside: Know you where you are?—For the other, sir John:—let him well said, sir John; very well said.

Fal. Ay marry, let me have him to sit under: he's like to be a cold soldier.

Shal. Where's Shadow? Shad. There he is.

Fal. Shadow, whose son art thou?

Shad. My mother's son, sir.

Fal. Thy mother's son! like enough; and thy father's shadow: so the son of the female is the shadow of the male; it is often so, indeed; but not much of the father's substance.

Shal. Do you like him, sir John?

Fal. Shadow will serve for summer,—prick him, for we a many of shadows to fill up the muster-book.

Shal. Thomas Wart!

Wart. Where's he?

Fal. Is thy name Wart?

Wart. Yea, sir.

Fal. Thou art a very ragged warr.

Shal. Shall I prick him, sir John.

Fal. It were superfluous; for his apparel is built upon his back, and the whole frame stands upon pins: prick him no more.

Shal. Ha, ha, ha!—you can do it, sir; you can do it: I hope, sir, you will.—Francis Feeble!

Fee. Here, sir.

Fal. What trade art thou, Feeble?

Fee. A woman's tailor, sir.

Shal. Shall I prick him, sir?

Fal. You may: but if he had been a man's tailor, he would have prick'd you.—Wilt thou make as many holes in an enemy's battle, as thou hast done in a woman's Petticoat! Fee. I will do my good will, sir; you can have no more.

Shal. Well said, good woman's tailor! well said, courageous lady! Thou wilt be as valiant as the wrathful dove, or most magnanimous mouse: Prick the woman's tailor well, master Shallow; deep, master Shallow.

Fee. I would, Wart might have gone, sir.
SECOND PART OF

ACT 4.

SCENE I.—A Forest in Yorkshire.

Enter the Archbishop of York, Mowbray, Hastings, and others.

Arch. What is this forest call'd? [Exit the Archbishop, Mowbray, Hastings, and others.]

Hast. 'Tis Guisairtree, 'sn't shall please your highness.

Arch. Here stand, my lords: and send discoverers forth,

To know the numbers of our enemies.

Hast. We have sent forth already.

Arch. Hast, I know you do well done.

My friends, and brethren in these great affairs,

I must acquaint you that I have receiv'd

New dated letters from Northumberland;

Their cold intent, tenour and substance, thus:

Here doth he wish his person, with such power,

As might hold sordainc with his quality,

The which he could not levy: whereupon

He is retir'd, to rife his growing fortunes,

To Scotland: and concludes in hearty prayers,

That your attempts may over live the hazard,

And fearfull meeting of their opposite.

Mowbr. Thus do the hopes we have in him touch ground,

And dash themselves to pieces.

Enter a Messenger.

Hast. Now, what news? Mowbr. West, this forest, scarcely off a mile,

In goodly form comes on the enemy:

And, by the ground they hide, I judge their num-

Upon, or near, the rate of thirty thousand.

Mowbr. The just proportion that we gave them out.

Let us away on, and face them in the field.

Enter Westmoreland.

Arch. What well-appointed leader fronts us here? Mowbr. I think, it is my lord of Westmoreland.

West. Health and fair greeting from our general,

The prince, lord John and duke of Lancaster.

Arch. Unquestion, my lord of Westmoreland, in peace:

What doth concern your coming? West. Then, my lord,

Under whose grace do I in chief address.

The substance of my speech. If that rebellion

Came like itself, in base and subject roots,

Led on by bloody youth, guarded with rage,

And countenanc'd by boys, and beggary; I say, if damm'd commotion so appear'd,

In his true, native, and most proper shape,

You, reverend father, and these noble lords,

Had not been here, to dress the ugly form

Of base and bloody insurrection; for you

With your fair honours. You, lord archbishop,—

Whose see is by a civil peace maintain'd;
Whose beard the silver hand of peace hath touch'd;
Whose learning and good letters peace hath
Whose white investments figure Innocence,
The dove and very blessed spirit of peace,—
Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself,
Our love at both our bosoms of such grace,
Into the harsh and boist'rous tongue of war?
Turning your books to graves, your ink to blood,
Your pens to lances; and your tongue divine
To that, by instinct, and by dint of sword.

Arch. Wherefore do I this?—so the question stands.
Briefly to this end.—We are all diseas'd;
And, with the surfet of our sufferings, we
Have brought ourselves into a burning fever,
And we must bleed for it: of which disease
Our late king, Richard, being infected, died.
But, my most noble lord of Westmoreland,
I turn me here as a physician;
Nor do I, as an enemy to peace,
Troop in the throns of military men:
But, rather, show a while like fearful war,
To diet rank minds, sick of happiness;
And purge the obstructions, which begin to stop
Our very veins of life. Hear me more plainly.
I have in equal balance justly weigh'd
What your brave arms may do, what wrongs we suffer
And find our griefs heavier than our offences. We see which way the stream of time doth run, And, with respect to this, we attack an heir. And, by the torch of occasion:
And have the summary of all our griefs,
When time shall serve, to show in articles;
When, in a long while, this, we are a war king, And might by no suit gain our audience;
When we are wrong'd, and would unfold our griefs,
We are denied access unto his person.
Even by those men that most have done us wrong,
The dangers of the days but newly gone,
(Whose memory is written on the earth
With yet-appearing blood,) and the examples
Of long, long since, instance, (present now,) Have put us in these ill-beeasing arms: Not to break peace, or any branch of it; But to establish here a peace indeed, Conscionable both in name and quality.
West. When ever yet was your appeal denied? Wherein have you been galled by the king? What peer hath been suborn'd to grate on you? That which should catch this lawless band, A bloody book of forg'd rebellion with a seal divine,
And consecrate commotion's bitter edge.
Arch. My brother general, the commonwealth,
To brother born an household cruelty,
I make my quarrell in particular.
West. There is no need of any such redress; Or, if there were, it not belongs to you.
West. West. We say not to him, in part; and to us all,
That feel the bruisers of the days before;
And suffer the condition of these times
To lay a heavy and unequal hand
Upon our honour?

West. O my good lord Mowbray,
Construe the times to their necessities,
And you shall say indeed,—it is the time,
Not the king, that doth you injuries.
Yet, for your part, it not appear'd
Either from the king, or in the present time,
That you should have an inch of any ground
To build a grief on: Were you not restor'd
To all the dukes of Norfolk's dignities.
Your noble and right-well-remember'd father's?
Momb. What thing, in honour, had my father
That need be reviv'd, and breath'd in me?
The king, that lov'd him, as the state stood then,
Was, force perforce, compel'd to banish him:
And then, when Harry Bolingbroke, and he—

Being mounted, and both roused in their seats,
Their neighing coursers daring of the spur,
Their armed staves in charge, for attack,
Their eyes of fire sparkling through sights of steel,
And the loud trumpet blowing them together;
Then, then, when there was nothing could have staid
My father from the breast of Bolingbroke,
O, when the king did throw his warder down,
His own life hung upon the staff he threw;
Then threw he down himself; and all their lives,
And blessings, and grace, and all of them,
Have since miscarried under Bolingbroke.

West. You speak, lord Mowbray, now you know not what:
The earl of Northumberland was then
In England the most valiant gentleman;
Who knows, on whom fortune would then have smil'd?
But, if your father had been victor there,
He ne'er had been out of Coventry.
For all the country, in a general voice,
Cried hate upon him; and all their prayers, and love,
Were cast on Hereford, whom they doted on,
And bless'd, and grace'd indeed, more than the king.

But this is more digression from my purpose.—
Here come our provokes of the peace of general.
To know your griefs; to tell you from his grace,
That he will give you audience; and wherein
It shall appear that your demands are just,
You need no more; from thence, every thing set off;
That might so much as think you enemies.

Momb. But he hath forc'd us to compel this offer;
And it jourest from policy, not love.

West. Mowbray, you overween, to take it so;
This offer comes from mercy, not from fear:
For, lo! within a ken, our army lies:
Upon mine honour, all too confident
To give admittance to a thought of fear.
Our battle is more full of names than yours,
Our men more perfect in the use of arms,
Our armour all as strong, our cause the best:
Then reason wills, our hearts should be as good;
Say you not then, our offer is compel'd.

Momb. Well, by my will, we shall admit no parley.

West. The end argues but the shame of your offence:
A rotten case abides no handling.

Hast. IfthatheprinceJohnafullcommission,
In very ample virtue of this true
To hear, and absolutely to determine
Of what conditions we shall stand upon?

West. That is intended in the general's name;
I muse, you make so slight a question.

Arch. Then take, my lord of Westmoreland, this schedule;
For this contains our general grievances:—
Each several article herein redress'd;
All members of our cause, both here and hence;
That are insinu'd to this action,
Acquitted by a true substantial form;
And present execution of our wills
To us, and to our purposes, consign'd;
We come within our awful banks again,
And knit our powers to the arm of peace.

West. This will I show the general. Please you, lord
In sight of both our battles we may meet:
And either end in peace, which heaven so frame!
Or to the place of difference call the swords
Which must decide it.

Arch. My lord, we will do so.

Momb. There is a thing within my bosom, tells me
That no conditions of our peace can stand.

Hast. Fear you not that: if we can make our Upon such large terms, and so absolute,
SECOND PART OF

As our conditions shall consist upon,
Our peace shall stand as firm as rocky mountains.

Mowbr. Ay, but our valuation shall be such,
That every slight and false derived cause,
Vea, every idle, nice, and wanton reason,
Shall, to the king, taste of this action:
That every word, and every look in love,
We shall be winnow'd with so rough a wind,
That every corn shall seem as light as chaff,
And good from bad find no partition.

Arch. No, no, my lord; Note this,—the king is weary.

Of dainty and such picking grievances:
For he hath found,—to end one doubt by death,
Repose in grief, in the best of his life.
And therefore will he wipe his table clean;
And keep no tell-tale in his memory,
That may repeat and history his loss
To new remembrance: For full well he knows,
He cannot so precisely weed this land,
As his misdocters present occasion;
His foes are so enrooted with his friends,
That, picking to unfast an enemy,
He doth unfasten so, as he would a friend.
So that this land, like an offensive wife,
That hath engag'd him on to offer strokes;
As he is striking, holds his infant up,
And makes tongues and criers to the arm
That was express'd to execution.

Hast. Besides, the king hath wasted all his rods
On late offenders, that he now doth lack
The confidence of instrument of chastisement;
So that his power, like to a fangless lion,
May offer, but not hold.

Arch. This very true:—
And therefore be assured, my lord marshal,
If we do now make our atonement well,
Our peace will, like a broken limb united,
Grow stronger for the breaking.

Mowbr. Be it so.
Here is return'd my lord of Westmoreland.

Re-enter Westmoreland.

West. The prince is here at hand: Pleaseth your lordship,
To meet his grace just distance between our armies?

Mowbr. Your grace of York, in God's name then Set forward.

Arch. Before, and greet his grace,—my lord, we come

[Exit West.]

SCENE II.—Another Part of the Forest.

Enter, from one side, Mowbray, the Archbishop, Hastings, and others: from the other side, Prince John, of Lancaster, Westmoreland, Officers, and Attendants.

P. John. You are well encounter'd here, my cousin Mowbray:
Good day to you, gentle lord archbishop:
And so to you, lord Hastings,—and to all,
My lord of York, it better shew'd with you.
When that your flock, assembled by the bell,
Encircle you, to bear with reverence
Your exposition on the holy text;
Than now to see you here an open man,
Cheering a rout of rebels with your drum,
Turning the word to sword, and life to death.
That man, that sits within a monarch's heart,
And reigns in the sunshine of his favour,
Would be heave the countenance of the king,
Alack, what mischiefs might he set abroad,
In shadow of so great power! With you, lord
It is even so.—Who hath not heard it spoken,
How deep were you within the books of God?
To us, the speaker in his parliament;
To us his imagin'd voice?
The very opener and intelligencer,
Between the grace, the sanctities of heaven,
And our dull workings: Of whom shall believe,
Not misuse the reverence of your place;
Employ the countenance and grace of heaven,
As a false witness doth his pristine name,
In deeds dishonourable? You have taken up
Under the counterfeited zeal of God,
The subjects of his substitute, my father;
And, both against the peace of heaven and him,
Have fairest up-an arm'd them.

Arch. Good my lord of Lancaster,
I am set here against your father's peace:
But, as I told my lord of Westmoreland,
The subjects of his disorder'd doth, in ceasless sense,
Crowd us, and crush us, to this monstrous form,
To hold our safety up. I sent your grace
The parcelds and particulars of our grief;
The words hath been with scorn shew'd from the court,
Whereon this Hydra son of war is born:
Whose dangerous eyes may well be charm'd asleep,
With grant of our most just and right desires,
And true obedience of this madmen's war,
Stoop tamely to the foot of majesty.

Mowbr. If not, we ready are to try our fortunes
To the last man.

Hast. And though we here fell down,
We have supplies to second our attempt;
If they miscarry, theirs shall second them:
And so, success of mischief shall be born:
And so, he that remain'd shall hold the sword up,
Whiles England shall have generation.

P. John. You are too shallow, Hastings, much too shallow.
To sound the bottom of the after-tides.

West. Pleaseth your grace, to answer them directly,
How far-forth you do like their articles?

P. John. I know the breach all, and the breach from them.
And swear here by the honour of my blood,
My father's purposes have been mistook;
And some about him have too lavishly
Writ his meaning, and authority.—
My lord, these griefs shall be with speed redress'd;
Upon my soul, they shall. If this may please you,
Discharge your powers unto their several counties.
As we will ours: and here, between the armies,
Let's drink together friendly, and embrace;
That all their eyes may bear those tokens home,
Of our restored love, and amity.

Arch. I take your princely word for these redressings.

P. John. I give it you, and will maintain my word:
And thereupon I drink unto your grace.

Hast. (to captain, to an officer.) and deliver the way.

This news of peace; let them have pay, and part
I know, it will well please them: He thee, captain.

[Exit officer.

Arch. To you, my noble lord of Westmoreland.
West. I pledge your grace: And, if you know what pains
I have bestow'd, to breed this present peace,
You would drink freely: but my love to you
Shall show itself more openly hereafter.

Arch. I do not doubt you.

West. I am glad of it:—
Health to my lord, and gentle cousin, Mowbray.

Mowbr. You wish me health in very happy season.
For I am, on the sudden, something ill.

Arch. Against ill chances, men are ever merry:
But heaviness forswears the good event.

West. Therefore be merry, cow; since sudden sorrow
Serves to say thus.—Some good thing comes to morrow.

Arch. Believes me, I am passing light in spirit.

Mowbr. So much the worse, if your own rule be true.

[Shouts within.

P. John. The word of peace is render'd; Hark, Mowbr. This had been cheerful, after victory.

Arch. A peace is of the nature of a conquest;
For then both parties nobly are subdued,
And neither party lesser.
KING HENRY IV.

Act 4.

P. John. Go, my lord, and let our army be discharged too. [Exit Westmoreland.]

And, good my lord, so please you, let our trains March by us, that we may persuade the men We should have cop'd withal. [Exit Hastings.]

Arch. Go, good lord Hastings, and, ere they be dismiss'd, let them march by. [Exit Hastings.]

P. John. I trust, my lords, we shall lie to-night together.—[Re-enter Westmoreland.]

Now, cousin, wherefore stands our army still? West. The leaders, having charge from you to stand, Will not advance till they hear you speak. P. John. They know their duties. [Re-enter Hastings.]

Hast. My lord, our army is dispand'd already: Like youthful steers unyok'd, they take their courses East, west, north, south; or, like a school broke up, Each hurries toward his home, and sporting-place. West. Good tidings, my lord Hastings; for these, which I do arrest thee, traitor, of high treason: And ye, lord archbishop,—and you, lord Mow. Capital treason I attach both of you. Mow. Is this proceeding just and honourable? West. Is your assembly so? Arch. Will you thus break your faith? I promis'd thee none: I promis'd you redress of these same grievances, Whereof you did complain; which, by mine hon- nor, I will perform with a most christian care. But, for you, rebels,—look to taste the due Meet for rebellion, and such acts as yours. Most shallowly did you these arms commence, Fondly brought hither, and foolishly sent hence. Strike up our drums, pursue the scatter'd stray: Heaven, and not we, hath safely fought to-day. Some guard these traitors to the block of death; Trewson's true bed, and yeilder up of breath. [Exeunt.

Fal. What's your name, sir? of what condition are you? and of what place, I pray? Cole. Sir, I am, by the true knights, sir; and my name is Colevile of the dale. Fal. Well then, Colevile is your name; a knight is your degree; and your place, the dale; Colevile shall still be your name; a traitor your degree; and the dungeon your place,—a place deep enough: so shall you still be Colevile of the dale. Cole. Are not you sir John Falstaff? Fal. As good a man as he, sir, who'er I am. Do ye yield, sir, or shall I sweat for you? If I do sweat, they are drops of thy lovers, and they weep for thy death; therefore rouse up fear and trembling, and do observance to my mercy. Cole. I think, you are sir John Falstaff; and, in that thought, yield me. Fal. I have a whole school of tongues in this belly of mine; and not a tongue of them all speaks any other word but my name. An I had but a hilly of my indifference, I were simply the most active fellow in Europe: My womb, my womb, my womb undone me.—Here come our general. [Enter Prince John of Lancaster, Westmoreland, and others.]

P. John. The heat is past, follow no further now; Call in the powers, good cousin Westmoreland.—[Exit West.]

Now, Falstaff, where have you been all this while? When every thing is ended, then you come: These tardy tricks of yours will, on my life, One time or other come to your gallows.
shapes; which deliver'd o'er to the voice, (the tongue,) which is the birth, becomes excellent wit.

The second property of your excellent sherris is,—the warming of the blood; which, before cold and settled, left the liver white and pale, which is the badge of pusillanimity and cowardice; but the sherris warms it and makes it course from the inwards to the parts extreme. It illumineth the face; which, as a beacon, gives warning to all the rest of the kingdom, man, to arms; and then the vital commoners, and inland petty spirits, muster me all to their captain, the heart; who, great, and puffed up with this retinue, doth any deed of courage; and this valorous comes of sherris: so that skill in the weapon is nothing without sack; for that sets it a work; and learning, a mere hoard of gold kept by a devil; till sack commences it, and sets it in act and use. Hereof cometh, that prince Harry is valiant; for the cold blood he did naturally inherit of his father, he hath, like lean, stern, and bare land, manured, husbanded, and tiled, with excellent endeavour of drinking good and good store of fertile sherris; so that he is become very hot, and valiant. If I had a thousand sons, the first human principle I would teach them, should be,—to forswear them potatoes, and addict themselves to sack.

Enter Bardolph.

How now, Bardolph?

Bardolph. The arm is discharged all, and gone.

Poe. Let them go. I'll through Gloucestershire; and there will I visit master Robert Shallow, esquire: I have him already tempering between my fingers his great thumb, and shortly will I seal with him. Come away. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Westminster. A Room in the Palace.

Enter King Henry, Clarence, Prince Humphrey, Warwick, and others.

K. Hen. Now, lords, if heaven doth give success to this debate that bleedeth at our doors, We will our youth lead on to higher fields, And draw no swords but what are sanctified. Our hands are made strong, our power collected, Our substitutes in absence well invested, And every thing lies level to our wish: Only, we want a little personal strength; And, though we receive, now absent, Come underneath the yoke of government. War. Both which, we doubt not but your majesty Shall soon enjoy.

K. Hen. Humphrey, my son of Gloster, Where is the prince your brother?

P. Humph. I think, he's gone to hunt, my lord, at Windsor.

K. Hen. And how accompanied?

P. Humph. I do not know, my lord.

K. Hen. Is not his brother, Thomas of Clarence, with him?

P. Humph. No, my good lord; he is in presence here.

Cla. What would my lord and father?

K. Hen. Nothing but well to thee, Thomas of Clarence.

How chance, thou art not with the prince thy brother?

He loves thee, and thou dost neglect him, Thomas; There's a better place in his estimation Than all thy brethren: cherish it, my boy; And noble offices thou may'st effect Of mediation, after I am dead, Between Clarence's greatness and thy other brethren:— Therefore, omit him not: blunt not his love: Nor lose the good advantage of his grace, By seeming cold, or careless of his will. For he is gracious, if he be observ'd: He hath a tear for pity, and a hand Open as day for melting charity; Yet notwithstanding, being incensed, he's fient: As humorous as winter, and as sudden As flaws concealed in the spring of day. His temper, therefore, must be well observ'd: Chide him for faults, and do it reverently, When you perceive his blood inclin'd to mirth: But, being moody, give him line and scope; Till that his passions, like a whale on ground, Confound themselves with working. Learn this, thomas,

And thou shalt prove a shelter to thy friends; A hoop of gold, to bind thy brothers in; That the united vessels of their blood, Mingled with venom of suggestion (As, force perforce, the age will pour it in,) Shall never leak, though it do work as strong As ascontrim, or wish gunpowder.

Cla. I shall observe him with all care and love.

K. Hen. Why art thou not at Windsor with him, Thomas?

Cla. He is not there to-day; he dines in London. K. Hen. And how accompanied? can't thou tell that?

Cla. With Polina, and other his continual follows.

K. Hen. Methinks subject is the fittest soil to weeds; And, he, the noble image of my youth, Is overspread with them: Therefore my grief Stretches itself beyond the hour of death; The blood is warm, and doth it reverently, When I do shape, in forms imaginary, the unguided days, And rotten times, that you shall look upon When I am sleeping with my ancestors. For when his headless, no curb When rage and hot blood are his counsellors, When means and lavish manners meet together, O, with what wings shall his affections fly Towards fronting peril and oppos'd decay! War. My gracious lord, you look beyond you quite: The prince but studies his companions, Like a strange tongue: wherein, to gain the language, 'Tis needful, that the most immodest word Be look'd upon, and learn'd: which once attain'd, Your highness knows, comes to no further use, But to be known, and hated. So, like gross terms, The prince will, in the perfectness of time, Cast off his followers: and their memory Shall as a pattern or a measure live, By the same rules, the acts and lives of others; Turning past evils to advantages. K. Hen. 'Tis seldom, when the bee doth leave her comb In the dead caunnion.—Who's here? Westmoreland?

Enter Westmoreland.

West. Health to my sovereign! and new happiness Added to that that I am to deliver! Prince John, your son, doth kiss your grace's hand; Mowbray, the bishop Scroop, Hastings, and all, Are brought in the correction of your law; There is not now a rebel's sword unshedd'd, But peace puts forth her olive every where. The manner how this action hath been borne, Here at more leisure may your highness read; With every course, in his particular.

K. Hen. O Westmoreland, thou art a summer bird, Which ever in the haunch of winter sings The lifting up of day. Look I here's more news.

Enter Harcourt.

Har. From enemies heaven keep your majesty; And, when they stand against you, may they fall As those that I am come to tell you of! The earl Northumberland, and the lord Bardolph With a great power of English, and of Scots, Are by the sheriff of Yorkshire overthrown.
The manner and true order of the fight,
This packet, please it you, contains at large.

K. Hen. And wherefore should these good news make me sick?
Will fortune never come with both hands full,
But write her fair words still in stoutest letters?
She either gives a stomach, and no food,—
Such are the poor, in health; or else a feast,
And to take away the stomach,—such are the rich,
That have abundance, and enjoy it not.
I should rejoice now at this happy news;
And now my sight fails, and my brain is giddy:—
O me! come near me, now I am much ill.
[Swoons.

P. Humph. Comfort, your majesty!

Cla. O my royal father!

West. My sovereign lord, cheer up yourself, look up!

War. Be patient, princes; you do know, these
Are with his highness very ordinary.
[fits

Stand from him, give him air; he'll straight be well.

Cla. No, no; he cannot long hold out these pangs;
The incessant care and labour of his mind
Hath wrought the mure, that should confine it in,
So thin, that life looks through, and will break out.

P. Humph. The people fear me; for they do
Unfather'd heirs, and loathly birds of nature:
The seasons change their manners, as the year
Had found some months asleep, and leap'd them
And ever.

Cla. The river hath thrice flow'd, no ebb between:
And the old folk, time's doting chronicles,
Say, it did so, a little time before.
That our great grandsire, Edward, sick'd and died.
War. Speak lower, princes, for the king recovers.

P. Humph. This apoplexy will; certain, be his end.

K. Hen. I pray you, take me up, and bear me hence
Into some other chamber: softly, pray.
[They convey the King into an inner part of the room, and place him on a bed.
Let there be no noise made, my gentle friends;
Unless some dull and favourable hand
With other music to my weary ear.
War. Call for the music in the other room.

K. Hen. Set me the crown upon my pillow here.

Cla. His eye is hollow, and he changes much.

War. Less noise, less noise.

Enter Prince Henry.

P. Hen. Who saw the duke of Clarence?

Cla. I am here, brother, full of heaviness.

P. Hen. How now! rain within doors, and none abroad!

How doth the king?

P. Humph. Exceeding ill.

Tell it him.

P. Humph. He alter'd much upon the hearing it.

P. Hen. If he he sick

With joy, he will recover without physic.

War. Not so much noise, my lords,—sweet prince, speak low;
The king your father is dispos'd to sleep.

Cla. Let us withdraw into the other room.

War. Will't please your grace to go along with us?

P. Hen. No; I will sit and watch here by the bed.

P. Hen. Why doth the crown lie there upon his pillow,
Being so troublesome a bed-fellow?
O polish'd perturbation! golden care!
That leap'st the poorest window wide
To many a watchful night,—sleep with it now!
Yet not so sound, and half so deeply sweet,

As he whose brow, with homely biggin bound,
Snores out the watch of night. O majesty!
When thou dost pinch thyearer, thou dost sit
Like a rich armour worn in heat of day,
That scalds with safety. By his gates of breath
There lies a downy feather, which stirs not:
Did he suspend that light and weightless down
Perforce must move. My gracious lord! my father!

This sleep is sound indeed; this is a sleep,
That from this golden rigol hath divorc'd
So many English kings. Thy due, from me, is tears, and heavy sorrows, of the blood:
Which nature, love, and filial tenderness,
Shall, O dear father, pay thee plenteously;
My due, from thee, is this imperial crown;
Which, as immediate from thy hand, and blood,
Derives itself to me. Lo, here it sits,— Which heaven shall guard: And put the world's whole strength
Into one giant arm, it shall not force
This lineal honour from me: This from thee
Will I to mine leave, as 'tis left to me.

[Exit."

K. Hen. Warwick! Gloster! Clarence!

Re-enter Warwick, and the rest.

Cla. Doth the king call?

War. What would your majesty? How fares your grace?

K. Hen. Why did you leave me here alone, my lords?

Cla. We left the prince my brother here, my liege,

Who undertook to sit and watch by you.

K. Hen. The prince of Wales? Where is he?
let me see him:
He is not here.

War. This door is open; he is gone this way.

P. Humph. He came not through the chamber where we stay'd.

K. Hen. Where is the crown? who took it from my pillow?

War. When we withdrew, my liege, we left it
here.

K. Hen. The prince hath ta'en it hence:—go, seek, enquire.

Is he so hasty, that he doth suppose
My sleep my death?——

Find him, my lord of Warwick; chide him hither.

[Exit Warwick.

This part of his conjoins with my disease,
And helps to end me.—See, sons, what things you are!

How quickly nature falls into revolt,
When gold becomes her object!
For this the foolish over-careful fathers
Have broke their sleep with thoughts, their brains with care,
Their bones with industry,
For this they have engrossed and pli'd up
The canon'd heaps of strange-achieved gold;
For this they have been thoughtful to invest
Their sons with arts, and martial exercises:
When, like the bee, tolling from every flower
The virtuous sweets;
Our thigs pack'd with wax, our mouths with honey,
We bring it to the hive; and, like the bees,
Are murdered for our pains. This bitter taste
Yield his engrossments to the ending father.—

Re-enter Warwick.

Now, where is he that will not stay so long
Till his friend sickness hath determin'd me?

War. My lord, I found the prince in the next room.

Washing with kindly tears his gentle cheeks;
With such a deep demeanour in great sorrow,
That tyranny, which never quafl'd but blood,
Would, by holding him, have wash'd his knife
With gentle eye-drops. He is coming hither.
K. Hen. But therefore did he take away the crown?

Re-enter Prince Henry.

Lor., where he comes.—Come hither to me, Har ry.—

Departs the chamber, leaves us here alone.

[Exit Clarence, Prince Humphrey, Lords, &c.]

P. Hen. I never thought to hear you speak again.

K. Hen. Thy wish was father, Harry, to that I stay too long by thee, I weary thee.

Dest thou so hungry for my empty chair,

That thou wilt need invest with mine honours Before the year ripe; O foolish youth! Thou seek'st the greatness that will overwhelm thee.

Stay but a little; for my cloud of dignity Is held from falling with so weak a wind. That it will quickly drop: my day is dim.

Thou hast slain that, which, after some few hours, Were thine without offence; and, at my death, Thou hast made up my expectation; Thy life did manifest, thou hast not me not, And thou wilt have die assur'd of it.

Thou hid'st a thousand daggers in thy thoughts; Which thou hast hasted on thy stormy heart, To stab at half an hour of my great age. What I cannot thou not forbear me half an hour? Then get thee gone; and dig thy grave thyself; And bid the merry bells ring to thine ear, The thou art exprest, and not that I am dead.

Let all the tears that should bedew my blears, Be drops of balm, to sanctify thy head: Only compound me with forgotten dust: On thee and thy reign hath been the life of worms.

Pluck down my officers, break my decrees; For now a time is come to mock at form, Harry the fifth is crown'd:—Up, vanity! Thou avnest a talent that is more than thine, hence! And to the English court assemble now,

From every region, apex of idleness! Now, neighbour confines, purge you of your seum; Have you no ruffing that will swear, drink, dance, Revel the night: rob, murder, and commit The oldest sins the newest kind of ways.

Be happy, he will trouble you no more:

England shall double gild his troubled guilt; Engage him officers; I think thou might: For the fifth Harry from curb'd licence pluck.

The muzzle of restraint, and the wild dog Shall flesh his tooth in every innocent. O how I long to see thy coat outglow! When that my care could not withhold thy riots, What will thou do, when riot is thy care?

O, thou wilt be a wilderness again,

Peopled with wolves, thy old inhabitants.

P. Hen. O, pardon me, my liege! but for my tears, [Knocking.

The moist impediments unto my speech, I had forestall'd this dear and deep rebuke, Er you with grief had spoke, and had I heard. The course of it so far. There is your crown; And Be that wears the crown immortally, I hope, if it vouch safe, than as your honour, and as your renown, Let me no more from this obedience rise, (Which my most true and inward duteous spirit Toucheth in this prostitute and exterior binding! Heaven witness with me, when I here came in And found no course of breath within your majesty, How cold it struck my heart! if I do feign, O, let the present wildness do, And never live to show the incredulous world The noble change that I have purposed! Coming to look on thee, thinking you dead, (And dead almost, my liege, to think you were,) I lay and brood on thee, as he did on gold, And thus upbraided it. The care on thee depending,

Heath fed upon the body of my father; Therefore, thou, best of gold, art worst of gold.

Other, less fine in earat, is more precious,

Preserving life in medicine palpable: But makest most honour'd, most renowned,

Hast o'ert heiever up. Thus, my most royal liege, Accessing it, I put it on my head;

To try it with,—as with an enemy,

Therefore the face murder'd my father,—

The quarrel of a true inheritor.

But if it did infect my blood with joy, Or swell my thoughts to any strain of pride; If any rebel or vain spirit of mine Drink of the least affection of the welcome,

Give entertainment to the might of it,

Let God for ever keep it from my head! And make me as the poorest vassal is,

That with both his terror and dread to kneel to it!

K. Hen. O my son! Heaven put it in thy mind to take it hence, That thou might'st in the more thy father's love, Pleading so wisely in excuse of it.

Come hither, Harry, sit thou by my bed; And hear, I think, the very latest counsel That ever I shall breathe. Heaven knows, my son, By what by-paths, and indirect crook'd ways, I met this crown; and I myself know well,

How troublesome it sat upon my head: To thee it shall descend with better quiet,

Better opinion, better confirmation;

For 'tis the soul of the achievement goes

With me into the earth. It seem'd in me,

But as an honour match'd with holester hand; And I had many living, to upbraid My sin of it by their assistance.

Which daily grew to quarrel, and to bloodshed, Wounding supposed peace: all these bold fears, Thou seest, with peril I have answered:

For being the reign had been the scene of Acting that argument; and now my death Changes the mode: for what in me was purchase'd,

Falls upon thee in a more fairer sort:

That be the guardian of what has before, Yet, thoo thou stand'st more sure than I could do,

Art not firm enough, since griefs are green; And all thy friends, which thou must make thy bed.

Here are their string's and teeth newly ta'en out;

By whose fell working I was first advanced, And by whose power I well might lodge a fear To reign displeas'd: which I could avoid,

I cut them off: and had a purposer now To lead out many to the Holy Land;

Lest rest, and lying still, might make them look Too near unto my state. Therefore, my Harry, He is the God of thee, to be grasped in wisely.

With foreign quarrels; that action, hence borne out,

May waste the memory of the former days. More would I, but my lungs are wasted so,

That strength of speech is utterly denied me. How I came by the crown, O God, forgive! And grant it may thee in true peace live! P. Hen. My gracious liege, You won it, wore it, kept it, gave it me;

Then plain, and right, must my possession be: Which I, with more than with a common pain, Gainst all the world will rightfully maintain.

Enter Prince John of Lancaster, Warwick, Lords, and others.

P. John. Health, peace, and happiness, to my royal father!

K. Hen. My royall August, my happiness, and peace, and John.

But health, slack, with youthful wings is flown From this bare, wither'd trunk: upon thy sight, My young brows makes a mark—where the God.

Where is my lord of Warwick?

P. Hen. My lord of Warwick?

K. Hen. Doth any name particular belong Unto the lodging where I first did swom?
Act 5.

KING HENRY IV.

War. 'Tis call'd Jerusalem, my noble lord. K. Hen. Laud be to God! even there my life must end. It hath been prophesied to me many years, I should not die but in Jerusalem; which, I suppose, the Holy Land:— But, bear me to that chamber; there I'll lie; In that Jerusalem shall Harry die. [Exit.

ACT V.

Enter Shallow, Falstaff, Bardolph, and Page.

Shal. By cock and pye, sir, you shall not away to-night.—What, Davy, I say! Fal. You must excuse me, master Robert Shallow.

Shal. I will not excuse you; you shall not be excused; excuses shall not be admitted; there is no excuse shall serve; you shall not be excused.—Why, Davy! Enter Davy.

Davy. Here, sir.

Shal. Davy, Davy, Davy,—let me see, Davy; let me see,—yes, marry, William cook, bid him come hither — for— for— you shall not be excused.

Davy. Marry, sir, thus;—those precepts cannot be served: and, again, sir,—Shall we sow the headland with heat?

Shal. With red wheat, Davy. But for William cook:—Are there no young pigeons?

Davy. Yes, sir,—Here is now the smith's note, for shoeing, and plough-irons.

Shal. Let it be cast and paid:—sir John, you shall not be excused.

Davy. Now, sir, a new link to the bucket must needs be had:—And, sir, do you mean to stop any of William's wages, about the sack he lost the other day at Hinkley fair?

Shal. He shall answer it:—Some pigeons, Davy; a couple of short-legged hens; a joint of mutton; and any pretty little tiny kickshaws, tell William cook.

Davy. Doth the man of war stay all night, sir?

Shal. Yes, Davy. I will use him well; A friend 'tis the court is better than a penny in purse. Use his men, Davy; for they are arrant knaves, and will backbite.

Davy. No worse than they are back-bitten, sir; for they have marvellous foul linen.

Shal. Well conceived, Davy. About thy business, Davy.

Davy. I beseech you, sir, to countenance William Visor of Wincot against Clement Perkes of the hill.

Shal. There are many complaints, Davy, against that Visor; that Visor is an arrant knave, on my knowledge.

Davy. I grant your worship, that he is a knave, sir: but, yet, God forbid, sir, but a knave should have some countenance at his friend's request. An honest man, sir, is able to speak for himself, when a knave is not. I have served your worship truly, sir, this eight years; and if I cannot once or twice in a quarter bear out a knave against an honest man, I have but a very little credit with your worship. The knave is mine honest friend, sir; therefore, I beseech your worship, let him be countenanced.

Shal. Go to; I say, he shall have no wrong. Look about, Davy. [Exit Davy.] Where are you, sir John? Come, off with your books—Give me your hand, master Bardolph.

Bard. I am glad to see your worship.

Shal. I thank thee with all my heart, kind master Bardolph,—and welcome, my tall fellow. [To the Page.] Come, sir John. [Exit Shallow.

Fal. I'll follow you, good master Robert Shallow. Bardolph, look to our horses. [Exeunt Bardolph and Page.] If we were sawed into quantities, I should make four dozen of such bearded hermit's staves as master Shallow. It is a wonderful thing, to see the semblable coherence of his men's spirits and his: They, by observing him, do bear themselves like foolish justices; he, by conversing with them, is turned into a justice-like serving-man; their spirits are so married in conjunction with the participation of society, that they flock together in consent, like so many wild geese. If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men, with the explanation of being near his master: if to his men, I would curry with master Shallow, that no man could better command his servants. It is certain, that either wise bearing, or ignorant carriage, is caught as men take diseases, one of another; therefore, let men take heed of their company. I will devise matter enough out of this Shallow, to keep prince Harry in continual laughter, the wearing-out of six fashions, (which is four terms or two actions,) and he shall laugh without intervals. O, it is much, that a lie, with a slight oath, and a jest, with a sad brow, will do with a fellow that never had the sike in his shoulders. O, you shall see him laugh, till his face be like a wet coak ill laid up.

Shal. [Within.] Sir John! Fal. I come, master Shallow; I come, master Shallow. [Exit Falstaff.

SCENE II.—Westminster. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Warwick and the Lord Chief Justice.

War. How now, my lord chief justice! whither away?

Ch. Just. How doth the king?

War. Exceeding well; his cares are now all ended.

Ch. Just. I hope, not dead.

War. He's walk'd the way of nature; And, to our purposes, he lives no more.

Ch. Just. I could his majesty had call'd me with him: The service that I truly did his life, Hath left me open to all injuries.

War. Indeed, I think the young king loves you not.

Ch. Just. I know he doth not; and do arm my- To welcome the condition of the time; [self, Which cannot look more hideously upon me Than I have drawn it in my fancy.

Enter Prince John, Prince Humphrey, Clarence, Westmoreland, and others.

War. Here come the heavy issue of dead Harry; O, that the living Harry had the temper Of him, the worst of these three gentlemen! How many nobles then should hold their places, That must strike sail to spirits of vile sort! Ch. Just. Alas! I fear, all will be over-turn'd. P. John. Good morrow, cousin Warwick. P. Humph. Cia. Good morrow, cousin. P. John. We meet like men that had forgot to speak. War. We do remember; but our argument Is all too heavy to admit much talk.

P. John. Well, peace be with him that hath made us heavy!

Ch. Just. Peace be with us, lest we be heavier: P. Humph. O, good my lord, you have lost a friend, indeed! And I dare swear, you borrow not that face Of seeming sorrow; it is, sure, your own. P. John. Though no man be asur'd what grace to find You stand in coldest expectation: I am the sorrier; 'twould, 'twere otherwise. Cia. Well, you must now speak sir John Falstaff fair;— Which swims against your stream of quality.
K. Hen. But wherefore did he take away the crown?

Re-enter Prince Henry.

Lo, where he comes,—Come hither to me, Har—

Depart the chamber, leave us here alone.

[Exeunt Chamber, Prince Humphrey, Lords, &c.]

P. Hen. I never thought to hear you speak again.

K. Hen. Thy wish was father, Harry, to that thought.

I stay too long by thee, I weary thee. Dust thou no hunger for my empty chair,
That thou wilt need in thee with mine honours

Thy life did manifest, thou lovest me not,
And thou wilt have me die assur'd of it.

Thou hid'st a thousand daggers in thy thoughts;
Which thou hast whetted on thy stony heart,
To stab at half or more of my life. What
I cannot thou shalt fear: see: in three half an hour
Then get thee gone; and dig my grave thyself;
And bid the merry bells ring to thine ear,
That thou art crowned, not that I am dead. Let all the tears that should bedew my Hearse,
He drops of balm, to sanctify thy head:
Only command me with forgotten dust;
Give that, which gave thee life, unto the worms.
This, if the morn be fair, and the earth
For now is a time to mock at form,
Harry the fifth is crown'd:—Up, vanity!
Down, royal state! all you base counsellors, hence!
And take the English court assemble now,
From every region, apes of idleness!
New, neighbour conines, purge you of your scar:
Have you a ruffian, that will swear, drink, dance,
Beat the nights, do murder, and commit
The oldest sins the newest kind of ways?
Be happy, he will trouble you no more:
England shall double gild his treble guilt;
England shall give him office, honour, might:
For the fifth Harry from curb to quick
The muzzle of restraint, and the wild dog
Shall flash his tooth in every innocent.
O, my poor kingdom, sick with civil blows! Where could not I behold thy riots,
What wilt thou do, when riot is thy care?
O, thou wilt be a wilderness again,
Frequented with wolves, thy old inhabitants!

P. Hen. O, pardon me, my liege: I shot for my tears.

Kneeling.

The mock impediments unto my speech,
I had foresaid that this dear and deep rebuke
To me with grief had spoke, and I had heard
The course of it so far. There is your crown;
And He that wears the crown immortally,
Long guard it yours! If I affect it more,
Than as your honour, and as your renown,
Let me no more from this obedience rise,
(Which my most true and inward duteous spirit Teaches,) this prostrate and exterior boding! Heaven save me with me, when I here came in
And found no course of breath within your majesty,
How cold it struck my heart! If I do feign,
O, let me in my present wilderness die;
And leave to live to show the innumerable
The noble change that I have purposed!
Coming to look on you, thinking you dead,
(And dead almost, my liege, to think you were,)—
I came unto the crown as having service,
And thus impressed it. The cause of that depending,

And make me as the poorest vassal is,

Heaven put it in thy mind to take it hence,
That thou might'st win the more thy father's love,
Flending so wisely in excuse of it.
Come hither, Harry, sit thou by my bed;

P. John. Health, peace, and happiness, to my royal father!

K. Hen. Thou bring'st me happiness, and peace,
And all things pleasant.

But health, alack, with youthful wings is flown
From this bare, wither'd trunk: upon thy sight,
My worldly business makes a period.—

What's the news, my lord of Warwick?

P. Hen. My lord of Warwick.

K. Hen. Doth any name particular belong

Cla. Well, you must now speak sir John Falstaff fair;

Which swims against your stream of quality.
SECOND PART OF

Act 5.

And not less happy, having such a son.
That would deliver up his greatness so
Into the hands of justice.—You did commit me:
For which, I do commit into your hand
The things acquaintance, that you have it to bear;
With this remembrance,—That you use the same
With the like bold, just, and impartial spirit,
As you have done against me. There is this hand;
You have been more father to my truth
My voice shall sound as you do prompt mine ear;
And I will stoop and humble my intents
To your well practis'd, wise directions.—
And now I must believe me, I beseech you,—
My father is gone wild into his grave,
For in his tomb lies my affections;
And with his spirit sadly I survive,
To mock the expectation of the world;
To frustrate prophecies: and to rave out
Rotten opinion, who hath writ me down
After my seeming. The tide of blood in me
Hath proudly flow'd in vanity, till now;
Now doth it turn, and ebb back to the sea;
Where it shall mingle with the state of floods,
And flow henceforth in formal majesty.
Now call we our high court of parliament:
And let us choose such limbs of subtle counsel,
That the great body of our state may go
In equal rank with the best govern'd nation;
That war, or peace, or both at once, may be
As things acquainted, where be no sides
In which you, father, shall have foremost hand.

(To the Lord Chief Justice.
Our coronation done, we will acclite,
As I before remember'd, all our state;
And (fond consigning to my good intents)
No prince, nor peer, shall have just cause to say—
Heaven shorten Harry's happy life one day.

(Scene.)

Enter Falstaff, Shallow, Silence, Bardolph, the Page, and Davy.

Shal. Nay, you shall see mine orchard: where, in an arbor, we will eat last year's pippin of my own grafting, with a dish of carraways, and so forth:—come, cousin Silence:—and then to bed.

Fal. 'Fare God, you have here a goodly dwelling, and a rich.

Shal. Do you not see, barren, barren; beggars all, beggars all, sir John; marry, good air. Spread, Davy; spread, Davy: We'll say'd, Davy.

Fal. This Davy serves you for good uses: he is your lieutenant, and your ambassador.

Shal. A good varlet, a good varlet, a very good varlet, sir John.—By the mass, I have drunk too much sack at supper:—A good varlet. Now sit down, now sit down.—come, cousin,

Sil. Ah, sirrah! quotas.—we shall
Do nothing but eat, and make good cheer, [Singing,
And praise heavens for the merry year;
When flesh is cheap and females dear,
And lusty lads roam here and there,
So merrily,
And ever among so merrily.

Fal. All the world call you merry heart. —Good master Silence, I'll give you a health for that anon.

Shal. Give master Bardolph some wine, Davy. Davy. Sweet sir, sit; (seating Bardolph and the Page at another table.) I'll be with you anon;—must I not sit? In answer of a master page, sir, profuse! What you want in meat, we'll have in drink. But you must bear; The heart's all.

First. Shal. Be merry, master Bardolph;—and my little soldier there, be merry.

Sil. Be merry, be merry, my wife's as all; [Singing.
For women are skrene, both short and tall:
'Tis better to sit, when beards wag all,
And welcome merry shrowde-side.

Be merry, be merry, &c.
Fal. I did not think, master Silence had been a man of this mettle.

Sil. Who is? I have been merry twice and once, ere now.

Re-enter Davy.

Davy. There is a dish of let her-coats for you. [Setting them before Bardolph.]

Shal. Davy,—

Davy. Your worship?—I'll be with you straight.

[to Bard.—] A cup of wine, sir? Sil. A cup of wine, that's brisk and fine,
And drink unto the lemon wine; [Singing. And a merry heart lives long-a.]

Fal. Well said, master Silence.

Sil. And we shall be merry;—now comes in the sweet of the night.

Fal. Health and long life to you, master Silence.

Sil. Fill the cup, and let it come; I'll pledge you a mile to the bottom.

Shal. Honest Bardolph, welcome: If thou wantest any thing, and wilt not call, be shrewd thy heart. Welcome, my little tiny thief; [to the Page.] and welcome, indeed, too.—I'll drink to master Bardolph, and to all the cavaliers about London.

Davy. I hope to see London once ere I die.

Bard. An I might see you there, Davy,—

Shal. By the mass, you'll crack a quart together. Ha! will you not, master Bardolph?

Bard. Yes, sir, in a potter's pot.

Shal. I thank thee—The knife will stick by thee, I can assure thee that: he will not out; he is true bred.

Bard. And I'll stick by him, sir.

Shal. Why, there spoke a king. Lack nothing: be merry. [Knocking heard.] Look who's at door there: Ho! who knocks?

[Exeunt Davy.]

Sil. Why, now you have done me right.

[To Silence, who drinks a bumper.]

And duk me knight:

A manning.

I'lt not so?

Fal. 'Tis so.

Sil. 'Tis so? Why, then say, an old man can do somewhat.

Re-enter Davy.

Davy. An it please your worship there's one

Pistol come from the court with news.

Fal. From the court, let him come in.—

Enter Pistol.

How now, Pistol?

Pist. God save you, sir John!

Fal. What wind blew you hither, Pistol?

Pist. Not the ill wind which blows no man to good.—Sweet knight, thou art now one of the greatest men in the realm.

Sil. By'r lady, I think 'a be; but good man Puff of Barson.

Pist. Puff?

Puff In thy teeth, most recreant coward base!—Sir John, I am thy Pistol, and thy friend, And helter-skelter have I rode to thee; And tidings do I bring, and lucky joys, And golden times, and happy news of price.

Fal. I pr'ythee now, deliver them like a man of this world.

Pist. Shout for the world, and worldlings base!

I speak of Africa, and golden joys.

Fal. O base Assyrian knight, what is thy news?

Let king Cophetua know the truth thereof.

Sil. And Robin Hood, Stearlet, and John. [Sings.]

Pist. Shall dunghill curs confront the Helicorns? And shall good news be baffled?

Then, Pistol, lay thy head in Furies' lap.

Shal. Honest gentleman, I know not your breeding.

Pist. Why then, lament, therefore.

Shal. Give me pardon, sir—if, sir, you come with news from the court, I take it, there is but two ways; either to utter them, or to conceal them I am, sir, under the king, in some authority.

Pist. Under which king, Bezonian? speak, or die.

Shal. Under king Harry.

Pist. Harry the fourth? or fifth?

Shal. Harry the fourth.

Pist. You, out for thine office!—

Sir John, thy tender lambkin now is king; Harry the fifth's the man. I speak the truth:

When Pistol lies, do this; and, fig me, like The bragging Spanish.

Fal. What! is the old king dead?

Pist. As nail in door in: the things I speak, are just.

Fal. Away, Bardolph; saddle my horse.—Master Robert Shallow, choose what office thou wilt in the land, 'tis thine.—Pistol, I will double-charge thee with dignities.

Bard. O joyful day!—I would not take a knight-drawn my shorthand out of joint.

Pist. What? I do bring good news?

Fal. Carry master Silence to bed.—Master Shallow, my lord Shallow, be what thou wilt, I am fortune's steward. Get on thy boots: we'll ride all night.—O, sweet Pistol!—Away, Bardolph. [Exit Bard.]

Come, Pistol, utter more to me; and, withal, devise something, to do thyself good.

Boot, boot, master Shallow: I know the young king is sick for me. Let us take any man's horses; the laws of England are at my commandment. Happy are they which have been my friends; and woe to my lord chief justice!

Pist. Let vultures vile seize on his lungs also! Where is the life that late I led, say they; Why, here it is; Welcome these pleasant days. [Exeunt.]
Approach me; and thou shalt be as thou wast, The beauteous sheath of the feeder of my riots.
Till then, I banish thee, on pain of death.
As I have done the rest of my misleaders.
Not to come near our person by ten mile.
For the need of life, I will allow you,
That you may know my purpose, and perhaps
And, as we hear you do reform yourselves.
We will, according to your strength, and qual-
Give you your advancement. Be it your charge, my lord,
To see perform'd the tenor of our word.

Set on.

Cod. Ay, marry, sir John; which I beseech you to let me have home with me.

Fal. That can hardly be, master Shallow. Do not you grieve at this; I shall be sent for in private to him: look, you must seem thus to the world. Fear not your advancement; I shall be the man yet.

Shak. I cannot perceive how; unless you give me your doubts, and stuff me out with straw. I beseech you, good sir John, let me have five hundred of you.

Fal. Sir, I will be as good at my word: this that you heard, was but a colour.

Shak. A colour, I fear, that you will die in, sir John.

Fal. Fear no colours: go with me to dinner. Come, lieutenant Pistol;—come, Bardolph,—I shall be sent for soon at night.

Re-enter Prince John, the Chief Justice, Officers, &c.

Ch. Just. Go, carry sir John Falstaff to the Fleet:
Take all his company along with him.

Fal. My lord, my lord,—
Ch. A ha. I cannot now speak: I will hear you soon.

Take them away.

P. John. I like this fair proceeding of the king's.
He hath intent, his wonted followers shall be very well provided for;
But all are banish'd, till their conversations Appear more wise and modest to the world.

Ch. Just. And so they are.

P. John. The king hath call'd his parliament, my lord.

Ch. Just. He hath.

P. John. I will lay odd,—that, ere this year expire,
We beat our civil swords, and native fire,
As far as France: I heard a bird so sing,
Whose music, to my thinking, pleas'd the king.

Come, will you hence?

[Exeunt.

EPICLUGE.—Spoken by a Dancer.

First, my fear; then, my courtly: last, my speech. My fear is, your displeasure; my courtly, my duty; and my speech, to beg your pardon. If you look for a good speech now, you undo me for: what I have to say, is of mine own making; and what, indeed, I should say, will, I doubt, prove mine own man's. But to the purpose, and so to the venture—He is known to you, (as it is very well), I was lately here in the end of a dispensing play, to pray your patience for it, and to promise you a better. I did mean to, indeed, to pay you with this: which, if, like an ill venturer, I come unluckily home, I break, and you, my gentle creditors, lose. Here, I promised you. I would be, and here I commit my body to your mercies: beate me some, and I will pay you some, and, as most debtors do, promise you infinitely.

If my tongue cannot entreat you to acquit me, will you command me to use my legs? and yet that were but light payment,—to dance out of your debt.
Act 4.

KING HENRY V.

KING HENRY V.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

King Henry the Fifth.
Duke of Gloucester, 3 brothers to the King.
Duke of Bedford, 3
Duke of Exeter, uncle to the King.
Duke of York, cousin to the King.
Earls of Salisbury, Westmoreland, and Warwick.
Archbishop of Canterbury.
Bishop of Ely.
Earl of Cambridge.
Lord Scroop.
Sir Thomas Grey.
Sir Thomas Erpingham, Gower, Fluellen, Macmorris, Jamy, officers in King Henry's army.
Bates, Court, Williams, soldiers in the same.
Nym, Bardolph, Pistol, formerly servants to Falstaff, now soldiers in the same.
Boy, servant to them.

THE SCENE, at the beginning of the Play, lies in England; but afterwards wholly in France.

Enter Chorus.

O, for a muse of fire, that would ascend The brightest heaven of invention! A kingdom for a stage, princes to act, And monarchs to behold the swelling scene! Then should the warlike Harry, like himself, Assume the port of Mars; and, at his heels, Leash'd in like hounds, should famine, sword, and fire, Crouch for employment. But pardon, gentle all, The flat unraised spirit, that hath dared, On this unworthy scaffold, to bring forth So great an object: Can this cockpit hold The vasty fields of France? or may we cram Within this wooden O, the very casques, That did affright the air at Agincourt? O, pardon! since a crooked figure may Attest, in little place, a million; And let us, compilers to this great accent, On your imaginary forces work: Suppose, within the girdle of these walls Are now confin'd two mighty monarchies, Whose high upreared and abutting fronts The perilous, narrow ocean assuw'd. Piece out our imperfections with your thoughts; Into a thousand parts divide one man, And make imaginary puissance: Think, when we talk of horses, that you see them Printing their proud hoofs i' the receiving earth: For 'tis your thoughts that now must deck our act.

Enter the Archbishop of Canterbury, and Bishop of Ely.

Cant. My lord, I'll tell you,—that self bill is urg'd, Which, in the eleventh year o' the last king's reign Was like, and had indeed against us pass'd, But that the scrambling and unquiet time Did push it out of further question.

Ely. But how, my lord, shall we resist it now? Cant. It must be thought on. If it pass against us, We lose the better half of our possession: For all the temporal lands, which men devout By testament have given to the church, Would they strip from us; being valued thus,— As much as would maintain, to the king's honour, Full fifteen ears, and fifteen hundred knights; Six thousand and two hundred good esquires; And, to relief of lizzars, and weak age, Of indigent faint souls, past corporal toil, A hundred alms-houses, right well supplied; And to the coffers of the king besides, A thousand pounds by the year: Thus runs the bill.

Ely. This would drink deep.

Cant. 'T'would drink the cup and all.

Ely. But what prevention?

Cant. The king is full of grace, and fair regard.

Ely. And a true lover of the holy church.

Cant. The courses of his youth promis'd it not. The breath no sooner left his father's body, But that his wildness, mortified in him, Seem'd to die too; yea, at that very moment, Consideration like an angel came, And whisper'd the offending Adam out of him: Leaving his body as a paradise, To envelop and contain celestial spirits. Never was such a sudden scholar made: Never came reformation in a flood, With such a heady current, scouring faults; Nor never Hydra-headed wilfulness So soon did lose his seat, and all at once, As in this king.
Ely. We are blessed in the change.
Cont. Hear him but reason in divinity,
And, all-admiring, with an inward wish
You would desire, the king were made a prelate:
Hear him debat of commonwealth affairs,
You would say,—it hath been all-in-all his study:
List his discourse of war, and you shall hear
A fearful battle render'd you in music:
Turn him to any cause of policy,
The Gordian knot of it he will unloose,
Familiar as his garter, that, when he speaks,
The air, a charter'd libertine, is still,
And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,
The statesman's charge and homely undertones;
So that the art and practick part of life
Must be the mistress to this theorick:
Which is a wonder, how his grace should glee it,
Since his addiction was to courses vain:
His companies uiletted, rude, and shallow,
His hours fill'd up with riots, banquets, sports;
And never noted in him any study,
Any retirement, any sequestration
From open haunts and popularitie.

Rly. The strawberry grows underneath the settle;
And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best,
Neighbour'd by fruit of base quality;
And so the prince observ'd his contemplation
Under the veil of wideness; which, no doubt,
Tire like the summer's grass, fastest by night,
Unseen in his face, in this his seriousness;
Cont. It must be so; for miracles are cease'd;
And therefore we must needs admit the means,
How things are perfected.
Ely. But, my good lord,
How now for mitigation of this bill
Urg'd by the commons? Dost his majesty
Incline to it, or no?
Cont. He seems indifferent;
Or, rather, swaying more upon our part,
Than cherishing the exhibitors against us:
For I have made an offer to his majesty,—
Upon his Majesty's behalf.
And in regard of causes now in hand,
Which I have open'd to his grace at large,
As touching France,—to give a greater sum
This day upon the time the clergy yet
Did to his predecessors part withal.
Ely. How did this offer seem receiv'd, my lord?
Cont. With good acceptance of his majesty;
Save, that there was not time enough to hear
(As I intrept his grace would (and have done),
The several, and unhugged passages,
Of his true titles to some certain dukedoms;
And, generally, to the crown and seat of France;
Himself, Edward, his great grandfather.
Ely. What was the impediment that broke this off?
Cont. The French ambassador, upon that instant,
Crow'd audience; and the hour, I think, is come,
To give him hearing: Is it four o'clock?
Ely. It is.
Cont. Then go we in, to know his embassy;
Which I could, with a ready guess, declare,
Before the Frenchman speak a word of it.
Ely. I'll wait upon you; and I long to hear it.
[Exeunt.

SCENE II. — The same. A Room of State in the same.

Enter King Henry, Gloster, Redford, Exeter, Warwick, Westminster, and Attendants.

K. Hen. Where is my gracious Lord of Canterbury?
Eve. Not here in presence.
K. Hen. So Chichester remain, good uncle.
West. Shall we call in the ambassador, my liege?
K. Hen. Not yet, my cousin; we would be resolv'd,
Before we hears him, of some things of weight,
That task our thoughts, concerning us and France.

Enter the Archbishop of Canterbury and Bishop of Ely.

Cont. God and his angels, guard your sacred
And make you long become it!
K. Hen. Sure, we thank you.
My learned lord, we pray you to proceed!
And safely and religiously unfold,
Why the Suicique, that is now in France,
Or should, or should not, bar us in our claim.
And God forbid, my dear and faithful lord,
That you should fashion, rest, or bow your reading,
Or select charges you may undertake;
With opening titles misrate, whose right
In this and native colour with the truth;
For God doth know, how many, now in health,
Shall bear their heads in stony war;
Of what your reverence shall incite us to:
Therefore take heed how you impawn our person,
How you awake the sleeping sword of war;
We charge you in the name of God, take heed:
For never two such kingdoms did contend,
Without much fall of blood; whose guiltless drops
Are every one a woe, a sore complaint,
Cry out from whose wrongs give edge unto the swords
That make such waste in brief mortality.
Under this conjuration, speak, my lord:
And we will hear, note, and believe in heart,
That you speak it in your conscience was'd
As pure as sin with baptism.
Cont. Then hear me, gracious sovereign,—and you peers,
That are your liege, your faith, and services,
To this imperial throne;—There is no bar
To make against your highness' claim to France,
But this, which they produce from Pharamond,—
In France, Salique suadere or succedemur.
No woman shall succeed in Salique land:
Which Salique land the French unjustly gloze,
To be the realm of France, and Pharamond
The father of his crown and title to the war.
Yet their own authors faithfully affirm,
That the land Salique lies in Germany,
Between the floods of Saal and of Elbe:
Where Charles the great, having subdued the Saxons,
There left behind and settled certain French;
Who, holding in disdain the German women,
For some dishonest manners of their life,
Establish'd there this law—No female should be inheretrix in Salique land;
Which Salique, as I said, 'twixt Elbe and Sala,
Is at this day in Germany call'd — Meissen.
Though it was well said in the feudal war,
War was not devised for the realm of France;
Nor did the French possess the Saalique land
Until four hundred one and twenty years
After defunct of king Pharamond,
Idly suppos'd the founder of this law;
Who died within the year of our redemption
Four hundred twenty-six; and Charles the great Subdued the Saxons, and did seat the French
Beyond the river Sala, in the yere
Eight hundred five. Besides, their writers say,
King Pepin, which deposed Childerick,
Did, as their general, being descended
Of Bithr, and that was daughter to King Clothair,
Make claim and title to the crown of France.
Hugh Capet also,—that usurp'd the crown
Of Charles the duke of Loralin, sole heir male
Of the titles and stock of Charles the great,—
To fine his title with some show of truth,
(Though, in true right, it was corrupt and naught,
Convey'd himself as heir to the lady Lingare,
Daughter to Charles the great, and William,
To Lewis the emperor, and Lewis the son
Of Charles the great. Also king Lewis the tenth,
Who was sole heir to the usurper Capet,
Could not keep quiet in his conscience,
Wearing the crown of France, till satisfied.
That fair queen Isabel, his grandmother,
Was lineal of the lady Ermengare,
Daughter to Charles the foresaid duke of Lorain:
By the same in marriage, the line of Charles the great
Was re-united to the crown of France.
So that, as clear as is the summer's sun,
King Philip's title, and Hugh Capet's claim,
King Lewis his satisfaction, all appear
To hold in right and title of the female:
So do the kings of France unto this day;
Swebit they would hold up this Salique law,
To frustrate and spoil their female's claim:
And rather choose to hide them in a net,
Then amply to imbrace their crooked titles
Surpr'd from you and your progenitors.

| K. Hen. | Upon right and conscience, make this claim? |

Cant. The sin upon my head, dread sovereign!
For in the book of Numbers it is writ,—
When the son dies, let the inheritance
Descend unto the daughter. Gracious lord,
Stand for your own; unwind your bloody flag;
Look back unto your mighty ancestors:
Go, my dread lord, to your great grandsire's tomb,
From whom you claim; invoke his warlike spirit,
And your great uncle's, Edward the black prince;
Who on the French ground play'd a tragedy,
And stood erect in the first defense of France:
While his most mighty father on the hill
Stood smiling, to behold his lion's whelp
Forage in blood of French nobility,
O noble English, that could entertain
With happy view the force of all France;
And let another half stand laughing by,
All out of work, and cold for action!

Ely. A wake remembrance of these valiant dead,
And with the same triumphant spirit arise:
You are their heir, you sit upon their throne;
The blood and courage, that renowned them,
Runs in your veins, and your thrice-puissant liege
Is in the French heart, whilst born of youth,
Ripe for exploits and mighty enterprises.

Exe. Your brother kings and monarchs of the earth
Do all that pertain that you should rouse yourself,
As did the former lions of your blood.

West. They know, your grace hath cause, and means, and might;
So hate your highness; never king of England
Had nobles rich enough to entertain his feet:
Whose hearts have left their bodies here in England,
And live and abound in the fields of France.

Cant. O, let their bodies follow, my dear liege,
With blood, and sword, and fire, to win your
In aid whereof, we of the spirituality
Will raise your highness such a mighty sum
As never did the clergy at one time
Bring in to any of your ancestors.

K. Hen. We must not only arm to invade the French;
But lay down our proportions to defend
Against the Scot, who will make road upon us
With all advantages.

Cant. They of those marches, gracious sovereign,
Shall be a wall sufficient to their end;
Our island from the pilfering borderers.

K. Hen. We do not mean the coursing snatchers only,
But fear the main intention of the Scot,
Who hath been still a giddy neighbour to us;
For you shall read, that my great grandfather
Never went with his forces into France,
But Philip the third, and Hugh Capet his son
Came pouring, like the tide into a breach
With ample and brim fulness of his force;
Galling the gleamed land with hot essays;
Gibing with grievous siege, castles and towns,
That England, being empty of defence,
Hath shook, and trembled at the ill-neighbourhood.

Cant. She hath been then more fear'd than harm'd, my liege;
For hear her but exemplified herself—
When all her chivalry hath been in France,
And she a mourning widow of her nobles,
She hath herself not only well defended,
But taken, and impounded as a stray,
The king of Scots, whom she did send to France,
To fill king Edward's fame with prisoner kings;
And make your chronicle as rich with praise,
As is the ozone and bottom of the sea
With sunken wreck and sunless treasuries.

West. But why this plain saying, very old and true,—
If that you will France win,
Then with Scotland first begin;
For once the eagle England being in prey,
To her unguarded nest the wretched Scot,
Comes sneaking, and so sucks her princely eggs.
Playing the mouse, in absence of the cat,
To spoil and havock more than she can eat.

Exe. It follows then, the cat must stay at home:
Yet that is but a curd; necessity
Since we have locks to safeguard necessaries,
And pretty traps to catch the petty thieves.
While that the armed hand doth fight abroad,
The advised head defends itself at home:
For government, though high, and low, and lower,
Put into parts, doth keep in one concert;
Congruing in a full and natural close,
Like music.

Cant. True: therefore doth heaven divide
The state of man in divers functions,
Setting endeavour in continual motion;
To which is fixed, as an aim or end,
Obedience: for so work the honey bees;
Creatures, that, by a rule in nature, teach
The act of order to a peopled kingdom.
They have a king, and officers of state;
Where some, like magistrates, correct at home;
Others, like merchants, venture trade abroad;
Others, like soldiers, armed in their stings,
Make haste upon the summer's warmest buds;
Which pillage they with merry march bring home
To the tent-royal of their emperor:
Who, busied in his majesty, surveys
The singing masons building roofs of gold,
The civil citizens kneading up the honey;
The poor mechanic porters crowding in
Their heavy burdens at his narrow gate;
The sad-eyed justice, with his surly hum,
Delivering over to executors.

The lazy yawning drone. I this infer,—
That many things, having full reference
To one concern, may work contrariously;
As many arrows, loosed several ways,
Fly to one mark;
As many several ways meet in one town;
As many fresh streams run in one self sea;
As many lines close in the dial's center;
So may a thousand actions, once afoot,
End in one purpose, and be all well borne
Without defeat. Therefore to France, my liege.
Divide your happy England into four;
Whereof take you one quarter into France,
And you withal shall make all Gallia shake.
If we, with thrice that power left at home,
Cannot defend our own door from the dog,
Let us be prepared; and our cause as well
The name of hardiness, and policy.

K. Hen. Call in the messengers sent from the Dauphin.

[Exit an Attendant. The King ascends his throne.

Now are we well resolved; and,—by God's help;
And yours, the noble slaves of our power,—
France being ours, we'll bend our awe,
Or break it all to pieces; or there we'll sit,
Ruling, in large and ample empery,
O'er France, and all her almost kingly dukedoms
To lay these bounds, and make a base,
Tombless, with no remembrance over them
Either our history shall, with full mouth,
Speak freely of our acts; or else our grave,
Like Turkish mule, shall have a tongueless mouth.
Not worship'd with a waxen epitaph.

Enter Ambassadors of France.

Now are we well prepar'd to know the pleasure
Of our fair cousin Dauphin; for, we hear,
You are come, and we beseech you, by the king.
Amb. May it please your majesty, to give us leave
Freely to render what we have in charge;
Or shall we sparingly show you far off
The Dauphin's meaning, and our embassy?
K. Hen. We are no tyrant, but a Christian king;
Unto whose grace our passion is as subject,
As are our wretches fetter'd in our prisons:
Therefore, with frank and with uncurbed plainness
Tell us the Dauphin's mind.

Amb. Thus then, in few.
Your highness, lately sending into France,
Did claim some certain dukedoms, in the right
Of your great predecessor, king Edward the third.
In answer of which claim, the prince our master
Says,—that you savour too much of your youth;
And bids you be advis'd, 'tis thought in France,
That you should be with a mirrour in your hand;
You cannot revel into dukedoms there:
He therefore sends you, master for your spirit,
This tun of treasure; and, to lieu of this,
Desires you, let the dukedoms claim,
Heartily, of you. Thus the Dauphin speaks.

K. Hen. What treasure, uncle?

Eve. Tennis-balls, my liege.

K. Hen. We are glad, the Dauphin is so pleasant with us;
His present, and your pains, we thank you for:
When we have match'd our rockets to these balls,
We will, in France, by God's grace, play a set,
Shall strike his father's crown into the hazard;
Tell him, he hath made a match with such a wrangler,
That all the courts of France will be disturb'd
With chances. And we understand him well;
How he comes o'er us with our wilder days,
Not measuring what use we made of them.
We never vain'd this poor seat of England;
And therefore, living hence, did give ourselves
To barbarous license; as 'tis ever common,
That men are merriest when they are from home.
But tell the Dauphin,—I will keep my state;
Pe ring like a king, and bowing my neck;
When I do reuse me in my throne of France:
For that I have laid by my majesty,
And plodded like a man for working-days;
But, when I rise with so full a story,
That I will dazzle all the eyes of France,
Yea, strike the Dauphin blind to look on us.
And tell the pleasant prince,—this mock of his Haft turn'd his balls to guns, and his soul
Shall stand sore charg'd for the wasteful vengeance
That shall fly with them: for many a thousand widows
Shall this mock mock out of their dear husbans;
Mock mothers from their sons, mock castles down;
And some are yet ungotten, and unborn,
That shall have cause to curse the Dauphin's scorn.
But this lies all within the will of God,
To whom I do appeal; And in whose name,
Tell you the Dauphin, I am coming on,
To venge me as I may, and to put forth
My honest hands in a well-hallow'd cause,
So, get you hence in peace; and tell the Dauphin,
His jest will savour but of shallow wit,
When thousands weep, more than did laugh at it—
Convey them with safe conduct—fare you well.

[Exeunt Ambassadors.

Enter. This was a merry message.

K. Hen. We hope to make the sender blush at it.

[Deceiv'd from his threat.

Therefore, my lords, omit no happy hour,
That may give furtherance to our expedition:
For we have now no thought in us but France,
Save those to God, that run before our business.
Therefore, let our proportions for these wars
Be soon collected; and all things thought upon.
That man, with reasonable wisdom, and
Add more feathers to our wings; for, God before,
We'll chide this Dauphin at his father's door.
Therefore, let every man new task his thought,
That this fair action may on foot be brought.

[Exeunt.

ACT II.

Enter Chorus.

Chor. Now all the youth of England are on fire,
And sitten dalliance in the wardrobe lies;
Now suit the townsmen with good-honour's thought.
Reigns solely in the breast of every man:
They sell the pasture now, to buy the horse;
Following the mirror of all Christian kings,
With winged heels, as English Mercureys.
For now sits Expectation in the air;
And hides a sword, from hilts unto the point,
With crowns imperial, crowns, and coronets,
Promis'd to Harry, and his followers.
There is no counsel given by good insurance
Of this most dreadful preparation,
Shake in their fear; and with pale policy Seek to divert the English purposes.
O Earth! it would moveth to thy inward greatness,
Like little body with a mighty heart,—
What might'st thou do, that honour wouldest do,
Were all thy children kind and natural!
But see thy fault! France hath in thee found out
A nest of hollow booms, which he fills
With treacherous crowns; and three corrupted men,
One, Richard earl of Cambridge; and the second,
Henry lord Scroop of Masham; and the third,
Sir Thomas Grey knight of Northumberland,—
Have, for the guilt of France, (1) guilt, indeed:) Consell'd the townsmen with feudall France;
And by their hands this grace of kings must die,
(If hell and treason hold their promises,) Ere he take ship for France, and in Southampton.
Linger your patience on; and well digest
The abuse of distance, while we force a play.
The sum is paid; the traitors are agreed;
The king is set from London; and the scene Is now transported, gentiles, to Southampton;
There is the playhouse now, there must you sit:
And thence to France shall we convey you safe,
And bring you back, charming the narrow seas
To give you gentle pass; for, if we may,
We'll make a bed and one stomach with your play.
But, till the king come forth, and not till then,
Unto Southampton do we shift our scene.

Scene I.—The same. Eastcheap.

Enter Nym and Bardolph.

Bard. Well met, corporal Nym.

Nym. Good morrow, lieutenant Bardolph.

Bard. What, are ancient Pistol and you friends yet?

Nym. For my part, I care not: I say little; but when time shall serve, there shall be smiles:—but that shall be as it may. I dare not fight; but I will wink, and hold out mine iron: It is a simple one; but what though? It will toast cheese; and it will endure cold as another man's sword will: and there's the humour of it.

Bard. I will bestow a breakfast, to make you friends; and we'll be all three sworn brothers to France; let it be so, good corporal Nym.

Nym. 'Faith, I will live so long as I may, that's the certain of it; and when I cannot live any longer, I will do as I may: that is my test. That is the renouncez of you.

Bard. It is certain, corporal, that he is married to Neill Quickly; and, certainly, she did you wrong: for you were troth-plight to her.
Nym. I cannot tell; things must be as they may: men may sleep, and they may have their threats about them at that time; and, some say, knives have edges. It must be as it may: though patience be a tired mare, yet she will plod. There must be conclusions. Well, I cannot tell.

Enter Pistol and Mrs. Quickly.

Bard. Here comes ancient Pistol, and his wife—good corporal, be patient here. How now, mine host Pistol?

Pist. Base take, call'st thou me—host? Now, by this hand I swear, I scorn the term; Nor shall my Nell keep lodgers, unless for their throats; for we cannot lodge and board a dozen or fourteen gentle women, that live honestly by the prick of their needles, but it will be thought we keep a bawdy-house, it is said. [Nym draws his sword.] O well-a-day, Lady, if he be not drawn now! O Lord! here's corporal Nym's—now shall we have willful adultery and murder committed. Good lieutenant Bardolph, a good corporal, offer nothing here.

Nym. Pist.

Pist. Fish for thee, Iceland dog! thou prick-eared cur of Iceland.

Quick. Good corporal Nym, show the valour of a man, and put up thy sword.

Nym. Will you shog off? I would have you sodus. [Soothings his sword.]

Pist. Sodus, egregious dog? O vale grage! The sodus in thy most marvellous face.
The sodus in thy teeth, and in thy throat, And in thy hateful lungs, yea, in thy maw, perdy! And, which is worse, within thy nasty mouth! I do retract the sodus in thy bowels; For I can take, and Pistol's cock is up, And flushing fire will follow.

Nym. I am not Barbason, I cannot conjure me. I have some humour to know me indifferent well: If you grow foul with me, Pistol, I will scour you with my rapier, as I may, in fair terms; if you would walk off, I would prick your guts a little. In good terms, as I may; and that's the humour of it.

Pist. O braggard vale, and damned varicious wight! The great gape, and dotting death is near; Therefore exhale. [Pistol and Nym draw.]

Bard. Hear me, hear me what I say:—he that strikes the first stroke, I'll run him up to the hilses, and am a soldier. [Draws.]

Pist. An oath of mickle might; and fury shall abate.

Give me thy fist, thy fore-foot to me give; Thy spirits must not attend my eye.

Nym. I will cut thy throat, one time other, in fair terms; that is the humour of it.

Pist. Coupe le gorgé, that's the word?—I thee defy again.

Hound of Crete, think'st thou my spouse to get? No; to the spital go, And from the powdering of Infamy. Forth forth the lazaret kite of Cressid's kind, Doll Tearer sheet she by name, and her espouse: I have, and I will hold, the quondam Quickly For the only she: and—Pausa, there's enough.

Enter the Boy.

Boy. Mine host Pistol, you must come to my master,—and you, hostess:—he is very sick, and would to bed.—Good Bardolph, put thy nose between his sheets, and do the office of a warming-pan: faith, he's very ill.

Bard. Away, you rogue. Quickly, true troth, he'll yield the crew a pudding one of these days; the king has killed his heart.—Good husband, come home presently.

[Exeunt Mrs. Quickly and Boy.]

Quick. As ever you came of women, come in quickly to sir John: Ah, poor heart! he is so shocked of a burning quotient tertian, that it is most lamentable to behold. Sweet men, come to him.

Nym. The king hath run bad humours on the knight, that's the even of it. Pist. Nym, thou hast spoke the right; His heart is fracted, and corroborate.

Nym. The king is a good king; but it must be as it may; he passes some humours, and cares.

Pist. Let us condole the knight; for, lambkins, we will live.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Southampton. A Council Chamber.

Enter Exeter, Bedford, and Westmoreland.

Bed. 'Fore God, his grace is bold, to trust these traitors.

Exe. They shall be apprehended by and by.

West. How smooth and even they do bear themselves?

As if allegiance in their bosoms sat, Crowned with faith, and constant loyalty.

Bed. The king hath note of all that they intend, By interception which they dream not of.

Till, Nay, but the man that was his bedfellow, Whom he'll condole and grace'd with princely favours,

That he should, for a foreign pursue, so sell
His sovereign's life to death and treachery!

Trumpet sounds. Enter King Henry, Serocop, Cambridge, Grey, Lords, and Attendants.

K. Hen. Now sits the wind fair, and we will aboard.

My lord of Cambridge,—and my kind lord of Masham,—

And you, my gentle knight,—give me your thoughts.

Think you not, that the powers we bear with us,
Will cut their passage through the force of France;
Doing the execution, and the act,
For which we have in head assembled them?

Serocop. No doubt, my liege, if each man do his best.

K. Hen. I doubt not that; since we are well provided

We carry not a heart with us from hence,
That grows not in a fair consent with ours;
Nor leave not one behind, that doth not wish
Success and a conquest to attend on us.

Caius. Never was monarch better fear'd, and lov'd.
Than is your majesty; there's not, I think, a subject,
That sits so heart-grieved and unceasing
Under the sweet shade of your government.
Grey. Even those, that were your father's enemies,
Have stowed their vills in honey; and do serve you
With hearts create of duty and of zeal.
K. Hen. We therefore have great cause of thank-

And shall forget the office of our hand,
Sooner than quittance of desert and merit,
According to the weight and worthiness.
Grey. We shall with such a returns be told;
And labour shall refresh itself with hope,
To do your grace incessant services.
K. Hen. We judge no less.—Uncle of Exeter,
Enlarge the man committed yesterday,
That rail'd against our people: we consider,
It was excess of wine that set him on;
And, on his more advice, we pardon him.
Grey. That's mercy, but too much security:
Let him be punish'd, sovereign; lest example
Breed, by his sufferance, more of such a kind.
K. Hen. 1, let us yet be merciful.
Com. So may your highness, and yet punish too.
Grey. Sir, you show great mercy, if you give him life,
After the taste of much correction.
K. Hen. Alas, your too much love and care of me
And your horizon (which this poor wretch,
If little fanats, proceeding on distemper,
Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our

When capital crimes, chew'd, swallow'd, and digested,
Appear before us?—We'll yet enrage that man, Though Cambridge, Scroop, and Grey,—in their
dear care,
And tender preservation of our person,—
Would have him punish'd. And now to our French causes;
Who are the late commissioners?
Com. I one, my lord;
Your highness bade me ask for it to day.
Scroop. So did you me, my liege.
Grey. That, my sovereign.
K. Hen. Then, Richbard, earl of Cambridge, there is yours —

There yours, lord Scroop of Masham—and, sir
Knight,
Grey of Northumberland, this same yours—
Read them; and know, I know your worthiness.
My lord of Westmoreland,—and uncle Exeter,—
We will aboard to-night.—Why, how now, gentleman?
What see you in those papers, that you lose
So much perplexion?—look ye, how they change!
Their cheeks are paper.—Why, what read you there,

That hath so cowardly and chas'd your blood
Out of appearance?

I, I do confess my faniot;
And do submit me to your highness' mercy.
Grey. Scroop. To which we all appeal.
K. Hen. The mercy, that was quick in ns but late,
By your own counsel is suppressd' and kill'd:—
You must not dare, for shame, to talk of mercy;
For your own reasons turn into your bosoma,
As dogs upon their masters, worrying them.—
See, my prince, and my noble peers,
These English monsters! My lord of Cambridge
here.—
You know, how apt our love was, to accord
To furnish him with all appertinements,
Belonging to his honour; and this man
Hath, for a few light crowns, lightly conspir'd,
And sworn unto the practices of France,
To kill us here in Hamptons: the which,
This knight, no less for hounour bound to us

Than Cambridge is,—hath like wise sworn.—But
What shall I say to thee, lord Scroop; thou cruel,
Ingratitude, and inhuman, am I unacquainted?
Thou, that didst bear the key of all my counsels,
That knew'st the very bottom of my soul,
That almost might'st have cold'd me into gold,
Wouldst have practis'd one or two for thy use?—
May it be possible, that foreign hire
Could out of thee extract one spark of evil,
That might annoy my finger?—sa so strange,
That the truth of it stand suffer'd at all.
As black from white, my eye will severely see it
Treason, and murder, ever keep together,
As two yoke-devils sworn to either purpose,
Wrest such no secrets, nor a natural look,
That admission did not whoop at them;
But thou, 'gainst all proportion, didst bring in Wonder, to wait on treason, and on murder;
And whatsoever cunning end it was,
That wrought upon thee so preposterously,
Hath got the voice in hell for excellence:
And other devils, that suggest by treasons,
Do both—

With patches, colours, and with forms being fetch'd
From glistering semblances of ployt;
But he, that temper'd thee, bade thee stand up,
Gave thee that instance why thou shouldst do treason.

Unles to dub thee with the name of traitor.
If that same daemon, that hath guid'd thee thus,
Should in his usual gait walk the whole world,
He might return to Tasty Tartar back,
And tell the legions—I can never win
A soul so easy as that Englishman's.
O, how lost with jealous interested
The sweetness of affiance! show men dutifull
Why, so didst thou: seem they grave and learned?
Why, so didst thou: Come they of noble family?
Why, so didst thou: seem they religious?
Why, so didst thou: Or are they in diet:
Free from gross passion, or of mirth, or anger;
Constant in spirit, not sweating with the blood
Garnish'd and deck'd in modest emplamement.
Not working with the eye, without the ear,
And, but in purged judgment, trusting neither?
Such, and so finely belted, didst thou seem:
And thy fall hath jads a kind of blot,
To mark the full-franght man, and best indned,
With some suspicion. I will weep for thee;
For this revolt of thine, methinks, is like
Another fail of man.—Their faults are open,
Arrive them to the answer of the law.
And God acquit them of their practices!

Rev. I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of Richard earl of Cambridge.

I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of Henry lord Scroop of Masham.

I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of Thomas Grey, knight of Northumberland.

Scroop. Our purposes God justly hath discover'd;
And I repent my faniot, more than my death;
Which I beseech your highness to forgive,
Although my body pay the price of it.
Com. For me,—the gold of France did not seduce:—

Although I did admit it as a motive,
The sooner to effect what I intended:—
But from the stated for prevention:
Which I in sufferance heartily will rejocce,
Beseeching God, and you, to pardon me.
Grey. Never did faithful subject more rejoece
At the discovery of most dangerous treason,
Than I do at this hour joy o'er myself,
Preverted from a damned enterprise,
My faniot, but not my body, pardon, sovereign.
K. Hen. Why, wilt you in his mercy! Hear your sentence.

You have conspir'd against our royal person, Join'd with an enemy proclaim'd, and from his enemy's

Receive the golden earnest of our death;
King Henry V.

Wherein you would have sold your king to slaughter,
His princes and his peers to servitude,
His subjects to oppression and contempt,
And his whole kingdom unto desolation.
Touching our person, seek we no revenge;
But we our kingdom's safety must so tender,
Whose ruin you three sought, that to her laws
We do deliver you. Get you then her grace,
Pitiful miserable wretches, to your death.
The taste whereof, God, of his mercy, give you
Patience to endure, and true repentance
Of all your dear offences!—Bear them hence.

Now, Lords, for France; the enterprise whereof
Shall be to you, as we, like glorious.
We doubt not of a fair and lucky war;
Since, either in favor, on our side to light
This dangerous treason, lurking in our way,
To hinder our beginnings, we doubt not now,
But every rub is smoothed on our way.
Then, forth, dear countrypeople; let us deliver
Our puissance into the hand of God,
Cutting it straight in expedition.
Cheerly to sea; the signs of war advance.
No king of England, if not king of France.

Enter Pistol, Mrs. Quickly, Nym, Bardolph, and Boy.

Quick. Prythee, honey-sweet husband, let me bring thee to Staines.

Pist. No; for my main heart doth yearn.

Bardolph, be blithe;—Nym, rouse thy vaunting veins;
Boy, brake thy courage up; for Falstaff he is dead,
And we must yearn therefore.

Bard. 'Would I were with him, wronsome he be in heaven, as in earth.'
Quick. Nay, sure, he's not in hell; he's in Arthur's bosom, if ever man went to Arthur's bosom.
'A made a finer end, and went away, as it had been a chriostian child; parted even just between twelve and one, even at turning o' the tide: for after I saw him fumble with the sheets, and play with flowers, and smile upon his fingers'ends, I knew there was but one way; for his nose was as sharp as a pen, and 'a babbed of green fields.
How now, sir John? quoth I: what, man! be of good cheer. So 'a cried out—God, God, God! three or four times; now I, to comfort him, bid him mirth, and 'a bade him to think of God; I bode him, so let it be, there was no need to trouble himself with any such thoughts yet: So, 'a bade me lay more clothes on his feet: I put my hand into the bed, and felt them, and they were as cold as any stone; then I felt to his knees, and so upward, and upward, and all was as cold as any stone.

Nym. They say, he cried out of sack.
Quick. Ay, that 'a did.
Bard. And of women.
Quick. Nay, that 'a did not.
Boys. Yes, that 'a did; and said, they were devils in another.
Quick. 'A could never abide carnation; 'twas a colour he never liked.
Boy. 'A said once the devil would have him about the north.
Quick. 'A did in some sort, indeed, handle women; but then he was rheumatic; and talked of the whore of Babylon.

Boy. Do you not remember, 'a saw a fleck stea upon Bardolph's nose; and 'a said, it was a black soul burning in hell-fire?

Bard. Well, the fuel is gone, that maintained that mark; this all the Riches I got in his service.

Nym. Shall we shog off? the king will be gone from Southampton.

Pist. Come, let's away.—My love, give me thy lips.
Look to my chattels, and my moveables:
Let senses rule; the word is, Pitch and pay;
Trust none;
For oaths are straws, men's faiths are wafer-cakes,
And hold fast is the only dog, my duck;
Therefore, caveat! be thy counsellor.
Go, clear the chrysalis—Beokes are five in arms,
Let us to France! like horse-leeches, my boys;
To suck, to suck, the very blood to suck?

Bard. And that is but unwholesome food, they say.
Pist. Touch her soft mouth, and march.

Bard. Farewell, hostess.

Kissing her. Nym. I cannot kiss, that is the humour of it; but adieu.
Pist. Let housewifery appear; keep close, I thee command.

Quick. Farewell; adieu.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—France. A Room in the French King's Palace.

Enter the French King attended; the Dauphin, the Duke of Burgundy, the Constable, and others.

Fr. King. Thus come the English with full power upon us;
And more than carefully it us concerns,
To answer royally in our defence.
Therefore these, the dukes of Berry, and of Bretagne,
Of Brabant, and of Orleans, shall make forth,—
And you, prince Dauphin,—with all sweet despatch,
To line, and new repair, our towns of war,
With men of courage, and with means defendant
For England his approaches makes as fierce,
As waters to the sucking of a gulf.
It fits us then, to be provident.
As fear may teach us, out of late examples
Left by the fatal and neglected English
Upon our fields.

Dauph. My most redoubted father,
It is most meet we arm us 'gainst the foe:
For peace itself should not so dull a kingdom,
(Though war, nor no known quarrel, were in question,)
But that defences, musters, prepa-ration,
Should be maintain'd, assembled, and collected,
As were a war in expectation.
Therefore, I say, 'tis meet we all go forth,
To view the sick and feeble parts of France;
And let us do it with no show of fear;
No, with no more, than if we heard that England
Were busied with a Whitsuntide dance.
For, my good liege, she is as tidy king'd,
Her scepter so fantastically borne
By a vain, giddy, shallow, humorous youth,
That fear attends her not.

Con. O peace, prince Dauphin! You are too much mistaken in this king:
Question your grace the late ambassadors,
With what great state he heard their embassy,
How well supplied with noble counsellors,
How modest in exception, and withal
How terrible in constant resolution,—
And you shall find, his vanities fore-spent
Were but the outside of the Roman Bratus,
Covering discretion with a coat of folly;
As gardeners do with orifice hide those roots
That shall first spring, and be most delicate.

Dauph. Well, 'tis not so, my lord high constable,
But though we think it so, it is no matter:
In cases of defence, 'tis best to weigh
The enemy more mighty than he seems,
So the more defense he multiplieth;
Which, of a weak and niggardly projection,
Doth, like a miser, spoil his coat, with scanting
A little cloth.

Fr. King. Think we king Harry strong?
And, princes, look, you strongly arm to meet him.
The kindred of him hath been flesh'd upon us;
And he is bred out of that bloody strain,
The haunted wither'd, and his family fraught:
Witness our too much memorable shame,
When Cressy battle fatally was struck,
And all our princes captiv'd, by the hand
Of that black name, Edward black prince of Wales;
Whiles the same in his mountain sire—on mountain standing,
Up in the air, crown'd with the golden sun,—
Now his heroic seed, and smell'd to see him
Mangle the work of nature, and deface
The patterns that by God and by French fathers
Had twenty years been made. This is a stem
Of that victorious stock; and let us fear
The native mightiness and fate of him.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Ambassadors from Henry King of England
Do crave admittance to your majesty.

Fr. King. We'll give them present audience.

Go, and bring them. [Exeunt Mess. and certain Lords.

You see, this chance is fall'n on my head.
Daw. Turn head, and stop pursuit: for coward dogs
Most spend their mouths, when what they seem to the theatre
Runs far before them. Good my sovereign,
Take up the English short; and let them know
What of a monarchy you are the head:
Self-love, my liege, is not so vile a sin
As self-neglecting.

Re-enter Lords, with Exeter and Train.

Fr. King. From our brother England? [Exeunt From him; and thus be your majesty.

He wills you, in the name of God Almighty,
That you divest yourself and lay apart
The crown'd glory stories, that, by gift of heaven,
By law of nature, and of nations, long
To him, and to his heirs; namely, the crown,
And all wide stretched honours that pertain
By custom and the ordinance of times.
Unto the crown of France. That you may know,
'Tis no sinister, nor any such ward claim,
Pleas'd from the worm-holes of long vanish'd days,
Nor from the dust of his oblivion tak'n.
He sends you this most memorabl line,
In every branch truly demonstrative;
What you do, despair of; and when you find
And when you find him ever deriv'd
From his most fam'd of famous ancestors,
Edward the Third, he bids you then resign
Your crown and kingdom, and return him
From him the native and true challenger.

Fr. King. Or else what follows?

Exe. Bloody constraint; for if you hide the crown
Even in your hearts, there will he rack for it:
And therefore in fierce tempest he is coming,
In thunder, and in earthquake, like a Jove;
(That, if requiring fail, he will compel)
And bids you, in the bowels of the Lord,
Deliver up the crown: and to take mercy
On the poor souls, for whom this hungry war
Opens his vasty jaws; and on your head
There haunt us in our hour of woe
The dead men's blood, the pining maidens' groans.
For husbands, fathers, and betrothed lovers,
That shall be swallowed in this controversy.
The is his claim, his threatening, and his message;
Unless the Dauphin be in presence here,
To whom expressly I bring greeting too.

Fr. King. For us, we will consider of this further:
To what end shall we bear our full intent
Back to our brother England.

Daw. For the Dauphin,
I stand here for him: What to him from England? [Exeunt. Scorn, and defiance; slight regard, contempt;
And any thing that may not miscarue
The amorous sender, or the family thoughts.
Witness says my king: and, if your father's highness
Do not, in grant of all demands at large,
Sweeten the bitter mock you sent his majesty,
He'll call you to so hot an answer for it,
That caves and wrinckled vantages of France
Shall chide your trespass, and return your mock
In second accent of his ordinance.

Daw. Say, if my father send a fair reply,
It is against my will: for I desire
Nothing but odds with England; to that end,
As matching to his youth and vanity.
I did present him with those Paris balls.
Exeunt. He make your Paris Louvre shake for it,
Were it the mistress court of mighty Europe:
And, be assured, you'll find a difference,
(As we, his subjects, have in wonder found,) Between the promise of his greater days,
And these he masters now; now he weighs time,
Even to the utmost grain; which you shall read
In your own losses, if he stay in France.

Fr. King. Tomorrow shall you know our mind at full.

Exe. Despatch us with all speed, lest our king
Come hither to question our delay
For he is footed in this land already.

Fr. King. You shall be soon despatch'd, with fair conditions:
A night is but small breath, and little pause,
To answer matters of this consequence. [Enter.

ACT III.

Enter Chorus.

Chor. Thus with imag'in'd wing our swift scene flies,
In motion with no less celerity
Than that of thought. Suppose that you have seen
The well appointed king at Hampton pier
Embark his royalty: and his brave fleet
With sixe strong merchantmen the young Phoebus fanning,
Play with your fancies; and in them behold,
Upon the hemen tackle, ship-boys climbing,
Hear the shrill whistle, which doth order give
To seemen confined: behold the threadren sails,
Borne with the invisible and creeping wind,
Draw the huge bottoms through the narrow'd sea,
Breasting the lofty surge: 1, do but think,
You stand upon the vig'rous, and you behold
A citie in the incomstant billows dancing:
For so appears this fleet majestical,
Holding due course to Harleflur. Follow, follow! Grapple your minds to sternage of this navy;
And leave your England, as dead midnight, still,
Guarded with grandires, babies, and old women,
Either past, or not arrived to, pith and puissance:
For who is he, whose chin is but enrich'd
With one appearing skill, that will not follow
These cull'd and choice-drawn swalliners to France?
Work, work, your thoughts, and therein see a
Behold the ordnance on their carriages, [sighs
With fatal mouths gaping on girded Harleflur.
Suppose, the ambassador from the French comes Tells Harry—that the king doth offer him [back
Katharine his daughter; and with her, to dowry,
Cannon, ordnance, and all commodious demesne;
The offer likes not: and the nimble gunner
With Linstock now the devilish cannon touches, [Alarms: and crombiers go off.
And down goes all before them. Still he kind,
And eke out our performance with your mind.

[Exit.

SCENE I. — The same. Before Harleflur.

Alarms. Enter King Henry, Exeter, Bedford,
Glouster, and Soldiers, with scaling ladders.
K. Hen. Once more unto the breach, dear friends, one more;
Or close the wall up with our English dead!
In peace, there's nothing so becomes a man,
As modest stillness, and humility:
But when the blast of war blows in our ears,
Then imitate the action of the tiger;
Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood,
Disguise fair nature with hard-fav'rd rage:
Then lend the eye a terrible aspect;
Let it pry through the pates of the head,
Like the brass cannon; let the brow o'erwhelm it,
As fearfully, as doth a gallant rock
O'ershank and jutty his confounded base,
Swill'd with the wild and wasteful ocean.
Not set the teeth, and stretch the nostril wide;
Hold hard the breath, and bend up every spirit
To his full height.—On, on, you noblest English,
Whose blood is set from fathers of war-proof!
Fathers, that, like so many Alexanders,
Have, in these parts, from morn till even fought,
And sheath'd their swords for lack of argument.
Dishonour not your mothers; now attest,
That those, whom ye call fathers, did beget you;
Be copy now to men of grosser blood,
And teach them how to war!—And you, good yeomen,
Whose limbs were made in England, show us here
The mettle of your pasture; let us swear
That ye are worth your breeding: which I doubt not;
For there is none of you so mean and base,
That hath not noble lustre in your eyes.
I see you stand like greyhounds in the slips,
Straining upon the start. The game's afoot;
Follow your spirit: and, up, up, and away!
Cry—God for Harry! England! and Saint George!
[Exeunt. Alarum, and chambers go off.]

SCENE II.—The same.

Forces pass over; then enter Nym, Bardolph, Pistol, and Boy.

Bard. On, on, on, on, on! to the breach, to the breach!

Nym. 'Pray thee, corporal, stay; the knacks are too hot;
and, for mine own part, I have not a case of lives: the humour of it is too hot, that the very plain-song of it.

Pist. The plain-song is just; for humours do abound!
Knocks go and come: God's vassals drop and die;
And sword and shield, in bloody field,
Doth with immortal fame.

Boy. 'Would I were in an alcove in London!
I would give all my fame for a pot of ale, and safety.

Pist. And I;
If wishes would prevail with me,
My purpose should not fail with me,
But thither would I hie.

Boy. As duly, but not as truly, as bird doth sing on bough.

Enter Fluellen.

Flu. God's plod!—Up to the preachers, you rascals! will you not up to the preaches?

Pist. Be merciful, great duke, to men of mould!
Abate thy rage, abate thy manly rage!
Abate thy rage, great duke!
Good boy, abate thy rage! use lenity, sweet chuck!

Nym. These be good humours!—your honour wins bad humours.

[Exeunt Nym, Pistol, and Bardolph, followed by Fluellen.

Boy. As young as I am, I have observed these three swashers. I am boy to them all three; but all the same, though they would serve me, could not be man to me: for, indeed, three such anticks do not amount to a man. For Bardolph—he is white-liver'd, and red-faced; by the means whereof, 'a faces it out, but, fights not. For Pistol,—he hath a killing tongue, and a quiet sword; by the means whereof 'a breaks words, and keeps whole weapons. For Nym,—he hath heard, that men of few words are the best men; and therefore he scorns to say his prayers, lest 'a should be thought a coward: but his few bad words are match'd with as few good deeds. By the measure of man's head but his own; and that was against a post, when he was drunk. They will steal anything, and call it,—purchase. Bardolph stole a lute-case; bore it twelve leagues, and sold it for nothing.
Nym, and Bardolph are sworn brothers in fishing; and in Calais they stole a fire-shovel: I know, by that piece of service, the men would carry coals. They would have me as familiar with men's pockets, as their gloves or their handkerchiefs; which makes much against my manhood, if I should take from another's pocket, to put into mine; for it is plain pocketing up of wrongs. I must leave them, and seek some better service:
their villainy goes against my weak stomach, and therefore I must cast it up.

[Exit Boy.

Re-enter Fluellen, Gower following.

Gow. Captain Fluellen, you must come presently to the mines; the duke of Gloster would speak with you.

Flu. To the mines! tell you the duke, it is not so good to come to the mines: For, look you, the mines is not according to the disciplines of the war;
the concavities of it is not sufficient; for, look you,
'th'athwart which you may discourse unto a man duke, look you,) is eight himself four yards under the countermines; by Cheshu, I think, 'a will blow all up, if there is not better directions.

Gow. The duke of Gloster, to whom the order of the siege is now given, is all ready, is directed by an Irishman; a very valiant gentleman, I'faith.

Flu. It is captain Macmorris, is it not?
Gow. I think, it be.
Flu. By Cheshu, he's an ass, as in the 'orld; I will verify as much in his heard: he has no more directions in the true disciplines of the wars, look you, of the Roman disciplines, than a puppy-
dog.

Enter Macmorris and Jamy, at a distance.

Gow. Here 'a comes; and the Scots captain, captain Jamy, with him.

Flu. Captain Jamy is a marvellous faborious gentleman, that is certain; and of great expedition, and knowledge, in the ancient wars, upon my particular knowledge. But, as a thing uncertain,
I will maintain his argument as well any military man in the 'orld, in the disciplines of the pristine wars of the Romans.

Jamy, I say, gud-day, captain Fluellen.

Flu. God-den to your worship, gott captain Jamy.

Gow. How now, captain Macmorris? have you quit the mines? have the pioneers given o'er?

Mac. By Christ is lath, lath ill done; the work ish give over, the trumpet sound the retreat.
By my hand, I swear, and by my father's soul, the work ish ill done; it ish give over; I would have bowed up the towns, so Christ save me, in.
in an hour. O, 'tiss ill done, lish ill done; by my hand, lish ill done!

Flu. Captain Macmorris, I peseec you now, will you voutasee me, I, a few disputations with you, as partly touching or concerning the disciplines of the war, the Roman wars, in the way of argument, you look, and friendly communication; partly deeds; for 'a never broke any man for the satisfaction, look you, of my mind, as touching the direction of the military discipline; that is the point.

Jamy. It salt be very gud, gud feith, gud captains bath; and I salt quitt you with gud leve, as I may pick occasion; that sail I, mardy.
Mac. It is no time to discourse, so Christy save me, the day is hot, and the weather, and the wars, and the king, and the dukes; it is no time to discourse. The town is beseeched, and the trumpet calls us to the breach; and we talk, and, by Christy, do nothing; 'tis shame for us all: so didst say me, 'tis shame to stand still; 'tis shame, by my hand: and there is threats to be cut, and works to be done; and there is nothing done, so Christy save me. Ia.

Jamy. By the mess, ere these eyes of mine take themselves to slumber, alike do gude service, or alike liggis'th' prudent for it; ay, or go to death; and all things to me as I may well do that is the bref and the long: Mary, I was full faint heard some question 'twixt you 'tway.

Fls. Captain Macmorris, I think, look you, under your correction, there is not many of your nation.

Mac. Of my nation? What ish my nation? Is it a villain, and a bastard, and a knave, and a rascal? What ish my nation? Who talks of my nation?

Fls. Look you, if you take the matter otherwise than is meant, captain Macmorris, for adventure, I shall think you do not use me with that affability as in other cases; I ought to use you, look you; being as goot a man as yourself, both in the discipines of wars, and in the derivation of my birth, and in other particularities.

Mac. I do not know you, so good a man as myself: so Christy save me, I will cut off your head.

Gow. Gentlemen both, you will mistake each other.

Jamy. A! that's a foul fault.

[Aside.]

Gow. The town sounds a parley.

Fls. Captain Macmorris, when there is more benefit opportunity to be required, look you, I will be more bold to tell you, I know the discipines of war; and there is an end. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. Before the Gates of Harfleur.

The Governor and some Citizens on the walls; the English Forces below. Enter King Henry and his Train.

K. Hen. How yet resolves the governor of the town?

This is the latest parle we will admit:
Therefore to our best mercy give yourselves; or like to men proud of destruction,
Defy us to our worst: for, as I am a soldier, (A name, that, in my thoughts, becomes me best,) If I begin the battery once again,
I will not see the half-achieved Harfleur,
Till in her ashes she be buried.
The gates of mercy shall be all shut up;
And the flesh'd soldier—rough and hard of heart—

In liberty of bloody hand, shall range
With conscience wild as hell; mowing like grass
Your fresh-fair virgins and your flowering infants.

What is it then to me, if Impious war—
Array'd in flames, like to the prince of fiends,—

Do, with his smirch'd complexion, all fell feats
Enl'ck'd to waste and desolation?

Whate'er be the case, when you yourselves are cause,
If your pure maidens fall into the hand
Of hot and forcing violation?

What rein can hold licentious wickedness,
When the gibbet holds his fierce career?

We may as bootless spend our valiant command
Upon the enraged soldiers in their spoil,
As send precepts to the Leviathan
To come aghast. Therefore, gentlemen of Harfleur,
Take plenty of your town, and of your people.

Whiles yet my soldiers are in my command;
Whiles yet the cool and temperate wind of grace
Overflows the filthy and contumacious clouds
Of deadly murder, spoil, and villainy.
If not, why, in a moment, look to see

The blind and bloody soldier with foul hand
Defile the locks of your shrill-shrieking daughters;
Your fathers taken by the silver beards,
And their most revered heads dash'd to the walls;

Your naked infants spitted upon pikes;
Whiles the mad mothers with their howls confus'd
Do break the clouds, as did the wives of Jerey
When, strong and sturdy, out of their burning slaughtermen.

What say you? will you yield, and this avoid?
Or, guilty in defence, be thus destroy'd?

Goe. Our expectation hath this day an end:
The Dauphin, whom of sucour we entreated,
And did not hear; 'twixt our enemies, are not yet ready
To raise so great a siege. Therefore, dear King,
We yield our town, and lives, to thy soft mercy:
Enter our gates; dispose of us, and ours;
For we have, for defence, our defensive gates

K. Hen. Open your gates.—Come, uncle Exeter,
Go you and enter Harfleur: there remain,
And fortify it strongly against the French:
Unto the same all. For us, dear uncle,—

The winter coming on, and sickness growing
Upon our soldiers, we'll retire to Calais.
To-morrow in Harfleur will we be your guest;
To-morrow for the march we are address'd.

[Flourish. The King, &c. enter the town.]

SCENE IV.—Rouen. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Katharine and Alice.

Kath. Alice, tu as esté en Angleterre, et tu parles bien le langage.

Alice. En pur, madame.

Kath. Alice, tu es une ingénue; il faut que j'apprenne a parler. Comment appelles vous la main, en Anglais?

Alice. La main? elle est appelée, de hand.

Kath. Et les doigts?

Alice. Les doigts? ma foi, je oûse les doigts; miais je me souvienne. Les doigts? je pense, qu'ils sont appelés de fingres; oû, de fingres.

Kath. Le mene, de hand, la la, de fingres.

Je pense, que je suis le bon calicier. J'ai gagne deux mots d'Anglais vivement. Comment appelles vous les ongles?

Alice. Les ongles? les appelons, de nalis.

Kath. De nalis. Est-ce bien de, de hand, de fingres, de nalis.

Alice. C'est bien dit, madame; il est fort bon.

Kath. Dites moy en Anglais, le bras.

Alice. De arm, madame.

Kath. Et le coudre.

Alice. De fold, madame.

Kath. De elbow. Je m'en faits la repetition de tous les mots, que vous m'avez appris de a present.

Alice. Il est trop difficile, madame, comme je pense.

Kath. Ensayez moy, Alice, essayez; De hand, de fingre, de nalis, de arm, de billow.

Alice. De elbow, madame.

Kath. O Seigneur Dieu! je m'en oublie; De elbow. Comment appelles vous le oö?

Alice. De neck, madame.

Kath. De neck: Et le menton.

Alice. De chin.

Alice. Ouy. Sauf votre honneur: en vertu, vous prononcez les mots aussi droit que les manifs d'Angleterre.

Kath. Vous ne devez point d'apprendre par la grace de Dieu, et en peu de temps.

Alice. N'avez vous pas déjà oublie ce que je vous ay enseigné?

Kath. Non, je rectifier a vous promptement.

De hand, de fingre, de nalis.—

Alice. De nalis, madame.

Kath. De nalis, de arme, de billow.

Kath. Voici, un honneur, de elbow.

Kath. Avez dit je; de elbow, de neck, et de sin

Comment appelles vous le pieds et la robe?
Sorry am I, his numbers are so few,
His soldiers sick, and famish'd in their march-
For, I am sure, when he shall see our army,
He'll drop his heart into the sink of fear,
And, for achievement, offer us his ransom.
Fr. King. Therefore, lord constable, haste on Montjoy.
And let him say to England, that we send
To know what willing ransom he will give—
Prince Dauphin, you shall stay with us in Rouen.
Dau. Not I; I do not think it.
Fr. King. Be patient, for you shall remain with us—
Now, forth, lord constable, and princes all;
And quickly bring us word of England's fall.
[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The same. Another Room in the same.

Enter the French King, the Dauphin, Duke of Bourbon, the Constable of France, and others.
Fr. King. 'Tis certain he hath pass'd the river Some.
Con. And if he be not fought withal, my lord,
Let us not live in France; let us quit all,
And give our vineyards to a barbarous people.
Fr. —Do Dieu vint!' shall a few sprays of us—
The emptying of our father's luxury,
Our scions, put in wild and savage stock,
Spurt up so suddenly into the clouds,
And over look their proper inheritance.
Bour. Normans, but bastard Normans, Norman bastards!
Mort de ma vie! if they march along
Uneft lattice, but I will sell my dukedom,
To buy a hobbler and a dirty farm
In that nook-shotten isle of Albion.
Con. Dieu de batailles! where have they this mettle?
Is not their climate foggy, raw, and dill?
On whom, as in despite, the sun looks pale,
Killing their fruit with frowns? Can sodden war,
A drench for sur-rein'd jades, their harley broth,
Decoy their cold blood to such valiant heat?
And shall our quick blood, spirited with wine,
Seem frosty? O, for honour of our land,
Let us not hang like roping lice
Upon our house's thatch, whiles a more frosty people,
Sweat drops of gallant youth in our rich fields;
Poor— we may call them, in their native lords.
Lou. By faith and honour, Our madams mock at us; and plainly say,
Our mettle is bred out; and they will give
The Alpes doth spilt and void his rhum upon:
On go upward, you have power enough—
And in a captive chariot, into Rouen
Bring him our prisoner.
Con. This becomes the great.
put him to executions: for disciplines ought to be used.

Pist. Die and be damned! and fife for thy friend.

Flu. It is well.

Pist. The fig of Spain! [Exit Pistol.

Flu. Very good.

Gow. Why, this is an arrant counterfeit rascal; I resemble a better soldier than rashness. Tell him, we could have rebutted him at Harlewe: but that we thought not good to bruise an injury, till it were full ripe:—now we speak upon our cue, and our voice is imperial: England shall repent his folly; see his weakness, and admire our suffering. Bid him, therefore, consider of his ransome: which must proportion the losses we have borne, the subjects we have lost, the disgrace we have digested: which, in weight to re-answer, his pettiness would bow under. For our losses, his exchequer is too meagre, his purse is empty, and his pockets, and his house, to be of the kingdom too fair a number; and for our disgrace, his own person, kneeling at our feet, but a weak and worthless satisfaction. To this add—where can he find his countrymen, in his ungrateful country, betrayed his followers, whose condemnation is pronounced. So far my king and master; so much my office.

K. Hen. What is thy name? I know thy quality.

Mont. Montjoy.

K. Hen. Thou dost thy office fairly. Turn thee back, and tell the king,—I do not seek him now: But could be willing to march on to Caen.

Without impeachment: for, to say the sooth, (Though 'tis no wisdom to confess so much into an enemy of craft and vantage), My people are reduced in respect of so many French: Who when they were in health, I tell thee, herald, did almost possess one of our English seas.

Did march three Frenchmen,—Yet, forgive me,

Told, that I do bring thus!—this thy air of France
Hath hitherto been vice in me; I must repent.
Go, therefore, tell thy master, here I am:—
My ransom, is this frail and worthless trunk;
My army, but a weak and sickly guard;
Yet, God before, tell him we have been on,
Though France himself, and such another neighbour,
Stand in our way. There's for thy labour, Montjoy.
Go bid thy master well advise his steps. If we may pass, we will; if we be hinder'd, We shall your tawny ground with your red blood Discord: and so, Montjoy, fare you well.

Doth not the answer be but this: We would not seek a battle, as we are;
Nor as we are, we say, we will not shun it;
So tell thy master.

Mont. I shall deliver so. Thanks to your highness.

[Exit Montjoy.

Glo. I hope, they will not come upon us now.

K. Hen. We are in God's hand, brother, not in the hand of France.

March to the bridge; it now draws toward night—
Beyond the river we'll encamp ourselves:—
And on to-morrow bid them march away.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—The French Camp, near Agincourt.

Enter the Constable of France, the Lord Rambures, the Duke of Orleans, Dauphin, and others.

Com. Tut! I have the best armour of the world—

Would it were day!

Orl. You have an excellent armour; but let my horse have his due.

Com. It is the best horse of Europe.

Orl. Will it never be morning?

Dau. My lord of Orleans; and my lord high constable, have a chance and arm our horse.

Orl. You are as well provided of both as any prince in the world.

Dau. What a long night is this! I will not change my horse for any that rides but on four paws.

Com. Ce, he! He bounds from the earth, as if his entrails were hairs; le cheval volant, the Pegasus, qui est a marines de feu! When I bestride him, I soar, I am a hawk; he trots the air; the earth things when he crosses it; the honest horn of his hoof is more musical than the pipe of Hermes.

Orl. He's of the colour of the nutmeg.

Dau. And of the heat of the ginger. It is a beast for Persians: he is pure air and fire: and the dull elements of earth and water never appear in him, but only in patient stillness, while his rider mounts
Act 3.

KING HENRY V.

him: he is, indeed, a horse, and all other Jades you may call—beasts.
Con. Indeed, my lords, it is a most absolute and excellent horse.

Dau. It is the prince of palfreys; his neigh is like the bidding of a monarch, and his countenance enforces homage.

Ort. No more, cousin.

Dau. Nay, the man hath no wit, that cannot, from the rising of the lark to the lodging of the lamb, vary observed praise on my palfrey; it is a theme as fluent as the sea; turn the sands into eloquent tongues, and my horse is argument for them all: 'tis a subject for a sovereign to reason on, and for a sovereign's sovereign to ride on; and for the world (familiar to us, and unknown,) to lay apart their particular functions, and wonder at him. I once writ a sonnet in his praise, and began thus: 'Wonder of nature—

Con. I have heard a sonnet begin so to one's mistress.

Dau. Then did they imitate that which I composed to my courser; for my horse is my mistress.

Ort. Your mistress bears well.

Dau. Me well; which is the prescript praise and perfection of a good and particular mistress.

Con. Ma foi! the other day, methought, your mistress shrewdly shook your back.

Dau. No, perhaps, did yours.

Con. Mine was not bridled.

Dau. O! then, belike, she was old and gentle; and of course, like one of Ireland, your French hose off, and in your straight crosiers.

Con. You have good judgment in horsemanship.

Dau. Be warned by me then; they that ride so, and ride so warily, fall into foul bogs; I had rather have my horse to my mistress.

Con. I had as lief have my mistress a jade.

Dau. I tell thee, constable, my mistress wears her own head.

Con. I could make as true a boast as that, if I had a sow to my mistress.

Dau. Le chien est retourné a son propre vomissement, et la truie lave au bordier: thou makest use of any thing.

Con. Yet do I not use my horse for my mistress, or any such proverb, so little kin to the purpose.

Ram. My lord constable, the armour that I saw in your tent to-night, are those stars, or suns, upon it?

Con. Stars, my lord.

Dau. Some of them will fall to-morrow, I hope.

Con. And yet my sky shall not want.

Dau. That may be, for you bear a many superfluously; and were more honour, some were away.

Con. Even as your horse bears your praises; who would trot as well, were some of your brags dismounted.

Dau. 'Would, I were able to load him with his desert! Will it never be day? I will trot to-morrow a mile, and my way shall be paved with English faces.

Con. I will not say so, for fear I should be faced out of my way: But I would it was morning, for I would fain be about the ears of the English.

Ram. When will it go to hazard with me for twenty English prisoners?

Con. You must first go yourself to hazard, ere you have them.

Dau. 'Tis midnight, I'll go arm myself. [Exit.]

Ort. The Dauphin longs for morning.

Ram. He longs to eat the English.

Con. I think, he will eat all he kills.

Dau. By the white hand of my lady, he's a gallant prince.

Con. Swear by her foot, that she may tread out the oath.

Ort. He is, simply, the most active gentleman of France.

Con. Doing is activity; and he will still be doing.

Ort. He never did harm, that I heard of.

Con. Nor will do none to-morrow; he will keep that good name still.

Ort. I know him to be valiant.

Con. I was as sure that, by one that knows him better than you.

Dau. What's he?

Con. Marry, he told me so himself; and he said, he cared not who knew it.

Ort. He needs not, it is no hidden virtue in him.

Dau. By my faith, sir, but it is; never any body saw it, but his lackey: 'tis a hooded valour; and, when it appears, it will hate.

Ort. I'll never said well.

Con. I will eat that proverb with—There is flat- tery in friendship.

Ort. And I will take up that with.—Give the devil his due.

Dau. Well placed; there stands your friend for the devil: have at the very eye of that proverb, with.—A fool's bolt is soon shot.

Con. You have shot over.

Ort. 'Tis not the first time you were overshot.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. My lord high constable, the English lie within fifteen hundred paces of your tent.

Con. Who hath measured the ground?

Bess. The lord Grandpre.

Con. A valiant and most expert gentleman:—Would it were day!—Alas, poor Harry of England! he longs not who the dawning, as we do.

Ort. What a wretched and peevish fellow is this king of England, to mope with his fat-brained followers so far out of his knowledge!

Con. If the English had any apprehension, they would run away.

Ort. That they lack; for if their heads had any intellectual armour, they could never wear such heavy head-pieces.

Ram. That island of England breeds very valiant creatures; their mastiffs are of unmatchable courage.

Ort. Foolish curs! that run winking into the mouth of a Russian bear, and have their heads crushed like rotten apples; You may as well say,—that's a valiant flea, that dare eat his breakfast on the lip of a lion.

Con. Just, just! and the men do sympathize with the mastiffs, in robustious and rough coming on, leaving their wits with their wives: and then give them great meals of beef, and iron and steel, they will eat like wolves, and fight like devils.

Ort. Ay, but these English are shrewdly out of beef.

Con. Then we shall find to-morrow—they have only stomachs to eat, and none to fight. Now is it time to arm; Come, shall we about it?

Ort. It is now two o'clock: but, let me see,—by ten,

We shall have each a hundred Englishmen.

[Exeunt.

ACT IV.

Enter Chorus.

Chor. Now entertain conjecture of a time,
When creeping murmur, and the poring dark,
Fills the wide vessel of the universe.

From camp to camp, through the foul womb of night,
The hum of either army stilly sounds,
That the fix'd sentinels almost receive
The secret whispers of each other's watch:
Fire answers fire: and through their pale flames
Each battle sees the other's ember'd face:
Steed threatens steed, in high and boastful neigh
Fleeting the night's dull ear; and from the tents,
The armourers, accomplishing the knights,
With busy hammers closing rivets up,
Give dreadful note of prepartion. The country cocks do crow, the clocks do toil,
And the third hour of drowsy morning name.

Glo. We shall, my liege.

[Enter Gloster and Bedford.]

Erp. Shall I attend your grace?

K. Hen. No, my good knight; go with my brothers to my lords of England:

K. Hen. God-a-mercy, old heart! thou speakest cheerfully.

Enter Pistol. Plst. Quis va la ?

K. Hen. A friend.

Pist. Discussus ombe me; Art thou officer?

Or art thou base, common, and popular?

K. Hen. I am a gentleman of a company. Pist. Trailest thou the puissant pike?

K. Hen. Even so: What are you?

Pist. As good a gentleman as the amy-eror.

K. Hen. Then you are a better than the king.

Pist. The king's a bewocke, and a heart of gold,
A lad of life, an imp of fame;

Of parents good, of list most valiant:
I kiss his dirty shoe, and from my heart-strings
I love the lovely bully. What's thy name?

K. Hen. Harry le Roy. Pist. Le Roy! a Cornish name; art thou of Cornwall, and so?

K. Hen. No, I am a Welshman. Pist. Knowest thou Fluellen?

K. Hen. Yes.

Pist. Tell him, I'll knock his legk about his pate, Upon Saint Dasy's day.

K. Hen. Do not you wear your dagger in your cap that day, lest he knock that about yours.

Pist. Art thou his friend?

K. Hen. And his kinsman too.

Pist. The signe for thee then!

K. Hen. I thank you: God be with you!

Pist. My name is Pistol called. [Exit.]

K. Hen. It sorts well with your fierceness.

Enter Fluellen and Gower, severally.

Gow. Captain Fluellen!

Flu. So! in the name of Cheshu Christ, speak lower. It is the greatest admiration in the universal world, when the true and certain prerogatives and laws of the wars is not kept: If you would take the pains but to examine the wars of Rome, by the Great, you shall find, that there is no tiddle tattle, or ribble pibble, in Romeo's camp; I warrant you, you shall find the ceremonies of the wars, and the cares of it, and the forms of it, and the variety of it, and the modesty of it, to be other wise.

Gow. Why, the enemy is loud; you heard him all night.

Flu. If the enemy be an ass, and a fool, and a prating coxcomb, is it meet, think you, that we should also, look you, be an ass, and a fool, and a prating coxcomb; in your own conscience now? Gow. I will speak lower.

Flu. I pray you, and beseech you, that you will.

K. Hen. Though it appear a little out of fashion, There is much care and valour in this Welshman.

Enter Bates, Court, and Williams.

Court. Brother John Bates, is not that the morning which breaks yonder?

Bate. I think it be; but we have no great cause to praise it or approch of day.

Will. We see no broken of the day, but, I think, we shall never see the end of it.—Who goes there?

K. Hen. A friend.

Will. unter what captain serve you?

Will. A good old commander, and a most kin.
gentleman: I pray you, what thinks he of our estate?

K. Hen. Even as men wrecked upon a sand, that look to be washed off the next tide.

Bates. He hath not told his thought to the king?

K. Hen. No; nor it is not meet he should. For, though I hear him often, I think, the king is but a man, as I am; the violence of the words doth not go to me; the element shows to him, as it doth to me; all his senses have but human conditions; his ceremonies laid by, in his nakedness he appears but a man. If I break all these things, they are as nothing to me, and he shall account to me for them, as you, or I, when they stoop with the like wing; therefore when he sees reason of fears, as we do, his fears, out of doubt, be of the same reason as ours, but, I am sure, he possesses him with any appearance of fear, lest he, by showing it, should dishearten his army.

Bates. He may show what outward courage he will; but, I believe, as cold a night as 'tis, he could wish himself in the Thames up to the neck; and so I would he were, and I by him, at all Adventures, so we were quit here.

K. Hen. By my troth, I will speak my conscience of the king: I think, he would not wish himself any where but where he is.

Bates. Then, 'would he were here alone; so should he be sure to be ransomed, and a many poor men's lives.

K. Hen. I dare say, you love him not so ill, to wish him here alone: howsoever you speak this, to feel other men's minds: Methinks, I could not die, and have them there, as in the king's company; his cause being just, and his quarrel honourable.

Will. That's more than we know.

K. Hen. Ay, we were never should seek after: for we know enough, if we know we are the king's subjects; if his cause be wrong, our obedience to the king wipes the crime of it out of us.

Will. That's the reason. But, go to, the king himself hath a heavy reckoning to make; when all those legs, and arms, and heads, chopped off In a battle, shall join together at the latter day, and cry all:—where's such a place; some, swearing; some, crying for a surgeon; some, upon their wives left, poor behind them; some, upon the debts they owe; some, upon their children rawly left. I am afraid there are few die well, that die in battle; for how can they change the issue of any thing, when blood is their argument? Now, if these men do not die well, it will be a black matter for the king that led them to it; whom to disobeys, were against all his purposes. They have been so long at home, that they will not easily be roused.

K. Hen. So, if a son, that is by his father sent about merchandise, do sinfully miscarry upon the sea, the imputation of his wickedness, by your rule, should be imposed upon his father that sent him, or if a servant, under his master's command, transporting a sum of money, be assailed by robbers, and die in many irreconciled iniquities, you may call the business of the master the author of the servant's damnation:—But this is not so: the king is not bound to answer the particular endings of his soldiers, the father of his son, or the master of his servant; for they purpose not their death, when they purposed their service. Besides, there is no king, he his cause never so spotless, if it come to the arithmetick of swords, can try it out with all unsupposed soldiers. Some, peradventure, have on the side of the good:—if under the colour of war, some, of begging virgins with the broken seals of perjury; some, making the wars their bulwark, that have before gored the gentle bosom of people with prescriptions. Others, that have defeated the law, and outrun native punishment, though they can outstrip men, they have no wings to fly from God: war is his headgear, war is his headdress; of what spot is he not? He is before-breath of the king's laws, in now the king's quarrel; where they feared the death, they have borne life away; and where they would be, they perish: Then if they die unprovided, no more is the king guilty of their damnation, than he was before guilty of those impieties for the which they are now visited. Every subject's duty is the king's; but every subject's soul is his own. Therefore should every soldier in the wars do as every sick man in his bed, wash every mote out of its conscience: and dying so, death is to him advantage; or not dying, the time was blessedly lost, wherein such preparation was gained; and, in him that escapes, it were not sin to think, that making God his God, he let him outlive that day to see his greatness, and to teach others how they should prepare.

Will. 'Tis certain, every man that dies ill, the king is not to answer for it.

Bates. I do not desire he should answer for me; and yet I determine to fight lustily for him.

K. Hen. I myself heard the king say, he would not be ransomed.

Will. Ay, he said so, to make us fight cheerfully: but, when our throats are cut, he may be ransomed, and we never the wiser.

K. Hen. Your reproof is something too round; I should be angry with you, if the time were convenient.

Will. Let it be a quarrel between us, if you live.

K. Hen. I embrace it.

Will. How shall I know thee again?

K. Hen. Give me any gage of thine, and I will wear it in my heart, if ever thou darest acknowledge it, I will make it my quarrel.

Will. Here's my glove; give me another of thine.

K. Hen. There.

Will. This will I also wear in my cap: if ever thou come to me and say, after to-morrow, This is my glove, by this hand, I will take thee a box on the ear.

K. Hen. If ever I live to see it, I will challenge thee.

Will. Thou darest as well be hanged.

K. Hen. Well, I will do it, though I take thee in the king's company.

Will. Keep thy word: fare thee well.

Bates. Be friends, you English fools, be friends; we have French quarrels enough, if you could tell how to reekon.

K. Hen. Indeed, the French may lay twenty French crowns to one, they will beat us; for they bear them on their shoulders: But it is no English treason, to cut French crowns; and, to-morrow, the king himself will be a clipper. [Exeunt Soldiers.]

Upon the king! let us our lives, our souls, our debts, our careful wives, our children, and our sins, lie on the king:—we must bear all.

O hard condition! twin-born with greatness,

Subjected to the breath of every fool.

Whose sense no more can feel but his own wringing!

What infinite heart's ease must kings neglect,

That private men enjoy?

And what have kings, that privates have not too,

Save ceremony, save general ceremony?

And what art thou, thou idol ceremony?

What kind of god art thou, that suffer'st more

Of mortal griefs, than do thy worshippers?

What are thy rents? what are thy thongs in?

O ceremony, show me but thy worth!

Wherein thou art less happy being fear'd?
KING HENRY V.

Act 4.

Enter Constable.

Now, my lord Constable!

Cons. Mark, how our steeds for present service

Dey. Mount them, and make incision in their hides;

That their hot blood may spin in English eyes,

And doth not come through superficial course. Ha! Ha!

Ram. What, will you have them weep our horses' blood?

How shall we then behold their natural tears?

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The English are embattled, you French peers.

Cons. To horse, you gallant princes! I straight to horse!

Do but behold your poor and starving host,

And your fair show shall suck away their souls,

Leaving them but the shales and husks of men.

The truth is, not enough for all our hands.

Scarcely blood enough in all their sickly veins,

To give each naked curtale as a stall,

That our French gallants shall to-day draw out,

And sheath for lack of sport: let us but blow on them,

The vapour of our valour will over-turn them.

'Tis positive 'gainst all exceptions, lords,

That our most curious lackeys, and our peasants,

Who, in unnecessary action, warm

About our squares of battle—were enough to purge this field of such a hiding foe:

Though we, upon this mountain's basis by

That and the idle speculation

But that our honours must not. What's to say?

A very little little let us do,

And all is done. Then let the trumpets sound

The triumph of our victors, and the note to mount.

For our approach shall so much daze the field,

That England shall couch down in fear, and yield.

Enter Grandpre.

Grand. Why do you stay so long, my lords of France?

Ven island carrions, desperate of their bones,

1 They cannot become the morning field;

Their ragged curtains poorly are let loose,

And our air shakes them passing scornfully.

Big Mars seems bankrupt in their beggar'd host,

Their tattered pavements, from a trusty trust,

Their horses sit like fixed candlesticks,

With torch-staves in their hand: and their poor jades

Bob, as the top of their heads, dropping the hides and hips;

The gum down-roping from their pale-dead eyes;

And in their pale dull mouths the grimal bit

Lies foul with chewed grass, still and motionless;

And their executors, the knavish crows,

Fly o'er them all, impatient for their hour.

Description cannot suit itself in words,

To demonstrate the life of such a battle,

In life so lifeless as it shows itself.

Cons. They have said their prayers, and they stay for death.

Dey. Shall we go send them dinners, and fresh suits,

And give their fasting horses provender,

And after fight with them?

Cons. I stay but for my guard: On, to the field:

I will the banner from a trumpet take,

And wave to my haste. Come, come, away!

The sun is high, and we outreach the day. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The English Camp.

Enter the English Host: (Gilester, Bedford, Exeter, Salisbury, and Westmoreland.}

Gilester. Where is the king? (Exit. The Duke himself is rode to view their battle.

West. Of fighting men they have full three thousand.
Enter King Henry.

But one ten thousand of those men in England,
That on no work to-day.

K. Hen.

What's he, that wishes so?

My cousin Westmoreland?—No, my fair cousin:
If we are marked to die, we are enough
To do our country loss: and if we live,
The fewest men, the greater share of honour.
Godd's will! I pray thee, wish not one man more.
By Jove, I am not covetous for gold;
Nor care I who doth feed on my cost;
It yearns me not, if men my garments wear:
Such outward things dwell not in my desires;
But, if it be a sin to covet honour,
I swear I wish'd not, and alway wish'd thee,
No, faith, my coz, wish not a man from England:
Godd's peace! I would not lose so great an honour,
As one man more, methinks, would share from me,
For the same hope I have. O, do not wish one more.
Rather proclaim it, Westmoreland, through my host,
That he, which hath no stomach to this fight,
Let him depart; his passport shall be made,
And crowns for convoy put into his purse;
We would not die in that man's company,
That fears his fellowship to die with us.
This day is call'd—the feast of Crispian;
He, that outlives this day, and comes safe home,
Will stand a tip-toe when this day is nam'd,
And rouse him at the name of Crispian.
He, that shall live this day, and see old age,
Will yearly on the vigil feast his friends,
And say—tis now of Crispian:
Then will he strip his sleeve, and show his scars,
And say, these wounds I had i' the service and at Crispian's day;
Old men forget; yet all shall be forgot,
But he'll remember, with advantages,
What feats he did that day: Then shall our names,
Familiar in their mouths, at household words,
Harry the king, Bedford and Exeter,
Warwick and Talbot, Salisbury and Gloster,—
Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd:
This story shall the good man teach his son;
And Crispin Crispian shall ne'er go by,
From this day to the ending of the world,
But we in it shall be remember'd:
We few, we happy few, we band of brothers;
For he, to-day that sheds his blood with me,
Shall be my brother; be he ne'er so vile,
This day shall gentle his condition.
And gentlemens in England, now a-bed,
Shall think themselves accuss'd, they were not here;
And hold their manhoods cheap, while any speaks,
That fought with us upon saint Crispin's day.

Enter Salisbury.

Sal. My sovereign lord, bestow yourself with speed:
The French are bravely in their battles set,
And will with all experience charge on us.

K. Hen. All things are ready, if our minds be so.
West. Perish the man, whose mind is backward now.
K. Hen. Thou dost not wish more help from England, cousin?
West. God's will, my liege, 'would you and I
Without more help, might fight this battle out?
K. Hen. Why, now thou hast unwish'd five thousand men;
Which likes me better, than to wish us one.
You know your places: God be with you all!

Tucket. Enter Montjoy.

Mont. Once more I come to know of thee, king Harry,
If for thy ransom thou wilt now compound,
Before the most assured overthrow;
For, certainly, thou art so near the gulf,
Thou needs must be englutted. Besides, in mercy,
The Constable desires thee—thou wilt mind
Thy former words: so, Marguerite,
May make a peaceful and a sweet retire
From off these fields, where (wretched) their poor bodies
Must lie and fester.

K. Hen. Who hath sent thee now?
Mont. The Constable of France.
K. Hen. I pray thee, bear my former answer
Bid them achieve me, and then sell my bones.
Good God! why should they mock poor fellows thus?
The man, that once did sell the lion's skin
While the beast lived, was kill'd with hunting him.
A many of our bodies shall, no doubt,
Find native graves; upon the which, I trust,
Shall witness live in brass of this day's work:
And those that leave their valiant bones in France,
Dying like men, though buried in your dunghills,
They shall be fam'd; for there the sun shall greet them.
And draw their honours reeking up to heaven;
Leaving their earthly parts to choke your clime,
The smell thereof shall breed a plague in France.
Mark then a bounding valour in our English;
That, being dead, like to the bullet's grazing,
Break out into a second course of mischief,
Killing in repast of mortality.
Let me speak thus boldly—Tell the Constable,
We are but warriors for the working-day:
Our gaiety, and our gilt, are all besmirch'd
With rainy marching in the painful field;
There's not a piece of fear in our host;
(Good argument, I hope, we shall not fly,)
And time hath harn them into slovenly:
But, by the mass, our hearts are in the trim:
And our poor soldiers tell me—yet ere night
They'll be in fresher robes; or they will pluck
The gay new coats o'er the French soldiers' heads,
And turn them out of service. If they do this,
(As, if God please, they shall,) my ransom then
Will soon be levied. Herald, save thou thy labour:
Come thou no more for ransom, gentle herald;
They shall have none, I swear, but these my joints.
Which if they have as I will leave 'em to them,
Shall yield them little, tell the Constable.
Mont. I shall, king Harry. And so fare thee well!

K. Hen. I fear, thou'lt once more come again for ransom.

Enter the Duke of York.

York. My lord, most humbly on my knee I beg
The leading of the wayward
K. Hen. Take it, brave York.—Now, soldiers,
March away—
And how thou pleasant, God, dispose the day!

Ereunt.
SCENE IV.—The Field of Battle.

Pist. Vield, cur.
Fr. Sol. Je pense, que vous estes le gentilhomme de bonne qualite.

Pist. Quality, call you me?—Construe me, art thou a gentleman? What is thy name? discuss.
Fr. Sol. O seigneur Dieu!

Pist. O, signieur Dew should be a gentleman:—
Perpend my words, O signeur Dew, and mark;—
That signeur Dew, thou diest on point of fox,
Except, O seigneur, thou do give to me
Egregious ransom.
Fr. Sol. O, prenez misericorde! aytes pite de moy?

Pist. May shall not serve, I will have forty mous;
For I will fetch thy rim out at thy throat,
In drops of crimson blood.

Fr. Sol. Est il impossible d'echapper la force de ton bras?

Pist. Bras, cur! Thou dammed and luxurious mountain goat,
Goat-mess, go to trash.

Fr. Sol. O pardonnez moy, say.

Pist. Say'st thou me so? is that a ton of mous?
Come hitter, boy; Ask me this slave in French,
What is his name.

Boy. Execuats: Comment nous voues appeile?
Fr. Sol. Monseigneur le Fer.

Boy. Ife says, his name is—master Fer.

Pist. Master Fer! I'll for him, and stark him
And ferret him—discuss the same in French
Unto him.

Boy. I do not know the French for fer, and ferret,
And stark.

Pist. Bid him prepare, for I will cut his throat.

Fr. Sol. Que dit-il, monseigneur!
Boy. If you commande de vous diete que vous faites Vos pret; car ce soldat ley est dispoat tout a cette demier de couper votre gorge.

Pist. Out, couper gorge, par ma foy, pesant,
Unies thou give me crowns, brave crowns;
Or mangled shalt thou be by this my sword.
Fr. Sol. O, je vous supplie pour l'amour de Dieu, me pardonner! Je suis gentilhomme de bonne maison;
garden ma vie, et je vous donneray deux cent coca.

Pist. What are his words?
Boy. To save his life; he is a gentle Man of a good house; and, for his ransom, he will Give you two hundred crowns.

Pist. Tell him,—my fury shall abate, and I
The crowns will give you.

Fr. Sol. Petit monsieur, que dit-il?

Boy. Encore qu'il est contre son jurament, de par
Donner aucun prisonnier; nonamnous, pour les vostres
Que vous lovez preme, il est content de vous donner la
Liberte, le franchissement.

Fr. Sol. Sur ma genou, je vous donne mille re merciement; et je m'entente heureux que je suis tombé Entre les mains d'un chevalier, je pense, le plus brave, vainqueur, et tres distingué seigneur d'Angletore.

Pist. Expoud unto me, boy.

Boy. He gives you, upon his knees, a thousand thanks, Saying, he himself happy that he Hath fallen into the hands of (as he thinks) the Most brave, valorous, and thrice-worthy signeur
Of England.

Pist. That suck blood, I will some mercy show...
Follow me, cur. [Exit Pistol.

Boy. Suivez vous le grand capitaine.

[Exit French Soldier.

I did never know so full a voice issue from so
Empty a heart: but the saying is true,—the empty Vessels make the greatest sound. Haridopch, and Nym, had ten times more value than this roaring dog! The old play, that every one may pare his Nails with a wooden daggèr, and they are both hanged; and so would this be, if he durst steal any thing adventurously. I must star with the lackey, with the luggage of our camp: the French might Have a good prey of us, if he knew of it; for there
Is none to guard it, but boys.

[Exit.

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Field of Battle.

Alarums. Enter Dauphin, Orleans, Bourbon, Constable, Rambures, and others.

Con. O dieable!
Orl. O seigneur!—le jour est perdus, tout est perdus!
Bou. Mort de ma vie! all is confounded, all!
Representing our enduring shame.

Sits mocking in our plumes,—O macchante for true—

Do not run away.

[Short alarum. Con.

Why, all our ranks are broke.

Emm. O perdurable shame!—let's stab ourselves,
Be these the wretches that we play'd at dice for?

Orl. Is this the king we sent to for his ransom?

Bour. Shame, and eternal shame, nothing but

Let us die instant: Once more back again;
And he that will not follow Bourbon now,
Let him go hence, and, with his cap in hand,
Like a base pander, hold the chamber-door.

Whilst by a slave, no gentler than my dog,
His fairest daughter is contaminated.

Con. That better, that hath spoil'd us, friend us
now!

Let us, in heaps, go offer up our lives
Unto these English, or else die with fame.

Orl. We are enough, yet living in the field.
To smite upon the English in our throns,
If any order might be thought upon.

Bour. The devil take order now! I'll to the [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Another Part of the Field.

Alarums. Enter King Henry and Forces: Exeter, and others.

K. Hen. Well have we done, thrice-valiant countrymen:

But all's not done, yet keep the French the field.

Exe. The duke of York commends him to your majesty.

K. Hen. Lives he, good uncle? thrice within this hour,
I saw him down; thrice up again, and fighting;
From the bridge to the spur, all blood he was.

Exe. In which array, (brave soldier,) doth he lie,
Larding the plain: and by his bloody side,
(Yoke-fellow to his honour-owing wounds,) The brave
Suffolk first died: and York, all haggled over,
Comes to him, where in gore he lay instep'd,
And takes him by the beard; kisses the gashes,
That bloodily did yawn upon his face;
And cries aloud—Tarry, dear cousin Suffolk!
My soul shall shine keep company to heaven;
Tarry, sweet soul for mine, then fly a-breath,
As, in this glorious and well-foughten field,
We kept together in our chivalry!

Upon these words I came, and cheer'd him up:
He smil'd me in the face, taught me his hand,
And with a feeble gripes, says,—Dear, my lord,
Command my service to my sovereign.
So did he turn, and over Suffolk's neck
He threw his wounded arm, and kiss'd his lips:
And so, expou'd to death, with blood he seal'd
A testament of noble-endowing love,
The pretty and sweet manner of it forc'd
Those waters from me, which I would have

But I had not so much of man in me,
But all my mother came into mine eyes,
And gave me up to tears.

K. Hen. I blame you not.

For, hearing this, I must perforce compound
With mistful eyes, or they will issue too.—
Act 4.

KING HENRY V.

335

But, hark! what new alarm is this same?—
The French have reinforce'd their scatter'd men:—
Then every soldier kill his prisoners;
Give the word through. [Exit.

SCENE VII.—Another Part of the Field.

Flu. Kill the poys and the luggage! 'tis expressly against the law of arms: 'tis as arrant a piece of knavery, mark you now, as can be offered, in the 'orld: in your conscience now, is it not?

Gow. 'Tis certain, my lord, not a boy left alive; and the cowardly rascals, that ran from the battle, have done this slaughter: besides, they have burned and carried away all that was in the king's tent:
wherefore the king, most worthily, hath caused every soldier to cut his prisoners' throats. O, 'tis a gallant king!

Flu. Ay, he was born at Monmouth, captain Gower; What call you the town's name, where Alexander the pig was born.

Gow. Alexander the great.

Flu. Why, pray, I pray you, is not pig, great?
The pig, or the great, or the mighty, or the huge,
or the magnificuous, are all one reckoning, save the phrase is a little variations.

Gow. I think Alexander the great was born in Macedon; his father was called—Philip of Macdon, as I remember.

Flu. I think it is in Macedon, where Alexander is born. I tell you, captain,—If you look in the maps of the 'orld, I warrant, you shall find, in the comparisons between Macedon and Monmouth, that the situations, the soil, the climate, you, is both alike. There is a river in Macedon; and there is also moreover a river at Monmouth: it is called Wye, at Monmouth: but it is out of my prints, what is the name of the other river; but 'tis all one, 'tis so like as my fingers and my fingers, and there is salmons in both. If you mark Alexander's life well, Harry of Monmouth's life is come after it indifferent well; for there is figures in all things. Alexander (God knows, and you know,) in his rages, and his furies, and his wraths, and his cholers, and his moods, and his dis-pleasures, and his indignations, and also being a little intercates in his persons, did, in his aies and his anger, look, you, kill his pest friend, Clytus.

Gow. Our king is not like him in that; he never killed any of his friends.

Flu. Why, then, do you say, mark you now, to take tales out of my mouth, etc it is made an end and finished. I speak but in the figures and comparisons of it: As Alexander is kill his friend Clytus, being in his cups; and so also Harry Monmouth, being in his fight wits and his goot judgments, turn away the fat knight with the great pelly-dou-
blet; he was full of jests, and pipes, and knaverys, and mocks; I am forget his name.

Gow. Sir John Falstaff.

Flu. That is he: I can tell you, there is good men born at Monmouth.

Gow. Here comes his majesty.

Flu. Enter King Henry, with a part of the English Forces; Warwick, Gloster, Exeter, and others.

K. Hen. I was not angry since I came to France
Until this instant... Take a trumpet, herald;
Ride thou unto the horsemen on you hill;
If they will fight with us, bid them come down,
Or vold the field: they do offend our sight;
If they'll do neither, we will come to them;
And make them skirr away, as swift as stones
Enforced from the old Assyrian slings:
Deseerte all the field, as we have;
And not a man of them, that we shall take,
Shall taste our mercy:—Go, and tell them so.

Enter Montjoy.

Glo. His eyes are humbler than they used to be.

K. Hen. How now! what means this, herald?

Glo. He trusteth not, that I have find these bones of mine for ransom?

Com't thou again for ransom?

Mont. No, great king; I come to thee for charitable licence,
That we may wander o'er this bloody field,
To look our dead, and then to give
To sort our nobles from our common men;
For many of our princes (woe the while!)
Lie drown'd and soak'd in mercenary blood;
Do our vulgar drench their pleasant limbs
In blood of princes; and their wounded steeds
Fret fetlock deep in gore, and, with wild rage,
Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters,
Killing them twice. O, give us leave, great king,
To view the field in safety, and dispose
Of their dead bodies.

K. Hen. I tell thee truly, herald,
I know not, if the day be ours, or no;
For yet a many of our horsemen peer,
And gallop o'er the field.

Mont. The day is yours.

K. Hen. Praised be God, and not our strength, for it!

What is this castle call'd, that stands hard by?

Mont. They call it—Agincourt.

K. Hen. Then call we this—the field of Agin-court.

Fought on the day of Crispin Crispianus.

Flu. Your grandfather of famous memory, an't please your majesty, and your great uncle Edward the black prince of boys, as I have read in the chronicles, fought a most prave battle here in France.

K. Hen. They did, Fluellen.

Flu. Your majesty says very true: if your majesties is remember'd of it, the Welshmen did gout service in a garden where leeks did grow, wear leeks in their Monmouth caps; which, your majesty knows, to this hour is an honourable padge of the service; and, I do believe, your majesty takes no scorn to wear the leek upon Saint Tay's day.

K. Hen. I wear it for a memorable honour:
For I am Welsh, you know, good countrymen.

Flu. All the water in Wye cannot wash your majesty's Welsh blood out of your body, I can tell you that; Got pless it and preserve it, as long as it pleases his grace, and his majesty too!

K. Hen. Thanks, good my countrymen.

Flu. By Christ, good my countrymen, I care not who know it; I will confess it to all the 'orld: I need not be ashamed of your majesty, praised be God, so long as your majesty is a honest man.

K. Hen. God keep me so!—Our heralds go with him;

Bring me just notice of the numbers dead
On both our parts.—Call yonder fellow hither.

[Points to Williams. Exeunt Montjoy and others.]

Exe. Soldier, you must come to the king.

K. Hen. Soldier, why weerst thou that glove in thy cap?

Will. An't please your majesty, 'tis the gage of one that I should fight withal, if he be alive.

K. Hen. An Englishman.

Will. An't please your majesty, a rascal, that swagged with me last night: who, if 'a live, and ever dare to challenge this glove, I have sworn to take him a box o' the ear: or, if I can see my glove in his cap, (which he swor, as he was a soldier, he would wear, if alive,) I will strike it out soundly.

K. Hen. What think you, captain Fluellen? is it fit this soldier keep his oath?

Flu. He is a warlike man, take him else, an't please your majesty, in my conscience.

K. Hen. It may be, his enemy is a gentleman of great sort, quite from the answear of his degree.

Flu. Though he be, in the wood, as I say, the devil is, as Lucifer and Belzebub himself, it is necessary, look your grace, that he keep his vow.
his oath: if he be perjured, see you now, his reputation is as arrant a villain, and a Jack-a-sance, as ever his placque shoe trod upon God's ground and his earth, in my conscience.

K. Hen. Then keep thy vow, sirrah, when thou meet'st the fellow.

Will. So will I, my liege, as I live.

K. Hen. Who servest thou under?

Will. Under captain Gower, my liege.

Flu. Gower is a good captain; and he is good knowledge and literally in the war.

K. Hen. Call him hither to me, soldier.

Will. I will, my liege.

K. Hen. Here, Fluellen: wear thou this favour for me, and for thy conscience: When Alencon and myself were down together, I plucked this glove from his hand; if any man challenge this, he is a friend to Alencon and an enemy to our person; if thou encounter any such, apprehend him, as thou dost love me.

Flu. Your grace does me as great honour, as can be desired in the hearts of his subjects: I would fain see the man, that has but two legs, that shall find himself aggrieved at this glove; that is all; but I would fain see it once: an please God of his grace, that I might see it.

K. Hen. Knowest thou Gower?

Flu. He is a true friend, an please you.

K. Hen. Pray thee, go seek him, and bring him to my tent.

Flu. I will fetch him.

[Exit.

K. Hen. It is the word of Warwick, and my brother tilsiter.

Follow Fluellen closely at the heels.

The glove, which I have given him for a favour, May, haply, purchase him a box o' the ear; It is the soldier's: 1, by bargain, should Wear it myself. Follow, good cousin Warwick: If that the soldier strike him, (as, I judge For me, and strike it, thy word,) Some sudden mischief may arise of it; For I do know Fluellen valiant, And, touch'd with cholera, hot as gunpowder, And quickly will return an injury; Follow, and see there be no harm between them. Go you with me, uncle of Exeter.

[Exit.

SCENE VIII.—Before King Henry's Pavilion.

Enter Gower and Williams.

Will. I warrant, it is to knight you, captain.

Enter Fluellen.

Flu. Gower's will and his pleasure, captain, I perceive you now, come apace to the king: there is more ado, my lord, than venture, than is in your knowledge to dream of.

Will. Sir, know you this glove?

Flu. Know the glove? I know, the glove is a gauntlet.

Will. I know this; and thus I challenge it.

[Strikes him.

Flu. 'Should, an arrant traitor, as any's in the universal 'orld, or in France, or in England. Come, how now, sir? you villain!

Will. Do you think I'll be forsworn?

Flu. Stand away, captain Gower; I will give treason his payment into plows, I warrant you.

Will. Do you think so?

Flu. That's a lie in thy throat— I charge you, in that your majesty's name, apprehend him; he's a friend of the duke Alencon's.

[Enter Warwick and Gloster.

War. How now, how now! what's the matter?

Flu. My lord of Warwick, here is (praised be God,) a most contagious treason come to light, look you, as you shall desire in a summer's day. Here is his majesty.

[Enter King Henry and Exeter.

K. Hen. How now! what's the matter?
Great-master of France, the brave sir Guiscard Dauphin;
John duke of Alençon; Antony duke of Brabant,
The brother to the duke of Burgundy;
And Edward duke of Bar: of lusty earls,
Grandpre, and Roussi, Faconburg, and Foix,
Where is the number of our English dead?

[Herold presents another paper.]
Edward the duke of York, the earl of Suffolk,
Sir Richard Ketly, Davy Gam, esquire;
None else of name; and, of all other men,
But five and twenty. O God, thy arm was here,
And not to us, but to thy arm alone,
Ascribe we all.—When, without stratagem,
But in plain shock, and even play of battle,
Was ever known so great and little loss,
On one part and on the other?—Take it, God,
For it is only thine! [Exeunt.]

KING. Athwart. 'Tis wonderful! [K. Hen. Enter.]
K. Hen. Come, go we in procession to the village:
And be it death proclaimed through our host,
To boast of this, or take that praise from God,
Which is his only. [Flu.]

Flu. Is it not lawful, an please your majesty, to tell how many is killed?

K. Hen. Yes, captain; but with this acknowledgment,
That God fought for us.

Flu. Yes, my conscience, he did us great good.

K. Hen. Do we all holy rites?
Let there be sung Non nobis, and Te Deum.
The death of charity entools his soul.
We'll then to Calais; and to England then;
Where ne'er from France arrived more happy men.

[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

Enter Chorus.

Cho. Vouchsafe to those that have not read the story,
That I may prompt them: and of such as have,
I humbly pray them to admit the excuse
Of time, of numbers, and due course of things,
Which cannot in their huge and proper life
Be here presented. Now we bear the king Toward Calais: grant him there; there seen,
Heave him upon your winged thoughts,
Athisart the sea: Rejoind the English beach
Pales in the flood with men, with wives, and boys,
Whose shouts and claps out-voice the deep-mouth'd
Which, like a mighty whiffer 'fore the king,
Seems to prepare his way: so let him land;
And, solemnly, see him set on to London.
So swift a pace hath thought, that even now
You may imagine him upon Blackheath;
Where that his lords desire him, to have borne
His bruised helmet, and his bended sword,
Before him, through the city: he forbids it,
Being free from vileness and self-glorying pride;
Giving full trophy, signal, and ostent,
Quite from himself, to God. But now behold,
In the quick forge and workinghouse of thought,
How he, with doth pour out her citizens!
The mayor, and all his brethren, in best sort,—
Like to the senators of the antique Rome,
With the plebeians swarming at their heels,—
Go bravely and fetch their commodity ear in;
As, by a lower but by loving likelihood,
Were now the general of our gracious empress
(As, in good time, he may,) from Ireland coming,
Brave men and million to the duke's sword,
How many would the peaceful city quit,
To welcome him? much more, and much more cause,
Did they, to this Harry. Now in London place him;
(As yet the lamentation of the French
Invites the king of England's stay at home:

The emperor's coming in behalf of France,
To order peace between them;) and omit
All the occurrences, whatever chance'd,
Till Harry's back-return again to France;
There much more and much of have play'd
The Interim, by remembering you—'tis past.
Then brook abridgment; and your eyes advance
After your thoughts, straight back again to France.

[Exit.]

SCENE I.—France. An English Court of Guard.

Enter Fluellen and Gower.

Gow. Nay, that's right; but why wear you your leek to-day? Saint Davy's day is past.

Flu. There is no occasion and causes why and wherefore in all things: I will tell you, as my friend, captain Gower; The rascally, scald, beggarly, lowsw, bragging knave, Pistol,—which you and yourself, and all the 'orid, know to be no better than a fellow, look you now, on no merits,—be he is come to me, and prings me pread and salt yesterday, look you, and bid me eat my leek: it was in a place where I could not breed no contentions with him; but I will be so plain as to wear it in my cap till I see him once again, and then I will tell him a little piece of my desires.

Enter Pistol.

Gow. Why, here he comes, swelling like a turkey-cock.

Flu. 'Tis no matter for his swellings, nor his turkey-cocks...you please you, ancient Pistol: you scurvy, lowsw knave; Got 'pace you!

Pist. Ha! I art thou Bedlam? dost thou thrust, base Trojan,
To have me fold up Parca's fatal web?
Hence! I will smother at the smell of leek.

Flu. I see thee heartily, scurvy, lowsw knave,
At my desires, and my requests, and my petitions,
To eat, look you, this leek; because, look you, you do not love it, nor your affections, nor your appetites, and your digestions, does not agree with it, I would desire you to eat it.

Pist. Not for Cadwallader, and all his leeks.

Flu. There is a leek for you. [Strikes him.] Will you be so good, scald knave, as eat it?

Pist. Base Trojan, thou shalt die.

Flu. You say very true, scald knave, when Got's will is: I will desire you to live in the mean time, and eat your victuals; come, there is sauce for it. [Striking him again.] You called me yesterday, mountain-square; but I will make you to-day a square of low degree. I pray you, fall to; if you can mock a leek, you can eat a leek.

Gow. Enough, captain; you have astonished him.

Flu. I say, I will make him eat some part of my leek, or I will beat his pate four days:—Flite, I pray you; it is good for your green wound, and your bloody cockcomb.

Pist. Must I bite?

Flu. Yes, certainly; and out of doubt, and out of questions too, and ambiguities.

Pist. By this leek, I will most horribly revenge; I eat, and eke I swear.

Flu. Eat, I pray you: Will you have some more sauce to your leek? there is not enough leek to swear by.

Pist. Quiet thy cudgel; thou dost see, I eat.

Flu. Much goot do you, scald knave, heartily.
Nay, 'pray you, throw none away; the skin is goot for your spoken cockcomb. When you take occasions to see leeks hereafter, I pray you, mock at them; that is all.

Pist. Good.

Flu. Ay, leeks is goot:—Tell you, there is a great to heal your pate.

Pist. Me a great!

Flu. Yes, verily, and in truth, you shall take it; or I have another leek in my pocket, which you shall eat.

Pist. I take thy leact, in earnest of revenge.
Act 5.

Flt. If I love you any thing, I will pay you in indulgences; you shall be a woodmonger, and buy nothing of me but indulgences. God be wi'you, and keep you, and heal your pate.

Pist. All hell shall stir for this.

Flt. How? so you are a counterfeiter cowardly knave. Will you mock at an ancient tradition, begun upon an honourable respect, and worn as a memorable trophy of predeceased valour, and dare not be himself a compleat word? I have seen you gleaning and gulling at this gentleman twice or thrice. You thought, because he could not speak English in the native garb, he could not be an Englishman. I do not find it otherwise:
and, henceforth, let a Welsh correction teach you a good English condition. Fare ye well.

Exit.

SCENE II.—Troyes in Champagne. An Apartment in the French King's Palace.

Enter at one door: King Henry, Bedford, Gloster, Exeter, Warwick, Westmorland, and other lords; at another, the French King, Queen
Isabel, the Princess Katharine, Lords, Ladies,
&c. the Duke of Burgundy, and his Train.

K. Hen. Peace to this meeting, wherefore we are met.

Unto our brother France,—and to our sister,
Health and fair time of day:—joy and good
Wishes to our most fair and princely cousin Katharine,
And (as a branch and member of this royalty,
By whom this great assembly is contriv'd,) We do salute you, duke of Burgundy:—
And, princes French, and peers, health to you all.

Fr. King. Right joyous are we to behold your Most worthy brother England; fairly met:—
So are you, princes English, every one.

Q. Est. So happy be the issue, brother England,
Of this great council of this great meeting,
As we are now glad to behold your eyes;
Your eyes, which hitherto have borne in them
Against the French, that met them in their best,
The French, in sallies of murder, and the Venom of such looks, we fairly hope,
Have lost their quality; and that this day
Shall change all griefs, and quarrels, into love.

K. Hen. To cry amen to that, thus we appear.

Q. Est. You English princes all, I do salute you.

Bur. My duty to you both, on equal love, Great kings of France and England! That I have laboured
With all my strength, my pains, and strong endea-

[Exit all but Henry, Katharine, and her Gentlewoman.

K. Hen. Fair Katharine, and most fair! Will you
Vouchsafe to teach a soldier terms,
Such as will enter at a lady's ear,
And plead his love-suit to her gentle heart?
Kath. O fair Katharine, may you shall mock at me; I cannot Speak your English.

K. Hen. O fair Katharine, if you will love me Soundly with your French heart, I will be glad to hear you broken with your English tongue.
Do you like me, Kate?

Kath. Pardonnez me, I cannot tell vat is—like me.
K. Hen. An angel is like you, Kate; and you are the very gallant beauty of this fair world.

Kath. Oui dit-il que je suis adorable a vos ayes?

Kath. Que dit-il? C'est un vaste et l'anglais.

K. Hen. I said so, dear Katharine; and I must not blush to affirm it.
Kath. O bon Dieu! les langues des hommes sont pleines de tromperies.

K. Hen. What says she, fair one? that the tongues of men are full of deceits?

Alice. Ouy! dat de tongues de de mens is be full de deceit; dat is de princes.

K. Hen. The princess is the better English-woman. Thy faith, Kate, my wooling is fit for thy understanding: I am glad, thou canst speak no better English. Art thou my merci? I would not find me such a plain king, that thou wouldst think, I had sold my farm to buy my crown. I know no ways to mince it in love, but directly to say—I love thee: thou must therefore be ten to thirty, and in faith? I wear out my suit. Give me your answer; I faith, do; and so clap hands and a bargain: How say you, lady?

Kath. Souf votre honneur, I understand well.

K. Hen. Marry, if you would put me to verses, or to dance for your sake, Kate, why you undid me: for the one, I have neither words nor measure; and for the other, I have no strength in measure, yet a readiness in measure in streng. If I could with a lady at leap-frog, or by vaulting into my saddle with my armor on my back, under the correction of bragging be it spoken, I should quickly leap into a will of my own wish. If I for my love, bound my horse for her favours, I could lay on like a butcher, and sit like a jack-an-apes, never off! but, before God, I cannot look greenly, nor grasp out my eloquences, or shew to any fair woman only downright oaths, which I never use till urgency, nor never break for urging. If thou canst love a fellow of this temper, Kate, whose face is not worth sun-burning, that never looks in his glass for love of any thing he sees there; or if thou canst speak to thee plain soldier; If thou canst love me for this, take me: if not, to say to thee—that I shall die, is true: but—for thy love, by the Lord, no, no, no, no, no; and let my wish, my wishes, dear Kate, take a fellow of plain and uncoined constancy; for he perforce must do thee right; because he hath not the gift to woo in other places; for these fellows of infinite tongue, that can rhyme themselves into ladies' favours,—they do always reason themselves out again. What! a speaker is but a prater; a rhyme is but a ballad. A good leg will walk; a straight back will hide; a blushing will turn white; a curdied pate will grow bald; a fair face will wither; a full eye will wax hollow; but a good heart, Kate, is the sun and moon; or, rather, both sun and moon; for, it shines bright, and never changes, but keepeth the same truely. If thou would have such a one, take me: And take me, take a soldier; take a soldier, take a king; And what's the worst thou then to my love? speak my fair, and fairly, the truth.

Kath. Is it possible dat I should love de enemy of France?

K. Hen. No; it is not possible, you should love the enemy of France, Kate; but, in loving me, you should love the friend of France; for I love France so well, that I will not part with a village of it; I will have it all mine; and, Kate, when France is mine, I am yours, then yours, then France, and you are mine.

Kath. I cannot tell vat is dat.

K. Hen. No, Kate? I will tell thee in France; who art thou? I lay upon my tongue like a new-married wife about her husband's neck, hardly to be shook off. Quand jay la possession de France, et quand vous avez la possession de moi, (let me see, while you do dat) you are my true one, and de vosse est France, et vous est miene. It is as easy for me, Kate, to conquer the kingdom, as to speak so much more France: I shall never move thee in France, nor make thy heart to think thus.

Kath. Souf votre honneur, le Francos que vous parlez, est meliuer que l'Anglois lequel je parle.

K. Hen. No, 'faith, is not, Kate; but thy speaking of my tongue, and the thine, most truly falsely, must needs be granted to be much at one. But, Kate, dost thou understand thus much English? Canst thou love me?

Kath. I cannot tell.

K. Hen. Can any of your neighbours tell, Kate? I'll ask them; or, I know, Kate, you will, to her, disparage those parts in me, that you love with your heart: but, good Kate, mock me, and be as false and gentle princes, because I love thee cruelly. If ever thou best mine, Kate, (as I have a saving faith within me, tells me,—thou shalt,) I get thee with scrambling, and thou must needs prove a good soldier-breeder; because I love thee cruelly. If ever thou best mine, Kate, between Saint Dennis and Saint George, compound a boy, half French, half English, that shall go to Constantinople, and take the Turk by the beard? shall we not? what sayest thou, my fair flower-de-luce?

Kath. I do not know dat.

K. Hen. No; 'tis hereafter to know, but now to promise: do but now promise, Kate, you will envelope your French part of such a boy; and, for my English moiety, take the word of a king and a bachelor. How answer you, la plus belle Katharine du monde, mon tres cher et divisee deesse ?

Kath. You shall have eau Frenc enough to deceive de moitie dameostelle dat is en France.

K. Hen. Now, eye upon my false French! by mine honour, in true English, I love thee, Kate; by my French honour, I do not love thee. And his blood begins to flatter me that thou dost, notwithstanding the poor and untempering effect of my visage. Now beshrew my father's ambition! he was thinking of civil wars when he gave me; therefore was I created to be a stubborn outsider, and an aspect of iron, that, when I come to woo ladies, I fright them. But, in faith, Kate, the elder I wax, the better I shall appear; my comfort is, that old age is the mother of experience, and my spite is spoilt upon my face: thou hast me, if thou hast me, at the worst; and thou shalt wear me, if thou wear me, better and better: And therefore tell me, most fair Katharine, will you have me? Put off your maiden blushes; avouch the thoughts of your heart with the looks of an empress; take me by the hand, and say—Harry of England, I am thine: what 'faith thou shalt no sooner bless my name, and withal, but I will tell thee aloud—England is thine, Ireland is thine, France is thine, and Henry Planfagten is thine; who, though I speak it before his face, if he not find me here, I'll tell the king, thou shalt find this king of good fellows, a word, your answer in broken music; for thy voice is music, and thy English broken: therefore, queen of all, Katharine, break thy mind to me in broken English, Will they have me? Kate?

Kath. Dat is, as it shall please de roy mon pec.

K. Hen. Nay, it will please him well, Kate; it shall please him, Kate.

Kath. Den it shall also content me.

K. Hen. Upon that I will kiss your hand, and I call you—my queen.

Kath. Laisses, mon seigneur, laissez, laisses, laissez: ma foi, je ne veux point de grands seigneurs, de grands seigneurs, en baisant la main de votre indigne servileur; excusez moy, je vous supplie, mon tres puissant seigneur.

K. Hen. Then will I kiss your lips, Kate.

Kath. Les daus, et damoiselles, pour entre baisers devant leur nopes, il n'est pas le coutume de France.

K. Hen. Madam my Interpreter, what says she? Alice. Dat is not de fashion pour les dames de France—I cannot tell what is, baiser, en English.

K. Hen. To kiss.

Alice. Your majesty entendez bette que moy.

K. Hen. It is not the fashion for themaids in France to kiss before they are married, would she say?

Alice. Ouy, vrayement.

K. Hen. O, Kate, nice customs court'sy to great kings. Dear Kate, you and I cannot be confined within the weak list of a country's fashion: we are the makers of manners, Kate; and the liberty that follows our places, stops the mouths of all find-lessly; as I will do yours, for upholding the nice fashions of your country, in denying me a kiss; therefore, patiently and yielding. [Kissing her.] You have witchcraft in your lips, Kate: there is more eloquence in a sugar touch of them, than in the tongues of the French council, and they should sooner persuade Harry of England, than a general petition of monarays. Here comes your father.

Enter the French king and Queen, Burgundy, Bedsford, Gloster, Exeter, Westmoreland,
and other French and English Lords.

Bur. God save your majesty! my royal cousin, teach you our princess English?

K. Hen. I would have her learn, my fair cousin, how perfectly I love her; and that is good English.

Bur. Is she not apt?

K. Hen. Our tongue is rough, coz; and my condition is not smooth: so that, having neither the voice nor the heart of flattery about me, I cannot so conjure up the spirit of love in her, that he will appear in his true likeness.

Bur. Pardon the frankness of my mirth, if I am swayed to that: If you would conjure in her you must make a circle; if conjure up love in her in his true likeness, he must appear naked, and blind: Can you blame her then, being a maid yet rose over with the virgin crimson of modesty, if she deny the appearance of a naked blind boy in her naked seeing self? It were, my lord, a hard condition for a maid to consign to.

K. Hen. Yet they do wink, and yield: as love is blind, and enforces.

Bur. They are then excused, my lord, when they see not what they do.

K. Hen. Then, good my lord, teach your cousin to consent to wonting.

Bur. I will wink on her to consent, my lord, if you will teach her to know my meaning: for maids, well summered and warm kept, are like flies in Bartholomew tide, blind, though they have their eyes: and then they will endure handling, which before would not abide looking on.

K. Hen. This moral ties me over time, and a hot summer; and so I will catch the fly, your cousin, in the latter end, and she must be blind too.

Bur. As love is, my lord, before it loves.

K. Hen. It is so: and you may, some of you, thank love for my blindness; who cannot see many a fair French city, for one fair French maid that stands in my way.

Fr. King. Yet, my lord, you see them perspectively, the cities turned into a maid; for they are all girdled with maiden walls, that war hath never ever entered.

K. Hen. Shall Kate be my wife?

Fr. King. So please you.

K. Hen. I am content: so the maiden cities you talk of, may wait on her: so the maid that stood in the way of my wish, shall show me the way to my will.

Fr. K. We have consented to all terms of reason.

K. Hen. Let so, my lords of England?

West. The king hath granted every article:

His daughter, first; and then, in sequel, all,
According to their firm proposed natures.

Bur. Only, he hath not yet subscribed this:
Where your majesty demands.—That the king of France, having any occasion to write for matter of grant, shall name your highness in this form, and with this addition, in French.—Notre tres cher fils Henri roy d’Angleterre, heretier de France; and thus in Latin.—Præclarissimum filium nostri Henricus, regis Angliae, et heres Francie.

Fr. K. Nor this I have not, brother, so denied,
But your request shall make me let it pass.

K. Hen. I pray you then, in love and dear alliance,
Let that one article rank with the rest;
And, thereupon, give me your daughter.

Fr. King. Take her, fair son; and from her raise up
Issue to me: that the contending kingdoms
Of France and England, whose very shores look pale
With envy of each other's happiness,
May cease their hatred: and this dear conjunction Plant neighbourhood and christian-like
In their sweet bosoms, that never war advance
His bleeding sword 'twixt England and fair France.

All. Amen!

K. Hen. How welcome, Kate:—and bear me witness all,
That here I kiss her as my sovereign queen.

Q. Josh. God, the best maker of all marriages,
Combine your hearts in one, your realms in one?
As man and wife, being two, are one in love,
So be there 'twixt your kingdoms such a spousal,
That never may ill office, or feil jealousy,
Which troubles off the bed of blessed marriage,
Thrust in between the paction of these kingdoms,
To make divorce of their incorporeal league;
That English may as French, French Englishmen,
Receive one another!—God speak this Amen!

All. Amen!

K. Hen. Prepare we for our marriage;—on which day,
My lord of Burgundy, we'll take your oath,
And all the peers, for surety of our leagues.—
Then shall I swear to Kate, and you to me;
And may our oaths well kept and prosperous be!

[Exeunt.

Enter Chorus.

Thus far, with rough, and all unable pen,
Our bending author hath pursued the story;
In little room confining mighty men,
Mangling by starts the full course of their glory.
Small time, but, in that small, most greatly liv'd
This star of England: fortune made his sword;
By which the world's best garden he achiev'd,
And of it left his son imperial lord.

Henry the sixth, in infant bands crown'd king
Of France and England, did this king succeed;
Whose state so many had the managing;
That they lost France, and made his England bleed;
Which oft our stage hath shown; and, for their sake,
In your fair minds let this acceptance take.

[Exit.]

ACT 1.

SCENE I.—Westminster Abbey.

Dead March. Corpse of King Henry the Fifth discovered, lying in state; attended on by the Dukes of Bedford, Gloster, and Exeter; the Earl of Warwick, the Bishop of Winchester, Heralds, &c.

Bed. Hush. Be the heavens with black, yield day to night!

Comets, importing change of times and states, Brandish your crystal tresses in the sky; And with them scourge the bad revolving stars, That have conspired unto Henry's death! Henry the fifth, too famous to live long! England ne'er lost a king of so much worth.

Glo. England ne'er had a king until his time. Virtue he had, deserving to command; His brandish'd sword did blind men with his beams: His arms spread wider than a dragon's wings: His sparkling eyes replete with wrathful fire, More dazzled and drove back his enemies, Than mid-day sun, fierce bent against their faces. What should I say? his deeds exceed all speech: He ne'er lift up his hand but conquered.

Exe. We mourn in black; Why mourn we not in blood?

Henry is dead, and never shall revive: Upon a wooden coffin we attend; And death's dishonourable victor We with our stately presence glorify, Like captives bound to a triumphant car. What? shall we curse the planets of mischaps, That plotted thus our glorious overthrow? Or shall we think the subtle-witted French Conjurers and sorcerers, that, afraid of him, By magic verses have contriv'd his end? Win. He was a king bless'd of the King of kings. Unto the French the dreadful judgment day So dreadful will not be, as was his sight. The battles of the Lord of hosts he fought: The church's prayers made him so prosperous.

Glo. The church! where is it? Had not churchmen pray'd, Vernon, of the White Rose, or York faction. Basset, of the Red Rose, or Lancaster faction.

Charles, Dauphin, and afterwards King of France. Reingnier, son of Anjou, and titular King of Naples.

Duke of Burgundy.

Duke of Alencon.

Governor of Paris.

Bastard of Orleans.

Master-Gunner of Orleans, and his son.

General of the French forces in Bourdeaux.

A French Sergeant.

A Porter.

An old Shepherd, father to Joan la Pucelle.

Margaret, daughter to Reingnier; afterwards married to King Henry.

Countess of Avergne.

Joan la Pucelle, commonly called Joan of Arc.

Friends appearing to la Pucelle, Lords, Warders of the Tower, Heralds, Officers, Soldiers, Messengers, and several Attendants both on the English and French.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My honourable lords, health to you all! Sad tidings bring I to you out of France, Of loss, of slaughter, and discomfiture: Guillaume, Champaigne, Rheims, Orleans, Paris, Guyons, Poitiers, are all quite lost.

Bed. What say'st thou, man, before dead Henry's corpse?

Speak softly; or the loss of those great towns Will make him burst his lead, and rise from death.

Glo. Is Paris lost? Is Rouen yielded up?

If Henry were recall'd to life again, These news would cause him once more yield the ghost so solemn.

Exe. How were they lost? what treachery was us'd?
FIRST PART OF

Act I

Mess. No treachery; but want of men and money.

Among the soldiers this is muttered.

That here you maintain several factions:
And, what a field should be despacht'd and fought,
You are dispatching of your generals.

One would have lingering wars, with little cost;
Another would fly swift, but wanteth wings;
A third man thinks, without expense at all,
His gunpowder and his swords peace may be obtain'd.

Awake, awake, English nobility!
Let not sloth dim your honours, new-begot;
Cropp.'lare the flower-de-luces in your arms;
Gird yourself to the wars, expect them.

Exc. Were our ears wanting to this funeral,
These tidings would call forth her flowing tides.

Red. Me they concern; regent I am of France.
Give me my sealed cost, I'll fight for France.

Away with these disgraceful wailing robes!
Wounds I will lend the French, instead of eyes,
To weep their interminable miseries.

3 Mess. Lords, view these letters, full of bad mischance.
France is revolted from the English quite:
Essex, some petty town of the same,
The Dauphny Charles is crowned king in Rheims:
The bastard of Orleans with him is join'd;
Regnier, duke of Anjou, doth take his part;
The two are expected to be fire with fire.

Exc. The Dauphny crown'd king all fly to him;
Or, whither shall we fly from this reproach?

Glo. We will not fly, but to our enemies' Bed ford, if thou be slack, I'll fight it out.

Red. Glower, why doubt'st thou of my forwardness?
An army have I muster'd in my thoughts,
Wherewith already France is over-run.

Enter a third Messenger.

3 Mess. My gracious lords,—to add to your la- men'ts,
Wherewith you now bedew king Henry's ears,
I must inform you of a dismal fight,
Betwixt the stout lord Talbot and the French.

Mess. What! wherein Talbot overcame? is't so?

3 Mess. O, no; wherein lord Talbot was overthrown:
The circumstance I'll you more at large. The King of Auguist last, this gall'd lord, Retiring from the siege of Orleans, Having full scarce six thousand in his troop, By three and twenty thousand of the French Was round encompassed and taken:
No leisure had he to enrank his men; He wanted pikes to set before his archers; Instead whereof, sharp stakes, plum'd out of hedges.

They pitched in the ground confusedly, To keep the horsemen off from breaking in. More than three hours the fight continued; Where valiant Talbot, above human thought, Enacted wonders with his sword and lance. Hundreds he sent to hell, and none durst stand him.

Here, there, and everywhere, enrag'd he slew: The French they claim'd, the devil was in arms; All the whole army stood agaz'd on him:
His soldiers, saying his un daunted spirit, A Talbot! a Talbot! cried out amidst, And what! wherein Talbot overcame? is't so?

Here had the conquer'd fully been seal'd up, If sir John Fastolfe had not play'd the coward; He being in the vaward, (place'd behind, With paunch to relieve and follow them,) Cowardly fled, not having struck one stroke. Silence grew the general wreck and massacre; Enclosed were they with their enemies:
A base Walloons, to win the Dauphny's grace, Thrust Talbot with a spear into the back; Whom all France, with their chief assembled Durst not presume to look once in the face.

Red. Is Talbot slain? then I will stay myself, For living liddy here, in pomp and ease, While a worthy leader, cut away, likewise.

Red. His ransom there is none but I shall pay: I'll hate the Dauphny headlong from his throne, His crown shall be the ransom of my friend; Foots of his land, I'll change for one of yours.

Red. Farewell, my masters; to my task will I.
Bompire in France forthwith I am to make, To keep out great Saint George's feast withal:
Two thousand soldiers with me will take, Whose bloody deeds shall make all Europe quake.

3 Mess. So you had need; for Orleans is besieg'd.

The English army is grow'n weak and faint:
The earl of Salisbury craveth supply,
And hardly keeps his men from mutiny,
Since they, so few, watch such a multitude.

Red. Remember, lords, your oaths to Henry Third, to quell the Dauphny utterly,
Or bring him in obedience to your yoke.

Red. I do remember it; and here take leave,
To speak about of Alencon's separation.
[Exit.]

Exc. I'll to the Tower, with all the haste I can,
To view the artillery and munition;
And then I will proclaim young Henry king.

Exit. To Eltham will I, where the young king is,
Being ordain'd his special governor;
And for his safety there I'll best devise. [Exit.]

Win. Each hath his place and function to attend.

I am left out; for me nothing remains.
But long I will not be Jack-out-of-office;
The king from Eltham I intend to seud,
And sit at chiepest stern of public welfare. [Exit.]

Enter Charles, with his Forces; Alencon, Reiniger, and others.

Char. Mars his true moving, even as in the heavens,
So in the earth, to this day is not known:
Late did he shine upon the English side;
Now he doth shine upon the French.
What towns of any moment, but we have?
At pleasure here we lie, near Orleans;
Others whiles, the famish'd English, like pale ghosts, Faintly besiege us one hour in a mouth.

Alen. They want their porridge, and their fat bull-beves;

Char. Either they must be dieted like mules,
And have their provender tyed to their mouths,
Or piteous they will look, like drowned mice.

Reig. Let's raise the siege; Why live we idly here?

Talbot is taken, whom we wont to fear:
Remaineth none, but mad-brain'd Salisbury;
And he may well in fretting spend his gill,
Nor men, nor money, hath he to make war.

Char. Sound, sound aloud; we will rush on them:
Now for the honour of the forlorn French:
Him I forgive my death, that kill'd me,
When he sees me go back one foot, or fly. [Exit.]

Act II.

Alarums: Excursions: afterwards a Retreat.

Redezen, Charles, Alencon, Reiniger, and others.

Char. Who ever saw the like? what men have I?
Dogs! cowards! dastards!—I would never have fled,
But that they left me 'midst my enemies.
KING HENRY VI.

Act I

Reig. Salisbury is a desperate homicide;
He fights as one weary of his life,
The other lords, like lions wanting food,
Do rush upon us as their hungry prey.

Alem. Froissard, a countryman of ours, records,
England all oligers and Rowlands bred,
During the time Edward the third did reign.
More truly now may this be verified;
For none but Samsons, and Goliasse,
It sendeth forth to skirmish. One to ten! I And we've bon'd rascals! what wilt ever suppose
They had such courage and audacity?

Char. Let's leave this town; for they are hair-brained slaves,
And hunger will enforce them to be more eager:
Of old I know them; rather with their teeth
The walls they'll tear down, than forsake the siege.

Reig. I think, by some odd glimps, or device,
Their arms are set, like clocks, still to strike on;
Else ne'er could they hold out so, as they do,
By my consent, we'll e'en let them alone.

Alem. Be it so.

Enter The Bastard of Orleans,

Bast. Where's the prince Dauphin? I have new news.

Char. Bastard of Orleans, thrice welcome to us.

Bast. Methinks, your looks are sad, your cheer appall'd;
Hath that which overthrow wrought this offence?
Be not dimmad, for succour is at hand:
A holy mald hither with me I bring,
Which, by a vision sent to her from heaven,
Ordained is to raise this tedious siege,
And drive the English forth the bounds of France.
The spirit of deep prophecy she hath,
Exceeding the nine sibyls of old Rome;
What's past, and what's to come, she can descry:
Speak, then, I call her in every word,
For they are certain and unfailible.

Char. Go, call her in: [Exit Bastard.] But, first,
To try her skill,
Reig. My lord, thou as Dauphin in my place:
Question her proudly, let thy looks be stern—
By this means shall we sound what skill she hath.

[Recess.

Enter La Pucelle, Bastard of Orleans, and others.

Reig. Fair maid, I'd, thou wilt do these won- drous feats?
Puc. The pope, my lord, I'thout that thinkest to beguile me.
Where is the Dauphin?—come, come from be- hind;
I know it well, though never seen before.
Be not amaz'd, there's nothing hid from me:
In private will I talk with thee apart:—
Stand back, you lords, and give us leave awhile.

Reig. She takes upon her bravely at first dash.
Puc. Dauphin, I am by birth a shepherd's daughter,
My wit untrain'd in any kind of art.
Heaven, and our Lady gracious, hath it pleas'd
To shine on my contemplated estate:
Lo, whilst I waited on my tender lambs,
And to sun's parching heat display'd my cheeks,
God's mother deigned to appear to me;
And in a vision full of majesty
Will'd me to leave my base vocation,
And free my country from calamity:
Her aid she promis'd, and assur'd success;
In complete glory she reveal'd herself;
And, whereas I was black and swart before,
With those clear rays which she infused on me,
That beauty am I bless'd with, which you see.
Ask me what question thou canst possible,
And I will answer unpremeditated:
My courage try by combat, if thou dar'st,
And thou shalt find that I exceed my sex.
Resolv'd on this: Thou shalt be fortunate,
If thou receive me for thy warlike mate.
Where be those barbers, that they wait not here?
Open the gates; Gloster it is that calls.

1 Ward. [Within.] Who is there that knocks so imperiously?
2 Ward. [Within.] Whose ever he be, you may not be let in.
1 Serv. Answer you so the lord protector, villains?
2 Ward. [Within.] The Lord protect him! so we answer him:
We do no otherwise than we are will'd.
Glo. Who willed you? or whose will stands, but mine?

There's none protector of the realm, but I—

(Wake up the gates, I'le be your warrantize! Shall I be flouted that by dangble grooms?

Servants rush at the Tower gates. Enter to the gates, Woodville, the Lieutenant.

Wood. [Within.] What noise is this? what traitors have we here?
Glo. Lieutenant, is it you, whose voice I hear?
Open the gates; here's Gloster, that would enter.

Wood. [Within.] Have patience, noble duke; I may not open it.
